MAY ENCOUNTER A SNAG

Coxey Threatens to Defy the Law To-day.

Declares His Intention of Making a Speech from the Capitol Steps—Sought Permission from the Sergeant-at-Arms of Both Houses and Has the Law Pointed Out to Him—His Army to Parade to the Capitol To-day, But They Will Break Ranks and Enter the Grounds as Individuals—Six Hundred Police to Be on Duty About the District.

WASHINGTON, May 1.—With their appetites satiated with a goodly supply of boiled beans, bread and coffee Gen. Coxey's own contingent of the commonweal army will to-day enter this city, display their tattered garments in the parade past the white house to the capitol.

Last night was spent at Brightwood park, but to-night it is the intention of Coxey and Browne that the pilgrims shall be quartered within the city limits, according to Browne's statement, probably on the capitol grounds. "We're going to carry this thing through to the end," Browne said this morning. "Haven't we done everything I said we would?"

"All except having 100,000 to form the parade," some one said.

"I didn't say we'd have 100,000 men in line," answered Browne. "I said there would be 100,000 people with us in Washington, and so there will be, but they won't be in line. I know the people. They sympathize with us, but they won't join in the procession to the capitol. But we'll have 100,000 people along the route. Trains are bringing in thousands of people from other places, and there'll be 100,000 strangers in Washington to see us."

Browne said that the band and baggage wagons and all the camping paraphernalia would appear in the demonstration to-day.

He was asked what he proposed to do if the district authorities decided at the last moment that the parade was in violation of the law, and he answered that the army had as much right to march to the capitol as anybody else had, and they proposed to do it with the band playing and flags flying.

"Of course we will," chimed in "Roy Kirk," Browne's private secretary, whose correct name is Robert J. McMahan, a young man from Cumberland, Md.

The route from the camp to the city was changed this morning. The parade will come in by the Fourteenth street road to Mt. Pleasant, a suburb of the city, thence via Fourteenth street proper to Pennsylvania avenue and down the avenue to the capitol grounds. At this point the body will turn out of First street, up B or Delaware avenue northeast, which will place them on the northeast border of the grounds. Here it is proposed to disband and enter as individuals unless permission is subsequently granted them to go in as a body.

Gen. Coxey was at the capitol late yesterday afternoon and immediately upon his arrival went to the room of the sergeant-at-arms to have a conference with that official. Col. Bright was not in his office, and while awaiting his return Mr. Coxey was surrounded by a number of persons drawn there from curiosity, among them several senators. Senate pages, always on the outlook for something novel, immediately besieged the "General" for his autograph, and that personage for fifteen minutes was kept busy writing his name on cards and in autograph albums.

To a reporter of the United Press Mr. Coxey talked freely about his programme.

"I have learned that there is a statute preventing parades of any kind on these grounds and we have kept the law up to this time and do not propose to break it now. We will march to the grounds when we will disband and, after making a speech, we will assemble at the peace monument and march back to our camp."

"But you said you would not violate the law and yet you say that you will make a speech on the grounds; is not that a violation of the law?"

"No; the constitution gives us the right to do that and congress has no right to pass laws in violation of the constitution. There is no legal authority on the part of anybody to prevent my making a speech on the steps of the capitol and that I propose to do."

"But suppose you are warned not to and that your arrest will follow if you attempt it?" was asked.

"I will make the speech anyhow," said Mr. Coxey, with some emphasis in his tones. "We will test the constitutionality of the law."

"Why not test the constitutionality of the law in the courts rather than by the commission of an act which the law says you are not permitted to do?

"The courts are too slow," said Mr. Coxey in reply, with a shrug of his shoulders.

In the further course of his talk Mr. Coxey said his army would remain until his two bills were passed and under the very roof of the capitol he again made the prediction that his bills would be passed within two weeks after he made his formal demand.

Subsequently Mr. Coxey saw the sergeant-at-arms of the senate and of the house. The conference was in private. Mr. Coxey made his request and the only reply of the officials was to point to the law which forbids the acts Mr. Coxey contemplates. "But the law is unconstitutional, and, besides, we knew nothing of that law when we left Ohio," said Mr. Coxey.

"But you knew of it long before you reached here," replied Col. Bright. "I am not responsible for the law," continued Col. Bright, "but I am the executive officer of this senate and am here to see that the law is enforced."

Two hundred special policemen were sworn in this morning, making 600 in all about the city and district. The line of march of the commonwealers will be well policed, and mounted police will head the procession, while others will ride at the sides to prevent interference by citizens.

Hogan and His Men at Helena.

HELENA, Mont., May 1.—Hogan and his commonweal army of 300 men arrived here last evening in charge of the troops from Fort Keogh. The prisoners went into camp at the fair grounds, two miles from the city.

Prepared for a Crowd.

WASHINGTON, May 1.—Two wooden gates swinging from hastily improvised supports have been erected at the north and south entrances to the capitol rotunda. They are intended to prevent crowding in the corridors and to permit the overflow from the rotunda into the corridors when the latter are not overcrowded. They have been put up in anticipation of the crowds this week, and will probably be removed within a few days. These gates are always used on inauguration day and upon other occasions when great crowds are expected.

Sweetland's Army at New Haven.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., May 1.—Sweetland's Connecticut contingent of the New England industrial army arrived here last evening. They numbered just 23 men. They were hospitably recived by the local Central Labor union and quartered at the rooms of that organization. A large throng witnessed the march of the men through the streets to the quarters, but there was no attempt at a demonstration. The Coxey followers will be allowed to parade here. The mayor said that Yale men would be allowed to participate in the affair if order was preserved.

MASSILON, O., May 1.—Caroline Coxey, did not secure her mother's consent on leaving for Washington Sunday night to join the commonweal army as the "Angel of Peace," but ran away. Mrs. Coxey refused to allow the girl to leave with the general's son Jesse and while the latter was bidding his mother good bye, the girl packed her clothing and departed. The brother and sister met at the depot and took a train for Washington. Mrs. Coxey, who is the general's divorced wife, will resort to legal means to regain possession of her daughter.

Galvin's Men Riding as Passengers.

COLUMBUS, O., May 1.—The Galvin band of Coxeyites, which came here on Saturday night after its surrender to Gov. McKinley's troops at Mt. Sterling, got away last night in passenger cars, enough money having been collected here to carry them as far as Benwood, W. Va. They are well supplied with provisions. Seven men are in the hospital. Four local physicians are taking care of the sick left behind. There are 110 men in army. A local hatter gave them 300 hats.

SHIP CANAL THROUGH JERSEY.

Meeting in Philadelphia Considers the Proposed Scheme.

PHILADELPHIA, May 1.—In response to a call issued by a number of prominent citizens, a meeting was held in the mayor's office at noon for the purpose of considering the expediency of the construction of a ship canal between Philadelphia and New York. A resolution requesting the mayor to send a communication to councils and recommend the appropriation of $10,000 with which to make a preliminary survey of the proposed waterway was adopted.

Mr. Martindale stated that the building of the canal was advocated by the boards of trades of Philadelphia and Camden, Trenton and New Brunswick, N. J., and by the American Philosophical society. Addresses favoring the project, were made by ex-Postmaster General Wanamaker, ex Minister to Russia Charles Emory Smith, City Solicitor Warwick and others.

General Louis Wagner advocated the surveying of a route by going straight across New Jersey and not considering New York in the matter at all. He thought that taking the route to Raritan Bay, as proposed, would only be binding Philadelphia tighter to New York without securing any great benefit to this city.

E. C. Hill, of the Trenton board of trade, stated that if the canal is built at all it must be built by Philadelphia capital; New York people are afraid of it, because it would magnify Philadelphia's influence and prosperity. Mr. Hill further said that the people of New Jersey would aid Philadelphia in the project.

Now She Wants to Come Home.

JERSEY CITY, May 1.—Mrs Nelly Ladue, who eloped with Albert Randall, the forger, and who was arrested with him and William Macomber, and Mrs. Mary Jones at Galveston, Tex., is anxious to get home. She wrote to her mother asking for money and Mrs. O'Conors gave Chief Murphy $50 to send to the young woman. The chief at once telegraphed a money order to Mrs. Ladue. He says that Detective McNally received the extradition papers in the case and will probably leave Galveston with Randall on Saturday.

Worms Destroying Clover and Grain.

READING, Pa., May 1.—Worms are destroying the young clover and grain in the vicinity of Joanna and have already stripped several fields. It is feared they will spread through the entire Conestoga valley. They develop from the larva and attain full size in about forty-eight hours. They are light green in color and in some places hundreds have been found in the space of several square feet. They multiply with wonderful rapidity.

Rev. Edgar Buckingham Dead.

DEARFIELD, Mass., May 1.—Rev. Edgar Buckingham, aged 69, is dead. He was a native of Cambridge, and one of the older sons of Joseph Tinker Buckingham one of the editors of the Boston Courier, and a noted literary man in his day.

Flower Dines Methodist Bishops.

ALBANY, May 1.—Governor Flower gave a dinner at the executive mansion last night in honor of the board of Methodist bishops of the United States who have just finished holding a semi-annual convention in this city.

F. B. STOCKBRIDGE DEAD

The Michigan Senator Carried off at Chicago.

On His Way to California for His Health, When He is Stricken Down at a Relative's Home—Death of Editor Hatton—The Sad and Unexpected News Caused General Grief.

CHICAGO, May 1.—Francis Browne Stockbridge, United States senator from Michigan, died in this city last night a few minutes after 7 o'clock.

The end came suddenly, although the senator had been confined to his bed almost all the time since coming to Chicago from Washington, April 3. He died at the residence of his nephew-in-law, James L. Houghteling.

His wife, Mr. and Mrs. Houghteling, and the trained nurse, who gave the warning of the senator's speedy dissolution to the family, were present at the death bed.

The senator had been feeling better during the day and hoped to be able to leave for Kalamazoo, his Michigan home, but the physicians did not share the hopes of the dying man. While the family was at dinner word was brough by the nurse which summoned all to his bedside. In three minutes the senator breathed his last. Death was caused by angina pectoris.

The funeral services will be held in Kalamazoo next Thursday in St. Luke's Episcopal church, of which the senator had been a life long member. The interment will also take place there.

His two sisters, Mrs. W. D. Houghteling and Mrs. Theodore T. Sheldon, are visiting at Asheville, N. C.

The senator had been in poor health for several years and was on his way to California by order of his physician when taken ill here.

DEATH OF FRANK HATTON.

The Sad and Unexpected News Caused General Grief.

WASHINGTON, May 1.—The news of the death of ex-Postmaster Genaral Frank Hatton reached the house of representatives just before adjournment. Hatton had many friends in the house, and the sad and unexpected announcement caused ageneral expression of regret.

The "Post" employes will meet to-day to take suitable action regarding their late chief's death.

Numerous messages of condolence have been received by the family.

The funeral services over the remains will be held in this city on Thursday and the interment will take place in Rock Creek cemetery.

Jury Bribing Case.

INDIANAPOLIS, May 1.—The jury corruption cases which brought the Indianapolis bank trials to such a close last week were taken up in the federal court and Juror Armstrong, who negotiated through a friend, Frank Stannard, to "hang" the jury for $2,500 was put on trial for contempt. The evidence developed a diabolical scheme to corrupt the jury, and tht defendant threw himself on the mercy of the court and was sentenced to 18 months in prison.

Probably Gone Wrong.

ASBURY PARK, N. J., May 1.—L. J. Dewshop, a Sunday school teacher, recently in the employ of Photographer Stauffer, has left the city, and no trace of him can be found. It is said that he left many debts unpaid. He was treasurer of the Bradley Societies, and it is reported had $75 dollars of their money. He was a kindergarten instructor of the First M. E. church. It is also charged that he issued many worthless checks. He hails from Wilmington, Del.

Stricken Down in Court.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., May 1.—Gen. Wm. H. McCarsney, one of the leading attorneys of the Lucerne county bar, and president of the city council of this city, was stricken unconscious in court room No. 1 yesterday afternoon while engaged in a libel suit. He was removed to his home two hours later. His physician is of the opinion that his ailment is a severe attack of vertigo.

No Rum, No Hotel.

ATTLEBORO, Mass., May 1.—The proprietors of the Park hotel in this town and the Wamsutta house in North Attleboro have closed their houses, leaving the two towns without proper hotel accomodations. The towns have voted no license and the proprietors claim inability to carry on the business without liquor selling.

Declared a Trust in Illinois.

CHICAGO, May 1.—Attorney-General Moloney has declared the American Tobacco company a corporation, organized under the laws of the state of New Jersey, to be a trust, doing business in violation of the law of the state and will commence proceedings in chancery against the concern in Illinois.

Another Body Washed Ashore.

NEWBURYPORT, Mass., May 1.—Another body has been washed ashore on Plum island. It is supposed to be the body of Nielson, one of the crew of the ill-fated schooner Jennie M. Carter, wrecked on Salisbury beach about a fortnight ago.

Forest Fires in New Hampshire.

NEWMARKET, N. H., May 1.—Two large forest fires are burning near here. Carpenter Bros. have lost 200 cords of wood and 100 acres of hard wood growth, now burning on the Durham road.

London to Aid Sufferers in Greece.

LONDON, May 1.—The lord mayor has opened at the Mansion house a fund for the relief of the sufferers from the earthquakes in Greece.

TROUBLES OF LABOR

Epidemic of Strikes Sweeping the Country.

Latest Bulletin of the Coal Miners' Struggle—Great Northern Men Seem to Have the Best of the Fight at Present—Workmen in the Building Trade at Several Places Go Out.

COLUMBUS, O., May 1.—The second official bulletin has just been issued by President McBride of the United Miners. The following are the principal points:

The suspension of mining has entered upon its second week and under more favorable circumstances than the first started. The army of idle mine workers now engaged in the fight number over 160,000. It is now conceded that there is not over 94,000 miners at work in the entire bituminous coal fields of the country, and from nearly every local and general market the cry for coal is heard. This is good news to us and indicates that the end will soon come.

From a careful estimate made by us we predict that if you stand shoulder to shoulder as you now are it will not be long until there will not be coal enough left in the general market to boil a tea kettle with, and a complete victory will be yours.

Already operators are offering to pay the price asked, and in some instances more than has been demanded, to get the men to resume work, but the men are true to the orders issued by the national convention and refused to work at any price until a general settlement has been made.

GREAT NORTHERN STRIKE.

Latest Developments Disappointing to the Company.

ST. PAUL, May 1.—Developments along the Great Northern are disappointing to the company. Nothing but the mail trains are running, the promise that other trains would be started not being fulfilled. Reports reached here yesterday from Minnesota that brotherhood engineers and firemen would report to their superintendents at once. At St. Cloud some of them did report but a speech from the president of the St. Cloud branch of the American Railway union caused them to leave their places and everything is once more in a standstill at the division headquarters. No men have yet been employed by the Great Northern. The company, however, says that it will be able to start its trains in a day or two. President Debs refused to be interviewed further than to say that the Great Northern people were weakening and that Mr. Hill would come to the terms of his employes in the next forty-eight hours.

Paterson's Striking Weavers.

PATERSON, N. J., May 1.—The conference of silk manufacturers and delegations of the striking weavers resulted in a disagreement. The manufacturers refused to make any concessions or allow the New York or College Point employes to have any say in the settlement of the strike. The manufacturers left the meeting with a determination not to yield to the demands of the strikers, and the latter were equally as determined.

To Suffer for the Miners' Strikes.

TOLEDO, O., May 1.—The Ohio Central lines, which control a great amount of the Ohio coal traffic, has followed the example of the Wheeling & Lake Erie railroad and gave notice of a cut of 33 1-3 per cent. in the wages of all employes on the road to continue during the coal miners' strike. The Columbus, Hocking Valley & Toledo railroad will, it is said, follow suit.

Scranton Bricklayers on Strike.

SCRATON, Pa., May 1.—The strike of the 125 bricklayers and apprentices in this city is on contractors refusing the increase of pay demanded. The strike is looked upon here as a foolish one on the part of the bricklayers, but they are confident, saying that all brick work in the city must stop as there are no non-union bricklayers here.

2,000 Chicago Painters on Strike.

CHICAGO, May 1.—In accordance with the decision of the union painters 2,000 of them have gone out on strike. The movement is aimed at all employers who locked out the union building trades men recently. One hundred gravel roofers have also struck to enforce their demand for 35 cents an hour.

Striker's Ranks Swelled.

BEAVER FALLS, Pa., May 1.—All the coal miners employed at the mines of George Kirkham, W. F. Clayton, George Bollem and Richard Mountford have joined the miners' strike. The men employed at Clayton's mine took the places of strikers several months ago.

Shoe Lasters on Strike.

DERBY DEPOT, N. H., May 1.—All the lasters at Allis & Benson's shoe factory are on strike for an increase of 5 cents a case. The firm has a large number of orders to fill, and the strikers think it impossible to get other help.

More West Virginia Miners Go Out.

WHEELING, W. Va., May 1.—All the miners in the Elm Grove mine have joined the ranks of the strikers and at noon marched in a body to this city, where with other miners they held a big mass meeting.

Wages Restored, Strike Averted.

ROANOKE, Va., May 1.—The threatened trouble between the Norfolk & Western Railroad company and its employes has been averted. The company has restored the 10 per cent cut in wages.

Started Up With Non-Union Men.

PITTSBURG, May 1.—Four shops of factory "A" United States Glass company have just been put in operation with non-union men.

Mr. Seligman's Body Arrives Home.

NEW YORK, May 1.—The special train bearing the remains of Jesse Seligman, the banker, who died at San Diego, Cal., on April 23, arrived at the Grand Central depot at 7:30 o'clock last evening. The funeral takes place to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock.

Adjourned on Account of Typhus.

MONTPELIER, May 1.—Owing to the typhoid fever epidemic in Windsor Judge H. H. Wheeler has adjourned the coming session of the United States circuit court there to June 19.

EARLY INTELLIGENCE

—Fred Dunn, the grocer, has put a handsome new wagon into service.

—The Board of Trade bowling team is practising for a return game in Westfield Friday night.

—Edsall will move into his new stores next week, and will celebrate with a grand opening.

—The Woman Relief Corps entertainment in Reform Hall, April 19, netted the treasury $18.87.

—Under the leadership of E. J. Fitzhugh, the music in the First Baptist Church promises to be a special feature.

—James Gillespie was dismissed with a suspended sentence in the City Court this morning for trespassing on the railroad.

—William Newcorn's term as justice began this morning, but his inauguration into the duties of the office was postponed for a few days.

—An entertaining programme and a supper will be used by Miantonomoh Tribe of Red Men Friday evening to celebrate the adoption of several palefaces.

—A very satisfactory rehearsal of "Arrah na Pogue" was held last night and everything gives promise of running smooth at the presentation in Music Hall tonight.

—Fred Endress, successor to Arnold, the Liberty street butcher, is serving the people of his vicinity with the usual neatness and the same first-class meats that Mr. Arnold's market is noted for. He thoroughly understands the business and has come to stay.

WEST END NOTES.

Miss May Pound of West Fourth street has returned from a visit with friends in Elizabeth.

The King's Daughters of Hope Chapel will give an entertainment Thursday evening.

The young men defeated their elders at bowling on the Y. M. L. alleys last night. The score was 703 to 674.

The Young People's Society of Hope Chapel will hold a regular meeting tonight.

WEST ENDER.

A Visitor's Opinion.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—Plainfield has at last a first-class hotel and it should be well patronized. I and a friend stopped at The Albion last Sunday for dinner and the menu was as fine as I ever saw for a country hotel. Everything was served in first-class style and Colonel King deserves great credit. We hope he will have the greatest success.

The house is progressing very well considering the short time it has been opened, and I have no doubt it will be a paying venture. The cook also deserves great praise and, though a woman, can get up a dinner as fine as any first-class French chef.

A VISITOR.

Paoli Succeeds Zeneno.

L. Paoli & Co., have bought the fruit and confectionery store of Frank Zeneno, 128 North avenue, and will continue the business with a still larger stock. The same hours as regards closing Friday evening and reopening Saturday night will be kept in force.

"Come to Peck's."

S. C. Peck, understanding the value of advertising, doubles the size of his ad in The Press today to announce a full line of new goods suited to the season. Peck's prices are always low, as his customers reap the advantage of his having no book account losses for them to pay extra for.

A Successful Start.

The first of the series of bi-weekly dances at the Country Club last night was a delightful affair.

About 65 persons attended and all thoroughly enjoyed themselves. Supper was served to the dancers.

Two Valuable Thirds.

A part of the VanVoorhis estate in New York was sold by court authorities yesterday for $219,850. J. R. Thiers of Somerset street gets one-third, and E. W. VanVoorhis, formerly of Plainfield and now of New York, another third.

New Men on The Herald.

Changes in the office of the Elizabeth Herald went into effect today. The editor-in-chief and general business manager is now J. L. Williams of Morristown, formerly proprietor of the Kearny Record. An interest in the property has been purchased by the new editor.

Ex-Prosecutor Wilson will continue to hold a controlling share of the stock. Robert Bruce, an old newspaper man of Harrison, has become connected with the editorial department.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the one positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting natuge in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio.

THE BILL WILL PASS.

THE STATE TO STOP THE SCHOOL BOARD'S EXTRAVAGANCE

Senator Voorhees's Amendment to Except Morristown Unanimously Adopted—The Senate Pledged to Support the Measure—The House Favors the Bill and the Governor Will Sign It.

(Special by Wire to The Press.)

TRENTON, May 1—Senator Voorhees this morning introduced an amendment to the school bill prepared by himself and Mayor Gilbert in consultation with those who fought the bill because of Morristown's interest in it.

The amendment exempts Morristown by providing that the bill shall not affect any school board in a district which includes any portion of a township. The Morristown school district takes in territory outside of the town limits. The amendment was adopted unanimously and the bill was ordered re-engrossed for final passage.

The adoption of the bill is assured, as senators of both parties have pledged themselves to vote for it. The measure can be relied upon to pass in the House, and it is believed that Governor Werts will give his approval.

The new law will prevent the Plainfield school board from expending more than $5,000 except with the approval of the Common Council, and thus it will effectively put a stop to the high school mansion project.

It is a victory for The Press and the people.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

Rev. Milton Craft is visiting in town for a few days.

Charles Smith, of Somerset and Front streets, is ill with rheumatism.

Miss Addie Marsh, daughter of Andrew F. Marsh of Linden avenue, is ill with a slight attack of membraneous croup.

Mrs. Loomis and daughter have returned to their home in Bethlehem, Pa., after visiting Mrs. R. W. Rice of Craig place.

Miss Jennie Bowne, of Cranford, returned home yesterday after a visit of two weeks with Miss Minnie Gulick, of Park place.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Boden and Miss Lizzie Milligan, all of Brooklyn, are at Mr. Milligan's cottage, Washingtonville, for the Summer.

John Christianson, of Netherwood, who has been ill with pneumonia for some weeks, has suffered a relapse and is again confined to his bed.

J. C. Pope is again confined to his home by illness. He had about recovered from an attack of pneumonia Sunday and took a carriage ride. He caught cold and is now suffering from rheumatism.

Mrs. Elizabeth A. Sperry, wife of T. S. Sperry, died at her home, 653 West Seventh street, this morning. The funeral will be held from the house Thursday afternoon at 3. The interment will be in Cypress Hill Cemetery.

THANKED LEOLA TRIBE.

Plainfield's New Tribe Presents Its Compliments to Those Who Helped It Start.

A delegation of Paugh Caugh Naugh Sinque Tribe of Red Men presented a set of resolutions to Leola Tribe, of Elizabeth, last night, thanking them for their voluntary team work the night of the new tribe's institution. The resolutions were handsomely engrossed, the work having been done by Ezra Loomis of Grove street.

The Plainfielders who went were V. W. Nash, William Bullock, Sachem C. M. Ulrich, John H. Carney and John T. Odam. Great Sachem Brown and Great Sannap Russell were present.

Trustee Nash made the presentation speech and words of acceptance were spoken by Leola's sachem. Sachem Ulrich and Mr. Bullock also spoke and Past Sachem Carney gave several recitations. A banquet was enjoyed at the end of the evening's programme.

SECOND IN THE STATE.

A Plainfield Woman Honored With the Office of Notary Public.

Miss Lillian T. Slape of City Judge Coddington's office has qualified as a Notary Public of the State of New Jersey. Last week Governor Werts granted her a commission and appointed her to the position.

Miss Slape took the oath Monday. She is the second woman in the State who has received such an appointment, the first being a resident of Trenton. Miss Slape received her diploma this morning.

Both Governor Werts and the Supreme Court decided during the past three months that a woman is eligible to this position and to admission to the Bar.

Comparing Commandments.

A comparison of "Laws and Commandments", from various Sacred Books, will be the subject in the Seventh-Day Baptist Church tomorrow evening at 8. Students of "Comparative Religions", will be welcome.

Returned from Trenton.

Peter Brunn, who was taken to the asylum by Chief Marshal Pangborn in February, was released last night and came at once to Plainfield.

FOR THE relief and cure of a cold in the head there is more potency in Ely's Cream Balm than in anything else it is possible to prescribe. This preparation has for years past been making a brilliant success as a remedy for cold in the head, catarrh and hay fever. Used in the initial stages of these complaints Cream Balm prevents any serious development of the symptoms, while almost numberless cases are on record of radical cures of chronic catarrh and hay fever after all other treatments have proved of no avail.

BASE-BALL ENTHUSIASM.

It Has n't Left Plainfield Altogether As the Agitation Shows.

They claim to have at least seven good men and feel confident they can put up an interesting game. They are anxious to secure the diamond on the new bicycle track, but an agreement about the rent has not been reached.

The players are connected with the Young Men's League, and are led by Walter Mague, an enthusiast. It is stated that those in charge of the grounds are holding back, hoping that a good offer will be made by some outside club. If Plainfield young men are willing to take hold of the matter with good prospects of success, they should be encouraged and helped.

Already several clubs have written to Mr. Mague for dates and definite action is desirable.

OPENING OF COURT.

Grand Jury Organizes and Adjourns Till Next Week.

The Grand Jury was sworn in this morning in Elizabeth and elected Mayor Rankin foreman. Constable Amos Moffett of Plainfield and Robert Walpole of Scotch Plains were selected to serve the jury. The Plainfielders are Andrew Vanderbeek, William Addis and Charles Herring.

Judge VanSyckle charged the jury especially with regard to Elizabeth gambling and illegal liquor selling.

A single case of an Elizabeth robbery was brought up and then the jury adjourned until next Monday morning.

HOMES FOR EVERY ONE.

Method by Which Men of Moderate Means Can Acquire a House and Lot.

No better employment for capital can be conceived than in the erection of homes for laboring men. It has been tried in a few towns and proved a success from every point of view. It is not a philanthropic work, for it pays in money a profit upon the investment made, and a Shylock might engage in it without compunction, providing he be satisfied with the legal rate of interest. The departure, however, best befits honest capital in that it tends to dignify labor and prevent anarchy.

A man cannot live in a hovel and be a good citizen, for careless surroundings beget bad habits and breed lax principles. Children reared in slothfulness never turn out well. There is a spirit in honest toil that rises above a shanty and seeks the comforts and conveniences of a framed dwelling with carpeted floors, one surrounded by the greensward of thrift and backed by the garden of prosperity—a home, in fact, that may rightfully be called the owner's castle. Neat dwellings can be built in most villages at from $400 to $500. Adding from $100 to $200 for a lot does not make an investment so large but that the most ordinarily paid laborer could soon acquire title. At $10 a month, which sum would little exceed rental value, the $500 house and lot could be bought and paid for in four years. A small boy carrying papers could earn that amount. Four dollars a week would pay for the $900 home in five years.

A liberal policy pursued upon this plane by the wealthy men of a town would result in placing hundreds of homes in the hands of laborers who under no other conditions could ever aspire to the proprietorship of the house in which they lived. The benefits of this system are capable of being demonstrated by any village that has the sagacity and enterprise to undertake it. An absolutely safe investment is obtained for capital, usually in a territory where values increase rapidly; the wage earner easily becomes the owner of property that is worth, when paid for, a respectable percentage more than it cost him; the manufacturer is insured a reliable and intelligent class of employees, and the community has the satisfaction of seeing every man his own landlord. This favorable condition of affairs renders labor troubles next to impossible. Very naturally the man who has invested his earnings in a house and lot can see nothing to be gained in the idleness attending strikes, and all the arguments of modern agitators will fail to convince him that his first duty is to his union rather than to his family.

THE VALUE OF A PUBLIC MARKET.

A Convenience the Farmers Will Not Be Slow to Appreciate.

The farmers who live near a town materially assist in its progress if they are accustomed to carry their produce to it every week. They are compelled to find a market somewhere, but the town that attracts them most is usually the town that has a good public market place, where they can unhitch and feed their horses and expose their wood, potatoes, fruits and other produce for sale.

A farmer naturally dislikes to unhitch on the street, where his team is in the way, where he may be moved on by the police and where he will attract little attention from passersby. Consequently the town that has a regular market place, where farmers can congregate, sell their produce and gossip while waiting for a customer, is the town whose merchants will see the color of the farmer's money.

The market place should be located in the center of the business portion of the town and should have a number of covered sheds, where the farmer may stable his horses when it rains or snows. Once established and well advertised the market will soon become popular both with the farmers and the public, especially if the town authorities see that the place is kept neat and clean and made reasonably comfortable and attractive. Where there are several rival towns in a good farming community the one that has a good market place will surely get the farmer's produce and the money he receives for it and will become more and more prosperous every year.

Republicans Believe Tariff Leaders are Undecided.

Demand that They Be Informed as to Whether the Present Bill is the Final One—Turpie Severely Attacks Senator Aldrich, But is Not Answered—Work in House.

WASHINGTON, May 1.—The senate spent nearly seven hours yesterday in various discussions about the tariff bill. The first of them was started by Mr. Wolcott (rep., Col.), who demanded information from the finance committee as to whether the bill before the senate was really the one on which action was expected to be had. He was not able to elicit any more definite information than that the finance committee would probably offer amendments in addition to those already reported.

The interview with Secretary Carlisle was brought up by Mr. Aldrich and led to a good deal of controversy, Mr. Aldrich asserting that the finance committee was no nearer a conclusion as to the character of the bill than it was three months ago.

In the course of the controversy Mr. Voorhees, chairman of the finance committee, declared emphatically that, whatever might be floating in the air, the income tax would stay in the bill, and that no more concessions would be made to the sugar trust, or to the great protected industries.

The most notable speech of the day was made near the close of the proceedings, when Mr. Turpie (dem., Ind.) accused Mr. Aldrich of "three lies, gross, palpable; three lies, basely born; three lies of inconceivable mendacity." Mr. Aldrich's only notice of the attack was a quiet intimation that "under other circumstances and other conditions" it would not have been made. The senate adjourned at 5:50.

House of Representatives.

In the house the resignation of Mr. Caldwell, of Ohio, was received and filed. Senate bill appropriating $7,000 for the reconstruction of the government bridge over the Niobrara river, Nebraska, was passed, and a resolution requesting the fish commissioner to inquire into the alleged destruction of fish in the Wabash river by the flow of oil was agreed. The army appropriation bill was considered; a few unimportant amendments to it agreed to, and the bill passed. The house adjourned at 5:15 o'clock.

The Spring House Cleaning

Wisely urged by the BOARD OF HEALTH is not complete without a proper use of DISINFECTANTS. But, in choosing these, do not be misled into paying fancy prices for "patent" specialties. Common lime is better than any of them for damp cellars and stables. For vaults, drains, cess pools the best and cheapest disinfectant is COPPERAS, supplied by us by the pound or barrel at low rates. But for use in the house, in the plumbing, in kitchen sinks, in closets, for purifying the air of sick rooms, deodorizing offensive discharges—in short, for all purposes of a household disinfectant, nothing can excel the powerful solution of chlorides made and sold by us for 15 years under the name of REYNOLDS'S ODORLESS DISINFECTANT. ### PLAY BALL.

Plainfield and Somerville Arrange a Game, and More Will Follow.

The story published in Plainfield's base-ball newspaper last Wednesday awoke with a start the dormant base-ball fever in this city, and as a result one game of ball has been arranged with the West Ends to take place in Somerville June 23.

One day after the story of Plainfield's lack of enterprise in the sport appeared in The Press, Manager Mack received a manly letter from G. E. Firstbook of 644 Essex street, Plainfield, asking that a game be given the team of which he was manager, and saying that his team was strictly an amateur one, that although they had no grounds yet still they hoped to have them in a month or so. Manager Mack at once answered, accepting the challenge and the first game will be played on the West End grounds Saturday, June 23.

Mr. Firstbrook will get his best players in training. The good old times are again before us, and the shout of the Plainfielders will soon be heard in the land.

Of truest tenderness for those whom we Closest to our own grateful hearts have caught!
O gladsome May, O winsome, precious May!
How rich the light of thine expanding day!

'MID FLORAL BLOOM.

Monday Afternoon Club Has a Delightful Annual Event.

The annual entertainment of the Monday Afternoon Club, given in the Casino yesterday, was a very pleasant affair. A large number of invited guests were present, in addition to the club members.

The Committee on Entertainment had decorated the Casino with plants and flowers and provided a programme of reading and instrumental music that occupied nearly two hours. Local talent was represented by Miss Dumont and Miss Ada Marsh, members of the club, who gave piano solos, the latter receiving for her brilliant performance a hearty encore.

Miss Bangs read a number of selections, which were well received, particularly her rendering of Dickens's Christmas story "Boots at the Holly Tree Inn".

Miss Bidwell played very effectively on a piano with a new keyboard composed of six rows of keys. Her performance of a "Hungarian Rhapsodie" by Liezt won her an enthusiastic encore, which was also received with hearty applause.

Janitor Hope Surprised.

Stephen Hope, janitor of the Bryant School, returned from town last evening to his home 223 Richmond street and was much astonished to find his house gay with a merry throng of neighbors, who had come to give his wife a surprise party in honor of her 61st birthday.

The evening was passed with music and recitations, and refreshments were served at 10:30. Recitations were given by Miss Gussie Newman, Miss Tilly Hope, Miss Ida Tallamy, songs were sung by Bert Tallamy and a violin and flute duett was given by William and Bert Tallamy.

Among those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Newman, Miss Gussie Newman, Miss Belle Newman, Frank Newman, Mr. and Mrs. Allen, Chester Allen, Mr. and Mrs. Becknell and Donald Becknell, Mr. and Mrs. Scull, Donald Scull, Harry Scull, Mrs. C. R. Hope, Miss Lilly Terry, Frank Terry, Mrs. Tallamy, Mrs. Ida Tallamy, Bert Tallamy, William Tallamy, Miss Susy Jennings, Miss Irene Hope, Miss Belle Bowman, Miss Violet Hope, Miss Lilly Hope, Mrs. Lunger, Mrs. Vail and Mrs. Cottrell.

Riding in the Rink Revived.

William Naeser re-opened the Plainfield Riding Academy in the Crescent rink last night, with a free exhibition of his improved facilities and his superiority as an instructor. There was a good attendance of interested people.

The spectators seemed willing to remain as such, but few accepting Mr. Naeser's invitation to ride. For three hours the new proprietor displayed his skill and the quality of his horses with fancy riding and hurdle jumping. Mr. Naeser's work was commented upon very favorably and an increased interest in riding will probably ensue, now that it has been shown that good instruction is obtainable in Plainfield.

A Sad Death.

The funeral will be held in Scotch Plains tomorrow afternoon of Mrs. Dora Randolph, wife of Edward Randolph, who died Sunday.

Mrs. Randolph had been ill for five months with consumption. She was 32 years of age and leaves five children. Mr. Randolph has the sympathy of all his neighbors in his affliction.

The interment will be made in the Methodist burying-ground, this city.

Why They Did n't Dance.

Members of Engine Company No. 2 dispute the story of the five men who claim they were ejected without cause from the reception of the company in Central Hall Friday night. The firemen state that the party referred to was one which tried to get in, the members of which were drunk and had not been invited.

The Elmwood Place Improvement.

The petition for a hydrant on Elmwood place will be presented to the Council next Monday evening. As the residents of the Second street end of the place are not over-anxious about having city water put in, the hydrant will probably be placed 500 feet from Front street.

Formerly Plainfield Players.

Two old Crescent League players were with the Baltimores in their game with the New Yorks yesterday. Keeler made three out of the ten runs made by his team, and two base hits and two put outs. Bonner, on second base scored two base hits, five put outs, four assists and an error.

Drill of the Drum Corps.

The Independent Fife and Drum Corps will not have their regular weekly evening of practice in the rooms tonight. Instead the Corps will take to the back streets and march as they play.

Last Night for City Claims.

All bills against the city which the claimants wish to have passed by the Council next Monday evening must be presented to City Clerk MacMurray by tonight.

Wheel Wrecked in the Track.

James Scott's ash wagon broke down at the corner of Front street and Park avenue shortly before 10 this morning. In turning out from the street railway tracks a wheel collapsed at the hub.

FOR ST. JOSEPH'S CHURCH.

Promising Prospects of a Busy Week at the Annual Fair.

The annual fair of St. Joseph's Church began in the Turn Verein Hall last evening. The attendance, for a first night, was surprisingly large, and in spite of the general scarcity of cash the proceeds of the fair are expected to rival those of last year, when $1,300 was realized.

The hall was brightly lighted and was ornamented with strings of Chinese lanterns. The booths and tables were filled to overflowing with all sorts of handsome articles so that no decorations were needed about them. An exception was the corner booth where the refreshments were on sale, which was decked with bunting in a simple and attractive way. The programmes were delayed by a New York printer, but will be ready tonight. E. M. O'Reilly's musicians were in attendance and were kept at work nearly all the evening. There was sufficient time between dances, however, to give everyone an opportunity to spend their money for the church's good. Floor manager Wm. J. Kiely was assisted by James A. Daley in his easy task of keeping up the interest in the dancing.

The contests are a part of the scheme of the women who are working at the fair. A Cornish organ is on display to tempt Mrs. Reilly, Mrs. J. McCann and Miss Lena Weber into a rivalry for its possession. A gold watch is what the Misses Mary Kerrigan, Annie Burns and Mary Reegan are working for. The Misses Mary Kenney and Mary Moore have the winning of a gold ring in view. A gold cross is being contested for by Miss Maggie Richardson, Miss Maria McCaffrey and Miss Blakely. A single doll is desired by Miss Lida Hughes and Miss Kittie Whelan.

A New Brunswick attraction will be at the fair tonight. The Catholic brass band will come to Plainfield by stage and have a street parade, beginning at 7:30 on Park avenue. Dancing will be enjoyed every evening during the week.

Those in charge of the various departments were:

Rosary Table—Mrs. R. A. Boyce, Mrs. Reilly, Mrs. David Kenney, Mrs. Joseph A. Blatz.

Refreshment Table—Mrs. J. H. Farlee, Mrs. Andrew Kenney, Mrs. Charles Wilkinson.

Soda-Water—Carl Kaerth.

Meeting Success in Plainfield.

Messrs. Hermance and Anderson are in this city soliciting stock (or shares) for The State Mutual Building and Loan Association, of Camden, of which E. Ambler Armstrong, brother of T. S. Armstrong, of Plainfield, is President. Their intention is to establish a local branch of The State Mutual in Plainfield, as they have already secured about 400 shares of stock among representative men here, and the outlook to them is the establishment of the largest branch in the city. The association was organized under the State laws of New Jersey about two years ago, and so remarkable has been the success that the annual interest on the profits is now equal to over 14 per cent. to the members. It has one hundred local branches in New Jersey, and about 25,000 shares in force.

NOISELESS NOMADICS.

The Metropolitan Association of Cycling Clubs has changed the date of this year's race meet from July 30 to Saturday, July 28.

The best route from New York to Philadelphia, according to The Recorder, is from Newark, via Belleville, Bloomfield, Orange, Plainfield, Bound Brook, Somerville, Hopewell, Trenton, Bristol, Frankford, and Philadelphia, by way of Broad street.

Speaking of professional riders, Sanger says "I do not think that many of the crack amateur riders will join the professional ranks this year, as the new arrangement of classes in the League of American Wheelmen now gives all the boys a good show."

To Entertain the Boys.

An entertainment for the younger boys will be given in Grace P. E. Church tonight, beginning at 8. H. B. Ely will recite, Frederick Pope will sing and Mr. Horton will render several selections on the violin, in addition to piano music. Refreshments will be served afterwards and the evening made generally enjoyable for the boys.

Keeping Up the Standard.

Edsall says that although he expects to remove soon into his elegant new quarters in the Babcock Building, his present stock is not allowed to want for any good thing, and he is now showing as fine an assortment of fine seasonable goods as has ever before been shown in this city. His prices were never so low as now. See his new ad in another column.

Used in the Coxey Crusade.

Mementoes of the march of Coxey's Army sent from Washington by Andrew E. Kenney were displayed in the Press office window today. They consisted of a rude cloth badge worn by one of the "soldiers", and the circular and map issued by General Coxey in February explaining his hopes and methods.

Hulett's Trade Awaits Repairs.

F. M. Hulett has closed his music store on West Front street for repairs, to re-open Monday with a fine stock of pianos. He is obliged to request prospective customers to wait until next week, when he promises to show goods which will well repay patrons for waiting.

Delegate from Plainfield.

Rev. Frederick Koechli, pastor of the German Reformed Church on Craig place, left for Paterson this morning to attend as a delegate from Plainfield the General Synod of New Brunswick. The session will close tomorrow night.

Chair Stealing Begun.

Several piazza chairs have disappeared during the early Spring nights this year. One was stolen last night from the residence of J. T. Baker, 449 West Seventh street.

CHEAP EXCURSIONS

To the Barnum and Bailey Greatest Show on Earth—Some of the Rare Sights to Be Seen.

As the railroads have come to the front and quoted a low round-trip rate, it is safe to predict that a large crowd from this place will attend the Barnum & Bailey Greatest Show on Earth, when it exhibits at Elizabeth, May 15.

The railroads, recognizing the vast importance of this amusement institution, always make special arrangements in the way of train schedules and low rates, to accommodate the big crowds that are always sure to attend, and this year will prove no exception to the rule of the past, as this great show this year is more than ever worthy of enormous patronage, for where can one see so much for so little money?

That the show is a great national affair is without a doubt. No event creates half as much of a sensation as the advent of the Greatest Show on Earth in a town, for the people are aware that nowhere else can they see so truly grand and overwhelming an exhibition or obtain half the fun and amusement. The only wonder about the affair is that so much can be exhibited for so small an admission price. Just see: There are the two living gorillas, the only ones in captivity, and famous all over the world as Chiko, and his bride Johanna; a tent for the exhibition of 380 head of horses, called the horse fair; the two menageries, in which also is placed the great Ethnological Congress of savage tribes, with their families, huts, canoes, weapons, etc.; a real Cossack encampment, where these fierce, semi-civilized warriors give exhibitions of fearless horsemanship, and show their manner of fighting their foes behind prostrate horses; an equestrian tournament, with high-jumping horses, may-pole dances and a fox hunters meet; an aquarium; an aviary; an elephant pavilion with two herds of these big monsters, cages of wild beasts, rare, big and little animals; a wonderful trained animal exhibition, which takes place in a big enclosure, called an arena, and twenty old and new style clowns; sixteen champion male and female bareback riders, as seen at various times in the three rings, while on the stages and race track are expert acrobats, gymnasts, jockeys, and aerialists, the whole forming a monster entertainment, beside which all others are tame. The street parade will represent the military uniforms of all nations, with living representatives of the crowned heads of the world.

To Give a Dinner Party.

Great preparations are being made by the Ladies Auxiliary of the Colored Y. M. C. A. for the dinner party to be given Thursday and Friday evenings for the benefit of the association. A large attendance from out of town is expected.

President Johannah Fisher, with the other women, are doing all in their power to made it pleasant for all. An orchestra will furnish music for marching.

Orchestral Concert Tonight.

The concert arranged by Conductor P. L. Conde and Pianist William E. MacClymont will be held in the Casino this evening. The programme as published in The Press of Saturday will be presented by such talent as Walter A. Hudson, William N. Bartow, Andrew Nebel, C. L. Eick, and the young men's Symphony Orchestra.

An Unknown's Generosity.

Editor F. W. Runyon has handed to Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., $25 to help defray the expenses of the Memorial Day celebration. The money comes from a public-spirited person who refuses to permit his name to be mentioned.

A Carp of 20 Pounds.

One of the largest leatherback carp ever caught in Bound Brook was secured yesterday by Alex. Ayres, of Spooner avenue. It weighed 20 pounds and furnished steaks for several West End families today.

Object to Benner's Place.

A remonstrance against the granting of a license to John Benner, proprietor of the Fanwood road-house, was filed in the Court of Common Pleas, Elizabeth, this morning. The matter will be disposed of by the court in a few days.

They Have No Home.

The Camera Club will meet tonight in the rooms of G. Thorne's gallery and decide when and where the Waterbury slides will be shown.

MARY A. TUPPER

IN A WOMAN'S PRISON.

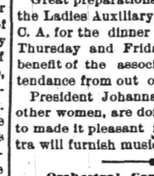
[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

Women's prisons are not always built of iron bars and solid masonry. It is easy to shut women up from the beautiful, joyous world without these means.



Mrs. Mary A. Tupper has been released at Wilton, Me., from the custody of extreme female weakness and nervousness which kept her a prisoner in bed, unable to walk.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound went to the root of her trouble, and gave her the liberty of health, so that after taking two bottles she was able to go out of doors and surprise her husband and friends by her rapid improvement.

She says: "Women should beware of dizziness, sudden faintness, backache, extreme lassitude and depression. They are danger signals of female weakness, or some derangement of the uterus or womb. Take Lydia E. Pinknam's Vegetable Compound, and be thankful for your life as I am. It only costs a dollar to try it, and the result is worth millions.—Ask some druggist about it."

TALKING WITHOUT A LARYNX.

Wonderful Surgical Operation Performed at New Haven.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., May 1. — George Strauss, a carpenter, 44 years of age, is confined in the general hospital recovering from a surgical operation that is considered a wonder in its results. About three months ago Strauss was taken into the hospital suffering from a tumor of the larynx. The result of the ailment was sure to be fatal unless the diseased member was removed. After much deliberation Prof. W. H. Carmalt, chief of the surgical ward, decided to remove the patient's larynx. Dr. Carmalt was assisted by Dr. Henry L. Swain, of this city, a prominent throat specialist, and Dr. J. Solis Cohn, of Philadelphia, the celebrated laryngologist, was present at the operation, which was performed three weeks ago. Prof. Carmalt, after placing the patient under the influence of ether, skilfully removed the entire larynx, with the tumor, and also the uppermost ring of the trochlea. The operation is a most dangerous one, but, owing to the skill of the surgeon, the patient is now in a fair way to recovery and is able to go out. But the most wonderful part of the operation is the fact that the patient, in his efforts to talk, has so strained some of the strands of the constrictor muscles that the strands are separating so as to form a new and artificial pair of vocal cords, and the man without a larynx will, it is expected, soon recover his power of speech. He is already able to produce articulate sounds. Strauss is now obliged to breathe through a silver tube inserted in his neck about three inches below his chin. When the wound heals the tube will be removed, leaving an orifice about half an inch in diameter. This is said to be the first operation of the kind performed.

ENGLISH LABOR COMMISSION.

LONDON, May 1. — The majority and minority reports of the royal labor commission have been issued, and, as predicted, show that the commissioners have done absolutely nothing toward the settlement of the questions they were appointed to consider. The majority report, signed by the politicians, employers and economists, is mainly a negative document. It suggests no reforms, and endeavors to dissuade parliament from enacting specific labor laws. The report is emphatic, however, in condemnation of legal limit to the hours of labor, and profuse in its advice to employers and employes to submit their differences to arbitration and endeavor to conciliate one anotner.

The report of the minority, the working men, is signed by Tom Mann, Mawdsley and Commoner Austin, and is virtually a socialist manifesto. It expresses the opinion that the only solution of the present industrial anarchy will come when workingmen and capitalists are alike regarded as servants of the community. The report strongly condemns the sweating system, low wages, uncertain employment, unhealthful workshops and homes, and excessive hours of labor, for the remedy of all of which the community ought to immediately strive. The report recommends the enforcement of a universal eight-hour day under trades-union conditions and an increase of the minimum rate of wages.

Yale Baseball Programme.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., May 1. — Manager Skinker of the Yale baseball nine announced that the following games had been arranged after the beginning of the championship season with Princeton May 19; May 26, Orange Athletic club at Orange, N. J.; May 28, Georgetown college at New Haven; May 30, Brown university at Providence; May 31, Andover academy at New Haven; June 2, Lehigh university at New Haven, unless Princeton and Harvard die; June 4, University of Pennsylvania at New Haven; June 6, open; June 9, Princeton at Princeton; June 16, Princeton at New York; June 21, Harvard at Cambridge; June 26, Harvard at New Haven; June 30, Harvard at New York, in case of tie. In case the Harvard-Princeton series results in a tie, the decisive game will be played at the Yale field June 2.

Parnell's Estate.

NEW YORK, May 1.—Mrs. Delia T. S. Parnell, mother of the late Charles Stewart Parnell, and lawyer Alfred H. Byrd, co-administrators of the estate of the Irish leader, made application to Surrogate Arnold to have the funds of Mr. Parnell's estate in this country, amounting to $15,000, turned over to the receiver appointed in Ireland by the English court of chancery. The creditors of the estate in England had a receiver appointed, and it is proposed now to throw the entire proceeds of the estate on this side of the water into the English receiver's hands, so that the creditors may be paid in full. Surrogate Arnold reserved his decision.

Mexican Tunnel.

CITY OF MEXICO, May 1.—With a silver pick President Diaz has finished the opening from end to end of the seven-mile tunnel out of the valley of Mexico. Several members of the cabinet and other prominent persons were present. After the opening a luncheon was served and informal exercises indulged in. The tunnel and canal, which it is hoped will at last successfully drain the valley, and thus remove all danger to the City of Mexico from inundation, have been in course of construction for many years, and when finished will have cost nearly $10,000,000.

Fanatical Jesuits.

NEW YORK, May 1. — The Herald's Rome cable says: The pope is much annoyed by the fanatical intolerance of the Spanish Jesuits at Plasensia, where they wish to burn some books they consider wicked. Among these were certain of M. Zola's works. He is vexed at the affront to the author of "Lourdes" just when he is beginning the publication of his famous triology, in which the place of honor will be for mystic Rome. His holiness said: "Instead of burning books they think wicked it would be better if they would try to write good books themselves."

Chicago Gas Trust.

CHICAGO, May 1. — The injunction asked for by counsel for the gas trust to restrain Attorney-General Moloney from beginning suit, has been denied by the court. Attorney-General Moloney immediately filed an injunction in the case, and the counsel for the trust failed to enter an appearance. The court issued an order and summons returnable May 9.

Printer Benedict.

WASHINGTON, May 1.—The senate committee on printing, to which was referred the nomination of Mr. Benedict to be public printer, will probably make a favorable report at the next executive session. Mr. Benedict did not appear before the committee, but it is said that he addressed personal letters to democratic senators, urging action.

The American Catarrh Cure

Is the result of twenty-six years' study and treatment of the disease. One bottle convinces the most skeptical. It is always ready for use, needing neither douche nor atomizer. It restores the hearing, cures the hawking cough and expectorating, removes the headache and nose bleeding, increases the appetite, produces sound sleep, invigorates the whole system and increases the vitality. Prepared only by W. B. Jones, M. D., No. 1336 South Eighth st., Philadelphia. For sale by L. W. Randolph, 21 West Front street. Price $1.

A PUBLIC BENEFACTOR.

THEY ALL SAY THE SAME.

Don't Hesitate, but Call and Be Convinced That Every Statement We Make Is True.

To those who do not already know that there is established in Newark, at 105 Halsey street, a physician who stands in the foremost rank of his profession, who is indorsed by the leading colleges of the country and who can prove by witnesses right here in Newark (not by one, but by hundreds) that he has succeeded in curing cases that have been utterly given up by other physicians, and good ones, too. To those who do not these facts we state that any person, rich or poor, old or young, is welcome here and receive examination and advice free of charge.

Thousands praise the day they came to us for treatment. There is no guess work, no experimenting, no painful operation. No matter how difficult the case, no matter how much of the physician's time it may consume, the diagnosis will not only be thorough, it will be absolutely free. There is no taint of quackery or deception; no claim or statement is made that is not borne out by facts and living witnesses.

Mrs. Abby A. Ray, late of 86 Grove street, East Orange, who now lives at 400 Ellmore street, Escanaba, Mich., writes, under date of January 12: "The medicine arrived this morning and I am so glad it came. I am almost out, and it has helped me so much and I am so much pleased with its wonderful effort on my broken down system that I would like to testify to your great success in my case. I am feeling as well now, in fact better, than I had ever hoped to again."

This is one of many letters that we receive daily. We have the originals at our office and if you wish you may see them. Another thing: We never publish or reveal a patient's name unless they so desire.

DR. STARKWEATHER.

There is not a penny to pay for the fullest medical advice. Dr. Starkweather is a graduate of the Berkshire Medical College, Massachusetts, and of the Medico-Chirurgical College of Philadelphia; endorsed also by the College of Physicians and Surgeons and Bellevue Medical College of New York. We invite all sufferers from whatever cause to call at our office, No. 105 Halsey street, Newark, where Dr. Starkweather is in attendance daily to give examination and advice entirely free of charge. It matters not what the disease, or how many years you have suffered, in spite of means adopted in your behalf, a visit to this office and the privileges of the same will cost you nothing, and may be the means of saving your life. We prepare all our medicines and prescribe the remedies indicated. This plan enables the patient to receive directly from us such remedies as will produce the results promised.

Our office is open daily from 10 a. m. to 9 p. m. Sundays 4 to 6 p. m.

Those living at a distance can consult the Doctor by letter.

The Gibbs Tragedy.

BUFFALO, May 1.—The first clue in the Gibbs tragedy was found by attorney William B. Hoyt, who discovered three empty 32-calibre shells and three loaded ones in front of his house, No. 152 Bryant street. The shells lay midway between the sidewalk and curb. This would indicate that the murderer ran back to the Squier driveway and then turned to the north cutting through several yards. The police are also said to have in their possession a letter from a woman, found in Gibbs pocket after the shooting, but they absolutely refuse to give out any information on the subject.

Labor Riots at Vienna.

VIENNA, May 1.—A quarrel arose between workingmen and strikers in Ottakring, a suburb of this city, and a policeman in trying to stop the trouble, fired his revolver, wounding two of the strikers. A general riot followed. Reinforcements of foot and mounted police were summoned to the scene. These were savagely attacked by the mob, but they succeeded in dispersing the rioters after three hours of hard fighting. Several arrests were made.

World's Fair Dividend.

CHICAGO, May 1.—After a long wait the World's Fair stockholders are to be paid a 10 per cent. dividend. The fair had a cash balance of $1,450,000. The dividends to be paid are: City of Chicago, $500,000; Columbian museum, on stock transfer, $150,000; stockholders, $410,000. The remaining $400,000 will be held by the treasurer until all the affairs of the company are settled.

Chinese Registration.

WASHINGTON, May 1.—Internal Revenue Commissioner Miller said that so far 84,000 Chinese out of 105,000 in the United States had registered. In San Francisco district alone 43,000 had registered and applications had been received from 3,000 more. The time in which Chinese can comply with the extended Geary law and register expires on Thursday, May 3 next.

REMARKABLE CURES.

Testimonial from William F. Barnard, Esq., Superintendent of the Five Points House of Industry, No. 155 Worth Street, New York.

For several years I was afflicted with a severe form of catarrh, and to such an extent that my hearing became seriously impaired, and I was constantly troubled with roaring sounds in my head. It also gave rise to a troublesome cough, bronchial irritation, and pain in my lungs. In fact, my condition was such that I felt convinced unless something was done for my relief I would soon be beyond cure. One physician thought that eventually I would be stone deaf; another gave me his opinion that catarrh could not be cured, and that I had to endure as best I could its pernicious consequences. Finding the treatment pursued of no benefit, I placed myself under the professional care of Dr. Lighthill, whose many endorsements for skill and success from well-known residents of New York city had been brought under my notice. The result of his treatment has been simply wonderful. My hearing is restored, the noises in my head have ceased, the bronchial trouble is gone, and I feel that I am completely relieved of what threatened to be a most serious, if not fatal disease. I therefore cheerfully commend Dr. Lighthill for his ability and skill, and feel confident that any similarly afflicted will be benefited by placing themselves under his care.

WILLIAM F. BARNARD.

DR. E. B. LIGHTHILL:

MY DEAR SIR—It affords me great pleasure to join the long list of grateful patients who have been relieved from troublesome and obstinate complaints by your superior skill. My case was chronic catarrh, from which I had suffered to such an extent that it weakened my general health, and gave rise to such severe pain in and about the head and throat that it prevented me from sleeping and alarmed my family. I am happy to state that the very first application of your treatment gave me prompt and decided relief. In a few days the pain had disappeared, and by degrees the other distressing symptoms of catarrh yielded to your administrations, until now I find myself completely cured. I therefore cheerfully tender you this testimonial of your skill and success, in the hope that others may be benefited by its publication.

H. P. DEGRAAF.

CHAPTER VI.

Several weeks had passed since Harold's proposition to meet Letty in the park had been made and accepted, and the two had become more and more deeply interested in each other. In fact, the time had come when each felt that matters might as well be settled between them at once, and one fine morning each started for the park with the firm determination to make a proposal of marriage that very day. Both were strangely excited, for neither felt sure of the sentiments of the other. They had succeeded very well in ignoring customs and conventionalities, and their relationship during these weeks had been much like that which might exist between two men or two women who understood each other, and who were thrown together in a strange land where no one understood them.

It was like that, with one little exception—the difference in the influence which love exerts on two whom nature intended for companions. Indeed conventionalities had been so entirely forgotten that neither Harold nor Letty thought that the other might claim the right of proposal, but each acted according to the promptings of the heart. It was not until they attempted to put their thoughts into words that conventional difficulties arose to make trouble between them.

"My darling," began Harold as soon as he caught sight of Letty.

Each heard the other.

"When you remember that it was not a whit more flattering to Letty to be addressed as "darling" than it was to Harold to be called "little," you will understand why each broke the sentence off at that point and stared at the other in silent disapproval. It was not that each did not want the love of the other, but that each preferred to be in suspense a little while to having love thrown at him or her without the asking. It was too much like being drowned in a barrel of syrup.

Letty was the first to recover herself.

"Did you speak?" she asked stiffly.

Harold thought he might have misunderstood her, and he was sure that if she had understood him she was entitled to further explanation.

"I was about to say," he began, his manner showing great embarrassment, "that—that is, I had thought—Letty, the fact is I love you!"

"Harold," replied Letty gravely, almost sternly, "why could you not have waited a moment? I was about to make the same declaration."

"Then I am glad I did not wait," declared Harold fervently. "I like a woman better who does not wear her heart on her sleeve."

"But, little one," added Letty tenderly, "can you not see that your manly modesty demands that you keep your sentiments a secret until the one you love has disclosed hers?"

"I must confess that I cannot," replied Harold. "It is man's duty to propose"——

"Excuse me, sir. It is woman's privilege."

"See here, Letty," said Harold, with sudden decisiveness, "there are some little matters which have got to be settled between us, and we might as well discuss them now. We have been willfully blind since we first became acquainted."

Each heard the other.

"I am afraid custom has more to do with life than we had imagined," admitted Letty.

"We will assume that we are to be married," continued Harold. "Who is to pay the expenses of the family."

"Why, I shall do it, of course," replied Letty, surprised that he could ask so foolish a question.

"Indeed you will do nothing of the sort," said Harold firmly.

"But, Harold, it has been the custom for"——

"I don't care a condemn about the custom," interrupted Harold. "Wouldn't I be a fine sort of a man to be dependent on a woman?"

"Can you imagine how I should feel to be dependent on a man?" retorted Letty.

"But," argued Harold, "it is according to nature that woman should raise children and man should work for her and them."

"Nature!" repeated Letty scornfully. "One can illustrate any text from nature. Watch the beasts and the birds. Does the female bird sit idly by while the male builds the nest?"

"The male certainly is not idle," replied Harold. "In my mind idleness and inferiority are synonymous, and I refuse to accept such a position."

"Yet you would force woman to accept it." Letty was discovering that things which in romances were quite delightful were often not even endurable in real life to one not brought up in the belief that they must be endured.

"It is different with women," replied Harold. "They are most charming in a subordinate position"——

"That is precisely what we think of men," returned Letty calmly.

"Well," said Harold angrily, "you may as well understand once for all that I shall never place myself in a position of dependence. I wouldn't do it for the best woman living."

Letty and Harold had reached a point in their walk where the road crossed the park in opposite directions. Without a word of explanation each took a separate path.

Harold had gone but a few steps when he was met by Mary.

"Yes," she said, replying to his look of inquiry, "I overheard every word. I thought it would come to this."

Mary looked as if she would like to add that she was not sorry, but if she thought it she kept the thought to herself. She had made herself very useful to Harold in many ways since the day she shot at him, and the two had become very good friends. Harold believed that Mary had opened her eyes to her own folly, and that he need not fear any further confessions of love on her part, and Mary had bravely decided that since she could not win Harold's love she would at least deserve his friendship. They had talked together a great deal about the delights of the nineteenth century. Harold had quite forgotten the annoyances of that day and joined with Mary in wondering how a condition so perfect could have led to the war of revolution between the sexes.

Harold had told Mary of his hope to win Letty and now looked to her for the sympathy which she had always shown when he was in distress.

Mary understood and determined to be equal to his expectations, though her heart broke.

"I think," she said quietly, "that you have not understood Letty. She has always declared that she would not marry until she could find a man whom she would find companionable."——

"That is precisely the quality which I desired in a wife," interrupted Harold.

"Yet neither of you treat the other as I should imagine a companion would wish to be treated. Each seems to me to be struggling for the mastery. You are willing that Letty should be twentieth century except where her ideas of the fitness of things come into collision with your own. Letty is delighted with a nineteenth century man except when he would force her to bow to customs which would rob her of her cherished independence. Let me tell you, Harold, that Letty can never be like her grand-mother."

"I have not said that I desire it."

"You have repeatedly spoken to her of that lady as being everything desirable. History tells us that she was a very ordinary young woman, rather pretty, but extremely sentimental and possessed of very little independence. Letty can never be like that. She is too"——

Mary's estimate of Letty will never be known, for the conversation was interrupted at this point by a noise which sounded to Harold like the threatening growling of an angry beast. "What in time is that?" he interrupted, but before Mary could reply a fearful apparition appeared before his astonished gaze. It was larger than the largest house he had ever seen. At times it appeared to be perfectly round, and it rolled along the ground with a force that must have crushed even the largest of the huge trees had it not flattened itself so as to avoid them. As it came nearer the sound of growling increased to that of the rumble of heavy thunder, and pent up lightning seemed to shine from its myriad eyes.

"It is coming this way," gasped Mary. "Harold, have you ever worked?"

"No," replied Harold. "Why should I? My father's wealth"——

"Will not save you," interrupted Mary. "That"—pointing to the terrible thing swiftly rolling toward them—"that is the 'Colossal Scheme.'"

Even as she spoke she took Harold by the shoulders, and with almost superhuman strength tossed him to one side. The huge creature rolled on, leaving poor Mary crushed to death on the very spot where but a second before she had been so full of life and strength. A crowd of mourners soon gathered about her prostrate form.

"It is fate," said the more philosophical among them. "No great Scheme was ever set on foot for the benefit of humanity that did not count its innocent victims by scores before it began to operate successfully."

"But what is this Scheme?" inquired Harold.

"It was started," explained the Live-forever, "for the purpose of annihilating those individuals who are born tired. I presume it was in search of you, who have as yet made yourself needful to no one; but, as you see, our noble Mary has given her life for yours. Young man, you must work for a living, either as housekeeper, shopboy, chamberman, nurseboy or retailer of system supplies."

Harold was about to declare himself in favor of the last mentioned alternative when Letty, who had been bending over Mary, came to his side and placed her hand on his arm.

"Harold," said she softly, "should you prefer to have me like my grandmother?"

"Letty," he retorted, "should you prefer to have me like my kinsman, Mr. James Winthrop?"

Then the lovers looked into each other's eyes and smiled. They realized that each was dependent on the other—made so by a love which was stronger than the prejudices of either—and simultaneously they agreed to strike a compromise.

"We will spend our lives," said Harold, "in trying to teach that what one thinks is right because it seems to be in the natural order of things is more often right only because custom has taught us so to regard it."

"We will," added Letty, "look forward to a day when we shall have taught people to consider a condition right because based upon principles of exact and impartial justice."

They threw their arms around each other, and their lips met in a rapturous salute.

THE END.

There is more catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address F. J. CHENEY, & CO., Toledo, O.

Coxey is Dauntless Despite His Experience of Yesterday.

Says He Will Remain in Washington With His Army Until His Good Roads Bill is Acted Upon if It Takes All Summer—Expects a Greater Gathering of Men on His Side Than Confronted Lee on the Banks of the Potomac—His Followers Placed on Exhibition at a Fixed Price—Details of the Exciting Times at the Capitol Grounds Which Resulted in the Arrest of Browne and Christopher Columbus Jones.

WASHINGTON, May 2.—Hard by what is left of the old canal in southeast Washington the Coxey army is encamped to-day, after the exciting scenes at the capitol. The gate receipts last night were fully up to expectations, and as this means more and better rations the members of the commonweal are cheerful and apparently contented with their position.

Coxey will probably have to continue to pay for the license to put his followers on exhibition at a fixed price, although the district commissioners agreed to consider his claim that no license fee should be charged, as the entire receipts were used for charitable purposes, i. e., feeding and clothing the members of the commonweal.

Coxey and Browne held a lengthy conference this morning, just before they started for the police court, where the latter was to appear to answer to the charge against him. They both declare their determination to keep the army here until congress acts on the measures proposed by Coxey, and fight all police interference through the courts.

Browne is sullen and decidedly ugly, notwithstanding this he is pleasant with the members of the army and talks encouragingly of their mission.

Coxey says his army has come here to stay until there is a greater gathering here of men than confronted Lee on the banks of the Potomac years ago. And then the real traitors will be overturned and every producer will then get the products of labor, for the passage of his good roads' bill would be the entering wedge to such a condition. He will stay all summer if necessary to accomplish this result, and the army will remain too, if he is compelled to maintain them out of his private funds, he declares.

A RIDICULOUS FIZZLE.

WASHINGTON, May 2.—Jacob S. Coxey's much advertised demonstration on behalf of the "Commonweal of Christ" in favor of good roads and the repudiation of national obligations to pay interest on bonds ended in a fizzle, quite as ridiculous as the principles enunciated by the leaders of the movement. All told, about 600 men out of the originally promised 800,000 marched up the capitol hill and marched down again. In this 600 were included all the unemployed of the capital who could be drummed into supporting the movement after weeks of effort on the part of Coxey's local agent.

The march of the "army" from Brightwood Driving park to the capitol was made without any special incidents. The entire route was lined with a vast crowd which alternately cheered and taunted the weary marchers. The line of march was not past the white house or treasury building, the change being made at the command of the president who did not care to give any anarchistic-inclined individual who might be in the procession an opportunity to make a demonstration.

While Browne was giving his final commands, the leader of the Commonwealers arrived in his pony phaeton. With him was Mrs. Coxey, and in her arms she carried little Legal Tender Coxey, her baby of a few weeks. Citizen Coxey held the reins.

The Commonweal moved at a funeral pace and it was three-quarters of an hour in reaching Mount Pleasant, a suburb of the city. At the head of the dusty soldiers of peace were three mounted policemen. Then came Mrs. Annie L. Digges, the populist orator of Kansas, in an open barouche with her husband and her two daughters.

Then appeared the greatest attraction of the whole show, Miss Mamie Coxey, tipifying "Peace," mounted on a white palfrey. Miss Coxey would attract attention anywhere, even if not dressed in her symbolic garments. She is a beautiful girl of 16, a perfect blonde, with long, waving golden hair, on which the little blue liberty cap sat jauntily. Miss Coxey wore a suit of cream-colored cloth, relieved by a big red bow at the throat. She seemed perfectly at home on her palfrey, but appeared somewhat embarrassed at attracting so much attention.

Mrs. Coxey Refined and Motherly.

Col. Browne, beleathered and befeathered, followed Miss Coxey on Courier, a big white stallion. He was followed by half a dozen weary privates in single file. The seven foot-sore musicians who composed the Commonweal band, tooted their trombones and cornets and beat their drums at a great rate. Coxey, Mrs. Coxey and little Legal Tender came next in their phaeton. Mrs. Coxey was dressed in black silk and looked a refined, motherly woman. Jesse Coxey, the 18-year-old son of Coxey by his divorced wife, dressed in cadet unifrom of blue and gray, formed the guard of honor for his father and stepmother. He was mounted on a spirited horse.

Then came the rank and file, the baggage, commissary and tent wagons and another goddess of peace, a Miss La Valletta, of Philadelphia, a friend of Christopher Columbus Jones. The bull pup "Coxey" was led by a chain at the rear of the column.

Arriving at the east front of the capitol, when command "halt" was given a tremendous crowd was assembled.

Browne Gets Excited.

When the procession halted Browne rode up and down the line waving his "banner of peace" and making every effort to obtain the plaudits of the crowd. It was plain that he was getting ready for his coup d'etat.

In reply to a police sergeant he said: "I propose to form my men in line and march them up the capitol steps."

Finally Browne rode up to Coxey's carriage and leaning over asked Coxey: "Are you ready?" Coxey nodded and, kissing his wife, he stepped out of the vehicle. Browne dismounted and took off his big sombrero to Mrs. Coxey.

Browne and Coxey then pushed into the crowd in the direction of the big white building, followed by a thousand people.

"Jump over the wall," suggested some one.

Coxey was quick to take the suggestion and he leaped quickly over the parapet and made his way like an eel through the dense crowd to the steps of the capitol.

Coxey Runs Against a Snag.

The crowd saw Coxey, bareheaded, proceed to the steps of the east portico and mount to the first platform, about five steps. Here were stationed Captain Kelly and other officers of the police force. They met the "general" before he had time to turn his face to the gathered multitude, and he was politely informed that he could make no speech at that place. Coxey said firmly, "I wish to enter a protest."

"No, sir," firmly replied the captain, "you can take no action here of any kind."

The police were courteous but very firm. Coxey then, bareheaded as he was, said: "Well, then, I wish to read a programme."

"It cannot be read here," said the officer.

Coxey showed no inclination to yield, and he was unceremoniously hustled off the steps out into the middle of the broad plaza in front of the capitol. He made no physical resistance, but protested all the while, and the crowd gathered around him and obstructed the way somewhat. It was not a hustle of resistance, but seemed more like curiosity.

Coxey was not formally put under arrest. He was simply put off the capitol steps far enough to prevent his reascending.

Browne evidently intended to follow Coxey up the stairs after the latter had finished his contemplated speech.

Browne's Trouble Begins.

The mounted policemen, a dozen or more, who had been directed to attend Browne through the day, hesitated a moment as Browne disappeared amid the shrubbery. Then a blue coated officer whipped up his horse, dashed across the pavement, over the low parapet and into the grounds. His comrades followed and into the crowd went went this platoon, trampling flowers and shrubs in their mad rush.

People scattered right and left and the foremost officer soon reached the chief marshal, easily distinguishable by his leather coat and white sombrero. The horse of the officer struck Browne and the shock threw him to one side.

Browne attempted to escape by making a detour, but the officers followed close behind. He dodged between two carriages in a roadway leading through the grounds.

In self-protection men in the mob seized the bridles of the horses ridden by the policemen and attempted to push the animals back. The police seemed to think that this was an an attack on them and responded with their batons and a dozen heads were cut and bruised.

Browne and Jones Arrested.

Browne ran into a number of officers on foot, and when one these attempted to seize him he resisted. A shower of blows descended on his shoulders. Browne fought like a tiger, shouting that he was an American citizen and had constitutional rights. He was seized by several officers pushed through the crowd.

Old Christopher Columbus Jones, leader of the Philadelphia contingent, attempted to rescue Browne from the officers. His silk hat was jammed over his ears in a jiffy and he, too, was placed in custody. With a mounted officer on each side of him, their hands grasping his leather collar, and, followed by more officers with Jones, the sensational leader of the commonweal forces was dragged off to a cell in the police station.

The Peace Disturbers Arraigned.

When arraigned Browne gave his name as Carl Browne, date of his birth July 4, 1849, at Springfield, Ill., and his occupation as that of a journeyman artist. He had $7.35 in cash, several medals and a gold watch. He requested a receipt for these things, but was informed that that was not necessary. When the officer was asked what the charge was he replied "disorderly conduct, and, as for myself, why he assaulted me."

Browne was not charged with the assault, however. The pistol, he claims to have have taken from one of his followers as he had strictly enjoined them not to carry weapons.

He was placed in cell No. 1, and had nothing to say except: "I am going to let the American people speak for me."

When Jones was arraigned he gave his name as "Christopher Columbus Jones," his age as 50, and his occupation as that of a pump builder. He had only 79 cents in money. He then said the Lord's prayer to himself and laid down on his bench in the cell, refusing to say anything else.

After Coxey was hustled off the capitol steps he rejoined his army with much difficulty, the crowd pressing him so closely that the police had all they could do to force a passage. As he stepped into his carriage in which was seated his wife and baby, the crowd yelled "speech," "speech," and despite the command of the police to start the procession he attempted to address the crowd, but the noise was so dense that he subsided and the "army" moved off towards its new headquarters.

Kelly Still at Des Moines.

DES MOINES, Ia., May 2.—It is evidently a case of freeze-out between Kelly's army and the people of Des Moines in which the chances seem to be against the army. The odds are against the army securing a train and it seems probable that the army will ultimately be compelled to accept the standing offer of the city to transport its baggage by wagon to Colfax, 26 miles east. The industrials are short of food, but well supplied with determination.

Galvin Men Again in Clover.

WHEELING, W. Va., May 2.—Col. Thos. Galvin's industrial army was given a grand ovation on its arrival here. The men are on the island and hundreds of visitors are going to see them. Col. Galvin is stopping at a hotel. The men will sleep in the open air and the city will provide them with food during their stay, which will be until to-morrow.

A Woman Furnishes Bail for Carl.

WASHINGTON, May 2.—About four hours after his arrest Chief Marshal Browne was released from prison on a bond of $500 furnished by Mrs. Elizabeth A. Haines, a dry goods dealer in southeast Washington. He went later to Mrs. Briggs' home, where he took dinner and was almost lionized by a party of admirers who had gathered about him.

INTERESTING RESULTS

Of a Mental and Physical Test of Public School Children.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., May 2.—Dr. J. A. Gilbert, of the Yale psychological laboratory, has completed some very interesting tests regarding the mental and physical developments of the pupils of the New Haven public school. Many of the tests are entirely new and the results obtained are exceedingly interesting.

The tests were made on 1,200 boys and girls varying from 6 to 17 years of age.

He has made a series of charts which show that boys are more sensitive to weight discrimination, that girls can tell the difference in color shades better than boys and that boys think quicker than the other sex. Altogether the charts show that boys are more susceptible to suggestion than girls.

The charts show also that both boys and girls between the ages of 12 and 14 years are not so bright, quick or strong in proportion nor do they develop as fast as they do before and after these years.

The object of the tests is to enable teachers to better understand the mental requirements of the pupils.

Warmest First of May on Record.

SARATOGA, N. Y., May 2.—The thermometer marked 83 in the shade on Broadway at 3 p. m. yesterday. It was the warmest May day on record in Saratoga.

Bennett to Build a Racing Yacht.

NEW YORK, May 2.—The fact that James Gordon Bennett is to build a yacht to race the Vigilant has just become known here. The contract has been given to the Herreshoffs, and work on the new yacht, a Tobin bronze boat about the size of the craft she is designed to beat, will be begun at once. Mr. Bennett's yacht will race next winter on the Mediterranean against the Valkyrie and the Prince of Wales' yacht for cups to be offered by Baron Rothschild and James Gordon Bennett. At these races it is Mr. Bennett's intention to have his boat manned by a crew of about forty American amateur yachtsmen.

Sues Her ex-Father-in-Law.

PHILADELPHIA, May 2.—Mrs. Hedwig Elvira Scott has brought suit in the common pleas court against John C. Scott, a millionaire coal shipper of this city, for $100,000 damages for the alleged alienation of his son's affections. Lloyd Scott, the son, and the complainant were married at Glasgow, Scotland, on Sept. 21, 1891, the bride then being 18 years of age. Later it is alleged the defendant induced his son to leave the plaintiff and apply for a divorce at Deadwood, S. D., which was granted because of "the false and wicked testimony of her husband and his father against her."

Rhode Island Legislature.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., May 3.—The senate passed an act raising the age of consent of young girls from 14 to 16 years and a resolution of final adjournment on Thursday of this week. The house referred the resolution to the judiciary committee and laid out work for Friday, two acts being made a special order for that day.

ELECTIONS IN INDIANA

Republicans Win at Almost Every City and Town.

Former Democratic Majorities Are Wiped Out or Cut Into—No Election Held in Indianapolis—A Democrat to Succeed the Late Judge Houk in Congress From Ohio.

INDIANAPOLIS, May 2.—Municipal elections were held throughout Indiana yesterday. The only cities not voting were Indianapolis and Evansville, which operate under special charters.

Terre Haute elects the whole republican ticket by majorities ranging from 900 to 1,500, a republican gain on mayoralty of 880. Union City gives the usual republican majority. Bedford gives a clean sweep for the republicans.

South Bend, usually democratic, goes republican on the entire ticket by 250. Goshen gives a clean sweep with republican majorities of from 80 to 300. It is usually democratic.

At Valparaiso, where the democrats had a majority of 100 two years ago, republican majorities range from 76 to 96.

Lawrenceburg, usually democratic, elects the entire republican ticket and three out of five councilmen. La Porte and Michigan City, usually democratic, both go heavily republican.

Richmond elects all republicans by increased majorities, as does Kendallville, Bloomington, Frankfort, Anderson, Muncie, Greencastle, Elwood and Marion.

All the gas belt cities show increased republican majorities. New Albany, usually 1,000 democratic, elects every republican but one councilman, and Seymour, another democratic stronghold, goes republican. Lafayette goes republican with a gain of 500.

Aurora went solidly democratic. The republicans gained one councilman in Columbia City. The former democratic majority of 200 in Columbus was turned into a republican victory. Every office in Crawfordsville went to the republicans. The republicans of Delphi, Elkhart, Logansport and Martinsville carried the day.

The democrats turned the tables at North Vernon and gained substantial victories at Madison and Ligonier. The republicans of Franklin elected their entire ticket by small majorities. The democrats of Huntington got one councilman, the city formerly being democratic by 900. Jeffersonville, a democratic stronghold since the formation of parties there, went republican for the first time.

Jeffersonville went republican for the first time in its history. West Indianapolis is republican with a gain of 100. Washington remains democratic by reduced majorities. Wabash, Vevay and Alexandria make sweeping changes in their politics. Greenfield goes republican for the first time since the war. Even Fort Wayne, usually democratic by 2,500, goes republican by 400 on mayor and elects most of the republican ticket.

Pennsylvania's People's Party.

HARRISBURG, May 2.—The state convention of the people's party of Pennsylvania nominated by secret ballot the following ticket: For governor, J. T. Ailman, Juniata county; lieut.-governor, Jerome B. Akin, Washington; auditor general, Abram Louder, Erie; secretary of internal affairs, W. M. Desher, Berks; congressmen at large, Victor A. Loder, Montour, and B. F. Greenman, Bradford.

Democrat Elected to Congress.

DAYTON, O., May 2.—Paul J. Sorg (dem.) is elected to succeed the late Judge Houk in Congress from the 3d district by nearly the usual democratic majority, a slight gain over the last election when the republicans cut into the democratic vote. The democrats are rejoicing over the apparent turn in politics in their favor.

Says Harrison is Not a Candidate.

WASHINGTON, May 2.—The Post publishes a statement from General John C. New referring to the report that his son, Harry S. New, of the Indianapolis Journal had publicly announced the candidacy of Mr. Harrison for the presidency. Gen. New says: "You can state as coming from me that Mr. Harrison will not be a candidate in 1896. He has made no efforts in that direction and will make none, neither will his friends. Short of some great emergency or contingency like that which induces the patriot to take up arms for his country, Mr. Harrison's name will not go before the republican national convention."

Evictions at Oliver Continue.

UNIONTOWN, Pa., May 2.—The evictions at Oliver are proceeding quietly. The sheriff sent a force of deputies down and aided by those guarding the plant the eighteen families are being evicted without any disorder. Most of the day will be required to turn out the families. The large force of deputies on hand is preventing any interference, but the scenes otherwise are much the same as those always attending evictions. A few of the families are adding the officers to carry the goods out, but others stand around and indulge in unsavory remarks concerning the eviction officers and the company.

Quiet May Day in Europe.

LONDON, May 2.—Reports from all parts of Europe indicate that May Day passed off quietly and that workmen generally remained at their places of labor. Only one serious disturbance was reported and that was at Gratz, Austria, last night, where in a conflict with the police a number of heads were broken and numerous arrests made.

Connecticut Military Camp.

HARTFORD, Conn., May 2.—Quarter Master General Harbison has bought for the state for $1,800 a strip of land at Niantic as an addition to the military camp ground. The strip is 400 by 500 feet and lies to the west of the camp, running from the entrance north to the cove. It is to be used as a rifle range.

Floods in Texas.

TERRELL, Tex., May 2.—As a result of the heavy rain which fell here from Sunday night until yesterday noon, farms and public highways are inundated, fences and bridges washed away and railway traffic badly interrupted. The damage to the crops is incalculable.

THE DAILY PRESS.

A. L. FORCE, - - Publisher and Proprietor.
WALTER IRVING CLARKE, - Managing Editor.

CIRCULATION EXCEEDS THAT OF ALL OTHER PLAINFIELD DAILIES COMBINED.

"Off Monomy Point" is the interesting tale begun in this paper and to run through three issues. It will be succeeded by "Rainsforth's Strange Case", one of the most fascinating serials ever published in a newspaper. Keep your eye on Page 4; its fiction department grows in interest.

For the privilege of receiving a clear and authentic copy of the New Jersey rapid-transit map, the Plainfield public is today indebted, through The Press, to William Morris Hayes, the accomplished editor of Transportation. Mr. Hayes is a successful railroad man, intimately acquainted and highly esteemed in transportation circles, and when he says a thing in his paper it's so, for he speaks from personal knowledge direct from the leaders. He proves that the Traction Company's system is going to be a great thing for Plainfield, as for all towns included in it, and no public-spirited citizen should oppose the speedy coming of the line.

The appointment of Foster M. Voorhees Circuit Court Judge by Governor Werts makes particularly interesting the Union County Senator's remarks of Monday night on gubernatorial appointments. Mr. Voorhees had been asked what was his position on the proposition to take appointive offices away from the Governor and to put them into the hands of the Legislature. He replied that so far as he was personally concerned he did not think the legislators were intended by the people to make appointments, and he felt perfectly satisfied to leave the gubernatorial manner of selection prevail. Someone began to criticize the appointments made by Governor Werts, and Mr. Voorhees warmly supported every appointment the Governor has made. He defied his companion to point out a single bad appointment, and himself went over the list, commended each, and said "It all goes to prove that the Governor can best be trusted to make the appointments". He spoke in the highest terms of Governor Werts, admired his clean record, and said he was sure that executive would make no appointment that would not be in full accord with the best wishes and approval of the people. If he recalled this conversation when his own appointment came into the Senate, he must have blushed all over to recall his commendation of the night before.

But, blushes or not, Mr. Voorhees will make a most excellent judge, if he accept. If he decline, he will make just as excellent something else. In the Senate he is the hardest and busiest worker, leading his fellow-Republicans in all the legislation, and not only fulfilling every capacity required of him personally but also taking that babe in politics, Asbury Bradley, under his wing and protecting that whimsical Senator from ridicule and defeat of his plans. It is his speeches and his efforts which secure the passage of hard bills. He carries everything before him in a whirlwind of aggressiveness, sunny temper, persuasive manners, powerful eloquence and unassailable argument. He has shown himself a most phenomenal success as a lawmaker—for he is so young a man!—and he has the qualities which would make him a most righteous law-giver. His Republican supporters, however, have mapped out law-signer for his career, and he will some day be run for Governor, whether or not he now goes on the Bench.

EARLY INTELLIGENCE.

—Wonderful bargains are afforded by Boehm's special sale this week.

—Moses Terrill was called to New Brunswick yesterday to embalm a body in that place.

—Denman Thompson's famous play from life, "The Old Homestead", will be seen in Music Hall May 10.

—A party of seven Plainfield cyclers started on a run to Rahway last night. One returned without going further than Westfield.

—A regular business meeting of the Reform Club will be held tomorrow evening. All members are urgently requested to be present.

—That seasonable, fashionable event, the Spring opening at Mrs. L. Adams's millinery parlors, is announced for May 4, and all Plainfield women interested in the latest styles should attend.

—The Camera Club met in G. Thorn's rooms last night. Suggestions were made regarding the opening of the new rooms, but the appointment of a Committee of Arrangements was postponed.

—The Young Ladies' Mission Band of the First Methodist Church will give a concert in Vincent Chapel, Friday night, in which the Rutgers Quartette will take part. A sociable will follow the entertainment.

Trolley Troubles.

A horse attached to a butcher wagon owned by Wm. Geoghan was left untied on Somerset street near Emily this noon. An electric car came along and frightened the animal, and he started to run. He was caught near Park place. The wagon was upset, and the top torn considerably. The horse was not injured.

Miss Julia Allen of Mt. Bethel was badly bruised by the upsetting of her buggy on Somerset street this morning. The horse took fright at a trolley car.

COXEY, UNDER ARREST.

(Special to The Press.)

WASHINGTON, May 2—Jacob S. Coxey, the chief of the "Commonweal Army", is now also under arrest, and the three leaders of the movement which culminated at the capitol grounds yesterday will each have to answer to the courts for the part he took in yesterday's disturbance.

The police court trial of Carl Browne, Christopher Columbus Jones, and Coxey has been postponed until Friday. The charge against them will be violation of United State statutes.

The arrest of Coxey took place this morning.

CLEVER THEATRICALS.

Local Talent of St. Mary's Parish Successfully Produces "Arrah na Pogue".

A spirited Irish play, "Arrah na Pogue; or, the Wicklow Wedding", was presented by local talent in Music Hall last evening for the benefit of St. Mary's Church. The Hall was well filled and the audience showed its appreciation of the work of the players by frequent applause.

The cast was:

|---|---|
| Col. Bagenal O'Grady | M. J. Cashin |
| Beamish McCoul | Cornelius Guinee |
| Major Coffin | Wm. J. O'Connor |
| Sergeant | Thomas Cummerford |
| Michael Feeney | John Whalen |

IRISH PEASANTS.

|---|---|
| Ony Farrell | Michael Higgins |
| Andy Regan | Charles Lang |
| Lanagan | Edward Delehanty |
| Patsy | Wm. Winn |
| Arrah Meelish | Miss May Passmore |
| Fanny Powers | Miss Julia Day |
| Katty | Miss Kate Cullen |

The opportunity for dramatic action in the stirring events which occurred on wedding-day was especially improved by Mr. Ward and Miss Passmore. Arrah's loyalty to Beamish McCoul, an outlawed patriot, and her refusal to betray him to the British, cause complications which seem sure to end in great calamity.

There was considerable fun in the first act in connection with the wedding celebration. The barn scene in which the peasants danced and Tim McCarthy's donkey appeared with a jaunting car furnished much amusement. The entrance of red-coats and the arrest of Shaun, who offered himself in place of his bride, formed a dramatic close to the act.

The difficult part of Fannie Powers, undecided and wavering in her belief in her loving Beamish, was well taken by Miss Day in the second act. Features of the act were the scene in the prison and the court martial. The fawning manners of the villian, Michael Feeney, aroused the anger of the peasants, and the audience was happy every time he was attacked. The sentence of Shaun to death finished the act.

Shaun's escape from prison, the overthrow of Feeney, the self-sacrifice of Beamish, and the explanations necessary led up to the final scene of happiness when the outlaw and the poet receive their pardons and general happiness reigns.

The minor characters were all impersonated in a lively manner and interest did not lag once during the evening. The many changes of scenery were made without delay by Stage Manager Ward and his Assistant M. J. Winn.

County Court Changes.

Senator Voorhees yesterday introduced the long-looked-for bill abolishing the Courts of Common Pleas and establishing in their stead judicial districts to be presided over by judges elected by popular vote. The bill was first submitted to the Republican conference and approved. Senator Bradley was absent from the conferrence, but it is understood that he will favor the change.

The proposed judicial districts are to consist of counties where the population exceeds 60,000, and counties of over 200,000 are entitled to two judges. The former include the counties of Camden, Mercer, Middlesex, Monmouth, Passaic and Union. The latter, the counties of Hudson and Essex. The other districts are made up of the following groups of counties: Morris and Sussex; Bergen and Somerset; Burlington and Ocean; Warren and Hunterdon; Cumberland and Salem; Atlantic, Gloucester and Cape May.

The law does not go into effect until December 1, 1894, but the new judges are to be elected at the coming Fall election for terms of five years. The salaries range from $3,500 to $6,000, according to the population of the judicial districts. These new courts are to supersede the Court of Oyer and Terminer as well as the Common Pleas and the Quarter Sessions also. The lay judges are wiped out of existence.

Plainfield Presses Miss Coxey's Hand.

Andrew E. Kenney, writing to The Press of Coxey's exhibition in Washington, says:

"Myself and a friend, bent on seeing all there was to be seen, talked with many of the Coxey notables. Miss Coxey sat on her horse, and I told her she 'looked very pretty in the procession'. She thanked me and put out her white-gloved hand, which I pressed. Mrs. Coxey talked with the members of the army, and called those who came all the way through, 'the original heroes'. Happily, the excitement has simmered down. Notwithstanding Coxey's failure to speak as he desired, the effect is the same, and the interest aroused will have its weight. One cannot but have sympathy for the crowd of unfortunate men whether they are victims of a delusion or not."

Another Plainfielder writes that only one Coxeyite in 50 is of the genus loafer, the others seeming to be workingmen.

The Bar-keeper Got the Sack.

Sam Hedden visited Demarest's store on Park avenue yesterday afternoon looking for bargains. As everything had been sold, he failed to secure any. However, he was presented with a ham sack, stuffed with paper. He took it to a barroom, and traded it for a drink, "sight unseen", and now the proprietor is saying all sorts of things, but Sam is happy.

THE CONDE CONCERT.

Delightful Music by Genuine Artists in the Casino.

That P. Ludwig Conde has a place in the music loving hearts of the people of Plainfield was shown at his concert in the Casino last evening.

When Mr. Conde made his appearance he was greeted with the heartiest applause by a large audience that thoroughly appreciated his efforts to give an evening of rare pleasure.

The programme as published in these columns last week was given in its entirety.

As an opening selection the orchestra gave the overture "William Tell", by Rossini, in faultless style. This is the first time a Plainfield audience has been favored with this composition by an orchestra, and its production was received in a most flattering manner.

Miss Violet Truell and Mr. Conde gave a violin duet, "Concertanti", by Dancla, which was much enjoyed. Miss Truell is a pupil of Mr. Conde, and her manner and style reflected much credit on her teacher, and on her unceasing efforts to master the violin.

Mr. MacClymont's rendition of Capriccio Brilliant op. 22, by Mendelssohn, assisted by the orchestra, brought out the talent of this promising player in a way that eminently pleased the audience.

The cornet solo, "Inflammatus", Stabat Mater, Rossini, by William Bartow, was excellent, and those present did not fail to appreciate the production, for he received an encore, giving a very pretty selection.

Walter Arnold Hudson is not a stranger to Plainfield people, and when he appeared last evening the reception was most cordial. His selection, Aria from The Creation, by Haydn, was one of the best numbers on the programme. His voice is a most pleasing one, and always wins hearty applause. The orchestra added much to the production.

The first appearance of the Young Men's Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Mr. Conde was a special feature. The training of their teacher was fully realized when the perfect rendition of "Martha" by Flotow, was given.

In opening part second, the Pilgrims Chorus from Tannahauser, Wagner, was rendered by the orchestra in a way that fairly captivated the audience. It was truly a sublime production.

The violin solo, fifth air with variations, Weigel, by Master Clarence Mills, was received with a storm of applause. This young player has, under the careful training of Mr. Conde, become a wonder in the use of the violin.

The zither solos by Andrew Nebel, assisted by orchestra, was a novelty. The delicate music of the zither was heard at its best, and the selection Fantasia D. minor, harp and chimes, Burgstaller, and "Tales from the Vienna Wood", Strauss, were all that could be desired. Mr. Nebel is recognized as an artist of much merit.

The concert would not have been complete had Mr. Conde failed to render one of his matchless solos, and when he played Fantasie de ballet, by DeBeriot, assisted by the orchestra, the audience was wild with delight. As an encore Lahn's Cradle Song was given, and during its execution the assemblage was breathless with delight.

Pizzicato Govotte, by Lahn, and "In the Mill", by Gillet, were played by a sextette in a highly commendable manner.

In conclusion the March from Tannhauser was played by the orchestra. The audience was given a rare treat in this number.

The whole concert was a success, and Mr. Conde excelled in his efforts to give Plainfield one of the best concerts ever heard.

It is hoped that when he returns from his trip to Germany another programme of high class music, such as was heard last evening, will be enjoyed.

Good Lead Pencils.

G. Sackersdorff is in town selling Russian lead pencils. The pencils are good, the prices reasonable. The plumbago is imported from Russia, and the covering (pure Florida cedar) is put on the leads in this country. The pencil is soft, and the entire length is the same, and not composed of short rotten pieces as in ordinary cheap grades. Sackersdorff's put them up by dozens and from any box selected cuts them, to satisfy the public of the excellent character of his goods. He is selling large lots to various business places in the town. We bought a quantity of them three years ago and have just used the last of them. The pencil is a good value for the money

Takes Plainfield Lawyers to Win.

Craig A. Marsh has started off this term with his usual good luck. He tried the first two cases and won them. The first was a hotly contested case of the City Bank against twenty farmers of Hunterdon County. The other was a case of a farm hand on contract.

Charles A. Reed was successful in the case of McIntyre against Schwenck. The jury gave him a verdict without leaving their seats.

Now Is the Time to Use It.

"Nicotiana Tobacum", which is sure death to caterpillars, currant worms, and all insects that injure or destroy vegetation or clothing, can be procured at Mosher's cigar store, 23 North avenue, and Young's candy store, Somerset street, opposite Manning avenue. T. H. Timbo is the Plainfield agent for this excellent compound.

$100 Reward, $100.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the one positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The Spring House Cleaning Wisely urged by the BOARD OF HEALTH is not complete without a proper use of DISINFECTANTS. But, in choosing these, do not be misled into paying fancy prices for "patent" specialties. Common lime is better than any of them for damp cellars and stables. For vaults, drains, cess pools, the best and cheapest disinfectant is COPPERAS, supplied by us by the pound or barrel at low rates. But for use in the house, in the plumbing, in kitchen sinks, in closets, for purifying the air of sick rooms, deodorizing offensive discharges—in short, for all purposes of a household disinfectant, nothing can excel the powerful solution of chlorides made and sold by us for 15 years under the name of REYNOLDS'S ODORLESS DISINFECTANT. ## FIVE HUNDRED KILLED.

Latest Reports from the Earthquakes in Greece.

ATHENS, May 2.—A severe shock of earthquake was felt here at 2:25 o'clock a. m., which was followed at brief intervals by several lighter shocks. None of the shocks did any damage. From the various stricken districts throughout the kingdom reports are coming in slowly, but sufficient information has been received to justify the statement that at least 500 persons have lost their lives either directly through the earthquakes or from subsequent exposure. Terrible suffering among the homeless is reported from all the stricken districts, the inhabitants being greatly in need of food, clothing, medicines, etc. The supply of tents provided is wholly inadequate to the needs of the shelterless people. The few buildings left standing are so badly shaken that they are likely to tumble down any minute, and are consequently not available as places of refuge. The amount of damage to property cannot be estimated.

Want Breckinridge Bounced.

PHILADELPHIA, May 2.—The Philadelphia Social Purity alliance sent a petition to congress asking "in the name of good morals and public repute" for the expulsion of William C. P. Breckinridge. The petition reads: "Not only by the verdict of the jury in his recent trial in court but by his own confessions before that court, this man is stamped as a base and unworthy member of society, and wholly unfit for the companionship of gentlemen, and especially to share in the making of the laws of our common country."

Plainfield Manual Training School.

A desire has been expressed by some friends of the school that it should be kept open during the summer. Those wishing to join classes in drawing, manual training and natural history can obtain particulars from John Dalziel, 309 East Front street, or at the school room over the Friends' Meeting House.

Well, at last the time has come for SPRING UNDERWEAR.
It was slow, but it got here, and so has PECK'S
Large Stock of Fine Underwear.

Ahead of the Procession.

Our great sale of goods of all kinds goes right on. Everything advertised last week and many bargains that have come in during this week added to the list until the store hardly knows itself, there are so many good things.

Place your dollars where they will do the most good.

Spring Capes and Coats—Summer just commenced, but we are cleaning out our entire stock at what they cost us. Every garment of this season's production goes at cost price.

Dress Goods—Just see that table full of them. All kinds and not a piece worth less than 50c and many of them 60 and 65c. Your choice for 39.

Wash Goods weather this is and if you want to see the best assortment of all the latest novelties in wash fabrics, see our stock.

WHITE, of Plainfield.

"Seeing is Believing."

Simple, Beautiful, Good—these words mean much, but to see "The Rochester" will impress the truth more forcibly. Its marvelous light is purer and brighter than gas light, softer than electric light, and more cheerful than either. The choicest bric-a-brac in the palace of a Vanderbilt reveals nothing finer. We have 2,700 artistic varieties, in brass, bronze, silver and black iron.

Ladies often like to go down among the large wholesale houses and buy of first hands. They will find at our salesrooms (the largest in the world) a rare collection of Art in lamps. A catalogue to send you if you cannot come.

NEW JERSEY ELECTRIC RAILWAY

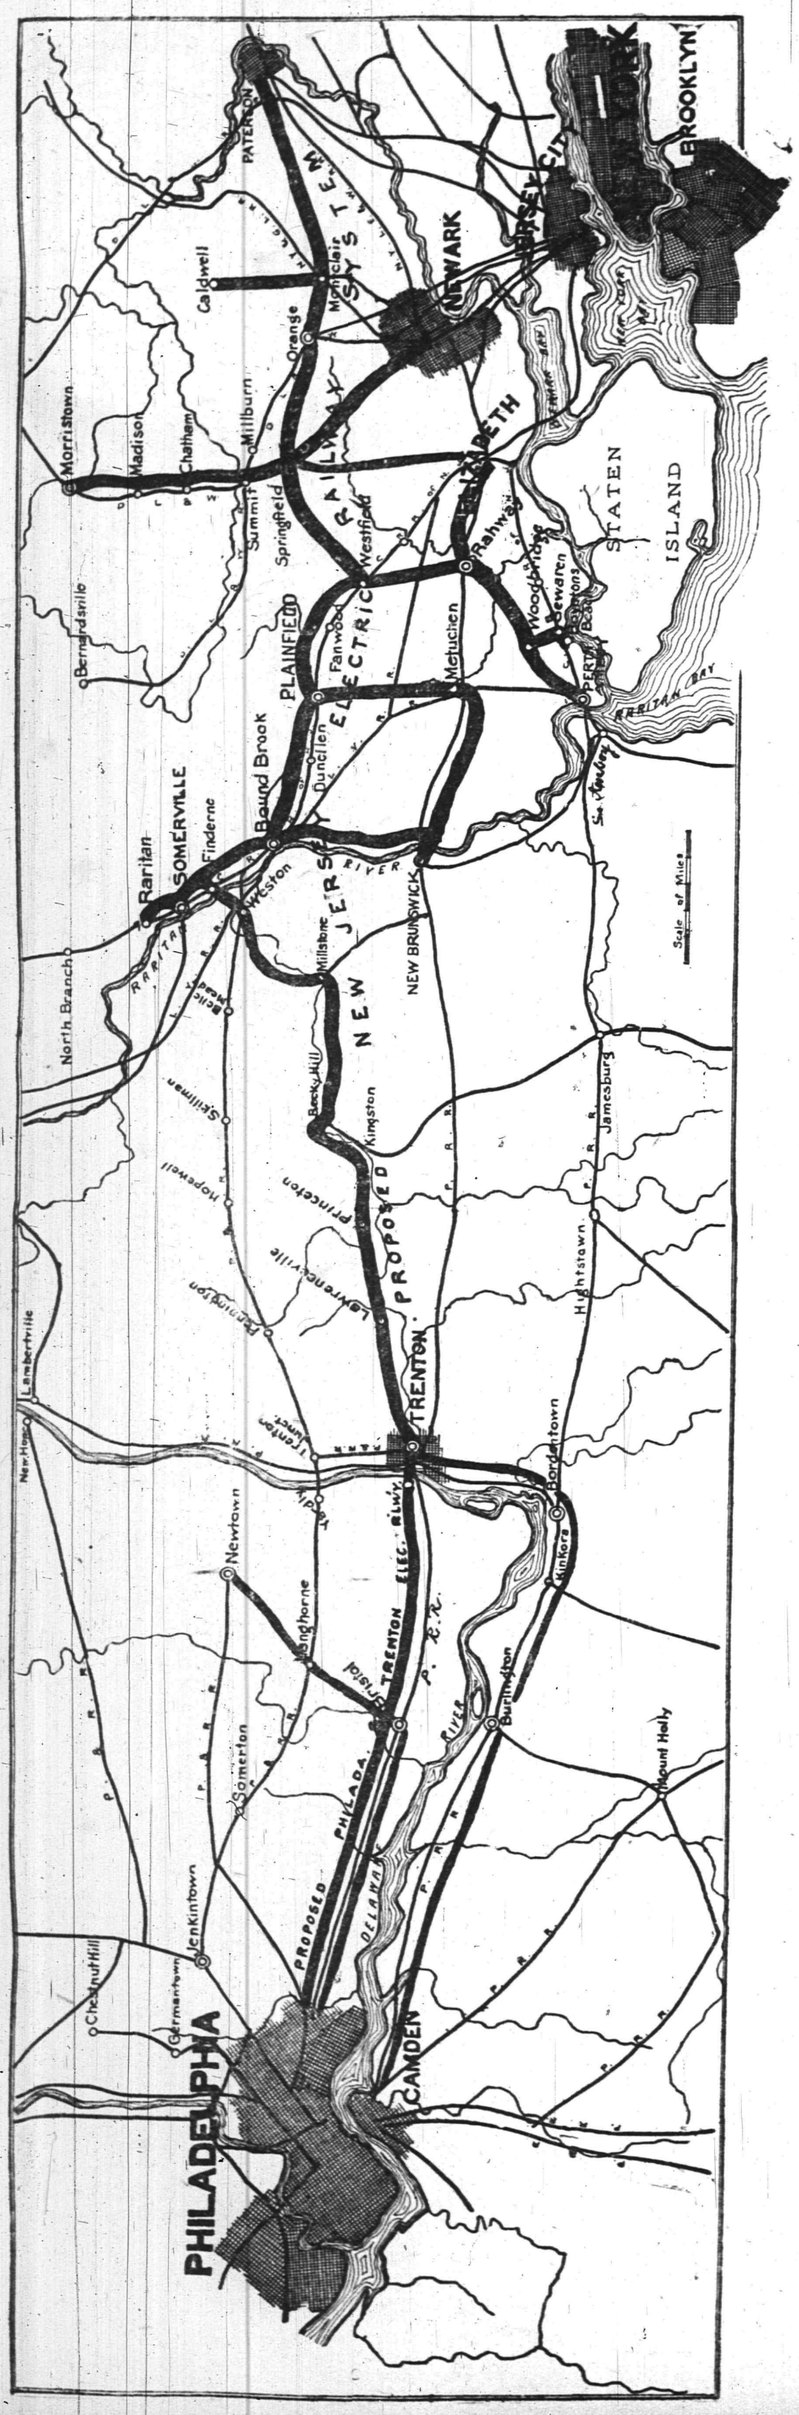
Official Map Showing the Route and Connections Across the State.



To the courtesy of Transportation, a most excellent journal published at 151 World Building, The Press is indebted for the use of the superior map of the proposed electric rapid-transit system published today, and from Transportation's columns are obtained these full facts:

It is no wonder that this enterprise is popular, for it has the merit and the people behind it. A population of over 5,000,000, including New York and Philadelphia, are tributary to the road, and it practically connects the whole State of New Jersey, with its 1,500,000 people, many rich and popular resident sites, embracing thousands of business men, mechanics, and laborers, with New York city.

It is estimated that the line cannot afford the accommodation for the travel that will patronize it with a single track road, and that a double track will be necessary to do the business.

New Jersey is the home of New York business men. Half a million people live in New Jersey and do business, or are employed, or visit New York, almost daily.

The main line of road between Paterson and Trenton, with the branches already referred to, will afford accommodations to over 500,000 people, and by its connections to nearly 1,500,000 people, who will furnish all the traffic the line can handle. From Paterson to Bound Brook, a distance of 40 miles, the road skirts the entire length of the Orange Mountains, from north to south, and runs through one of the most beautiful sections of the United States, traversing a district abounding in fine villas and farms. It will not only afford needed facilities of communication for the population, but open to improvement and settlement a large area of exceptionally choice building sites. It will have not only a profitable traffic to begin with, but a continually-increasing business. A large portion of the line is now built up, and a few years will see almost a continuous town from one end of the line to the other with the facilities which the road will afford. The road passes through miles of built-up streets in Plainfield, Orange, Montclair and Paterson, and will afford accommodation for many thousands of people, while serving as an excursion line to the people of Newark and New York who wish to ride at a small cost, as well as a convenient and cheap method of reaching the New Jersey sea-shore points from the inland towns along the line.

At present, residents of Paterson, journeying to Philadelphia or to the Oranges, Plainfield or New Brunswick, must take one line to Jersey City and another to destination, paying excessive fares in both instances. By means of the new line they will go direct to Elizabeth, Bound Brook, New Brunswick and Trenton, and connecting with through lines for Philadelphia and Camden with fare at a price the steam roads could not afford to offer.

When the electric line is completed and trains are running as proposed, stopping at all sections and crossings, no farmer or manufacturer near whose place the road passes will think of conveying his goods in wagons several miles to a steam railway station when all the facilities for quick, cheap transit are offered at his very door. He can have them carried to the nearest market or town, and within a few hours return to his home or place of business. The combination cars that will be used for the local trains will be constructed especially with a view to providing suitable accommodation for the movement of truck and manufacturing devices, and particular care and attention will be given to the building up of this important branch of the enterprise, as it can always be depended upon as a reliable and rapidly increasing source of revenue to the company. The construction of the road will also naturally be the means of inducing capitalists and manufacturers to locate along the line of the road, as they will be assured quick means of transit to New York or Philadelphia, and direct connections with the various other railways.

The road will be laid with seventy and ninety pound steel rails and equipped with thirty-four-feet double motor cars of thirty horse-power each. The speed will be eight to ten miles per hour in cities and towns and twenty-five to thirty in the country. The cars will be run from fifteen minutes to one hour headway, according to the amount of traffic, and when the business demands it, five minutes headway. Five electric-power plants, with 1,000 horse-power each, will be located at Trenton, Rocky Hill, Bound Brook, Westfield and Orange, and at points on the branch lines, as necessity may require.

Engineers' reports, based on careful examination, show that the road can be built and equipped in first-class manner at a reasonable cost, and that the immediate traffic will pay the interest on its bonds and a dividend upon its capital stock. There are sections that will tax the equipment to carry the traffic, and that will earn enough to pay interest and dividends on double the number of miles contemplated.

The road will cross over or under all through steam roads, except two, thus obviating expensive and dangerous crossings.

The people from one end of the line to the other are heartily in favor of its construction, and the leading and most influential men in the different towns and intermediate country through which the line passes are actively interested in the enterprise, and promise the promoters their full support.

An official of the company says that the line will enter Plainfield by Third street or Mountain avenue, and include the present Plainfield system.

The Fair Progressing.

The fair of the women of St. Joseph's Church was held for the second night in the Turn Verein Hall last evening. The hall was crowded throughout the evening. The New Brunswick Catholic Band, twenty strong, gave a street parade and played in the hall until 10. Master Ford gave several recitations. The German sayings of John H. Carney were postponed till tonight because of the band concert.

HIGH SCHOOL CHRONICLES.

The Linnæan Society made a trip to Wetumpka Falls Monday afternoon. Their destination next Monday has not been decided upon.

The cyclers of the P. H. S. A. A. expect to take a run to Elizabeth Saturday morning.

No quorum was present at the meeting of the P. H. S. A. A. yesterday afternoon and business was postponed.

The Lyceum Friday afternoon will decide upon the question "Will electricity be a greater benefactor to mankind than steam has been?" The affirmative debators will be G. A. Horpe, '95, and E. I. Serrell, '95, and the negative, H. O Nightingale, '96, and Lambert Fish, '96. E. G. Clark, '95, will give a declamation.

The debate of the Kappa Delta Pi Friday afternoon will be on "Resolved, that sight is of more use than hearing". For the affirmative J. C. Whiting, '93, J. V. Beekman, '95, L. H. Rand, '96, Norman Probasco, '94, and H. C. Wells, '94, will speak; and for the negative, F. W. Goddard, '94, C. L. Riley, '94, C. B. Morse, '95, Walter Probasco, '97, and Arthur Crane, '97.

Election Sets Illegal.

Judge McCormick yesterday, in the Court of Common Pleas, reversed the decision of District Court Judge Gilhooley in the matter of an election bet made between ex-Assemblyman Carroll and Thos. P. Smith, collector for John Kean's gas company. The bet was on the Governorship, as to whether Werts would have a majority of 5,000 over Kean. The stakeholder, John P. Jones, paid the money over to Mr. Carroll and then Mr. Smith sued Jones to recover.

Judge Gilhooly decided in favor of the defendant and Smith then appealed to the higher court. Judge McCormick declared betting on elections to be illegal and awarded Smith a verdict with interest and costs. The peculiar suit has cost each man over $50 for lawyer's fees.

Counselor Ely Was the Star.

The boys entertainment in the old building of the Grace P. E. Church last evening was attended by about 60. The boys were given vocal solos by Frederick Pope and Mr. Timmis, and piano solos by Miss Bidwell and Mr. Horton. Rector Rodman made an address referring to thoughts brought out in "Ships That Pass in the Night." H. B. Ely's humorous sketches were encored half a dozen times.

Ice-cream furnished by Mr. Pope and cake were served by women of the church, Mrs. D. T. VanBuren, the Misses Morgan, Miss Harriott, Mrs. H. B. Ely, Miss Ely and Mrs. W. A. Freeman.

Arrangements have been made to have the chapel open every Tuesday and Friday night, when the boys will be invited to spend these evenings there.

Claims Carlisle's Cousinship.

W. H. Carlisle, an old soldier from Newark who claims to be a cousin of the Secretary of the Treasurer, was arrested at the corner of North and Park avenues last night for being disorderly while drunk. City Judge Coddington let him leave town this morning with a suspended sentence.

Grey Mare in Full Dress Tonight.

Work has been going on all day preparing the stage in the Casino for the dress rehearsal of "The Grey Mare" this evening. The handsome setting will be in place by tonight and the favored few who will be admitted to the rehearsal this evening will see a performance complete in nearly every respect.

NORTH PLAINFIELD GOSSIP.

Chatty News Notes Picked up by the Stroller Over the Brook.

Thomas Stine, formerly of Catalpa avenue, in the western end of the borough, has been confined to his home in New York city, several months, suffering with rheumatism.

Lottie M. Smith, formerly chief operator at the Plainfield telephone exchange, and her sister Carrie E. Smith of Elizabeth, were the welcome guests recently of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Walker of Brook avenue.

James Conroy, brother of William J. Conroy, was quietly married to a Newark belle at her residence, Monday evening. A cosy cottage handsomely furnished on Fritz avenue will be their home. The boys all say "Won't Jimmy look funny with a market basket on Saturday night".

The hokey-pokey coffee cart is now in cold storage in the old grainary on Somerset street.

Mr. Ballantine has moved from Somerset street to Park place.

Somerset's Board of Freeholders meet to organize next Wednesday. The board is Democratic.

The Council will decide the marshal question Friday night.

THE STROLLER.

Foster Voorhees for Judge.

Governor Werts caused a surprise yesterday afternoon by sending to the Senate the name of Foster M. Voorhees, Senator from Union County, and the Republican leader of the Senate, to be Circuit Court Judge. There were three of these offices created by the act of last year, but only two judges were appointed. They were Francis Child, of Morris, and Richard L. Miller, of Camden. These gentlemen are both Democrats. Senator Voorhees is to fill the remaining vacancy. The term is seven years, and the salary $7,500. Mr. Voorhees would preside over the Hudson circuit.

It understood that the Senate would not confirm at once, but would hold the nomination abeyance until near the close of the session, as he could not otherwise accept without resigning his office as Senator. Senator Voorhees has not yet determined whether he will accept or not.

Senator Voorhees was congratulated on all sides. He accepted the compliments in his usual quiet and modest manner. To the correspondent he said in answer questions: "I have the matter under advisement and consideration. Want time to think about it."

Senator Voorhees was completely surprised. He had no knowledge of the nomination, nor did any one else.

The Governor admits that he wanted to give his friend a complete surprise, and he succeeded admirably.

The Circuit Court Judgeship pays $7,500 per year, and the term is for seven years. It was the impression that ex-Comptroller Heppenheimer would receive this appointment. Should Senator Voorhees accept the Republican majority in the Senate would be no more.

His acceptance would mean the election of a new Senator in Union County next Fall or if the Legislature takes a series of recesses a special election would have to be ordered.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

The Y. P. S. C. E. of the Seventy-Day Baptist Church cordially invite all members of the Plainfield Union to meet with them Thursday evening, May 3, at 8. Rev. Palmer S. Hulbert, of the Collegiate Reformed Church of New York, will deliver an address.

Dr. Hulbert is a most interesting Christian Endeavor speaker, and it will pay all to hear him.

The latter part of the evening will be given up to a social time.

Foreman Stahl Re-elected.

An annual meeting of Warren Engine Company, No. 1, was held last evening. Reports for the year were read, and a balance was found in the treasury.

The officers for the year were then elected, with the exception of the First Assistant Engineer, who will be chosen at the next monthly meeting.

Those chosen were:

Foreman—J. J. Stahl.
First Assistant Foreman—J. D. Anderson.
Second Assistant Foreman—B. F. Conover.
Recording Secretary—J. D. Anderson.
Financial Secretary—W. T. Newman.
Treasurer—S. B. Joseph.
Engineer—P. Kellegher.
Second Assistant Engineer—W. A. Wilson, Jr.
Stoker—Thomas Melcher.
Representative to Firemen's Relief Association for 3 years—L. B. Woolston.

Colored Y. M. C. A.

The Ladies Auxiliary of the Colored Association are making grand preparations for the dinner party to be given in Central Hall Thursday and Friday of this week. Mrs. Johana Fisher, president, and others, are deeply interested in the work, and are sparing no pains to make the occasion enjoyable to all. The orchestra engaged is one of the finest. Parties who do not care to have supper can come on half fare. A silver cup will be walked for. All are invited. Everything will be in good taste and harmony.

From China to Plainfield.

Rev. Dr. S. L. Baldwin, Recording Secretary of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and recently a missionary in China, will deliver an address in Grace M. E. Church tonight at 8. All friends of the church are cordially invited by Pastor Randolph to be present.

The American Catarrh Cure

Is the result of twenty-six years' study and treatment of the disease. One bottle convinces the most skeptical. It is always ready for use, needing neither douche nor atomizer. It restores the hearing, cures the hawking cough and expectorating, removes the headache and nose bleeding, increases the appetite, produces sound sleep, invigorates the whole system and increases the vitality. Prepared only by W. B. Jones, M. D., No. 1336 South Eighth st., Philadelphia. For sale by L. W. Randolph, 21 West Front street. Price $1.

MYSTERIES!

The Nervous System the Seat of Life and Mind. Recent Wonderful Discoveries.

No mystery has ever compared with that of human life. It has been the leading subject of professional research and study in all ages. But notwithstanding this fact it is not generally known that the seat of life is located in the upper part of the spinal cord, near the base of the brain, and so sensitive is this portion of the nervous system that even the prick of a needle will cause instant death.

Recent discoveries have demonstrated that all the organs of the body are under the control of the nerve centers, located in or near the base of the brain, and that when these are deranged the organs which they supply with nerve fluid are also deranged. When it is remembered that a serious injury to the spinal cord will cause paralysis of the body below the injured point, because the nerve force is prevented by the injury from reaching the paralyzed portion, it will be understood how the derangement of the nerve centers will cause the derangement of the various organs which they supply with nerve force.

Two-thirds of chronic diseases are due to the imperfect action of the nerve centers at the base of the brain, not from a derangement primarily originating in the organ itself. The great mistake of physicians in treating these diseases is that they treat the organ rather than the nerve centers which are the cause of the trouble.

DR. FRANKLIN MILES, the celebrated specialist, has profoundly studied this subject for over 30 years, and has made many important discoveries in connection with it, chief among them being the facts contained in the above statement, and that the ordinary methods of treatment are wrong. All headache, dizziness, dullness, confusion, pressure, blues, mania, melancholy, insanity, epilepsy, St. Vitus dance, etc., are nervous diseases no matter how caused. The wonderful success of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is due to the fact that it is based on the foregoing principle.

DR. MILES' RESTORATIVE NERVINE is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by DR. MILES MEDICAL CO., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It contains neither opiates nor dangerous drugs.

REMARKABLE CURES.

For several years I was afflicted with a severe form of catarrh, and to such an extent that my hearing became seriously impaired, and I was constantly troubled with roaring sounds in my head. It also gave rise to a troublesome cough, bronchial irritation, and pain in my lungs. In fact, my condition was such that I felt convinced unless something was done for my relief I would soon be beyond cure. One physician thought that eventually I would be stone deaf; another gave me his opinion that catarrh could not be cured, and that I had to endure as best I could its pernicious consequences. Finding the treatment pursued of no benefit, I placed myself under the professional care of Dr. Lighthill, whose many endorsements for skill and success from well-known residents of New York city had been brought under my notice. The result of his treatment has been simply wonderful. My hearing is restored, the noises in my head have ceased, the bronchial trouble is gone, and I feel that I am completely relieved of what threatened to be a most serious, if not fatal disease. I therefore cheerfully commend Dr. Lighthill for his ability and skill, and feel confident that any similarly afflicted will be benefited by placing themselves under his care.

WILLIAM F. BARNARD.

DR. E. B. LIGHTHILL:

MY DEAR SIR—It affords me great pleasure to join the long list of grateful patients who have been relieved from troublesome and obstinate complaints by your superior skill. My case was chronic catarrh, from which I had suffered to such an extent that it weakened my general health, and gave rise to such severe pain in and about the head and throat that it prevented me from sleeping and alarmed my family. I am happy to state that the very first application of your treatment gave me prompt and decided relief. In a few days the pain had disappeared, and by degrees the other distressing symptoms of catarrh yielded to your administrations, until now I find myself completely cured. I therefore cheerfully tender you this testimonial of your skill and success, in the hope that others may be benefited by its publication.

H. P. DEGRAAF.

OFF MONOMOY POINT.

By WILLIAM EARLE BALDWIN.

When Grosvenor left the bowling alley and walked down the beach, crunching his heels into the sand savagely, it was with a purpose to get away somewhere and think it all over, and to this end he untied a dory from the pier and rowed aimlessly across the bay.

She had refused him, and this was not the worst of it, he reflected. He had acted not at all well and had accused her of leading him on and flirting with him. And he had not stopped to see the sad, grieved look in her blue eyes, but had abruptly gone away.

He dipped the oars into the water and drove the boat on at a high speed. Then of a sudden he drew them in and lay back at the stern and allowed the boat to drift. Above the stars were brilliant and sent paths of light across the sea. Grosvenor closed his eyes and listened to the water splashing against the sides. The noise from the bowling alley came plainly to his ears across the water, and somewhere on shore a dog was barking. Far out at sea a steamer whistled—a long, hoarse note—and nearer at hand some one was hauling down the sails of a boat and allowing the gaff to fall on the deck with a thump.

And now that Grosvenor coolly went over their interview he blamed himself for getting angry and saw that the way she had put it was very kind and very much in the right. It was true that he had known her but a very short time, and as for promising so much to him and saying yes to what he asked it was quite out of the question.

The boat was drifting, drifting. Of a sudden it grounded, and Grosvenor found himself longing for another look at her face, and so he roused himself and pulled back until he was at the mouth of the canal where the waters of the bay found an outlet to the sea. Through the open windows of the bowling alley he could see the people moving about and could hear the sound of the falling pins. He held his oars in the water to keep the boat stationary, for the tide was coming in and was nearly flood.

Grosvenor shivered slightly, for there was a contrast in his position and that of those people he had left not long before. Inside the lamps shed a glow on the clean white walls of the room, glanced on the rolling balls and the polished surface of the alley. Outside there was a haze over the sea, and the darkness was only relieved by the twinkling lights of the cottages about the bay and the revolving beacon on Monomoy point far away. Grosvenor held his boat there fully five minutes, eagerly looking for her. And when at times he saw her near the window he could not help thinking that her face was very white, and that there was a sadness in her smile.

The tide had turned and was carrying him through the canal now. The water washed against the sides of the passage and rolled small pebbles on the sand as it receded. To Grosvenor there was something impressive in that quiet onrush of the tide and something mysterious, as if it were impelled by an unseen power. The air was very salt, and a damp breeze came from the ocean. At last, when the boat rocked in the long roll of the sea, Grosvenor pulled away desperately. He had no definite idea of where he was going, but the exercise of rowing gave him a sense of power and for the time being removed his thoughts from himself. Every time he dipped the oars in the water the phosphorus clung to the blades and dropped back like liquid fire, leaving a glistening path behind. The light at Chatham was abreast of him presently, and far away toward midocean he could see the one on Monomoy point flashing or the white sails of a ship in the offing. Down the coast the long skeleton of a half finished pier running far out into the water could be easily distinguished. Grosvenor had no idea of how long he rowed, and when he stopped for a moment he found himself exhausted. Then he bent his head to listen, for he thought he heard bells that sounded like silvery chimes. It was only the village clock at Chatham striking the hour of midnight, but with the waves dashing against the boat, the wind blowing in gusts offshore, the bells rang out in musical cadence, now soft and low, then clear and loud. They sounded to him like something he had heard long ago, he could hardly tell when or where, like a melody half forgotten, the lingering sweetness of a song once heard, but half lost. And in some way it brought back to him the expressive face of the girl he had left back there, and he felt that there was nothing to do but to leave her and never see her again. It would be very easy for him to go back and get away in the morning before she came down stairs. That, he reflected, was what he really ought to do, and it would be best for both of them. He leaned back in the boat and clasped his hands back of his head and thought of it dispassionately. Yes, that was decidedly the best thing to do, and perhaps it would save both of them a great deal of trouble and suffering. And in his mind during it all there were a lingering doubt and a half defined feeling that he might stay and face it out and win her to him, after all.

The east is radiant now with a fierce glow like the intense gleaming of a furnace fire, and the beautiful carmine is shot here and there by long darts of gray black clouds. The light extends far into the north and south until the red blends with the clear silver blue of the morning sky. Above the eastern horizon is a huge white cloud like a limestone rock cleft in places by long bars of glowing gold, and high up in the sky the white clouds are in layers like the feathers of a white dove. The color in the east grows more and more intense until a gold rim lifts itself from the sea, growing larger and larger every moment, and the sun comes hissing from the depths of a silver sea. The light turns the white spray to drops of shining gold and flashes in at the window of the lighthouse on Monomoy point, streams across the narrow spit of land and glistens on the water on the other side, turning the waves from blue to gold.

A dory is tossing about in the waves offshore, and the sun shines on the dripping sides of the boat as it rocks to and fro and lights up the face of a man sleeping in the stern and while sleeping smiling.

Grace Boardman, who made much of having self command, was very much annoyed when Grosvenor left her as he did, and she wondered where he was going and why he had such a desperate look on his face when he went out of the door.

FOR THE relief and cure of a cold in the head there is more potency in Ely's Cream Balm than in anything else it is possible to prescribe. This preparation has for years past been making a brilliant success as a remedy for cold in the head, catarrh and hay fever. Used in the initial stages of these complaints Cream Balm prevents any serious development of the symptoms, while almost numberless cases are on record of radical cures of chronic catarrh and hay fever after all other treatments have proved of no avail.

Read and Reflect.

The great mass of mankind lose their health through inattention to catarrh of the head and throat. This insidious disease was considered incurable until the discovery of the American Catarrh Cure. For sale by L. W. Randolph, 21 W. Front street. Price $1.

Don't Hesitate, but Call and Be Convinced That Every Statement We Make Is True.

To those who do not already know that there is established in Newark, at 105 Halsey street, a physician who stands in the foremost rank of his profession, who is indorsed by the leading colleges of the country and who can prove by witnesses right here in Newark (not by one, but by hundreds) that he has succeeded in curing cases that have been utterly given up by other physicians, and good ones, too. To those who do not these facts we state that any person, rich or poor, old or young, is welcome here and receive examination and advice free of charge.

Thousands praise the day they came to us for treatment. There is no guess work, no experimenting, no painful operation. No matter how difficult the case, no matter how much of the physician's time it may consume, the diagnosis will not only be thorough, it will be absolutely free. There is no taint of quackery or deception; no claim or statement is made that is not borne out by facts and living witnesses.

Mrs. Abby A. Ray, late of 86 Grove street, East Orange, who now lives at 400 Ellmore street, Escanaba, Mich., writes, under date of January 12: "The medicine arrived this morning and I am so glad it came. I am almost out, and it has helped me so much and I am so much pleased with its wonderful effort on my broken down system that I would like to testify to your great success in my case. I am feeling as well now, in fact better, than I had ever hoped to again."

This is one of many letters that we receive daily. We have the originals at our office and if you wish you may see them. Another thing: We never publish or reveal a patient's name unless they so desire.

There is not a penny to pay for the fullest medical advice. Dr. Starkweather is a graduate of the Berkshire Medical College, Massachusetts, and of the Medico-Chirurgical College of Philadelphia; endorsed also by the College of Physicians and Surgeons and Bellevue Medical College of New York. We invite all sufferers from whatever cause to call at our office, No. 105 Halsey street, Newark, where Dr. Starkweather is in attendance daily to give examination and advice entirely free of charge. It matters not what the disease, or how many years you have suffered, in spite of means adopted in your behalf, a visit to this office and the privileges of the same will cost you nothing, and may be the means of saving your life. We prepare all our medicines and prescribe the remedies indicated. This plan enables the patient to receive directly from us such remedies as will produce the results promised.

Our office is open daily from 10 a. m. to 9 p. m. Sundays 4 to 6 p. m.

RIOTS AT CLEVELAND

Workmen Driven From Factories By a Mob.

Considerable Property Destroyed By the Big Gang of Rioters and Several Workmen Injured — Police Finally Puts the Mob to Flight—Leader and Others Arrested.

CLEVELAND, May 3.—Labor troubles in Cleveland came to a crisis yesterday, when 4,000 men armed with clubs and stones marched through the low lying manufacturing district in the heart of the city, known as "The Flats," closing down each factory as they came to it. There were few English-speaking people in the crowd. In fact it was a rabble made up chiefly of foreigners. Considerable property was destroyed and the destruction would have been much greater but for the efficiency of the police.

When two men with flags shouted themselves hoarse for the crowd to fall in at the public square, there was hesitation on the part of the spectators to obey the commands. The speaker was cheered lustily when he said: "Come on boys; we'll show these fellows who's boss."

The march was then begun, and when Michigan street was reached 4,000 men were in line, hooting and jeering all those who did not join them.

It was a mob beyond control. The crowd poured into Seneca street, seizing sticks and clubs as they went. The Variety Iron works, just across the viaduct, was the first place assailed. The crowd rushed up to the open door of the foundry department, pushed aside the superintendent who stood in the door ordering them back and surged in among the workmen. In the meantime the crowd on the outside shook their clubs, threw stones and beat tattoos on the doors and side of the house with their clubs.

Soon the workmen came out and joined the ranks of the mob and a wild shout recorded the victory.

While the foundrymen were being forced out another branch of the mob went to other sections of the shop. The doors were closed and barred. A rush was made at the doors and the rioters fairly fought to get in, but in a jiffy every man left the shop, their departure being followed by a shout of triumph.

Shouting "Victory!" the mob rushed on to the Standard Paint works, distant about two blocks. On the way every man who was in sight was dragged into the ranks. Offices and storerooms were locked and the window-blinds were drawn and barred. The excitement was intense. The paint works employes quickly joined the ranks of the mob.

The rioters now simply brooke loose from all restraints and went wild as they approached the Upson Nut works. There was a train load of coal standing along the side of the works. In a moment the cars were black with men and the air was filled with flying missiles. The windows were broken and the men in the shops were struck down before they could retreat. A number of them had their heads cut and bodies bruised. There was a cessation in the coal throwing as the mob rushed for the building. The gates were closed and not an entrance way was visible.

Howling like demons the men rushed against the gates, forcing them from their hinges. Enraged by this feeble resistance the mob took vengeance by tearing the doors and gates to pieces.

Running mad through the immense building they took complete possession.

The molds were destroyed and everything that was breakable was completely wrecked.

The mob rushed from the wrecked building down the railroad track to the office of the company. Rocks were hurled through the windows and the destruction of the plant seemed probable.

At this juncture a howl went up from the crowd of "police," and in a moment the blue coats were upon them. The crowd at first ran, then recovering its courage, surrounded the police. The mob took possession of the coal cars and used them as barriers from behind which stones were thrown at the police.

The leaders of the mob endeavored to steady their men, but they were frightened by the beating of the police and the 4,000 rioters dwindled to half that number. These, cowed by the force presented, planned a move on the Faulhaber Furniture company and started on a run down the tracks. The police gave chase and arrived just in time to prevent a repetition of the scenes at the Upson works.

By the time the police had come to the Upson Nut works their numbers had been so augmented that they presented a formidable appearance, and in a short time had dispersed the unruly rabble, and arrested the ringleader, Tom Moore.

There were scenes of disorder in the eastern part of the city during the day. The desire to stop work seemed to take possession of every laborer and at 9 o'clock a band of 200 Italians marched to the tap of a drum down East End avenue. They were armed with clubs, iron and wire rods and two or three of them carried gate posts.

At Gates quarry there were speeches and threats and the men dropped their tools and joined the marching throng. At Neff's quarry the operation was repeated and at Reader's quarry there was little opposition. The rioters then forced their way into several boarding houses and compelled men to join them.

Mayor Blee has issued a proclamation calling upon all citizens to refrain from assembling together for purposes of riot and disorder and states that all the powers vested in the city government will be used to enforce the laws and maintain order. The mayor also held a consultation with the officers of the Fifth regiment and as a result six companies of that regiment, together with the Cleveland Grays and the City Guards, were ordered to assemble at their armories, subject to call for service by the mayor.

During the afternoon another mob visited the works of the United Salt company and drove the men from their work. The rioters then proceeded to the Cleveland Rolling mills, where they had a conflict with the police. There was about 10 minutes of fierce clubbing and the crowd gave way and scattered in every direction.

Seven of the rioters, all with broken heads, were arrested.

The Cleveland, Lorrain & Wheeling railway contractors at work in Brooklyn village have placed charges of dynamite in the hills surrounding their works and connected them with electric batteries. The people fear that the mob will use the torch.

THEY FLED FROM MONEY.

One Instance When Too Much Coin Became Dangerous.

PHILADELPHIA, May 3.—The workmen engaged in counting the 50,000,000 silver dollars that lie in recently opened vault C of the mint had an exciting experience and narrowly escaped serious injury. The bags, containing 1,000 silver dollars, have rotted so much during the four years they laid in the vault that 40 per cent. of the canvas receptacles have been found to be unsafe for their contents. When the men began work in the vault they were careful, knowing the erratic ways of coin in bulk, to construct a dam across the front of the piled-up millions, and they built it securely. The dam in place the men felt reasonably safe.

A number of workmen were on the mountain of silver and directly beneath the wood of the dam at its base were several clerks weighing the bags. Suddenly a bag beneath the foot of a man above burst and disgorged its contents. The men on the silver mountain started to come down. The bags broke suddenly by the half dozen, and before the men in the vault could realize what was coming over 200,000 silver dollars were pouring down upon them, a veritable cataract of precious metal.

They jumped and ran, for there was no knowing but that the millions above might follow. Fortunately no one was caught in the flood and no injury was sustained.

TWO KILLED; OTHERS INJURED,

Building Wrecked and Burned By an Explosion of Benzine.

NEW YORK, May 3.—An explosion that shook some of the big buildings on Broadway, blew out the whole store front of the building 61 east Twelfth street yesterday afternoon and set the building on fire. The wrecked building was the cleaning and scouring concern of C. Jolly & Son. Benzine used in their business caused the explosion.

In the fire that ensued Leopold Geneau and Louise Floorman perished while Emile Masson, Leon Budoir, Jean Baptiste Boncarron and one other workman were badly burned. It is thought that Masson will die.

The factory is a five-story building and was damaged $10,000. The explosion occurred at an hour when the street was crowded with shoppers. There was no warning of it whatever.

Confirmed By the Senate.

WASHINGTON, May 3.—The senate has confirmed the following nominations:

James D. Yeomans, of Iowa, to be interstate commerce commissioner. Frank T. Shaw, collector of customs at Baltimore. C. Ridgely Goodwin, surveyor of customs at Baltimore. Barnes Compton, naval officer of customs at Baltimore. Ormond Hammond, assistant United States treasurer at Baltimore.

Postmasters—Maine—N. A. Swett, Westbrook; M. A. Barrett, Caribou; P. H. Lighton, Hallowell.

New Hampshire — James Ryan, jr., Dover.

Massachusetts—F. E. Nichols, Warren.

Pennsylvania — A. D. Morganthall, Waynesboro; H. T. Rattigan, Chicora; Solomon Uhl, Somerset.

Maryland—E. H. Bartlett, Oakland.

The Wanamakers Going Abroad.

PHILADELPHIA, May 3.—John Wanamaker, accompanied by Mrs. Wanamaker and the Misses Wanamaker, will sail from New York to-day on the steamer Augusta Victoria for a European trip of some duration, including a stay at Carlsbad, a visit to Paris and other localities on the continent. Mr. Wanamaker will go to London June 1, to be present at the opening of the great "Jubilee celebration" and 13th international conference of the Young Men's Christian association, he having consented to serve as a delegate, at the request of the Pennsylvania state committee of the Young Men's Christian association.

Fell Dead at the Wheel.

GREENPORT, L. I., May 3.—As the steamer Montauk of the New York and Sag Harbor route was crossing from Shelter island to Greenport on her way to New York city last night, when within 500 feet of the wharf William Winters, the pilot, suddenly fell over on the wheel in the pilot-house. Capt. Gibbs, of the boat, and Pilot Banks were in the pilot-house and in the excitement failed to give the engineer the bells to stop and the steamer ran into the dock, doing considerable damage. The pilot was taken off the boat and a doctor sent for, but life was extinct. Winters probably died of heart disease.

Serious Accident to a Circus Tumbler.

COLUMBUS, O., May 3.—Claude Lavenecr, a well known tumbler, in leaping over an elephant at Sells' Bros. circus here yesterday, missed the mattress and fell, breaking his right leg. The bone protruded from the flesh and ran into the ground so great was the force with which he struck the earth.

TWENTY-POUND BOMB

Coke Strikers Were Planning to Use Dynamite.

The Southwick Company Receives Information and the Sheriff Captures a Quartette of Dynamiters in the Woods and Gets Possession of the Bomb.

A week ago Superintendent Ramsey, of the Southwest Coke company received reliable information that the strikers intended blowing up his company's "A" shaft at Morewood. Mr. Ramsey at once consulted with Sheriff McCann and, as a result, suspected parties were put under surveillance, which ended in locating them while putting the finishing touches on the bomb in the woods on Sand Hill, a half mile north of town, and less than a mile from the shaft which the infernal machine was intended to destroy.

The sheriff took six of his most trusted deputies on duty at Morewood and drove to the woods.

The officers quietly surrounded the suspected point, closed in and astounded the quartette of dynamiters, who were handcuffed and made prisoners.

The bomb, a metal ball, wire covered, and filled with dynamite was found hidden in a pile of rails and was taken along with the prisoners to Greensburg jail.

The prisoners are Edward Davis and William McCracken of this place, and two foreigners. Davis and McCracken claim they had no hand in making the bomb and were present by accident.

Threaten to Shut Down for a Year.

MOUNT PLEASANT, Pa., May 3.—General Superintendent William Ramsey of the Southwest Connellsville Coke company has been given two days to supply the Illinois Steel company with coke. If he fails to do so the four plants, Morewood, Alice, Alverton and Tarrs, 1,300 ovens in all, will be banked for one year.

900 Brickmakers Strike.

KINGSTON, N. Y., May 3.—Strikes are on in brickyards at Kingston Point, Turkey Point, Steep Rocks and East Kingston, against a proposed cut in wages. About 900 men are out.

Ontario Fears a Coal Strike.

TORONTO, May 3.—The strike of the Pennsylvania coal miners is already being felt throughout Ontario. Several factories have already closed down.

A Silly Story Revived.

WASHINGTON, May 3.—A story, exploded several days ago and laughed at by both men involved, appears to have started on a new round. It is to the effect that at a recent meeting of the committee on immigration, held last week, Mr. McPherson slapped Senator Hill in the face. When the story appeared it was denied by various members of the committee, and the facts themselves are all against the probability of such an occurrence, omitting even from its consideration the character of the two men. The committee has held no meeting for months, and Mr. McPherson has either been engaged on the finance committee or, prior to the taking up of the pending tariff bill, too ill to attend the meetings of any committee.

Blinded by an Electric Flash.

BALTIMORE, May 2.—Mrs. Sterner was rendered totally blind by a flash from a trolly wire on one of the electric street railway lines three weeks ago, and has not yet regained her sight. Everything possible has been and is being done for the lady, but apparently to no effect. Mrs. Sterner was sitting at a window of her home watching the passing cars. Suddenly a brilliant flash darted from the trolley wire. With an exclamation, the lady instantly placed her hands over her eyes to shut out the blinding flash. When she removed her hands she found that she could not see. The optic nerves were paralyzed.

Several Red Hats to Be Given Out.

LONDON, May 3.—The Standard's Rome correspondent says that at the next consistory three prelates will be raised to the cardinalate: Mgr. Segna, the pope's cousin and the assessor of the Holy office; Mgr. Loampa, archbishop of Bologna; Mgr. Ferrari, archbishop of Milan; Mgr. Mauri, archbishop of Ferrara; Mgr. Pervas, archbishop of Valencia, Spain; Mgr. Perraud, bishop of Autun, and the German Jesuit, Father Steinhueber.

Talks With an Artificial Larnyx.

PARIS, May 3.—Dr. Pean presented to the academy of medicine, a man aged 41, whose voice had been destroyed by an operation for a tumor. Dr. Kraus had made an artificial larnyx for the patient and thus had restored his voice. The patient now inserts the larnyx at pleasure. The insertion is painless and easy. The larnyx consists of a spiral silver tube covered with rubber.

New York People's Party.

LOCKPORT, N. Y., May 3. — L. J. McParlin of this city, secretary of the state committee of the people's party, issued a call for the people's party state convention to be held at Saratoga, N. Y., September 11. The convention will be composed of 220 delegates from the different counties.

High Charges at Antwerp.

OTTAWA, Ont., May 3.—The dominion government has definitely decided not to make a display of Canadian products at the Antwerp expedition owing to the charges for space which the exhibition authorities sought to impose.

WITH THE 'WEALERS"

Coxey Expects That the Court Will Fine Him.

Denounces His Arrest as an Outrage. His Daughter Denies That She Left Without Her Mother's Consent—The Army Still a Licensed Show—Movements of the Different Regiments.

WASHINGTON, May 3. — Miss Mamie Coxey, who rode at the head of the commonwealers in the march to the capitol, denies the report from Massillon that she had come to Washington without the consent of her mother, who is the divorced wife of Coxey, and says that her mother knew of her coming and that the story of legal proceedings being taken to reclaim her is all nonsense.

General Coxey's request for a free permit to charge admission to his camp for "charitable purposes" not having been acted upon by the district commissioners, he has taken out another show license for a day and paid his five dollars for it. This was issued by the assessor the same as a license for any other show to which admission is charged.

Coxey intimated that he was looking about for another camping ground and it is quite probable that if he does not voluntarily remove his forces from the present unhealthy location the district health authorities will either compel him to do so, or in the event of the outbreak of typhoid fever in the camp, will put them all in quarantine.

When Good Roads Coxey was placed under arrest in the police court, where he had gone to attend the hearing of Browne, he appeared greatly surprised and worried, but to-day he is again in possession of his nerves and denounces the arrest of Browne, Jones and himself as a shameful outrage. He considers Browne's action in demanding a jury trial wise, but does not expect that any of them will get off without being fined, no matter how hard the array of populist counsel work when the trial is called to-morrow.

Among the commonwealers are some old theatrical performers, and they have made arrangements to give an exhibition. They style themselves the Commonweal Star Specialty company. They will give a box party to the correspondents who accompanied them during their tramp to Washington.

Miss Coxey visited the camp last evening, bringing medicine and some little delicacies to the men.

Gen. Coxey says he is awaiting reinforcements, and is kept advised by telegrams of the movements of the various armies that are moving on to Washington.

Coxey, Browne, and Jones were not the only members of the commonweal army who were in the clutches of the law yesterday. Fred Allen, of the army, was arrested for disorderly conduct, and his case will be heard to-day.

George King, Coxeyite from California, was arrested on Pennsylvania avenue for begging, and before Judge Kimball was given 30 days in the workhouse.

Michael McDonald, another commonwealer, was sent to the workhouse for 15 days for profanity.

DES MOINES' WHITE ELEPHANT.

Tired of the Kelly Army But Unable to Get Rid of It.

DES MOINES, Ia., May 3.—The committee on transportation appointed at Friday night's Kelly meeting have received from the officials of every road which could carry the army to the Mississippi river, positive refusals to make any rate less than full passenger fare.

There of course remains General Master Workmen Sovereign's plan to have the Knights of Labor and the American Railway union force the roads to make special rates to Kelly's men or submit to being tied up. The statement that the American Railway union would affiliate with the Knights of Labor in the strike is denied by President Debs.

The trades and labor assembly will today march in a body to the state house to demand that Gov. Jackson secure a train for Kelly's army.

The people are tired of feeding the army, but are at a loss as to how they can get rid of the men.

Col. Galvin and His Followers.

WHEELING, W. Va., May 3.—Col. Galvin's army of Commonwealers encamped in Wheeling last night and breakfasted on bread, potatoes and coffee furnished by the city, while various butchers furnished dressed beef. The men pronounced it the best meal since they left California. The trades and labor assembly has interested themselves in the cause and will try and raise $150 to pay the fare of the army to Pittsburg. In an interview Galvin declared that he expected the government to furnish them rations when the army arrives in Washington.

Randall's 500 Followers.

HAMMOND, Ind., May 3.—General Randall and his 500 followers walked into town last night footsore and weary but with determination as firm as ever to reach Washington or perish in the attempt. The army will remain here to-day as the people of Hobart, the next stopping place, have sent word to General Randall that they cannot prepare to feed the army before Friday.

Grayson's "Wealers" Depose Him.

OMAHA, Neb., May 3.—Grayson's contingent of the commonweal army has deposed him and chosen a new leader. The army is marching east from Big Springs, the farmers refusing to carry it. The "wealers" threaten to disband if they cannot seize a train and the roads are not allowing trains to be seized. There are but 100 of the army left.

Mrs. Cantwell's Offer Refused.

TACOMA, Wash., May 3.—General Traffic Manager Hannaford, of the Northern Pacific, has refused an offer of $10,000 made by Mrs. "Jumbo" Cantwell, wife of the Industrial army commander, for a train to carry the men to St. Paul.

Frye Still at Indianapolis.

INDIANAPOLIS, May 3.—Gen. Frye's industrial army is still camped here. The mayor and city officials are engaged in an effort to get them out of the city and will secure transportation for them if possible.

Coxey Movement Endorsed.

HARTFORD, Conn., May 3.—The Carpenters and Joiners' union No. 43, of this city, has adopted resolutions endorsing the Coxey movement and promising Gen. Coxey moral support.

DOINGS IN CONGRESS

Republican Policy in Regard to the Tariff.

Discussion of Every Item and a Vote on Every Item Will Be Insisted Upon—The Dockery Commission's Most Important Bill Passes the House—Other Work.

WASHINGTON, May 3.—The discussion of the tariff bill in the senate yesterday was not marked by any of those exciting incidents or important announcements that had characterized the debate on recent days. Mr. Lodge (rep., Mass.) did make a fruitless effort to goad the democratic senators into a display of temper, but they remained calm and stolid, taking no notice whatever of his remarks. The republican policy in regard to the bill was outlined by Mr. Lodge, so far as he was authorized to outline it, in the declaration that the republican party would welcome the responsibility of defeating the bill, or stopping its passage, and that discussion of every item and a vote on every item would be insisted upon. Mr. Lodge was followed by Mr. Squire (rep., Wash.) in a speech, in which the bill was denounced as a political and commercial monstrosity. No action was taken on the pending amendment and the senate at 5:45 adjourned.

House of Representatives.

The Dockery commission has succeeded in passing through the house, with but one dissenting vote, the seventh of the list of bills reported by it, four of which are now laws. This was the most comprehensive and important measure prepared by the commission, providing for the abolishing of the offices of commissioner of customs and second comptroller of the treasury, and devolving their duties upon the auditors. By the changes proposed, a saving of $200,000 a year in clerk hire and miscellaneous expenses is anticipated. But this will not take effect at once for the work of the department is first to be brought up to date and this will require for sometime the employment of an additional force of clerks.

Before adjournment the house entered upon the consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill for the year ending June 30, 1895.

Early in the day, Mr. Johnson (dem., O.) offered as a matter of privilege a resolution directing the committee on public buildings and grounds to investigate the assault made by the police on the capitol grounds Tuesday upon citizens, which was said to have been cruel and unnecessary and to report to the house. Speaker Crisp ruled the resolution out as presenting no question of privilege. Later, Mr. Johnson introduced the resolution in the regular way and it was referred to the committee for action.

Court Martial to Try Maney.

WASHINGTON, May 3.—By direction of the president a court martial has been appointed to meet at Fort Snelling, Minn., at 11 a. m. on Wednesday, May 23, for the trial of First Lieutenant James A. Maney, Fifteenth infantry, who was recently acquitted in the criminal court in Chicago of the charge of manslaughter in killing Captain Hedberg, of the same regiment, at Fort Sheridan, Ill.

Bayard's Portrait at the Academy.

LONDON, May 3.—A notable addition has been made to the Royal Academy exhibit in a life size portrait of Mr. Thomas F. Bayard, United States ambassador, seated. Other notable exhibits by Americans are J. S. Sargent's lunette picture for the ceiling of the Boston library and Edwin Abbey's "Fiametta" and "Song." Mr. Sargeant's picture shows several archaeological figures.

Death of the Oldest Police Officer.

PITTSBURG, May 3.—The venerable captain, William Reed, who for 49 years has been in active service in the city police department, is dead after a lingering illness. Captain Reed was perhaps the oldest police official in the United States. He was 78 years of age and well known. The direct cause of death was paralysis.

First Case of Sunstroke of the Season.

GREENPORT, L. I., May 3.—The heat was intense in Greenport yesterday. The thermometer registered 89. Joseph Brown, a sailor on the schooner Golden Ray, was sunstroke. It was the hottest day for this season known in years.

Cable Rates to Pernambuco.

NEW YORK, May 3.—The Commercial Cable company announce that they are advised that the rate to Pernambuco has been reduced to $1.23 a word from New York city. Other places remain unchanged at $1.66 via Lisbon.

Verdict in Stokes Libel Suit.

NEW YORK, May 3.—The jury in the libel suit of Edward S. Stokes against his cousin W. E. D. Stokes brought in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $1,000.

No Rum Seller for Postmaster.

WASHINGTON, May 3.—Postmaster General Bissell has practically determined that no saloonkeeper can be appointed a postmaster.

Preachers Against Breckinridge.

LEXINGTON, Ky., May 3.—The preachers of Lexington have united in their fight against Col. Breckinridge's renomination.

Joy reigns in Frenchtown. The local band gives an open-air concert every fair Saturday night. Other nights, a glee club marches up and down the streets singing the songs of the day.

It is mean and base for partisan organs to hint at sinister motives of the Governor in appointing Senator Voorhees Judge. Such narrow-minded papers should take lesson from the stanch but honest Republican Elizabeth Journal, which frankly admits that the appointment was made in all good faith and from the Governor's sincere regard for Mr. Voorhees's superior qualities.

The Trenton Battle Monument is still incomplete. It is a hollow column, designed to contain an electric elevator to carry visitors to the observatory at the top, and also to have electric lights displayed at night on the same elevated point. The bronze doors, also, still lack the inscription. It will cost about $7,500 to complete it, and a bill is before the Legislature for an appropriation for that purpose.

That tender love story, "Off Monomy Point", grows in interest in The Press today, and will claim attention all this week. It is a tale of the heart, and lovers of a good story should not pass it by. It will be succeeded by "Rainsforth's Strange Case". This is the story of a mysterious tragedy, and is the most perfect work by the popular author of "The Georgia Riggabys". Like all The Press serials, it is finely illustrated.

Speaking of handsome Bob Adrain, the New Brunswick Home News says it would do anyone good to come to New Brunswick and see the ex-President of the Senate being whisked about in an English cart behind a fine piece of horseflesh, while the sunlight looks dim beside the gorgeous cut of his spring attire. And The Press can testify that when this gorgeous bloom of the Democracy enters the Democracy enters the Senate chamber at night the radiance of his gentility and genuinity inspires a brighter vivacity in his fellow-members, and the electric lamps burn dim with envy. His speeches are as welcome and as polished as his personality, and the members of both parties hope he will be elected to succeed himself.

Two eminent Plainfield lawyers differ on the question whether or not Foster M. Voorhees should accept the judgeship nomination. As quoted by the Elizabeth Journal they say:

Counselor Charles A. Reed of Plainfield—"The nomination of Senator Voorhees is a most gratifying compliment to his ability and integrity. To allow politics to stand in the way of a promotion in his profession would be foolish, and I trust he will not do so. His party will feel his loss as a leader, but the public at large will gain by his presence on the bench."

Counselor C. A. Marsh of Plainfield—"Senator Voorhees cannot afford to accept the nomination for two reasons: The first is that his party needs him for leader, and on the bench he would be a judge and not a political leader. The other reason is that he has too bright a career before him at the bar."

The Newark Call has a letter from a correspondent at Belmar stating that the movement for opening Shark River as a Harbor of Refuge has been revived, and that it is probable that an appropriation will be made by Congress for a re-survey of the river with a view to jettying and improving the inlet. Persons residing in Newark and other places in the State who own property in Belmar, Ocean Grove, Asbury Park and at other places in that vicinity are taking up the subject in earnest. Such a work, if carried out, would be of great benefit to every town within ten miles of Shark River. It would permit the entry of steamers, barges and sailing vessels and make that section of the State practically independent of the railroads with their high tariff charges. Coal, lumber and brick would be unloaded almost at the very door of the many rapidly building towns thereabouts. Property values would necessarily be increased, because the development of all business would be rapid and certain.

But this is but one part of the good work that would be accomplished by it. From Delaware Bay to Sandy Hook there is no safe harbor that a ship in distress may run into. Most of the vessels wrecked on the New Jersey coast come ashore at some point near Shark River Inlet in an attempt to make Sandy Hook. The opening of Shark River as proposed in addition to all the commercial advantages that would be obtained, would afford a refuge for these vessels at the very point most needed, and would be the means of saving many valuable lives and much valuable property in ships and merchandise.

It is further suggested that in case the river should be deepened and widened Shark River would be the natural terminus of the proposed New Jersey ship canal from Philadelphia.

Foster's Chance to Electrify.

(From The Elizabeth Journal.)

Senator Voorhees is today the people's candidate for Governor. There is no denying this fact. If the nominating conventions were held now Foster M. Voorhees would carry the whole State delegation with the wildest enthusiasm. That's the feeling, that's the sentiment, and it does honor to the State. What may take place before another year rolls around no one can tell, but if the public demand is in 1895 what it is today, no political power in New Jersey can resist the overwhelming tide in favor of the young Senator from Union County.

With prospects such as these can Mr. Voorhees afford to accept? Will his prospects be in any degree interfered with if he should accept? Some think one way, some another, as to this point. Certain it is that if he declines the effect of his loyalty to his party will be electric. Where is there a man in New Jersey who will not be thrilled with this example? To sacrifice $7,500 a year and a place of comfort and honor, for the sake of his constituents and his party—it would electrify every young man in this county and State.

PERTINENT FOR PLAINFIELD.

The citizens of a great many good towns work hard to induce new industries to locate within the corporate limits and wholly neglect to give proper encouragement to home talent. The famous western novelist, Mr. E. W. Howe, hits this nail exactly on its very head in his novel "The Story of a Country Town," which made a great hit a few years ago and received the enthusiastic praise of such eminent literary men as W. D. Howells and Mark Twain. In a chapter headed "The Peculiarities of a Country Town" Mr. Howe says:

"There was one thing I noticed of Twin Mounds which is probably true of every other country town—it was constantly threatened either with great prosperity or great danger, but whether the event threatening the prosperity or the danger came to pass the town progressed about the same. There was no perceptible effect from any of the events the people were certain would prove either very disastrous or of great benefit, from which I am led to believe that no one is familiar with the art of town building, although I have never known a man who did not profess to know all there is worth knowing about the science.

"Towns seem to be the natural accretion of years, and although the people in Twin Mounds often related how desperate were their struggles with adversity the facts probably are that the place would have been fully as large without the great number of public meetings for public purposes and the endless worry of individuals with reference to it.

"There was a very general impression that manufactories were needed, and this was talked about so much, and so many inducements were offered, that the people became discouraged, believing that the average manufacturer had a wicked heart and a hollow head to thus wrong Twin Mounds in the face of his own interest. Therefore we were very much surprised to learn once, after all hope had been abandoned, that a quiet man was building a woolen mill down the river, which he completed and afterward operated without the help of the committees which had been appointed to aid in such matters of public weal.

"The trouble was that the man lived in Twin Mounds, whereas we had been expecting a man and money to come from a distant point for that purpose and had never thought of looking about home, but spent a great deal of money in sending committees away to make arrangements for a woolen mill. This circumstance, though humiliating, proved a good thing, for it taught the people that if the town were to be built up at all it must be by its own citizens, which knowledge was afterward used to good advantage.

"The people were always miserable by reason of predictions that unless impossible amounts of money were given to certain enterprises the town would be ruined, and, although they always gave, no sooner was one fund exhausted than it became necessary to raise another. It was said during the collection of each amount that it would never be necessary again to give to this sort of charity, as the enterprise then in hand would insure the fortune of Twin Mounds, but there was never an end to the ridiculous business, and we were always in a state of dreariness on this account, as the men demanding the charity for insignificant enterprises threatened to go to the rival towns and permit the grass to grow in our streets.

"In thinking of the matter since I have thought that Twin Mounds would have been a much better town but for the fact that it was always expecting improbable disaster, but which never came, for the people were thus prevented from exercising their energy, if they had any."

Although the above excerpt is from a work of fiction, it is so true to life that its wisdom is apparent. Three good points to remember are the following:

Always encourage home talent when it stands ready to establish an enterprise that will build up the town.

Always look on the bright side of the town's outlook. Never predict anything but prosperity. Well men often die because they believe they are suffering from some wholly imaginary ailment, and a good town sometimes retrogrades simply because of the croaking of calamity howlers. Say nothing if you cannot say a good word for the town, but keep on sawing the town's wood.

Stop Fast Driving.

The folly of reckless driving by horsemen and bicyclists seems never to occur to a community until accidents have multiplied beyond endurance. The spectacle of a flying streak of humanity who pumps his pedals or whacks his nag along our thoroughfares is altogether too frequent. Our streets are not intended for such exhibitions, and the public safety demands that a halt be called and transgressors of the ordinances be punished according to their deserts.

A Plainfield Boy's Honor.

Valedictory—Alexander McGaffin, Northfield Mass.

Latin Salutatory—C. A. Robinson, West Hebron, N. Y.

English Salutatory—Paul Erdman, Morristown, N. J.

Oration—Edward J. Patterson, Plainfield, N. J.

Oration—C. M. Cartwright, Waynesville, O.

Oration—A. T. Davis, East Orange.

Oration—C. S. Havens, Toms River.

Oration—Donald MacColl, Caledonia, N. Y.

Oration—G. H. Walles, Salisbury, Md.

Championship Presentation.

Delegates from the clubs of the Diocesan Bowling Union will be present tonight at the presentation of the championship trophy to the C. Y. M. L. team. A game will be played, supper served and dancing enjoyed.

You'll Find a Clew in Connaught.

What's in a name? A dance by any other name than Kaczorowski would be just as easy to execute and not half so tiresome. By the way, will our Somerville brother tell us from what part of Ireland Mr. Kaczorowski came?

THE PLAINFIELD SCHOOL BILL.

Its Steady Progress Through the Senate.

TRENTON, May 3.—The Plainfield School Bill, with the amendment incorporated in it exempting Morristown, was reported re-engrossed this morning, by the committee to whom it was referred Tuesday as reported exclusively in these despatches, and the Speaker ordered it placed on the calendar for third reading in its amended form. Senator Voorhees said at recess that it would likely be reached for final passage this afternoon.

PLAINFIELD'S NEW CITIZEN.

Congressman Hoar, and His Political Plans.

Hon. Roswell G. Hoar and family took possession of their new home, 808 Park avenue, this city, Monday. Mr. Hoar is editor of The New York Weekly Tribune, and has the remarkable record of having increased its circulation in the two years of his editorship from 43,000 to 180,000, weekly.

Mr. Hoar has been prominent in Republican politics for many years. He was Republican Congressman from Michigan for one term and since leaving Washington he has been active among Republicans in New York.

Mr. Hoar left Plainfield today for Oregon, where he will remain one month and will be active in the great political canvass now going on in that State. The election takes place June 4, and is for a Governor, two Congressmen and a Legislature that will elect the United States Senator. The contest in Oregon is between the Republicans and the Populists, the latter party having grown up in parts of the west to the exclusion of the Democrats. Mr. Hoar will return east by way of Texas where he has been invited to participate in the organization of a white man's Republican party. He will speak in various parts of Texas during the early part of June.

Mr. Hoar and his family have settled in Plainfield permanently. Mrs. Hoar was well known in Washington society, as was her daughter, Mrs. Ewart, who will reside with her parents. After Mr. Hoar's return in July his voice will undoubtedly be heard in political matters in his adopted State.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

Miss May Thompson has returned from her visit to the country.

E. J. Fitzhugh will play on the piano at the Memorial Day exercises in Music Hall.

Mr. Horner of Philadelphia is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. John H. Kitchen of the borough.

J. Ran. Dunn of West Fourth street is now able to go out a little every day, and is feeling much better.

Mrs. Stephen Pangborn of Jackson avenue is able to get down stairs again after a serious illness.

Mrs. John Moore of Chatham street is very ill. A physician was called twice last evening. She is feeling a little better today.

George T. Stothoff, aged 81, died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Jenkins, corner of Washington and Sixth streets, this morning. Notice of funeral will be given hereafter.

Rev. W. E. Honeyman was chosen by the session of the First Presbyterian Church to act as Moderator at their meeting last evening, the pastor, Rev. C. E. Herring, being in Washington.

The soprano is not yet secured for the third concert of the Choral Society, May 15, but the other soloists will be Mrs. Carl Alves, contalto; William H. Rieger, tenor; and Erricson Bushnell, bass. The orchestra will be from the New York Philharmonic Society. E. J. Fitzhugh will be conductor.

Hugh Boyd, editor and proprietor of the New Brunswick Home News, was a welcome guest in the Press office today. He drove over to enjoy a view of the reviving beauties of Plainfield. He and his companion, John Martin, son of the Senator, covered the distance in less than 50 minutes, behind Mr. Martin's fast horse.

Plainfield's Best Restaurant.

McVey's restaurant now has the best cook in the history of the establishment, and Mr. McVey is serving the public second to none in the State. He asks and deserves liberal patronage to encourage and to maintain the high reputation his restaurant now enjoys.

FIRE ON FRONT STREET.

Not Much of One, 'Cause 'Twas Nipped in Time.

Paper and a cloth cover on a table in the cellar of R. C. Rand's stationery store, 140 West Front street, caught fire last evening. At 11:20, when it was discovered by boys on the street, the blaze and the smoke made the cellar look as if a serious fire had started.

The alarm was given from Box 12 by Policeman Frederickson. John M. Schorb, Jr., who lives above the store, brought out his family. The shouting aroused Mr. Rand and he came across the street. The fire was extinguished before the fire department reached the place.

The cause of the fire is unknown. Had it been allowed to burn a few minutes longer Mr. Rand's stock might have been considerably damaged.

Box 12 gave the alarm in great shape, showing the system to be in perfect order.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the one positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio.

Talked on China.

The address on mission work in China delivered in Grace M. E. Church last night by Rev. Dr. S. L. Baldwin, interested a large audience. Dr. Baldwin, now Recording Secretary of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was a missionary in China for many years and his familiarity with the work was evident from his lecture. He dwelled particularly upon the disadvantages under which missionaries among the Chinese labor.

Read and Reflect.

The great mass of mankind lose their health through inattention to catarrh of the head and throat. This insidious disease was considered incurable until the discovery of the American Catarrh Cure. For sale by L. W. Randolph, 21 W. Front street. Price $1.

The Spring House Cleaning Wisely urged by the BOARD OF HEALTH is not complete without a proper use of DISINFECTANTS. But, in choosing these, do not be misled into paying fancy prices for "patent" specialties. Common lime is better than any of them for damp cellars and stables. For vaults, drains, cess pools, the best and cheapest disinfectant is COPPERAS, supplied by us by the pound or barrel at low rates. But for use in the house, in the plumbing, in kitchen sinks, in closets, for purifying the air of sick rooms, deodorizing offensive discharges—in short, for all purposes of a household disinfectant, nothing can excel the powerful solution of chlorides made and sold by us for 15 years under the name of REYNOLDS'S ODORLESS DISINFECTANT. Quart bottles 25c. To be diluted for use according to directions on label.

"Seeing is Believing."

Simple, Beautiful, Good—these words mean much, but to see "The Rochester" will impress the truth more forcibly. Its marvelous light is purer and brighter than gas light, softer than electric light, and more cheerful than either. The choicest bric-a-brac in the palace of a Vanderbilt reveals nothing finer. We have 2,700 artistic varieties, in brass, bronze, silver and black iron.

Ladies often like to go down among the large wholesale houses and buy of first hands. They will find at our salesrooms (the largest in the world) a rare collection of Art in lamps. A catalogue to send you if you cannot come.

WASHINGTON G. PARK INTERVIEWS A "COMMONWEALER".

We 're marchin' on ter Washington
An' there we 'll take our stand,
We 're goin' fer that old eagle till
We git him in our hand!

With winks, an' blinks, an' promises
He 's fool'd us long enough,
An' now he 'd better keep 'em, or
We 'll hev ter treat him rough.

He 's been a settin' still too long,
An' now he 's got ter hump
An' clear out them monopolies—
Or else we 'll take the stump.

We 're tired of pollyticians what
Hev only got the mind
Ter squeeze out all the prices, an'
Ter leave us but the rind

Of all the fruits that promises
Ter do us lots of good—
We 're tired of seeh poor eatin' an'
We wish it understood!

We want him ter be honest an'
Ter treat the Nation square,
We want him fer the railroads an'
The telegraphs ter care.

We aint agoin' ter hurt our bird—
We 're fond of him, you see—
We 'll only rough his feathers up
Till he has some idee

How awful big monopolies
Is growin' fer ter be,
An' how they 's cussin' every State
What spreads from sea ter sea:

They steze upon the 'lectric lights
Nor gas nor water leave,
An' how they 'd like ter pump the air
Inter us what we breathe.

When I say we, I do n't include
The tramps, as jines our ranks,
From every Nation on the earth
What eat without no thanks;

That eagle keeps a noddin' while
They pour across the sea,
An' lets 'em put a vote in 'cause
This great big land is free,

If he 'd a kep' less company
An' not been quite so free
'Bout sayin' "help yourself my friend
You 're jest es good es me"—

He would n't now hev hed ter hump,
An' fuss, an' flop around
Ter keep his ruffled feathers from
A draggin' on the ground.

"The Old Homestead."

Next Thursday night, Denman Thompson's masterpiece, "The Old Homestead", will be the attraction in Music Hall, presented by the same company that made such a pronounced hit on former visits.

"The Old Homestead" stands alone in dramatic composition. It belongs to no class, but is a type of itself. Encouraged by its almost phenomenal success, many attempts have been made to imitate it, but so far without success. The usual play dealing with the type of characters of which Joshua Whitcomb is an exponent makes of the rural farmer an object of scorn and derision. "The Old Homestead" holds up a character that all can admire and love, and while an audience may laugh at the excentricities of the honest old New England farmer, it is kindly laughter and his friends across the footlights never cease to respect and esteem him for his good qualities. The Old Homestead double quartette is again a feature of the play.

Bonnets and the Mare.

It is the desire of the management of the Country Club theatricals in the Casino tonight that so far as agreeable the gentler sex attend without bonnets. Nevertheless, tickets will be sold at the door to all comers, no matter what their headdress. And it'll be such a great play that after the rise of a curtain bonnets and everything else except the Grey Mare will be forgotten. Everybody's going.

LIVING PICTURES BY PLAINFIELD PEOPLE.

Society Women to Adorn the Stage for Sake of the Hospital Fund.

Since the two-days fair in the Casino last Fall, little has been heard of charitable entertainments of any kind; that is, affairs in which society has interested itself. But if the Muhlenberg Hospital Board is silent, it is not inactive; in fact, the women composing the Board are particularly interested just at present in a projected entertainment to be given in Music Hall the evenings of May 24 and 25, with Friday matinee. At the meeting this week there were presented to the Board samples of the kind of entertainment that they proposed to be given. The nature of the performance is to be something akin to tableaux vivants, with the important addition of the effect known in stereopticon as "dissolving views". The indispensable man in the case has been most successful in his ventures, and those who saw his samples expressed themselves as delighted. His name is Sherman, and his melting tableaux were first brought out at the World's Fair last Summer.

Well known society people are to be asked to participate in the tableaux. The stage pictures are expected to be made up of well-known maids, matrons and beaux, melting into and out of view before a large and enthusiastic audience.

Mrs. Edgerton's name as progenitor and manager of the scheme insures its success.

Realty Changes.

Elias Allen and others, executors, to Florence H. Wohlfert, $2,500.

Carrie Spencer and others to Florence H. Wohlfert, $2,500.

Need a Vincent Nash There.

The officer who has in hand the collecting of the taxes due Linden Township is making but little headway. He has succeeded in collecting less than $500 out of $26,000.

Doctors Discouraged, Relief Found.

Mr. C. E. Bartholomew, Kalkaska, Mich., writes: "Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy saved my life when I was a victim of Bright's disease." If you are suffering from Bright's disease, diabetes, or any urinary trouble, you should use this only cure. "I had been troubled since 1869," writes S. N. Arnold of Rochester, N. Y., "with gravel and catarrh of the bladder. Tried several doctors, but got no relief. Upon advice, I used Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. The result was marvelous; a few bottles entirely cured me."

LIBERAL GIFT TO THE WHEELMEN.

Crescent Cyclers Happily Surprised by W. H. Rogers.

At the conclusion of a meeting of the Board of Governors of the Crescent Wheelmen last night, after spending two hours transacting important business in relation to the building of their new bicycle track on Randolph road, also relative to the grand opening race meet which they will hold Saturday, June 2, they were most agreeably surprised by an announcement from the popular and enterprising bicycle dealer, W. H. Rogers, that he would donate to the club, to be used as prizes at their coming race meet, two high-grade track racing bicycles, one a Victor manufactured by the Overman Wheel Company, and one a Spaulding manufactured by A. G. Spaulding & Bros.; also a pair of Gormully & Jeffery copper rims and pneumatic tires and a pair of the New York Belting and Packing Co's pneumatic tires, the combined value of which is $350. This liberal donation on the part of Mr. Rogers should be an example to other enterprising merchants, who should unsolicited do all in their power to assist the Crescent Wheelmen, who are laboring zealously to bring the town prominently before the general public by advancing the interest of bicycle track racing, which has grown to be one of the most popular amusements of the day. Let every merchant and good citizen respond liberally and cheerfully toward the completion and support of this most worthy undertaking of the wheelmen.

NEWS OF NEAR NEIGHBORS.

Dunellen and New Market.

A. L. Storm has opened an attractive ice cream garden in New Market.

The Ladies Orchestra of Dunellen will give an entertainment in the Episcopal Church, New Market, May 20

Herman Dantz has re-furnished his hotel, and put it in first-class order. His friends will now find a good place to stop.

Friendship Cornet Band will hold a strawberry festival in about two weeks on the lawn in front of Mr. Coriell's home.

The first strawberry festival of the season will be held in Friendship Hall next Tuesday evening, under the auspices of the Episcopal Church.

A fire was discovered in the stables back of Maier's Hotel, Tuesday evening. It is thought that a parlor match was dropped, and that one of the horses ignited it by stepping on in it. The horses are owned by Fred Nelson, and before the fire could be extinguished the animals suffered considerably, and it is thought that one of them will die.

Suiting a Brother Tribe.

Iona Council met last night and agreed to change their meeting night from Wednesday to Monday as requested by Miantonomoh Tribe.

A peanut hunt followed the business meeting. The first prize was won by Mrs. Emma Busby and the second by David C. Allen. Dancing was enjoyed by about 80 and then lemonade and cake were served. An impromptu potato hunt ended the affair.

Death of a Tally-Ho Horse.

One of the horses used on the tally-ho was taken sick on its way to Philadelphia, yesterday, and when Plainfield was reached the animal was exhausted. It was treated carefully, but died about 2 this morning, in Blair's stables. The day before, one of the horses was overcome on the trip.

Terrors of Tally-Ho Travel.

The tally-ho coach running between New York and Philadelphia, while passing through Wayne street in Jersey City last night, was stoned by a gang of hoodlums. One of the men passengers was struck on the head and badly injured. He, however, remained on the coach.

Part of the Traction System.

The Union and Middlesex Traction Company have, it is understood, obtained a long-coveted concession from the Board of Aldermen of Rahway, and will now push their electric street line to completion. It will extend to Sewaren and Boynton Beach.

Westfield's War Warblers.

Seventeen-year locusts were heard for the first time uttering their call in the Ripley woods at Westfield yesterday. In the markings on the wing they have the "W", which prophets say means war during the next seventeen years.

Plainfield Talent Rewarded.

Out of 24 designs submitted by architects for the costly sarcophagus to be built in Hillside Cemetery by the widow of Warren Ackerman, that of Oscar S. Teale has been selected as the best.

WANTED, A MIDWAY STREET.

West Enders Petition the Common Council for a Long-felt Want.

The following highly commendable petition is being signed and is to be presented to the Common Council at the next session:

PLAINFIELD, N. J., May 3, 1894.

To the Honorable the Common Council of the City of Plainfield:

GENTLEMEN:—The undersigned, householders residing on the north side of the tracks of the Central Railroad of New Jersey between Grant avenue and Clinton avenue (Evona), hereby respectfully petition to have a street extended under the said railroad tracks midway between these avenues. At present there is no public street over or under the tracks at these points, a distance of over three-fourths of a mile. It is extremely dangerous to cross the tracks owing to the great number of passing trains, and the obstructing freight and coal cars usually stored thereon. Many of us have children who attend the public school on Sixth street, and who naturally take the short cut across the tracks near Albert street, rather than walk four times daily the much greater distance around by way of one of the avenues.

The frightful death of a woman at this point a short time ago, and the danger to which our children and others are continually exposed while crossing the tracks, and the great distance from our houses to the nearest avenue under the tracks, show clearly the necessity for thus extending one of the cross streets in this vicinity; and we accordingly pray that you will take such action in this matter as will afford us immediate relief from the danger and inconvenience above mentioned.

Sagamore Forsyth Spoke.

Great Senior Sagamore William Forsyth, of Jersey City, paid his first visit to Paugh Caugh Sinque Tribe, Improved Order of Red Men, last evening, and made an interesting address. When the tribe was instituted Mr. Forsyth was very ill, and was not expected to live. William Bullock also gave a talk of much interest.

FOR THE relief and cure of a cold in the head there is more potency in Ely's Cream Balm than in anything else it is possible to prescribe. This preparation has for years past been making a brilliant success as a remedy for cold in the head, catarrh and hay fever. Used in the initial stages of these complaints Cream Balm prevents any serious development of the symptoms, while almost numberless cases are on record of radical cures of chronic catarrh and hay fever after all other treatments have proved of no avail.

BLUEFIELDS SITUATION.

Nicaraguan Troops Continue To Assemble in the Vicinity.

BLUEFIELDS, Nicaragua, April 24, via New Orleans, May 3, per steamship George Sealy.—Nicaragua troops continue to pour into this vicinity. The last batch, 130 strong, instead of going out on the bluffs where the other soldiers are camped, came direct to town and were comfortably quartered by Locayo, the Nicaraguan commissioner. This was seemingly done with the consent of the captain of the British ship Magicienne, as he offered no objections, either nominal or active. However, there has been no trouble over it yet, as the San Francisco arrived from Port Limon, where she had gone to coal. Captain Watson and the British commander immediately held a long consultation, supposedly on the invasion of the town proper by the Nicaraguan troops, but what conclusion was arrived at is not known, as no move has been made on either side. The two officers detailed to investigate the killing of the American, William Wilson, at Rama, submitted their report to Captain Watson, who forwarded it with a lot of other matter to Washington by this steamer. Eight naval cadets who had been to Rio on the San Francisco, have been relieved from duty, and go up on the Sealy to Washington via New Orleans to stand their examinations, which takes place shortly.

Randall Criticises Coxey.

CHICAGO, May 3.—General Randall, commander of the Chicago wing of the Commonweal army, does not think Mr. Coxey did exactly right in his Washington movement. He should have accepted and obeyed the laws and done what he could under such unfavorable surroundings. "My army is pledged to peace at all hazards," said he in the Grand Crossing camp. "We shall obey all law, and no one will be more anxious to get an offender into the hands of the police than I. It would have been wiser for General Coxey to have moved orderly, and accepted the repulse and appealed to the public in the matter. This last act of the law will probably help out our wing, and I would not be surprised to see our recruits go into the thousands."

Earthquakes in Greece.

LONDON, May 3.—A despatch to the Times from Athens says that the king has arrived at Thebes, and the ruin, havoc and misery there resulting from the recent earth shocks deeply affected him. He has ordered that everything possible be done to make the people comfortable. The shock which was felt there Tuesday was especially severe in the northern part of the island of Euboea. One village was entirely destroyed. The people are so demoralized that it is difficult to gain details, and it is not yet known whether any loss of life resulted. Grave fears have been entertained by the residents of Atalanta lest the village be submerged, but leading geologists are of the opinion that there is no danger of this.

Margin Sales Are Gambling.

ST. LOUIS, May 3.—There was considerable alarm manifested upon the floor of the merchants' exchange when the decision was announced in the case of Connors against Black, tried at Memphis, Mo. The court holds that in all sales made upon margins, unless both parties actually intend to receive or deliver the amount of grain itself involved in the contract, the transaction is gambling, pure and simple, and the money so lost can be recovered. Black bought oats through Connors, a broker, and, after putting up $5,000 in margins to protect his option, defaulted on further payments, and was sued by Connors, who carried the oats through to a loss. The finding of the court is based on a decision of the supreme court.

Bimetalic Conference.

LONDON, May 3.—The international bimetalic conference was formally opened in the Mansion house. The opening address was delivered by ex-Lord Mayor Sir David Evans. A large number of delegates were present, including some of the best known of British and foreign financiers. Letters were read from Archbishop Walsh, of Dublin, and the president of the bank of France regretting their inability to be present. A paper was read by Prof. Shield Nicholson on "The Fall in the General Level of Prices in Relation" to the Appreciation of Gold, and the Divergence in the Relative Value of Gold and Silver," and a general discussion of the subject followed. The conference was presided over by Lord Mayor Tyler.

Diseases of the Heart, Stomach, Liver, Bowels, Kidneys and Bladder are successfully treated, even when other medical skill has failed.

REMARKABLE CURES.

For several years I was afflicted with a severe form of catarrh, and to such an extent that my hearing became seriously impaired, and I was constantly troubled with roaring sounds in my head. It also gave rise to a troublesome cough, bronchial irritation, and pain in my lungs. In fact, my condition was such that I felt convinced unless something was done for my relief I would soon be beyond cure. One physician thought that eventually I would be stone deaf; another gave me his opinion that catarrh could not be cured, and that I had to endure as best I could its pernicious consequences. Finding the treatment pursued of no benefit, I placed myself under the professional care of Dr. Lighthill, whose many endorsements for skill and success from well-known residents of New York city had been brought under my notice. The result of his treatment has been simply wonderful. My hearing is restored, the noises in my head have ceased, the bronchial trouble is gone, and I feel that I am completely relieved of what threatened to be a most serious, if not fatal disease. I therefore cheerfully commend Dr. Lighthill for his ability and skill, and feel confident that any similarly afflicted will be benefited by placing themselves under his care.

WILLIAM F. BARNARD.

DR. E. B. LIGHTHILL:

MY DEAR SIR—It affords me great pleasure to join the long list of grateful patients who have been relieved from troublesome and obstinate complaints by your superior skill. My case was chronic catarrh, from which I had suffered to such an extent that it weakened my general health, and gave rise to such severe pain in and about the head and throat that it prevented me from sleeping and alarmed my family. I am happy to state that the very first application of your treatment gave me prompt and decided relief. In a few days the pain had disappeared, and by degrees the other distressing symptoms of catarrh yielded to your administrations, until now I find myself completely cured. I therefore cheerfully tender you this testimonial of your skill and success, in the hope that others may be benefited by its publication.

H. P. DEGRAAF.

And so the bowling that evening was not altogether a success. The noise of the rolling balls and the falling pins made her nervous, and she slipped away unobserved and went over to the hotel. She was longing for some one to talk to and some one to confide in, and therefore when she met her aunt, Miss Eunice Westchester, at the door of the hotel she was very much pleased. She found Miss Eunice standing at the door and looking across the bay, where a glow came from the bowling alley. It was dark excepting for a light here and there on the shore and the one streaming across the bay. The night air was damp, and Miss Eunice shivered and drew her shawl closer about her shoulders. She played with her gold bowed spectacles, shifting them on and off uneasily, and then she looked down at a letter she held in her hand. The mail had just come in, and this was an event of importance at the hotel, for it only happened twice each day. Usually there was a crowd of people in the little parlor to receive it, but on this particular night something had taken every one to the bowling alley.

Miss Eunice was a very comfortable old lady—comfortable to look upon and comfortable to talk to, for she never made remarks about being old, and she never said that the young people were becoming altogether too self assertive. She was too aged to be called an "old maid," and she took life in a very easy way and very rarely allowed anything to disturb her. Her gray hair was always parted accurately in the middle, her shawl was always about her shoulders in a strictly sedate manner, and her black gown never looked dowdy. At times her small blue eyes would flash in a sprightly manner at some sally of wit from her brother, and she would tap him on the shoulder in an absurdly convivial way and call him "a sad old boy." Her voice was very sweet and musical, and she spoke in a deliberate, careful way, common to old ladies of her temperament.

Miss Eunice held a very important letter in her hand, and she was wondering how she was to get it to her brother, who was bowling. The hotel was a one horse place, and a messenger was quite out of the question. Miss Eunice would have gone over herself were it not for certain twinges that told her she must look out for her old enemy—rheumatism.

The problem was solved by the appearance of Grace Boardman, who instantly volunteered to take the letter over, and this she did and returned presently with the assurance that it was all right.

"Thank you ever so much, my dear," said Miss Eunice.

"Do you think I am a flirt?" asked the girl abruptly.

"Why do you ask me that?" inquired Miss Eunice.

"Because I do," replied Grace Boardman. "Something happened tonight that makes me wonder what I have been doing."

"I think I understand now," said Miss Eunice slowly. "It's about Mr. Grosvenor?"

"Yes," assented the girl. "It's about Mr. Grosvenor. I wish I could tell you how I hate him."

"Slowly, slowly," said Miss Eunice, raising her hand and smiling at the girl sweetly. "I know what it means when a girl says that. Be careful, or you will make me think something altogether different."

"You know me well enough not to think that," pouted the girl. "I don't know whether I did right or not tonight. I sent him away."

"You sent him away?" reiterated the old lady. "And why?"

"Why?" repeated Grace Boardman passionately. "Why? Oh, dear, are you going to misunderstand me the way every one else does? How could I tell what to do? He came to me so unexpectedly, over there at the bowling alley, too, and every one was looking at us. Of course I didn't know what to do."

"Perhaps," said Miss Eunice, "if you tell me all about it, I may be better able to give you some advice—that is, of course, if that is what you want. Sometimes, I know, young people think they can get along very well without any advice, and more times than one they are quite right."

The girl looked at Miss Eunice and then blushed. "I don't suppose I need begin at the beginning?"

"Well, he came over to me when watching the bowling and said he wanted to talk with me. He said he had come down to Harwich for one thing, and that was to see me, and he said the reason he wanted to see me was to find out whether he loved me or not. He went over how he met me that night at the senior promenade, and how he had remembered all about me for a month, and how he had learned that we were to be here in August, and how he had followed me here. He said he had never thought much of girls before, and that he never cared much about them or tried to understand them. But when he met me something told him that I was rather different from the rest, and now that he had seen a great deal of me he found himself thinking of the time when he must go away and leave me and perhaps never see me again for the rest of his life, and the more he thought about it the more it seemed impossible to him, and he questioned himself and found that he had fallen in love with me, and he asked me if I would become his wife some time."

"That," put in Miss Eunice, "was very manly in him, and very well put, and very straightforward. And what did you say to him?"

"I told him that I had not known him for very long and thought that he might have made a mistake. I said that he was making a great deal out of nothing, and that very likely his was a mere fancy, and that while I did not question his honesty in speaking as he had I felt sure that if he thought it over he would look at it as I did and conclude it was much too soon for anything of the sort."

The girl paused and looked at Miss Eunice. Miss Eunice merely nodded her head and went on with her knitting.

"I think perhaps he did not exactly understand me, and perhaps I did not put it well, for I saw at once he was very much put out and beginning to get angry. He asked me if I loved him or something like that, and I don't know exactly what I did say, only that he was much too hasty and had better wait. And then he went over what he had said before about coming here only to see me, and how I had led him on, and how I had been merely flirting with him to pass away the summer—and I hate him." The girl stopped abruptly, with her eyes flashing and her lips quivering. "I do hate him," she repeated, "and I told him so, and he went away. That is all."

Miss Eunice laughed, and the girl frowned.

"You don't take it seriously," she said.

Grace Boardman pouted. "I don't see why."

"For this reason," explained Miss Eunice, "he'll come back to you and say that he is very sorry, and that he will go away and never see you again, and then you will find that you cannot let him go, and that will end it all."

"Do you think," said Grace Boardman, with a decided note in her voice, "that I am in love with this man?"

"That is exactly what I think," was the smiling reply. The old lady's eyes shone, and she laughed. It was such an old story to her.

"Well, you are mistaken, that's all." And Grace Boardman went away in anger.

And was it a wonder then that when young Grosvenor came back from Monomoy point on the following day Grace Boardman took pains to avoid seeing him, leaving him nothing to do but to wander disconsolately about the village?

CONTINUED TOMORROW.

BEGINNING EARLY is half the battle. Don't wait for your cough to run into Consumption. There's always danger of it. The germs or seeds of this disease are all around you. All that they want is an inactive liver and the scrofulous condition that follows it, to develop them.

You need Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, now, to thoroughly purify your blood, build up sound, firm, honest flesh, and make every weak spot strong. It's a certain remedy for the earlier stages of Consumption.

Campbell, Ohio.

DR. R. V. PIERCE: Dear Sir—Two of our best doctors pronounced my case consumption. I spent nearly $300, and was no better. I concluded to try the "Golden Medical Discovery." I bought eight bottles, and I can now say with truth that I feel just as well today as I did at twenty-five, and can do just as good a day's work on the farm, although I had not done any work for several years. I give you all the thanks.

Truly, your friend,

Don't Hesitate, but Call and Be Convinced That Every Statement We Make Is True.

To those who do not already know that there is established in Newark, at 105 Halsey street, a physician who stands in the foremost rank of his profession, who is indorsed by the leading colleges of the country and who can prove by witnesses right here in Newark (not by one, but by hundreds) that he has succeeded in curing cases that have been utterly given up by other physicians, and good ones, too. To those who do not these facts we state that any person, rich or poor, old or young, is welcome here and receive examination and advice free of charge.

Thousands praise the day they came to us for treatment. There is no guess work, no experimenting, no painful operation. No matter how difficult the case, no matter how much of the physician's time it may consume, the diagnosis will not only be thorough, it will be absolutely free. There is no taint of quackery or deception; no claim or statement is made that is not borne out by facts and living witnesses.

Mrs. Abby A. Ray, late of 86 Grove street, East Orange, who now lives at 400 Ellmore street, Escanaba, Mich., writes, under date of January 12: "The medicine arrived this morning and I am so glad it came. I am almost out, and it has helped me so much and I am so much pleased with its wonderful effort on my broken down system that I would like to testify to your great success in my case. I am feeling as well now, in fact better, than I had ever hoped to again."

This is one of many letters that we receive daily. We have the originals at our office and if you wish you may see them. Another thing: We never publish or reveal a patient's name unless they so desire.

DR. STARKWEATHER.

There is not a penny to pay for the fullest medical advice. Dr. Starkweather is a graduate of the Berkshire Medical College, Massachusetts, and of the Medico-Chirurgical College of Philadelphia; endorsed also by the College of Physicians and Surgeons and Bellevue Medical College of New York. We invite all sufferers from whatever cause to call at our office, No. 105 Halsey street, Newark, where Dr. Starkweather is in attendance daily to give examination and advice entirely free of charge. It matters not what the disease, or how many years you have suffered, in spite of means adopted in your behalf, a visit to this office and the privileges of the same will cost you nothing, and may be the means of saving your life. We prepare all our medicines and prescribe the remedies indicated. This plan enables the patient to receive directly from us such remedies as will produce the results promised.

Our office is open daily from 10 a. m. to 9 p. m. Sundays 4 to 6 p. m.

Those living at a distance can consult the Doctor by letter.

CONFER ON THE TARIFF

Finance Committee Seek a Vote of Confidence.

Senators Not Bound By Action of the Caucus, But With One Dissenting Vote, That of Mr. Hill, They Are Requested to Offer No Amendments to the Bill.

WASHINGTON, May 4. — Thirty-eight democratic senators, all but six of the membership of the body of that faith, met in conference in the marble room of the senate last evening and were in conference three hours.

A number of speeches were made and a vote of confidence in the finance committee taken. Senators were not bound by the action of the conference, but by an almost unanimous vote they were requested to offer no amendments to the pending tariff bill and endorse those submitted by the finance committee.

The conference was not decided upon until late in the afternoon when the members of the finance committee, believing they had everything about fixed up thought it was an opportune time to discuss the bill before their party associates. The caucus, or conference as the democrats termed it, was called to order by Mr. Gorman, the only absentees being Messrs. Mills, Butler, Murphy, Lindsay, Irby and Gibson.

There was no significance in the absence of either of these senators.

Senator Jones, chairman of the sub-committee, was the first speaker. He said the committee had decided upon a number of amendments, and in answer to a question as to how many, replied a great number. He did not go into details concerning these amendments, assuring senators that the concessions were not great and that the rates throughout the bill would be greatly less than those in the present law. No statement was made concerning the amount of revenue expected to be raised.

Mr. Jones announced the sugar schedule that had been agreed upon and it corresponds exactly with that published heretofore in these dispatches—40 per cent. ad valorem on all sugars, both raw and refined, with 1-8 of a cent in addition on refined sugars. A discriminating duty of 1-10 of a cent on refined sugar is allowed against sugars of this kind from countries that pay an export bounty. It was also agreed that the bounty should continue to be paid this year, the date at which the sugar schedule is to take effect being changed from July 10 to January 1, 1895.

Mr. Jones discussed the income tax at some length, stating that the objectionable features had been taken from the measure. Its operation was limited to a term of five years, although Mr. Vest urged six years. The rate remains the same and the limit of exemption is untouched. Mr. Jones further stated that the inquisitorial features had been eliminated entirely and the tax placed on corporations directly instead of the dividends of such corporations after passing into the hands of individuals.

Mr. Gorman spoke in favor of the bill and of harmony in the party. He declared that he did not take kindly to the income tax feature, in fact he was opposed to it. He believed it to be a mistake and thought it would cause trouble and hurt the party in the northern states. Still, Mr. Gorman said, the south and west insisted upon it and he was compelled to yield his judgment and accept the tax with the five year limitation.

The burden of the remarks of Mr. McPherson was the sugar tax. It was a strange thing, he said, that the income tax and the sugar tax should both be kept in the bill. The keeping of the sugar tax in the bill would, he argued, place the party open to the charge of favoring the sugar trust. He concluded by saying that he would abide by the decision of the majority and vote for the bill.

Mr. Hill then took the floor and made a characteristic speech. He denounced the compromise and said that the income tax was not necessary, defying any one to show it was needed in the bill for revenue.

No one attempted to reply to this challenge.

In addition to the income tax, Mr. Hill criticized the committee for putting in the forty-one millions of sugar tax. Mr. Hill in denouncing the income tax, went over some of the ground covered in his speech in the senate, declared that the whole scheme was undemocratic and not called for by any plank in the party platform. The committee had, he said, kept in the bill the undemocratic things and knocked out those things which the party organization endorsed.

Referring to the interview of Secretary Carlisle, Mr. Hill said that official called the income tax a war tax and did not attempt to justify it. He declared that the income tax could not be defended by limiting it to five years; if it was wrong, it was wrong during any period of its operation; if it was right it should be made the permanent policy of the party. He declared that it was not what the president recommended.

Referring again to the sugar schedule Mr. Hill said the party would be called upon to defend its action in giving the sugar trust the benefit of 1-8 of a cent. Why it was done was apparent; not for the purpose of raising revenue, but to catch votes for the bill. On the other hand, although a dozen senators wanted the income tax stricken out, it had been kept in the bill.

Mr. Hill declared that in all this talk about the bill he had not made a request for a change for himself or in behalf of any industry in his state, and in this he was corroborated by Mr. Jones. He had, he said, opposed the income tax in the first conference held before the bill was reported and had so continued up to this time. He would continue to oppose it, because he believed it to be vicious. So long as this tax was kept in the bill, Mr. Hill said, that, notwithstanding the request set out in the resolution, he should offer amendments to the bill in the hope that the tax might be changed. The country did not need both the sugar and the income tax.

Mr. Smith, of New Jersey, followed in a brief speech in which he also denounced the income tax, but did not declare his intention in regard to the bill. The resolution was then put to a vote and was carried by 37 votes of the 38, Mr. Hill's being the only dissenting voice. It is said that the finance committee believes it has now 43 democratic votes for the bill outside of Mr. Hill. This calculation naturally includes Murphy and Smith.

ARE THEY TO MEET?

Secret Movements of Mine Leaders and Operators.

Believed That a Conference is Being Arranged—National Mine Workers' Officers Absent From Headquarters at Columbus—President McBride Known to Be in Pittsburg.

COLUMBUS, O., May 4.—The fact that President John McBride of the National Mine Workers had gone to Pittsburg was carefully concealed from newspaper reporters who called at headquarters. It was explained that he was up late and had not come down to his office yet.

Later dispatches from Pittsburg announced that he was there.

It is found that he and J. S. Morton, one of the large Hocking valley operators here, occupied a stateroom in a Pennsylvania train leaving here at midnight. It is generally believed that a conference is being arranged.

The United Mine Workers' Journal announces to correspondents that the national officers will be away from headquarters all the rest of the week, and their letters may not be promptly answered.

Eviction Notices to Coke Strikers.

CONNELLSVILLE, Pa., May 4.—All the large coke companies are now serving ten day eviction notices on the striking miners who occupy company houses. Trouble is expected when efforts are made to enforce these notices. The other companies have served notice on the strike leaders that unless Rainey's works are shut down within a few days, they will start up regardless of expense or results. The leaders are becoming alarmed and will try and bring the Rainey men out.

STILL IN THE CAVE.

Unavailing Efforts to Release Imprisoned Tourists at Lubloch.

GRATZ, May 4.—The tourists who were imprisoned in a cave at Lubloch, Styria, have not been released. Tourists from all parts of Austria are gathering at the cave and are trying to hasten the work of rescue.

The efforts to force a small entrance to the cave have failed, as floating wood has collected as fast as men have removed the old wreckage.

Believes They Were Drowned.

LONDON, May 4.—The Standard's Vienna correspondent says: "It is most probable that the Lubloch tourists have been dead for days. That they were drowned is more likely than that they starved to death. All attempts to dam the stream that flowed into the cave were frustrated by the heavy rain."

CHINESE REGISTRATION ENDED.

NEW YORK, May 4.—The registration of the Chinese in New York in accordance with the Geary law ended last night. Gen. Kerwin, the collector of internal revenue for New York, said that all told about 3,700 Chinmen were enrolled on his books. Several thousand, it is said, are still unregistered in this city.

Sold Adulterated Vinegar.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., May 4.—Six of this city's leading grocers pleaded guilty at police court to selling adulterated vinegar, but as they were all reputable dealers and intended no dishonesty a portion of the $100 fine was remitted in each case. The case was prosecuted by state board of health officials.

Hattie Adams Guilty of Abduction.

ALBANY, May 4.—Hattie Adams, formerly of New York city, of Parkhurst fame, has been convicted of abduction and will be sentenced to-day. The penalty is not more than five years or a $1,000 fine. She was charged with harboring a girl named Addie Madigan, who is under 16 years of age.

Striking Italians Return to Work.

WELLSBORO, Pa., May 4.—Six hundred Italian laborers, after being on strike for three days, have resumed work at the old rate of one dollar per day on the grading of the Buffalo & Susquehanna railroad between Galeton and Ansonia.

Railroad Strike Imminent in Ireland

DUBLIN, May 4.—The employes of the Great Northern railway of Ireland have given 24 hours' notice of a general strike. Their dispute with the directors concerns hours and wages.

1,033 Points and Still Playing.

MANCHESTER, May 4.—In his spot-barred game with Diggle, John Roberts, jr., the billiard champion, has made a break of 1,033 and is still playing.

More Gold to Go Abroad.

NEW YORK, May 4.—It appears to-day that the gold shipments to Europe to-morrow will amount to $1,250,000, and may reach $4,000,000.

You hear a great deal about oatmeals as good as H-O. Do you ever hear that H-O is as good as some others?

HIS TROUBLES BEGIN

Coxey Meeting With Many Rebuffs in Washington.

The District Commissioners Make Him Pay for License and May Drive His Men From Their Present Camp—Galvin Reaches Homestead. Kelly May Get a Lift.

WASHINGTON, May 4.—General Good Roads Coxey's troubles in Washington are numerous. The district commissioners possitively refuse to grant him a free license to exhibit his unfortunate followers and to charge admission to the camp costs the general just $5 a day. This he is paying, probably as a matter of policy, for contributions are lacking and the gate receipts relieve the burden to some extent of feeding the "sojers."

Another matter that is worrying the commonweal leader is the camp. The commissioners declare that the place is unhealthy and they have notified Coxey that they will hold him responsible for any expense the district incurs in caring for any of the men taken sick in the camp. They further threaten, on the first appearance of illness at the camp, to quarantine the entire army. Then Coxey is in fear, and with good cause, that the commissioners will decide to order him to move his army from the place as a matter of sanitary necessity.

This is giving the general much concern for it is known that he has tried hard, without success, to secure other quarters for his men.

To-day the trio, Coxey, Browne and Jones, will be called for trial in the police court and will probably add several dollars each to the city's coffer in the shape of fines. This, of course, interests Coxey more than the others, for it is Coxey's purse that suffers in all matters pertaining to expenditures for the commonweal.

GALVIN'S ARMY AT HOMESTEAD

They Walk Eight Miles, the First in a Long Journey.

HOMESTEAD, Pa., May 4.—Col. Galvin's army arrived at Homestead at 10 o'clock last night. They were escorted to their camping place by a brass band. They slept in the same quarters (an ice house) occupied by the Coxey army. A committee of citizens soon collected an ample supply of provisions.

The train bearing the 219 men in the regiment arrived at the B. & O. depot at Pittsburg at 4:20 oclock. Police Superintendent O'Mara, the police inspectors and several officers boarded the train at Glenfield, Pa. Galvin was immediately hunted out and asked his plans. He replied that his agent Boyce had perfected all arrangements for the reception of the army at Pittsburg.

Quite a crowd had assembled at the depot when the train pulled in, but all efforts to find Boyce among them, failed.

With no agent and no arrangements, for the future, the regiment was lined up on the platform. With Col. Galvin, police inspectors and detectives and a number of newspaper men at its head, the regiment moved out of the train shed.

Some laughed and joked over the fact that the regiment was doing its first marching since the two miles tramp at Washington court house, and have walked but 150 of the 3,000 miles already traveled. The army continued its march, escorted by the police officials, until they reached the south city line, when the bluecoats stood on either side, and just two hours and a half after the regiment had entered Pittsburg, they had departed.

MAY TRANSPORT KELLY.

Gov. Jackson Will Try to Send the Commonwealers Out of Iowa.

DES MOINES, Ia., May 4.—As a result of conference of the delegation from the different trades union of this city with Gov. Jackson it is probable that Des Moines will be rid of Kelly and his 1,800 wealers within a few hours.

The governor promised to do all in his power towards procuring transportation for the army, and suggested that if Kelly would consent to take a boat to some point on the Mississippi river, railroad transportation might be procured. The governor said further that these men must not be allowed to starve while they remain in this state, but nevertheless he realized the burden that their care was placing on the community.

Kelly has consented to accept transportation by water, hoping to be able to make arrangements for a boat on the Ohio river also.

Denver's Female Coxeyites.

DENVER, May 4.—The female Coxey sympathizers in this city have organized the Coxey army reserve relief corps No. 1. They will work in connection with the Coxey home reserve, soliciting contributions for the commonwealers at Washington and enroute.

Judge Long's Pension Reduced.

WASHINGTON, May 4.—In view of the non-appearance of Judge Long, of Michigan, or his attorney, as instructed to do so by the commissioner of pensions, to show cause why his pension should not be reduced within 30 days of the receipt of the notice, Commissioner Lochran has disposed of a long controversy by cancelling the pension certificate for $72 per month on account of total disability and issued a new one at the reduced rate of $50 per month, which was sent to Judge Long through the agency of the official mail.

Carnegie Steel Frauds.

WASHINGTON, May 4.—Attorney Wallace, of Pittsburg, who represents the informers in the Carnegie steel frauds, has returned to Washington armed, so he says, with a number of affidavits showing additional frauds. These affidavits were asked for by Secretary Herbert, and promised by Mr. Wallace in support of his allegations. Mr. Wallace called at the navy department, but did not see Mr. Herbert.

IRISHMEN IN AMERICA

Want to Dominate Ireland, Says Salisbury.

Home Rule, He Declares, Would Bring This About and Surrender Their Ulster Brethren to Slavery to Please the Chicago Triangle and Tammany Hall Bosses.

LONDON, May 4.—Lord Salisbury spoke in Trowbridge last evening on the government's attitude to the house of lords and Irish home rule.

As far as he could see, Lord Salisbury said, the country regarded the house of lords as a very good institution for checking the errors of the house of commons. The upper house did not exist for the purpose of opposing the national will, but to ascertain that will and to insist upon an appeal to the people whenever a temporary and unreal advantage had been seized by the lower house with a view to altering the constitution. On the main issue of home rule the government had repeatedly shirked. They apparently shrank from asking the electors to pass on their declared policy. Lord Rosebery had given recently as a reason for granting home rule that it would reconcile the Irish in America.

Give Up to Please Tammany Bosses?

"Are we really to give up our Ulster brethren to slavery in order to please the triangle in Chicago or Tammany bosses in New York?" continued Lord Salisbury. "Are we to sink as low as that? (Shouts of 'no' and 'never.') To my mind this is a reason rather for resisting home rule than for granting it.

"These men to whom Lord Rosebery appeals, whose friendship he is so anxious to secure, are the most bitter, unscrupulous and permanent enemies of everything British that can be found in America. There is no slander strange to their tongues or pens when they refer to British things and institutions. We have many friends in America. I am proud to believe that our friends are the large majority, and I hope that the friendship will always continue.

"If the majority of Americans would venture to speak their minds they would, I believe, describe the Irish minority with whom they have to struggle in language more vigorous than I would presume to use. If any class in America is to be conciliated I would rather conciliate the class that loves us, not the class that pursues us with undying hatred.

Irish in America Would Rule.

"If the object of the liberals be to give practical independence to Ireland, the result would be that the Irish in America would be dominant in Ireland too. You would then have within four hours of your coasts the most bitter enemies of England. They would command all your trade routes and menace all your ports. You would have for your nearest neighbor an island under the domination of men who have shown their hatred of England by terms and actions which do not permit us to doubt for a moment either their sincerity or permanence.

"Are you going to hand your brethren in Ulster over to such tyranny, which they do not cease to dread, which they are pledged to resist by every means in their power?"

Long and loud cheering followed this peroration.

Narrow Escape From Electrocution.

PITTSBURG, May 4.—James Jiles, a central district telephone lineman, narrowly escaped electrocution at noon. While on a high pole the wire which he was tightening broke, the end falling across an electric light wire. Jiles was knocked from the pole and fell across the network of wires below, unconscious, where he hung, head down, in mid-air. A fellow workman climbed the pole and carried Jiles to the ground, where he was restored to consciousness. He was badly burned.

France and England.

PARIS, May 4.—The Gaulois prints an extremely unlikely story to the effect that when the prince of Wales was recently in Paris he declared his wish that France and England should adopt views in common respecting a European policy. The prince is said to have thought it possible for England to act as a buffer between France and Germany, and thereby guarantee peace and facilitate a general disarmament.

Strike of Brickmakers.

KINGSTON, N. Y., May 4.—There is not a brickyard in operation between this city city and Glasco. Over a hundred of the strikers went to Glasco and ordered the men in Washburn's two yards and in Van Deusen's yard to quit work, which they did at noon. The visiting strikers were peaceable enough, but the Glasco laborers were compelled to join the strikers whether they were willing or not.

Millionaire King's Case Again.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., May 4.—A commission has been appointed in the supreme court to pass upon the sanity of William H. King, the Newport millionaire confined in McLean insane asylum at Somerville, Mass. George Gordon King, his newly appointed guardian, desires to have him transferred to Butler asylum in this city.

Peixoto Sick.

BUENOS AYRES, May 4.—Rio de Janeiro advices say that President Peixoto is ailing, and has gone to Petropolis. Order has been restored in Curityba and Parana. Gen. Saravia has fled, it is said, beyond the Uruguay river.

Persian Monarch Still Ashore.

EASTPORT, L. I., May 4.—The Wilson line steamer Persian Monarch which went ashore Wednesday night is still hard and fast, and repeated efforts to pull her off have failed. The passengers have been taken off on a tug.

Distress in Greece.

ATHENS, Greece, May 4.—Nine villages on the island of Eubœa were destroyed by last Friday's shocks. The distress increases. There is urgent need of bread or flour and materials for shelter.

Stein's Arctic Expedition Abandoned.

ST. JOHN'S, N. F., May 4.—It is announced here that Prof. Stein's proposed expedition to the Arctic regions had been abandoned.

Against Slot Machines.

HARTFORD, May 4.—Chief of Police Bill has ordered every nickel-in-the-slot and dice machine in the city closed beyond next Monday.

THE DAILY PRESS.

A. L. FORCE, . . . Publisher and Proprietor.
WALTER IRVING CLARKE, . . Managing Editor.

New Jersey's peach district promises a yield of 5,000,000 baskets. Yum yum!

The Borough Council in doing its duty to the people ought tonight to buy the Plainfield fire truck. It's a bargain, and North Plainfield needs it.

Men willing to spend $40,000 to $75 000 for first cost of a home are the kind Plainfield is looking for, and the two advertisements of such home-seekers in The Press today ought to be productive of large results.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

P. Ludwig Conde sails for Europe May 23, instead of June.

Mr. Stines, leader of the Leiderkranz, is a resident of the borough, at 46 Manning avenue.

Arthur Serrell of Lehigh College has returned to his home on Plainfield avenue for a short visit.

Mr. and Mrs. Craft, who were recently married in Poughkeepsie, have taken up their residence on East Front street.

Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Shepard and family have returned from Hotel Buckingham to their Summer home in Scotch Plains.

Henry Wedemeyer will still continue to be the obliging clerk at the Crescent Hotel under Rudolph Spiegel's management.

Miss Margaret Rocap will train the children who are to sing in Music Hall, Memorial Day, and Miss Mary Graves will be the pianist.

Charles A. Zukschwert, who formerly resided and did business in Plainfield, but now in South Orange, was in town on a business trip today.

Alfred Berry Thorn, who has recently succeeded his father in the hardware business, is destined to be a leading business man in this community.

Frank Linke and family of the borough are about to move to the Fourth ward of Plainfield and occupy a cottage on Washington avenue near Front street.

John Titus, who has been working in the Brooklyn Navy Yard four or five years, has been laid off, and is stopping with his cousin, Bert Clawson, Brook avenue.

E J. Fitzhugh will begin his engagement as organist of the First Baptist Church Sunday. At the evening service music of a special character will be rendered by the choir.

The leader of the band that furnished music Tuesday evening at the fair for the benefit of St. Joseph's R. C. Church was Assemblyman W. F. Harkins, who is also Recorder at New Brunswick, and a brother of John Harkins the great and only base-ball John.

Mr. and Mrs. Dan S. Roberts and Mr. and Mrs. S. G. Smith leave today to spend a short time in the Pocono Mountains. They had two fishing poles and other paraphernalia, and expect to live on trout while away. A friend explains that the price up there (all ready for cooking) is said to be 50 cents per pound.

Harry H. Lowrie, son of Dr. Lowrie of Park avenue, has just passed his first year examinations at the University of Georgetown, D. C., where he has been a medical student during the past winter. We congratulate him and hope that the honors of the Sophomore year may fall as heavily upon him as those of the Freshman.

If You Wish to Help the Town—

Don't fail to sound its praises wherever you are.

Don't make your money out of its citizens and spend it somewhere else.

Don't frown on every public improvement simply because it will cost you a dollar or two.

Don't sneer at the efforts of your fellow citizens to build up the town, but lend a hand yourself.

Don't talk a great deal about what should be done and remain on the back seat waiting for some one else to do it.

Don't say a board of trade is "no good on earth" until you can prove it by statistics.

Don't say the public schools are a failure because your boy has been upsetting the school's discipline and has been punished for it.

Don't let a good local paper that is the town's untiring champion abandon the champion business because of lack of deserved patronage.

Don't forget to drop your dollars in the slot when the committee that is after a new enterprise comes around with the subscription list.

Don't forget that in building up the town hearty co-operation, united endeavor and a spirit of get there are what win the day. There is no pull like a long pull, a strong pull and a pull all together.

Dumas' Suggestion.

A melancholy author went to Dumas and moaned that if he did not raise 800 francs he was afraid he would have to charcoal smoke himself and his two children. Dumas rummaged his coffers at once, but could only find 200 francs. "But I must have 800, or I and the little loves are lost." "Suppose you only suffocate yourself and one of them, then," said Dumas.—Le Petit Journal.

Thanks the Firemen.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—Permit me the use of your columns to thank most heartily the Fire Department for their prompt work at the fire in my cellar.

SCHOOL BILL VICTORY.

ONLY THREE VOTES AGAINST IT IN THE SENATE.

(Special by Wire to The Press.)

TRENTON, May 4—The Plainfield School Bill passed the Senate on third reading late in yesterday's closing session. The vote was 13 to 3. There was no discussion. It will come before the House next Monday.

STRIKERS FIRED UPON.

SCOTTDALE, Pa., May 4—A raid was made by the wives of coke strikers on the Painter works of the McClue Company today. They were repulsed by a number of deputies, who fired on them. Fifteen persons are reported to have been wounded, several fatally.

Mr. White, the mine superintendent, was very badly beaten in the riot and may die.

COMRADES' CAMPFIRE.

Major Anderson Post Has a Social Evening.

Major Anderson Post, No. 109, G. A. R., had a campfire last night. The evening was spent in the cordial spirit that characterizes all of the meetings of the Post.

The affair was opened with prayer by Department Chaplain Charles E. Hill of Red Bank. Commander J. F. Hubbard followed with an address. In closing he said "I am particularly pleased, in repeating my welcome, to note that we are honored by the presence of so many members of Post 73. This is thoroughly in harmony with the unanimous wish of Post 109. Since Fate has decreed that we cannot be of one immediate family, it is comforting to know that we can be and are the very best of neighbors in the one parent family. To these, our neighbors, then, and to all who mingle with us tonight, I tender for Post 109 a greeting right from a soldier's heart, hoping that the good cheer of this night's camp fire may warm you all and linger with you through a round of happy and prosperous years."

Past Commander Asa Collier then read telegrams from distinguished people who were unable to attend; among them were Benjamin Harrison, Thomas Reed, W. Q Gresham, John Sherman and Grover Cleveland.

Speeches were made by the department officers present, including Department Commander John Shields, of Flemington, Senior Vice Commander William H. Branson, of Rahway, Junior Vice Commander E. F. Brainard, of Newark, Assistant Adjutant-General A. E. Connett, of Flemington, Medical Director John Young Love, of Elizabeth, and Inspector W. P. Haynes, of Swedesboro.

Several selections were sung by a quartette composed of Mrs. Asa Collier, soprano; Miss Ketcham, alto; Elmer E Runyon, tenor, and Robert Gorton, bass. The accompanist was Miss Jessie Utter.

Soldiers' fare was served on tin plates and cigars were passed. Remarks were made by Past Commanders M. C. Dobbins, W. C. Smith and C. B. Stephens, of Post 73, and by W. R. Mattox and John Goodwin.

Temporary barracks were arranged in the Hotel Grenada and the City Hotel for the accommodation of the visitors who could not get home until this morning.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

The Seventh-Day Baptist Church was well filled with members of Christian Endeavor societies last evening, an audience that was much interested in an address by Rev. E. S. Hurlbut, pastor of the Collegiate Reformed Church, New York.

Mr. Hurlbut spoke in a practical way about the building up of church membership and spiritual strength. His own peculiar work in the ministry makes him especially competent to lecture on this line. He explained how the young people's societies could do the best of work, and used many anecdotes to illustrate the points he brought out in the course of his remarks.

The Christian Endeavor Society of the church entertained their visitors with refreshments in the parlor after Mr. Hurlbut's address. Arthur L. Titsworth played the church organ in the absence of Miss Utter very acceptably.

The Christian Endeavor prayer meeting in the First Baptist Church this evening promises to be an interesting one. All are invited to be present.

May Dinner.

The May dinner party of the Colored Y. M. C. A. given in Central Hall was well attended and much enjoyed. It will be continued this evening under the management of Mrs. Joanna Fisher, Mrs. Katie Mayhew, Mrs. Susan Reed, Mrs. J. Mann, Mrs. Jane Conway, Mrs. R. A. Thomas, Mrs. J. Langford, Miss Tillie, Miss Emma Robinson, Miss Laura Robinson, John Reed, Spencer Conway, J. Mann, N. Pollard, S. Wingleton, J. Saunders, H. P. Thomas.

Promises Profit.

A large crowd danced at the St. Joseph's Church fair in the Turn Verein Hall last night. The prospects for heavy profits tonight and to-morrow are very promising. Silver knives, forks and spoons, two dozen of each, were won by Mrs. Huntington, of Elizabeth. A number of the contests will close this evening.

The American Catarrh Cure

Is the result of twenty-six years' study and treatment of the disease. One bottle convinces the most skeptical. It is always ready for use, needing neither douche nor atomizer. It restores the hearing, cures the hawking cough and expectorating, removes the headache and nose bleeding, increases the appetite, produces sound sleep, invigorates the whole system and increases the vitality. Prepared only by W. B Jones M. D., No. 1336 South Eighth st., Philadelphia. For sale by L. W. Randolph, 21 West Front street. Price $1.

THE SIDEWALK CASE.

In the case of Mary McCann against Julia F. Baker and husband for injuries sustained by Mrs. McCann stumbling over an obstruction in the sidewalk, counsel submitted the case without argument, and Judge VanSyckel charged the jury that Counselor Marsh was entirely right in his law, but that if they believed the testimony of Mr. Baker that the Street Commissioner had ordered him to put the walk where he did put it, that would excuse Baker from liability. Accordingly verdict was for the defendant. Mr. Marsh immediately applied for rule to show cause why he should not have a new trial, and Judge VanSyckel promptly granted him the rule.

The Spring House Cleaning Wisely urged by the BOARD OF HEALTH is not complete without a proper use of DISINFECTANTS. But, in choosing these, do not be misled into paying fancy prices for "patent" specialties. Common lime is better than any of them for damp cellars and stables. For vaults, drains, cess pools, the best and cheapest disinfectant is COPPERAS, supplied by us by the pound or barrel at low rates. But for use in the house, in the plumbing, in kitchen sinks, in closets, for purifying the air of sick rooms, deodorizing offensive discharges—in short, for all purposes of a household disinfectant, nothing can excel the powerful solution of chlorides made and sold by us for 15 years under the name of REYNOLDS'S ODORLESS DISINFECTANT. Quart bottles 25c. To be diluted for use according to directions on label.
REYNOLDS'S PHARMACY, Park and North avenues.

HIGH SCHOOL CHRONICLES.

The P. H. S. A. A. will take a run to Elizabeth Saturday morning to meet the tally-ho and return with it to Plainfield. All the members and their friends are requested to meet at the High School at 8:45. First Lieutenant E. I. Serrell will be in command.

Invitations have been received by the P. H. S. A. A. from the Princeton University Tennis Association to enter the second annual tournament of singles for the championship of the Princeton Interscholastic League, to be held on the University grounds Saturday, May 12. No definite action has been taken, but it is understood that the Association will not enter.

Attacked by Attorney Angleman.

Two fine thoroughbred horses were to have been sold in Bernardsville yesterday. They had been attached the night before, however, by virtue of a writ issued by Justice Crosley Tuesday. The owner, Henry Mathews, had occupied a farm on Long Island and left a few weeks ago, owing several months rent to the owner of the place, Mrs. Isabella Thomas; and neglected to tell where he was going. Mrs. Thomas happened to learn Tuesday morning through friends that had seen Mathews in a Plainfield livery stable and immediately came here. Mathews had already left with his horses. Her attorney, W. S. Angleman, traced Mathews to Bernardsville, and had the horses attached Tuesday night.

Plainfield Peanutters.

A banquet was given last night in Quinn's Hall, Jersey street, Elizabeth, to the Peanut Club of Rahway. The supper was an elaborate affair, all the delicacies of the season being served. Speeches and music made the evening pleasant.

The guests were: Moses Acken, Silas Leonard, Samuel Halliday, Alford Cook, ex Sheriff Thompson, ex-Senator Fred. Marsh, ex-County Clerk Crowell, James E. Martine and William K. McClure.

New Building Loan.

A local branch of the State Mutual Building and Loan Association was organized in the piano parlors of Vanderbeek & Sattels last evening. Nearly 20 were present. About 500 shares have been taken by the 50 members.

The officers elected were:
President—G. W. Rockfellow.
Vice-president—C. H. Rugg.
Treasurer—L. S. Pocock.
Secretary—E. M. Laing.
Attorney—W. R. Codington.
Directors—J. P. Laire, W. A. Woodruff, F. S. Runyon, A. Vanderbeek, R. A. Meeker.

Plainfield's Best Restaurant.

McVey's restaurant now has the best cook in the history of the establishment, and Mr. McVey is serving the public second to none in the State. He asks and deserves liberal patronage to encourage and to maintain the high reputation his restaurant now enjoys.

Open Up Watchung!

Watchung avenue over the brook is more than half opened up and graded, and unless the Town Committee takes some action in the matter the citizens should call a public meeting and see that the lower portion be likewise treated.

Chicago Breweries.

CHICAGO, May 4.—The pool of the four English syndicates which brew 75 per cent of all the beer sold in Chicago, has wearied of its attempt to force independent breweries into the combine and its officers have now evolved a scheme to down opposition by making the brewers' union fight the battle for them. The plan in brief is to induce the brewers union to recognize the pool as a union and to withdraw all its members from outside breweries. A meeting of union men was held at which the scheme was roundly denounced and rejected.

Altgeld's Idea of Coxeyism.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., May 4.—Speaking of the Coxey movement, Gov. Altgeld said: "I have nothing to say about industrial armies further than this: If they violate any law of Illinois they will be punished, and so long as they violate no law no man has any right to interfere with them. A high handed attack upon them would be an outrage, would arouse sympathy for them, would greatly swell their numbers, and in the end lead to trouble. If the newspapers would only quit talking about them they would dissolve."

Protest Against Tariff Delay.

NEW YORK, May 4.—A monster meeting under the auspices of the reform club was held last night to protest against the delay in passing the tariff bill.

W. F. Balkam Dangerously Ill.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., May 4.—W. F. Balkam, president of the New York State Associated Press, is lying dangerously ill at his home in this city.

COUNTRY CLUB COMEDY.

PLAINFIELD AMATEURS SCORE THEIR BIGGEST SUCCESS.

Lyceum Theatre Triumph, "The Grey Mare", Reproduced in Plainfield by Local Talent Before the Largest House in the Casino's History.

"The Grey Mare" made three exhibition circuits of the Casino course last night, giving a fine display of speed and power; she was gracefully mounted, and skillfully handled. Six hundred spectators crowded about the track, and were enthusiastic over her performance. This sterling mare established a reputation on the Lyceum Theatre course, under Mr. Frohman's training, and she lost none of her laurels by her appearance under the management of the Union County Country Club. The riding of the mare was out of sight—literally. Only her tale was visible to the assemblage crowding the Casino, and it required a dozen interesting characters to impersonate that.

The mare was a myth—at first: a startling reality—developing. John Maxwell, a most proper, serious, thonest physician, invents a ride on her, as a joke on his fiancee, Kate Stanhope, to prove his end of an argument with her on the ease of telling a lie. He becomes involved in his story so that when it transpires that someone did ride the grey mare as he told he cannot escape the consequences of the real rider's escapade. The guilty equestrian is in reality Algy Maxwell,. an impetuous youth, who captured the daughter and diamonds of the Count de Chevrelle and whose mad flight on the mare piles up a livery bill and damage suits from the farmers whose crops he galloped through, and brings down distracting visits from stableman, solicitor, chief constable, and furious Frenchman.

As if this were not enough trouble for the dignified doctor, a French maid must needs be mistaken by brother David Maxwell for her mistress, Helene, Algy's sweetheart, and is hidden in the apartment which Dr. John has been fitting up as a surprise to his prospective bride. John and David become hopelessly entangled in a network of suspicious circumstances in which the French maid and the mysterious ride predominate, and while they are suffering from their harassments David's wife Julia and her sister Kate are distressed both at the men's seeming inconstancy and ta their own little secret of Julia's old attachment for Col. Gavachan, the key to which is a bundle of love letters.

The French maid is discovered, along with a series of other disturbing incidents; man and wife, lover and sweetheart, are in the throes of distraction, and arrest and a duel are imminent, when Algy reappears with Helene, now is wife, to confirm the true state of the case and to set all doubts and disturbances at rest.

Forgiveness follows explanations; and pledges henceforth to have no secrets and to tell no lies point a moral to the story.

All this, with its accumulating detail and by play, makes a delightful three-act comedy, whose production on the Casino stage was a display of local amateur theatricals as praiseworthy as it was ambitious.

The leading parts were in most capable hands. The general public was surprised and delighted at Constantine P. Ralli's capabilities as an actor. As Dr. John Maxwell he played with ease, skill and power a part requiring much force of action. He made the embarrassments of John Maxwell his personal experiences, and whether the sincere and tender lover at the card game with Kate, impelled to poetic utterance by David's playing of "Home, Sweet Home" (with variations), or the desperately entangled impersonator of Somebodyelse's ride, he was the deserved recipient of hearty applause and high-praising comment, continually.

In Kate Stanhope as played by Mrs. J. Parker Mason Dr. John had a prize to be envied the possession of, and no wonder he went frantic at thought of losing her through Somebodyelse's pranks. The charm of Mrs. Mason's own personality gave perfect grace and beauty to a part which afforded her full ecope for the display of all those exquisite feminine attributes which distinguish the truly splendid specimens of her sex.

It had been feared that Mrs. W. L. Saunders would be unable to maintain her standard of matchless achievement: for it was known that of all the varied roles she has triumphed in, that of the not-over-pleasant Julia was most unsympathetic to her nature. But Mrs. Saunders is nothing if not interesting, and, recreating a somewhat harsh and imperious part, she cleverly softened its sarcasm, and was, with all her anxiety to prove men all alike and base deceivers ever, so sprightly and vivacious, that she was as captivating as ever, and quite delighted all her old and many new admirers.

Miss Jessamy Harte had less opportunity than usual, as the French maid Marie, for development of her well-known abilities, but she made of the limited part an entertaining diversion, and was just as high-strung, nervous and nervy as the play intended her to be. And fulfilling the playwright's ideal is consummate stagecraft. Her sister Miss Ethel Harte made but a brief and silent appearance as Helene, but her stage presence was sufficiently engaging to indicate that more important parts are in store for her.

Always popular is William R. Cock, off or on the stage, and instills good nature by wholesale. He made an imposing and humorous figure as the gallant but impetuous Col. Gavachan, Chief of the County Constabulary, and seemed a genial giant when holding the peppery and decidedly Frenchy Count de Chevrelle in check. The Count was capitally done by Laurens H. Van Buren.

Frederick W. Walz was a new candidate for footlight favor, and he won it. He was the serene, slow-and-easy David Maxwell, getting into scrapes through his goodness in helping other people out. To see him trying to pacify his wife, or trailing about in dressing-gown with coffee and sandwiches for the locked-up French maid, whom he had to feed through the crack under the door, afforded amusement enough for a whole show by itself.

George Taggart is an experienced hand in comedy parts, and his make-up, speech and accent constituted a faultless impersonation of the Cockney stable-keeper, Collins.

Henry B. Ely also is at home on the amateur stage, and as was to be expected his Algernon Maxwell was a satisfactory performance.

James Stowell Anthony accentuated his height by an excellent make-up in the part of Richard Beswick, solicitor. He was equally at ease in quoting law and precedent, in guiding the Maxwells through the mazes of the Grey Mare entanglement, or in escorting Kate and Julia through a drenching thunder-storm.

William L. Saunders had little to do and less to say as Stubs the discreet butler, but he did and said that little with his accustomed ability.

At the close of each act, in the midst of prolonged applause and recalls, magnificent bouquets were bestowed on the fair feminine players, and Mr. Walz was awarded a trim and redolent brassica oleracea, adorned with ribbons and bearing a card elegantly inscribed by Howard Wade Beebe's artistic pen with masks, floral work, cupids, and the words:

TO FRED W. WALZ,
on his debut,
"You'd scarce expect one of my age
To speak in public on the stage."

To save those who have forgotten, the trouble of looking up their botany book, it may be stated that brassica oleracea is cabbage. The boys said they didn't want to embarrass him with flowers, and that cabbage was hearty and wholesome, just like their sentiment for him.

Among the abundance of roses in the floral tributes poured over the footlights to Plainfield genius was a delicious sample of the lovely blossoms under which the Sub Rosa Club women whisper their secrets. The roses told this much—that the members have pride in and affection for Miss Jessamy Harte, and that the Sub Rosa Club is a mighty nice thing to be in, if only for the quality of its flowers.

So "The Grey Mare" was a success. It is alone regrettable that the play had not been pruned of two or three blemishes which profaned it, and which grated with a degree of harshness on sensitive people. It is singular how what is excused on the professional stage becomes a fault when assumed by amateurs.

Music Hall Next Thursday.

"The Old Homestead" is not like other plays, even other plays built on the same general outlines, but stands above, unapproached and unapproachable. Nobody will ever write such another play, for nobody can. Denman Thompson, like Dickens when he wrote "The Cricket on the Hearth", constructed a masterpiece that will live as long as stage literature exists, for he struck a cord to which there must always be a general response while humanity is as it is. There are tears in "The Old Homestead", hearty, genuine tears, which are invariably communicated to the audience, who weep and who are the better for it; but there is laughter, too, of the kind which wells up spontaneously and is irrepressible.

The New Dog Law.

The new dog law, which went into effect April 4, 1894, is an important one for all owners of dogs, and, because the law is at the present time in operation, owners of dogs should see to it that they obey its provisions.

Section one provides that every person who shall "own, keep or harbor any dogs" shall "have the same registered and numbered with the clerk of the township, borough or city" in which the owner resides and shall place upon the neck of each dog "a collar having engraved thereon, upon a metal surface, the name of the owner of said dog and the registered number thereof". This not being done, "it shall be lawful for any person to kill any dog found straying off the owner's premises without said collar upon its neck".

Section two provides that each township, borough or city shall provide a book of registration and that the fee charged for such registration shall be one dollar for each dog, of which the clerk shall receive twelve cents. The balance shall go to the sheep fund.

Section three makes it a penalty of ten dollars for a municipal officer to refuse to register a dog upon application.

Section four provides that the common council or township committee is empowered to appoint one or more persons "with full power and authority to kill any dog, male or female, found straying off the owner's premises without such collar as above provided for upon its neck".

Cities of the first and second class are exempted from the provisions of the act, and the registration fee provided for does not exempt owners of dogs from paying additional dog tax, if assessed by the local authorities.

Graceful Democratic Tribute.

Senator Voorhees's desk in the State House yesterday contained a magnificent bouquet of flowers marked "From his admiring constituents in Rahway". It was a mass of roses, from which emerged a beautiful white lily. As Senator Adrain stopped to admire the bouquet, he remarked that "the lily, towering above the rest of the flowers, was emblematical of the honor and purity of Senator Voorhees as he towered above the other members of the New Jersey Senate."

BOWLING BANQUET.

Plainfield's Crack Lyceum Team Secures Its Trophy.

The trophy won by the five-men team in the Diocesan Union bowling tournament was presented to the C. Y. M. L. in the club-house last night. The occasion was celebrated with bowling and a banquet.

There were present delegates from the other clubs of the diocese, St. Joseph's of Jersey City, and the Catholic Institutes and the T. A. B's of Newark. Fifteen members of the Jersey City Catholic Club attended, and altogether 125 men were in the club-house.

The evening began with a bowling game between the C. Y. M. L. and the Catholic Club of Jersey City. Each had won one in a series of three and the deciding game was full of interest. The Plainfielders won by 28 pins.

The score:

| C. Y. M. L. | | CATHOLIC CLUB. | |
|---|---|---|---|

Adjournment was then made to the hall, where two long tables were soon lined with the young men and their guests. Handsome floral decorations had been arranged by Mrs. John C. Traynor. The supper was furnished by Thomas Carty, the cooking having been done by Mrs. Carty with the assistance of Miss Lizzie Winn. The committee of the evening included M. J. Winn, M. Mack, Frank McInerny, M. Whalen and Thomas Carty.

Speechmaking began at once with the presentation of the silver urn by the President of the Union, T. George Fitzpatrick, of Newark. He commended the work of the societies and said that the Union aided the individual local societies by the interchange of ideas and explanations of methods. The Union had, in four years, grown from 7 to 17 societis. The Sunday meetings in Newark and Jersey City were not arranged very advantageously for the Plainfielders, but they had shown their interest in the Union by the way they had worked for and won the prize. As he uncovered the trophy he said he was glad to present it on behalf of the bowling department and that though the team might win many more he hoped they would always look with pleasure on the first trophy offered by the Union he represented.

Capt. John Lynch introduced Rev. Father Murphy, who spoke in acceptance. He hoped that the trophy now received was the promise of still greater victory in the C. Y. M. L., not in fighting battles, but in those manly sports which take a man's minds away from ignoble thoughts. He wished the Catholic young men's organization to go on with a strong front to the world, able to repel all malicious attacks against them.

The early departure of the Jersey City visitors was much regretted, as much enjoyment was furnished after they left. Songs and stories were given by Thomas J. Commerford, Mr. Doyle of Newark, John C. Traynor, Charles J. Ward, President Fitzpatrick, M. J. Cashin, Tim McCarthy, Michael Higgins, Fred. J. Wharton and William Butscher.

Mt. Zion's Pastor Back.

Rev. T. A. V. Henry has returned from the A. M. E. Conference held in Camden It had been feared that he would be sent elsewhere, but the conference decided to let him work for a second year in Plainfield and Metuchen.

There being three Sunday services here and two in Metuchen, the arrangement promises weekly work for the local preachers, William H. Cheeks and George A. Lewis.

Plainfield's report at the conference was the best presented, both financially and spiritually.

Yellow the New Car Color.

Car No. 144, which has been leased from the Newark Traction Company to be used while one of the other cars of this line is being painted, arrived in town late yesterday afternoon. A. E. Hoagland went after the car with his large truck.

The car is practically a new one. It has double motors, and is in first-class condition. The car is painted yellow, which will be the new color for the Plainfield cars. It will be put into service at once.

Deviled in Its Effects.

A number of lawyers at Elizabeth yesterday thought they were eating some very choice deviled crab for lunch, but soon after the repast they discovered, to their sorrow, that they were greatly mistaken, as many of them became quite ill. Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh was among those who were affected, but his physician, Dr. Endicott, says he is all right now.

Shameful Destruction.

Hundreds of dead fish are floating along the banks of Hudson's pond—many shiners, a few dace, plenty of sunfish, and a few pickerel. The pond is an old clay-pit containing spring water, and was stocked a few years ago with black bass. Someone has either used dynamite or some other destroyer to cause the death of the small fish. Where's the fish warden?

$100 Reward, $100.

NEW JERSEY NEWS.

New Jersey Redistricting Bill.

TRENTON, N. J., May 4.—Mr. Stokes has introduced a bill dividing the state into the following congressional districts: First district—Camden, Cape May, Cumberland, Gloucester and Salem counties. Second district—Atlantic, Mercer, Burlington and Ocean. Third district—Somerset, Middlesex and Monmouth. Fourth district—Warren, Hunterdon and Morris. Fifth district—Passaic and Bergen. Sixth district—City of Newark and township of East Orange. Seventh district—County of Hudson, except city of Bayonne. Eighth district—Union county, city of Bayonne and all of Essex county except Newark and East Orange.

Fired at Through a Bedroom Window

RAMSEY'S, N. J., May 4.—A strange man appeared at the window of the bedroom of Constable Charles Rhodes' house shortly before daylight and fired two charges of buckshot into the room, barely missing the sleeping inmates. Rhodes caught a passing glimpse of the would-be murderer, and is certain that the man was Carl Fritz, whose wife recently arrived here from Germany, claiming that he had deserted her and is wanted in Berlin for the murder of a married woman who refused to acknowledge the attentions paid her by Fritz.

Confirmations.

WASHINGTON, May 4.—The senate has confirmed the following nominations: Thos. E. Benedict, of New York, to be public printer. Postmasters: Connecticut—T. W. Ahearn, Naugatuck; J. W. Webb, Willimantic. New York—G. W. Drake, Corning; Henry O. Fairchild, Hammondsport; T. M. Davis, Alfred Center; Alogius McArdle, West Seneca; J. F. Hall, Batavia; K. D. L. Nivin, Montecello; J. H. Kelly, Middleport. New Jersey—G. D. Watkins, Burlington; J. S. Kintner, Newton. Pennsylvania—W. R. Snider, Kutztown.

PARK PROTECTION.

Aggressive Action by the Authorities at Washington.

WASHINGTON, May 4.—The secretary of the interior has written a letter of instruction to Capt. George H. G. Gale, who has been detailed by the secretary of war to proceed with Troop C, 4th cavalry, and establish headquarters in the Yosemite National park in California, and has sent a duplicate of these instructions to Capt. Parker of Troop B, 4th cavalry, who has been detailed to proceed to the Sequoia National park, California, and establish a camp within its limits.

In these letters of instructions the secretary encloses copies of the rules and regulations relating to the several parks. He directs that these rules and regulations be strictly enforced in every particular and that the original woods and lands shall be restored to their pristine condition and flora, trees, animals, birds and fish being carefully preserved from any interference whatever without distinction of persons. They shall remove instantly from the reservations any trespassers and in so emphatic and severe a manner that they will not choose to repeat the offense. If they undertake to repeat the offense the officers are authorized to use so much force as will prevent the accomplishment of their purpose.

The secretary directs that the officers forward a report upon the nature of the country under their superintendence; its water course, game, etc., with any suggestions deemed best to its proper management. The secretary further directs the officers to report to the interior department without sending their communications through the channels of the war department, as they are deemed to be direct representatives of the interior department, as well as army officers.

Alleged Breach of Etiquette.

WASHINGTON, May 4.—The bulletin No. 17 recently issued by Senator Voorhees, chairman of the senate finance committee, has a little bit of history connected with it that does not appear on its pages. The senator was desirous of obtaining the views of collectors of customs as to which system of collecting duties, specific or ad valorem, was in their opinion the better. So he directed a circular letter to each collector of customs. This action of the chairman of the finance committee, coming to the knowledge of Secretary Carlisle, a letter was immediately written to Senator Voorhees, setting forth that collectors of customs are under the immediate direction of the secretary of the treasury and should only be addressed through that source. Mr. Carlisle said he had no objection to the information being furnished, but he did object to the irregular manner in which the information had been asked. Explanations, it is understood, were made that the breach of official etiquette was unintentional, and eventually the collectors of customs were permitted to report directly to the senate finance committee instead of sending the information through official channels. The little incident, however, it is said, left a sting behind.

A Promising Young American.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., May 4.—Ormonde, the great race horse, who is now looked upon with a great deal of respect at the McDonough stock farm at Menlo park, has a son born to him on American soil. The foal was dropped by Kissing Crust, one of the mares brought over from England with the $150,000 horse. It is a bay colt, perfectly formed and as lively as any youngster. In general conformation he favors his sire as much as can be judged in so young an animal. The foal is being cared for most tenderly, and if anxious solicitude can help make the youngster good he will be a world beater. His dam, Kissing Crust, is by Sweet Bread. The colt could not be purchased for many thousands of dollars.

His Nomination Rejected.

WASHINGTON, May 4.—The senate committee on commerce has decided to make an adverse report on the nomination of David G. Browne, nominated to be collector of internal revenue for the district of Montana and Idaho. Among certain charges against him was one, that having a number of railroad passes he used them and charged the government the mileage thus saved. The main offense appears to be, however, that he made an affidavit in which, it is said, he stated he did not have these passes.

Magee a Free Man Again.

NEW YORK, May 4.—Joseph Magee, the law clerk, who has been confined in the Tombs for several weeks on suspicion of having shot Miss Fuller, the typewriter, whose death occurred in the law office where she and Magee were employed, was released from prison yesterday soon after the grand jury handed "no indictment" in his case. To a reporter he said: "I have but little to say more than what I have already said while in prison. No one more than I regrets Miss Fuller's death."

$400 Verdict for Betrayal.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., May 3.—Judge Thayer rendered a decision awarding Mary E. Brower, of Brooklyn, $400 damages and costs of her suit against Edward T. Whitlock, of Brooklyn, for betrayal. United States Treasurer D. N. Morgan was Whitlock's guardian, but recently resigned.

FOR THE relief and cure of a cold in the head there is more potency in Ely's Cream Balm than in anything else it is possible to prescribe. This preparation has for years past been making a brilliant success as a remedy for cold in the head, catarrh and hay fever. Used in the initial stages of these complaints Cream Balm prevents any serious development of the symptoms, while almost numberless cases are on record of radical cures of chronic catarrh and hay fever after all other treatments have proved of no avail.

TOO MANY COXEY TRAMPS.

Mrs. Cleveland and Children Will Leave Early for Gray Gables.

WASHINGTON, May 4.—One of the results of the Coxey movement, the feeling of insecurity which this tramp migration has given to all suburban residents, is that Mrs. Cleveland and her children will probably pass the whole summer at Gray Gables, their seaside home in Buzzards Bay, Mass., instead of spending the early summer months, as they originally intended, at their pleasant country residence at Woodley, on the outskirts of Washington, where Coxey at first proposed to encamp his men. The situation has pressed with painful severity on Mrs. Cleveland and her children.

No patching up of plumbing seems able to rectify the inherent unwholesomeness of the white house. Doctors have been in attendance for weeks on one or more of the servants of the household and the defective sewerage and plumbing threaten all kinds of danger to the inmates.

It was Mrs. Cleveland's intention to move out to Woodley on April 15 with her little ones, but the Coxey tramp movement has put an end to this, and it is now said that Mrs. Cleveland and her children will move to Buzzards Bay just as soon as the cottage there can be got ready for their occupancy.

MURDERER DENEHY PARDONED

Favor of Widow and Others Fought Hard to Keep Him in Prison.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., May 4.—The senate has approved the pardon of Patrick F. Denehy, who has served 21 years of a life sentence for the murder of George H. Favor, of Springfield, Mass.

There was not a dissenting vote, but before the senate met great pressure was brought to bear upon the governor to reconsider the recommendation of pardon and upon the senators not to grant the prayer.

Mrs. Favor and her son came from Springfield and made earnest and affecting pleas that the pardon be refused and she was joined by Henry C. Pollard, of Lonsdale, and James C. Collins, of North Providence. Their efforts were, however, unavailing, but there were exciting scenes in the governor's office and the lobby.

Claims His Land is Damaged.

ALBANY, May 4.—Dr. William Seward Webb has filed with the state board of claims a claim for $184,350 for damages to land in Herkimer and Hamilton counties owned by the claimant about the banks of Beaver river, caused by the construction and re-construction by the state of a reservoir on the Black river at Stillwater. Dr. Webb claims that great damage has been done his land by the reason of the backing up of the water and states that the construction of the reservoir prevents the floating of logs down Beaver river to market, and has injured the value of the lands for hunting and sporting purposes.

Harvard Republican Club Indignant.

BOSTON, May 4.—The members of the Harvard republican club last week petitioned for the use of Sanders' theatre for a meeting to be addressed by Henry Cabot Lodge. The students have just been notified that the Harvard corporation had voted to allow the use of none of the college buildings by political clubs. This order bears especially upon the republican club, from the fact that it is the only organization of the kind in the college, the democratic club having been disbanded last fall, and the members are feeling very indignant.

Crabs Fed on Their Bodies.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., May 4.—Tuesday night George Gay and Mrs. Clara Sherwood went boat riding on the St. Johns. Yesterday their bodies were found at the foot of Laura street. The bodies had been horribly mutilated by crabs. Mrs. Sherwood did not live with her husband.

Inter-Ocean Changes Ownership.

CHICAGO, May 4.—The controlling interest in the Inter-Ocean newspaper property has been transferred by H. H. Kohlsat, who for three years has been publisher of the paper, to Wm. Penn Nixon, who has been editor of the paper for more than 18 years. The consideration was about $40,0000.

Milan to Be Made Regent.

BELGRADE, May 4.—The civil tribunal here has approved King Alexander's proposal to make ex-King Milan regent during the six months of his tour abroad.

A RETIRED BUSINESS WOMAN.

A Page From Her History.

The important experiences of others are interesting. The following is no exception: "I had been troubled with heart disease 25 years, much of that time very seriously. For five years I was treated by one physician continuously. I was in business, but obliged to retire on account of my health. A physician told my friends that I could not live a month. My feet and limbs were badly swollen, and I was indeed in a serious condition when a gentleman directed my attention to Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, and said that his sister, who had been afflicted with heart disease, had been cured by the remedy, and was again a strong, healthy woman. I purchased a bottle of the Heart Cure, and in less than an hour after taking the first dose I could feel a decided improvement in the circulation of my blood. When I had taken three doses I could move my ankles, something I had not done for months, and my limbs had been swollen so long that they seemed almost putrified. Before I had taken one bottle of the New Heart Cure the swelling had all gone down, and I was so much better that I did my own work. On my recommendation six others are taking this valuable remedy."—Mrs. Morgan, 509 W. Harrison St., Chicago, Ill.

Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, a discovery of an eminent specialist in heart disease, is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is positively free from all opiates or dangerous drugs.

OFF MONOMOY POINT.

"Well," said the deacon reflectively, "I don't see what we are going to do for a fourth hand."

The parson said nothing, but looked around a trifle uneasily as the door in the outer room opened. The doctor rubbed his hands together and gazed longingly at the pack of cards on the top of a dry goods box and sat down on a nail keg. A tall young fellow came in just then.

"You're just the man we want," said the deacon. "Gents, this is Mr. Grosvenor"—he called it Grossvenner—"from the hotel. Let me make you acquainted. He'll take the fourth hand, I think, so long as Eldridge has not turned up. Eh, boy?" And he turned on Grosvenor suddenly.

"What is the game?" asked the young fellow idly.

"The game," said the parson, adjusting his spectacles with still greater accuracy on his nose, "is nothing more or less than innocent whist, the science of Cavendish and played by every thinker on the civilized globe—a game, my dear sir, that"——

"There, there," broke in the doctor; "that will do. I dare say that Mr. Grosvenor has played whist before, and perhaps we had better go ahead. Deal out the cards."

Grosvenor entered the game for the fun of the thing, or what fun he could get out of it in his present state of mind. He had several hours to kill until Grace Boardman returned from the driving party she had got up to avoid him, and he cared very little what he did until she returned. Then he would see her and have it settled once for all.

"How is Mr. Billie today?" some one asked the doctor presently.

"Quite well," was the answer—"as well as could be expected."

"Mr. Billie?" asked Grosvenor. "Who is Mr. Billie?"

"Have you never seen him?" returned the doctor. "Mr. Billie is the man who keeps the barber shop down there." And the man waved his hand in an indefinite manner.

"Oh, yes, I know," cried Grosvenor. "Odd sort of a man."

"Rather," agreed the doctor.

"I think, Mr. Grosvenor, you would like to hear about him," said the deacon reflectively.

"So there is a little story about Mr. Billie?" said Grosvenor.

"He's an odd character," began the doctor. "I like odd characters myself. I rather fancy Mr. Billie, but he is getting old now and is a trifle cracked in his head."

"Do you know," put in the parson, "that I have been thinking of sending him to the poor farm. He barely supports himself, and his business is such a delicate one and involves such chances—if his hand, now, should slip holding a razor or something like that"— The parson, who was one of the overseers of the poor, left his sentence unfinished.

"That would break the old man's heart," said the deacon. "He's very proud. You remember it is always 'Mr.' Billie, not plain Billie. I think you overestimate the danger of allowing him to handle a razor."

"I think I shall discuss the matter this very afternoon with my colleagues and decide at once," persisted the parson. He shaved me yesterday, and that decided me. I will tell you why. His eyes looked glassy at times. He talked very wildly and strangely about a woman leaving him and coming back—how he would like to kill her. Then he would laugh and say he loved her and couldn't kill her. It really made my blood run cold to feel the edge of the razor running over my neck, and I thought how easy it would be for him to turn his wrist and cut my throat. It's a thing to make one nervous to let a man like Mr. Billie have a razor so near one's throat. I have heard a good many similar complaints, and I think the overseers had better take action tonight."

"You're just the man we want," said the deacon.

"He's been there for 20 years," muttered the doctor. "Nearly 20 years," he repeated dreamily.

At times people would come in and out of the other room, which was the principal apartment of the grocery store, where the card players usually gathered. Then at times nothing could be heard but the fall of the cards or the buzzing of a few flies on the window panes. From the rear part of the room came the scent of salted fish. A rickety stove stood in the room, and round about the counters were the usual articles found in a country store from the spool of thread to the garden rakes.

The game was finished not too soon for Grosvenor, who had grown weary. When he went outside, it was about 5 o'clock, and there was yet an hour to kill before Grace Boardman would be back. Some way the young man found himself going toward Mr. Billie's shop. It was warm, and the sun was so low in the west that it seemed to shine directly on the line with Grosvenor's eyes. It was very bright, and the young man put his hand to his face several times, not so much, however, because the sun troubled him as because he found he had a headache. Sand, hot and burning, was blown here and there by a hot breeze. The grass was withered from a diffident brown to a distinctive brown, and all nature told of the hot weather. The ground was parched and bare.

Grosvenor approached a small house and stepped inside the doorway. He found himself in a room bare with the exception of a few shaky chairs and a counter evidently once used in a store. Back of this was another room, through the doorway of which Grosvenor saw a barber's chair. The whole aspect of the place was deserted and lonely. It was much like a neglected corner in a barn—apart from the odor of freshly cut hay, the lowing of cattle and the stamping of horses.

There were shuffling steps from somewhere, and a man appeared. He had a well shaped head, with a forehead of a decidedly Indian cast. His nose and mouth were those of a negro. His eyes were blue and watery, and his temples were destitute of hair. In the back his hair was very long; the gray locks hung below his neck. He was dressed in a shabby suit of black clothes and wore a shirt, but no collar.

Grosvenor smiled, chiefly perhaps with amusement. "Are you Mr. Billie?" he asked.

The man returned his smile. His eyes shone in a gentle manner. He was evidently pleased at Grosvenor's kindly greeting and at his knowing his name.

"Yes," he replied. "I am Mr. Billie.

* * * * * * *

She was a handsome woman when I married her and before she ran away and left me. But it's all over now, like a dream that will come no more. Sometimes when the day is over and the sky out in the west is burning I walk on the beach, and when the moon rises out of the sea, sometimes far across the water, in that light, I see her face again, with her black eyes and her silky hair. Sometimes I hear her voice, and I close my eyes, and some one comes and lays her hand in mine and says, 'Billie!' And then when I wake up it is a dream. But do you know," continued the man suddenly, poising the razor over Grosvenor's face, "I think she will come back to me some time. I have a feeling that I shall come to the door some night and find here there, and she will say 'Billie' to me, and I shall have her with me again forever."

Grosvenor was a little startled by the old man's manner. There was a strange light in his eyes, and sometimes he flourished the razor in a way that made Grosvenor almost fear he might let it fall on his face, and he was sorry he had started him off on his hobby.

The man told him how when he was a very young man he had married this beautiful woman, who was a waitress in a hotel, and how when they had been married but a short time she went away and left him.

"But it wasn't her fault," said he. "She was enticed away, I know. I was a blind fool then, and I said if she wanted to go away she might, and I wouldn't follow her, and she could go where she wanted to. And then I drifted around as a traveling barber until I came to Harwich, and somehow I have been here ever since. The sea talks to me sometimes, and I couldn't bear to go away and leave it. And if I did go away it would be harder for her to find me, for she is looking for me now and will come to me some time." He paused and said in a businesslike tone, "Bay rum, sir?"

Grosvenor was glad to get out of the chair alive. The old man kept on talking and fascinated him so that he staid with him until it was almost dark. It was growing cooler now, and the sun left a mass of dull lavender clouds as it set. In the fields the crickets were chirping, and the hoarse croak of frogs came from a neighboring pool. The air was deliciously salt, for the wind came from the sea. Mr. Billie and Grosvenor sat on the doorstep and enjoyed the cool breeze.

Mr. Billie was smoking furiously. He seemed uneasy and nervous, and he kept telling Grosvenor that he must stay with him, for he had a feeling that something was going to happen, and although the young fellow thought he ought to go away he reflected that Grace Boardman, even if she had got back, would be compelled to eat her supper, and as it cooled his brain to sit there he concluded he would do it. And so he staid there with the old man until the stars came out, and the old man told him how they were trying to get him to give up his shop and go to the poorhouse, and he said he would kill himself before he would do that. Would he want his wife to come back and find him in a poorhouse?

Grosvenor idly watched the fireflies darting about in the salt laden fields. He thought of the great load of sorrow on this man's heart, and he wondered how any one could think of making it heavier by trying to take him to a poorhouse while he was yet able to provide for himself.

A short distance down the road there were the glow of a forge and the sound of the hammering of the belated blacksmith. The clouds were moving over the sky. Some of them were white like snow and looked feathery and light as a thistledown; others were heavy as dingy marble and in places tinged with black as if burned from a soaky lamp. In the west there was a black bank of cloud. In the south there were huge banks, like high mountains rising out of the sea.

Then Grosvenor saw that a woman was standing before them. He had not known she was coming. She seemed to appear suddenly out of the gloom or to have descended from above somewhere. But she stood now in the glare of the light, and Grosvenor saw that her face was white and her eyes had dark shadows under them.

MRS. TAFFAN.

MRS. HARRY TAFFAN, of Reynolds, Neb., writes: "For about two years I was a constant sufferer from diseases peculiar to my sex. I had to be carried from my bed, had horrible dreams, sinking sensations, was very nervous and had little or no appetite. In short, my whole body was racked with pain. I had frequent attacks of hysteria, and was completely discouraged for I found no medicine did me any good. At last I determined to try Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. I had taken but two bottles before I felt so much better! I took eleven bottles. Today, I am well. I have never felt the least trace of my old complaint in the last six years. We use the 'Golden Medical Discovery' whenever we need a blood-purifier. With its use, eruptions of all kinds vanish and the skin is rendered clear and soft, almost as an infants." Sold everywhere.

Don't Hesitate, but Call and Be Convinced That Every Statement We Make Is True.

To those who do not already know that there is established in Newark, at 105 Halsey street, a physician who stands in the foremost rank of his profession, who is indorsed by the leading colleges of the country and who can prove by witnesses right here in Newark (not by one, but by hundreds) that he has succeeded in curing cases that have been utterly given up by other physicians, and good ones, too. To those who do not these facts we state that any person, rich or poor, old or young, is welcome here and receive examination and advice free of charge.

Thousands praise the day they came to us for treatment. There is no guess work, no experimenting, no painful operation. No matter how difficult the case, no matter how much of the physician's time it may consume, the diagnosis will not only be thorough, it will be absolutely free. There is no taint of quackery or deception; no claim or statement is made that is not borne out by facts and living witnesses.

Mrs. Abby A. Ray, late of 86 Grove street, East Orange, who now lives at 4007 Ellmore street, Escanaba, Mich., writes, under date of January 12: "The medicine arrived this morning and I am so glad it came. I am almost out, and it has helped me so much and I am so much pleased with its wonderful effort on my broken down system that I would like to testify to your great success in my case. I am feeling as well now, in fact better, than I had ever hoped to again."

This is one of many letters that we receive daily. We have the originals at our office and if you wish you may see them. Another thing: We never publish or reveal a patient's name unless they so desire.

DR. STARKWEATHER.

There is not a penny to pay for the fullest medical advice. Dr. Starkweather is a graduate of the Berkshire Medical College, Massachusetts, and of the Medico-Chirurgical College of Philadelphia; endorsed also by the College of Physicians and Surgeons and Bellevue Medical College of New York. We invite all sufferers from whatever cause to call at our office, No. 105 Halsey street, Newark, where Dr. Starkweather is in attendance daily to give examination and advice entirely free of charge. It matters not what the disease, or how many years you have suffered, in spite of means adopted in your behalf, a visit to this office and the privileges of the same will cost you nothing, and may be the means of saving your life. We prepare all our medicines and prescribe the remedies indicated. This plan enables the patient to receive directly from us such remedies as will produce the results promised.

Our office is open daily from 10 a. m. to 9 p. m. Sundays 4 to 6 p. m.

DECLINED A $500 JOB

Browne Rejects Work for the Commonwealers.

Coxey Was Willing That the Men Should Accept It—Unexpected Interest in the Trial of the Three Leaders—Senator Allen Addresses the Court in Their Behalf.

WASHINGTON, May 5.—Dr. G. P. Gehring, of this city, addressed a letter to Gen. Coxey stating that he had sixty acres of land at Columbia park, three and one-half miles from the city, from which he wished to have trees and underbrush removed and streets opened up. He offered the park as a camping place, and would pay Gen. Coxey $500 for the use of the army for the desired work, which would take several weeks to accomplish.

The offer was made in good faith and the commonweal leader was inclined to accept, but Browne was unwilling to move the camp so far from Washington, so the offer was declined.

The Wealers' Case in Court.

The trial of Coxey, Browne and Jones on the charge of trespass in unlawfully entering the capitol grounds and destroying shrubbery, which began yesterday before a jury, is exciting much more interest than was expected. While it is the expectation to finish the cases to day it would not be surprising if it should occupy the attention of the court next Monday.

While Senator Allen is not down as one of the attorneys for the commonwealers he is taking a hand in the fight. When the matter of quashing the information against the accused was being considered, he addressed the court, saying that his presence was merely for the purpose of seeing the men on trial have a fair and impartial hearing, which he was sure would be accorded them. The senator took the position that congress could not pass a law the operation of which was to depend upon the judgement of some other branch of the government or some other individual. As was provided in section 10 of the act in question congress had no power to pass a law which might be suspended by the judicial department of the government or by any other officer or individual of the land. Congress might as well give power to the governor of a state or to the czar of Russia as to confer it upon the vice-president or the speaker of the house of representatives, who were mentioned in the statue as the proper persons to give power or license to pass through the capitol grounds or carry a banner.

Senator Allen continued by contending that so long as the people who assembled did not obstruct the highways, so long as they did not undertake to enter the halls of congress, the courts were powerless to interfere. Congress, he asserted, had the power to legislate, but not the power to legislate to prevent a peaceable assemblage.

One of the witnesses, Sergeant Slattery of the Metropolitan police force, testified that as far as he knew, all the damage to the shrubbery in the capitol grounds was done by citizens, who rushed across the lawn toward the capitol building when Coxey was escorted from the steps. Coxey's men outside the grounds did not break ranks.

Major Moore, chief of police, testified that he gave Coxey a permit to parade, but the permit denied Coxey the permission to march through public reservations. He told Coxey that he could not speak on the capitol grounds, but Coxey replied that "As the schedule had been carried out so far, he intended to complete it."

Frye's Army in Hard Lines.

INDIANAPOLIS, May 5.—Gen. Frye's industrial army will leave here Sunday for Washington. It is expected that the army will number 500. An appeal has been issued to the public, in which the railroads are denounced for refusing them transportation, the mayor scored for denying them work so they may purchase shoes, the American Bible society criticised for refusing to furnish them with testaments and the local press severely censured for speaking slightingly of the movement. The army is in hard lines and is kept together with difficulty. They will leave on foot and in wagons.

Well Treated at Homestead.

PITTSBURG, May 5.—Col. Galvin and his men are being well cared for by the citizens of Pittsburg and Homestead. Burgess Mawhinney congratulated Galvin on the good order of his men. The citizens of Homestead have contributed provisions enough, together with a wagon load from this city; to last the army several days. The army will remain here over Sunday. Col. Galvin expects to get free transportation over the Pittsburg & Lake Erie railroad to McKeesport.

Kelly's Men Must Walk.

DES MOINES, Ia., May 5.—Gov. Jackson having failed in his efforts to secure transportation for Kelly's army the men will have to walk out of town. Kelly says 800 of the men will follow him any place, but the other 600 he cannot vouch for. He will probably start on foot to-morrow.

Smallpox Cases at Providence.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., May 5.—Wm. Dillon, mail clerk on the midnight train between New York and Boston, was discovered yesterday to have smallpox. He had been sick since Monday but the disease was not recognized. A man who had been sleeping at the What Cheer lodging house went to the Rhode Island hospital yesetrday to be treated for a skin disease. An examination showed the man to be suffering from smallpox. He was removed to the pest house.

Packer Mine Fire Spreading.

POTTSVILLE, Pa., May 5.—The fire in Packer colliery No. 1 is spreading despite the hard effort of the officials to keep it in one place. The latest developments is that the fire threatens the workings of the Reading company's Bear Ridge colliery, situated across the mountains in the Mahanoy valley.

Shot His Mother; Killed Himself.

CONDITION OF TRADE

No Improvement During the Present Week.

The Numerous Big Strikes Responsible to a Great Extent for the Present Depression—Tendency of Prices Still Downward—Contrasting Situations in Different Lines.

NEW YORK, May 5.—The movement of general merchandise throughout the country is smaller in volume. Spring trade is finished, and orders for fall delivery are, with few exceptions, not meeting expectations. Jobbers in leading lines at almost all large cities report sales almost without exception as of a hand-to-mouth description. The extention of the coal and coke strike, accompanied by riots at Cleveland and at Massilon, has emphasized the depression. The industrial situation, therefore, has not improved, according to Bradstreet.

Strikes of ore miners, among building trades, with an extension of the coal miners' strike, and the almost total cessation of operations in the coke regions, have swelled the total number of idle industrial workers to fully 216,000. Shutdowns of industrial concerns dependent on coke or soft coal for fuel are increasing, notwithstanding an attempt of coal operatives and operators to get together to arrange a basis of settlement.

April bank clearings ($3,697,845,428) show a smaller decrease compared with last year, only 25 per cent., than for some months. This is due to the reduced value of trade and clearings totals in April, 1893.

Prices Still Downward.

The prices movement tips the scales, with Indian corn, oats, cotton, coffee and refined sugar all lower, and wool and some varieties of woolens and cotton goods heavy, with a marked tendency of quotations to weaken. Wheat scored its fifth or sixth lowest price on record during the crop year, 60 1-4 c. at New York. Offsetting the foregoing are unchanged prices for pork and lard, a firmer but unchanged price for rice, raw sugar 1-8 c. higher, anthracite coal firmer, bituminous coal higher and scarcer, bar and manufactured iron firmer, and steel billets and Bessemer pig iron $1 higher.

Contrasting Situations.

A relatively favorable report comes from Detroit, where there are fewer unemployed. Another contrast is seen in New England shoe factories running on short time, while in St. Louis four months' shipments are in excess of last year. Transaction in wool have slackened, and prices of some grades are weaker. Cotton goods stocks are accumulating with manufacturers and prices are weaker, but a favorable report is received from the Providence worsted industries, where demand is improved, and, whether due to special causes or exceptionally low stocks, has resulted in renewal of confidence among manufacturers. There is more animation in demand for lumber and leather at Philadelphia, but increased prices for Bessemer pig iron and steel billets at Pittsburg and other points, due in part to scarcity of fuel, have not resulted in more orders.

Fewer Business Failures.

There were 179 business failures in the United States during the week against 201 last week, 248 in the like week a year ago, when the financial disturbance was beginning to be keenly felt, as compared with 166 in the opening week of May, 1893, and 166 in 1891. The falling off in failures is chiefly in the northwest and New England.

The New York stock market is sensitive and irregular. The alleged prospect of a compromise tariff passing the senate and alleged concessions to sugar and other industrial interests have been giving considerable strength to industrial stocks. The abandonment of the Reading reorganization plan and fears of foreclosure and heavy assessments on stocks of bankrupt properties caused liquidation in such properties.

WASHINGTON, May 5.—The will of the late Frank Hatton has been filed with the register of wills. He bequeaths his library to his son, Richard, and his interest in the Washington Post company, with the remainder of his estate, real and personal, to his wife, Lizzie S. Hatton.

The will says: "Having full faith in the friendship, loyalty and honesty of my business associate, Beriah Wilkens, I commend my wife to trust to him for a full and detailed statement of my interest in the Washington Post company, and to be guided by his judgment in the management of said interest."

His widow is requested to retain his interest in the Washington Post company, and she is made the executrix without bond.

State Treasurer Jackson's Bond.

HARRISBURG, May 5.—The bond of State Treasurer-elect Jackson, in the sum of $500,000, has been filed at the state department. His bondsmen are J. C. Bomberger and Major Lane S. ## HARRISON IN NEW YORK

Purely a Private Professional Visit, He Says.

Did Not Know That Gen. New Was in New York and Their Presence There at the Same Time Has No Political Significance—Will Not Boom Sensational Reports.

NEW YORK, May 5.—Ex-President Harrison is at the Fifth Avenue hotel having just arrived from Cincinnati. The general appears to be in the best of health. He spent a very quiet morning and had but very few callers, one of whom was Congressman Quigg.

Gen. Harrison was seen later by a reporter and in the course of conversation said:

"I left home Wednesday to go to Cincinnati to attend the convention of the Ohio commandery of the Loyal Legion. I had been elected commander the year before and had attended but one meeting, and as a new commander was to be elected I made up my mind to be present at the installation. I installed my successor, Gen. Cox, and attended the banquet that evening at the Burnett house.

"My visit to Cincinnati had no political significance.

"I held no conferences with politicians while there and was thrown among business men nearly all the time, so you see that the reports stating that my visit to Cincinnati was a political affair are without foundation.

"I come to New York to attend to some private professional business, having made up my mind to devote more time in the future than I have in the past to my professional affairs.

"I will not discuss politics at all and will remain here about a week. I did not know that Gen. New was in New York. His visit and mine at the same time appear to be the ground work for the talk that politics is behind this visit."

Relative to a dispatch printed in the New York papers, said to be an editorial which appeared in the Commercial Gazette of Cincinnati and which states that American citizens may as well begin to consider the general's name in connection with the nomination of 1896, Mr. Harrison said that he would not boom along any sensational reports that newspapers might print about him.

ATHENS, May 5.—Newspapers here print a dispatch from Vienna saying that Prof. Falb, the weather prophet, had predicted a terrible earthquake in Greece for to-day. Many persons were so alarmed by the predictions that they left the city and will pass the day in the country, where there is less danger from falling buildings.

THERE'S NOTHING LIKE IT.

Pert, Pretty Della Fox Was "All Run Down"---Paine's Celery Compound Made Her Well.

There was never a remedy so highly recommended as Paine's celery compound

There was never a remedy in such universal demand.

Because—

It makes people well!

Every one among the thousands who have seen petite Della Fox recognizes in her one of the established favorites on the comic opera stage of America.

She is one of the best singers now on the boards. She has a sense of pathos as well as a keen appreciation of humor, and as for deft and nimble dancing there is no star who can excel her.

Pert, chipper, vivacious, the very soul of motion, yet with every nerve and muscle under perfect control. Best of all, she is unique.

Everything that she does has the Della Fox "zing."

The life story of this celebrated artist and coming star is full of interest. It shows, too, how much common sense and pure grit can accomplish when combined with real ability.

She has worked her way up in her profession step by step with indomitable determination and a perseverance that nothing could discourage. With Conreid, with Hopper, and other managers she has won so many successes in so many cities that no artiste in comic opera is better known throughout the country.

"But I have had to work for it," she said to a reporter in New York the other day.

"You needn't think that an actress' life is spent upon a bed of roses. I love the stage dearly, and am very far from wishing to find fault, but indeed the life is more trying than people suppose.

"You see we go through life with a rush I have no time for anything. Singing every night and rehersing every day with whatever time there may be left over spet in railroad cars—that is my yearly routine. Of course the result of this sort of thing is a severe strain upon the nervous system. The effort to identify one's self with the character upon the stage is very trying.

"I have frequently found myself, after a particularly successful engagement, so nervous that eating and sleeping seemed luxuries with which I had parted company forever, and I wondered if fame or fortune achieved at such a price were not too dearly purchased after all. Last summer I was particularly run down. The least thing affrighted me and I shrank from study with loathing.

"I was then in Washington, and the wife of a U. S. Senator recommended to me a cure which she said had enabled her husband to bear up during the strain of the fierce debates in Congress while the Force bill was pending. I took it at her solicitation, and was rejoiced to find an almost immediate improvement. My spirit picked up and at the end of 3 weeks the same old exuberant health with which nature blessed me had returned.

"I ate and slept as I had not done since I was a child, and I have never known since then an hour's inconvenience from nervous prostration.

"The medicine to which I owe so much is Paine's celery compound, and I have recommended it to all of my stage acquaintances who have overtaxed their brains by too close attention to study, and all have experienced the same happy results as myself."

Paine's celery compound has made thousands of people well. It has saved thousands of women from nervous prostration. It has made the weak strong. It has cured where everything else has failed. Innumerable testimonials as to its wonderful value as a spring medicine have been voluntarily sent to Burlington, Vt., where it is prepared.

Paine's celery compound is the most remarkable remedy for the blood and nerves of the 19th century. It has been recognized and is today employed by the foremost physicians for curing kidney and liver troubles and all diseases due to nervous disorder, faulty nutrition and impoverished blood, producing results that seem little short of miraculous.

Paine's celery compound in the spring builds up the system, purifies the blood, regulates the nerves. The weak and and worn out soon find their frames invigorated, their spirits raised and their strength renewed.

It makes people well!

As a spring medicine it is as superior to all the ordinary remedies as strength is better than weakness.

The North Plainfield Council did itself credit and rewarded a faithful officer in reappointing Chief Marshal Pangborn.

A most excellent bill to pass is that now before the Legislature requiring that all trolley cars be provided with fenders.

It's like old times to see J. K. Arnold back at the Borough Clerk's desk. He was a good Clerk before, and he's a better one now.

The serial which begins in this paper next Monday night is one of the most powerful stories of modern literature. Don't miss the opening instalment of "Rainforth's Strange Case", if you are fond of unraveling a mystery.

Plainfield will have opportunity May 12 to turn out into the highways and welcome the first visit to town of its present Governor. George T. Werts has made a record which the leader of the Republican Senate admits is as clean and praiseworthy as that of any other New Jersey Governor of either party. He has proved himself devoted to the people, above mean partisanship, beyond reproach. He has chartered the tally-ho coach for May 12 and all the townspeople owe it to themselves and to him to line the roadways along the route, give him Plainfield's heartiest welcome, and with rousing cheers godspeed him along his journey.

All Things Grow that Come to Plainfield.

(From The Bound Brook Chronicle.)

The Plainfield Daily Press of Tuesday says: One of the largest leatherback carp ever caught in Bound Brook was secured yesterday by Alex. Ayres, of Spooner avenue. It weighed 20 pounds and furnished steak for several West End families today.

This fish was placed on the scales at the Central station in this place, and then weighed 14 lbs. 6 oz. It must have grown wonderfully, between here and "the Colorado of the East", to attain a weight of 20 lbs. on reaching Plainfield.

Editor Morrison Sees "The Grey Mare".

[From The Plainfield Evening News.]

The sitting of the play was a most delicious interior of a cosy country home.

All the funny situations and striking points were made with "aplomb" and were very telling.

Although the setting remained the same the changes in time allowed the ladies in the cast to put "en evidence" some charming Spring creations in the way of pretty gowns.

Everyone in the large cast was literally laden with beautiful flowers.

Jersey Farmers Keeping Up to Date.

(Franklin Park Correspondence of The Somerset Democrat.)

Some of these days the farmers who are so much interested in the Tally-Ho will run out the old carryall wagon and get their families on top of it and go to town in Tally-Ho style. It may be odd. But what is style for one is style for another.

EARLY INTELLIGENCE.

—If you have made up your mind to buy a wheel, don't pay $125, when you can split this price in two and own a high-grade wheel, fully guaranteed, with Morgan & Wright pneumatic tires, for $65 This sale will last about a week.

—The annual meeting for the election of officers and directors of the Young Men's Christian Association for the ensuing year will be held at the rooms, Thursday, May 10, at 8 p. m. The annual reports of the president and treasurer will be presented.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

Miss Mary Hurlbut of New York is visiting friends on East Fifth street.

Mrs. R. W. Rice and son Warren left yesterday for Wilkesbarre, Pa., for the Summer.

Abram Holcombe of New York is the guest of his friend William Thickstun, Central avenue.

Watson J. Tunison of Watchung avenue will leave town tonight for Rochester, where he will visit his parents. He will return next Wednesday morning.

Rev. Charles E. Herring will make the address at the Memorial Day exercises to be held in the First Presbyterian Church Cemetery by Garfield League, No. 22, Loyal Legion.

The quotation in Monday's Daily Press from an article in Harper's Bazar on The Monday Afternoon Club by Mrs. Mary E. C. Shreve, was only a small portion of a narrative giving a complete and valuable record of the club's doings.

Henry Van Middlesworth, who died in Dunellen yesterday, in his sixty-seventh year, was long a respected resident of that place. He was a well-known carriage maker, and for several years operated a line of railroad station hacks.

A number of young people, friends of E. Albert Sprowl, were delightfully entertained at the home of Mrs. Henry R. Phillips of Rockview avenue, last evening. Progressive whist and progressive euchre occupied the time. Refreshments and social chat followed the distribution of pretty and appropriate prizes.

BY THE WAY.

—Watch for the Red Men's fair.

—The North Plainfield school census will be taken next week.

—Henry Windham scored 228 on the Arlington alleys this morning.

—Five adoptions were made by Miantonomoh Tribe of Red Men last evening.

—The Willing Workers of Trinity Reformed Church will give an entertainment in the Y. M. C. A. rooms, Tuesday evening, May 22.

—Another new street is soon to be opened on the lines of the Hillman and Hudson properties, to run from Somerset street to Hyde's woods.

—A sleek advertising agent yesterday tin-signed the electric light poles on Somerset street, notwithstanding a penciled sign on the poles prohibiting the same.

—An entertainment and sale of useful and fancy articles will be held in Vincent Chapel next Thursday evening for the benefit of the piano fund. Light refreshments will be provided, together with flowers, fruits and confectionery, all at reasonable prices. Admission is free.

WEST END NOTES.

The old Roosa hill is being cut to a depth of 8 inches.

H. Hoffman is confined with illness at his home on West Front street.

Superintendent Adleman has finished putting electric lights in his house.

Grant avenue has received its new coat of crushed stone and is in good condition.

The new car will be turned out on the road Monday, and No. 2 will go in for a new coat of paint.

D. Livingston, an employe of the Potter Printing Press Works, was lifting a heavy casting which slipped out of his hand and bruised his foot severely.

George Gray of Grant avenue while passing Hope Chapel on the board walk, caught his foot in a hole and severely sprained his ankle. Dr. Gaston dressed it, and says he will be laid up for two weeks.

The Pondville fishing brigade went to New Market yesterday. As the wind and weather were not fair, they only succeeded in catching four carp. Captain Fay caught one weighing 5½ pounds, and W. Nickilson set him the pace by catching one 13 pounds in weight, the largest that has ever been caught around here. This makes him the boss fisherman. Tom Martin caught one weighing 3½ pounds, but having no landing net he was compelled to wade in knee deep, and land it with his hat. Frank Shattle caught one, and lost it, weighing 6 pounds. Dr. Thompson, being out of town, could not accompany the brigade.

WEST ENDER.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

The Y. P. S. C. E. of the Congregational Church will hold its consecration meeting tomorrow evening at 7:30. "What love does for the world".

The first anniversary of the Christian Endeavor Society of the East Third Street Mission will be held next Tuesday evening at the mission. A programme of much interest has been arranged and includes addresses by Miss Alice Spangenberg, E. M. Cave; vocal music by Miss F. May Grant, Miss Bessie Blair, B. T. Barnes, Elmer E. Runyon; and instrumental music by Miss Glenn and Howard Case.

The American Catarrh Cure

Is the result of twenty-six years' study and treatment of the disease. One bottle convinces the most skeptical. It is always ready for use, needing neither douche nor atomizer. It restores the hearing, cures the hawking cough and expectorating, removes the headache and nose bleeding, increases the appetite, produces sound sleep, invigorates the whole system and increases the vitality. Prepared only by W. B. Jones, M. D., No. 1336 South Eighth st., Philadelphia. For sale by L. W. Randolph, 21 West Front street. Price $1.

CALLING DOWN PEARSALL.

Old One-Horn Precipitates a Discussion of Local History.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—It is extraordinary that, in this age of penny encyclopedias and school books printed at State expense, educated people will utter almost any statement, without taking the trouble of verifying it.

This reflection is forced home to me in looking at the newspapers printed in our neighboring town of Westfield lately. In a late issue of The Standard newspaper printed in that town, the editor says that the "one-horn" gun is mounted in its cemetery, trained "on the spot where the traitor Morgan was executed for the murder of Caldwell, the hero of Springfield". ("One-horn", that is a gun with one of its trunnions gone).

There was no traitor of that name in our Revolutionary history. A private named Morgan was stationed as a sentinel in 1781, at Elizabethport, when New York City, Staten Island, and Westchester counties were held by the enemy. Caldwell attempted to pass through the American lines without the password, and Morgan shot him, as it was his duty to do.

Rev. William Caldwell was exceedingly popular. He was known as "the fighting parson". His wife was shot by Hessians at Connecticut Farms, and he had distinguished himself at Springfield by breaking into the Presbyterian Church, grabbing the hymn books from the pews, and distributing them for wadding to Gen. Greene's troops at the battle at that point June 23, 1780. Morgan was without friends, and Caldwell's friends knowing that he could not be punished for obeying orders, kidnaped him and marched him nine miles away for fear of interruption and lynched him at Westfield. As it was in the dead of Winter, Morgan is reported to have asked his lynchers to "hurry up whatever they were going to do as he was freezing"—and as he had no overcoat, and only his ragged uniform on—they probably hung a half frozen man. The item is by no means a creditable one for Westfield to cite, and its perpetrators of the crime were tabooed by the army and soon slunk into oblivion. Gen. Washington, then at Morristown, stigmatized it in no unmeasured terms, and those responsible for the outrage would have been severely dealt with, could they have been identified.

As to this "one horn" gun. It is a rude barbette or casemate gun, such as were foundried at about the date the Mexican War, and were sometimes, no doubt, used to outfit a man of war—in an emergency. Its carriage is of wood and extremely crude and clumsy. And yet the pastor of Westfield's Church, in a speech reported in the newspaper above named, asserted that it was a field piece used by the Hessians in the Revolution and abandoned by them in a raid on Westfield, circa 1776-1783.

The Hessians carried no artillery on their raids. They brought none with them, but were furnished by England. The "one horn" gun is not a field piece. The field pieces used in the Revolution by our enemies were "light artillery", or "field artillery", were of brass, and were marked "G. R.", (Georgius Rex). Moreover they were all left here. History I think will tell even Rev. Mr. Caldwell that these field pieces were not taken back. And if he thinks this writer is in error, he can look at Trenton, Boston, Springfield, West Point, Annapolis, or many other places, for specimens of the field pieces captured from our enemies in the War of the Revolution. If he will take this trouble, or if he or the editor of your contemporary, the Westfield Standard, will bother themselves to consent an encyclopedia, they will be nearer right than at present as to the local history of the town in which they live. WESTFIELD.

Surprise Party.

A surprise party was arranged by Nellie Meschutt and Beulah Waters for Louis Wadsworth Fisher, 406 East Second street, last evening, and about twenty-five young people enjoyed themselves playing games, etc. Later in the evening refreshments were partaken of. Tier served the cream.

Those present were: Louise Wilbur, Fanny Dumont, Alice Sharkey, Maggie Kenney, Jennie Thorn, Lillie Thorn, Clarence Crane, Beatrice Miner, Ethel Laing, Lucy Taynor, Jennie Addis, Nettie Meschutt, Beulah Waters, Harry Dumont, Walter Sharkey, Samuel Bogert, Hazel Keller, C. Keller, Fred Bird, Vernon Waters, Robert Crane, Vincent Miner, Willie McKillop, Bert Hetfield.

Every Holiday to Be Pictured.

The Ladies Aid Society of All Saints Church, Scotch Plains, will conduct a Bazar of Holidays in Excelsior Hall, Thursday and Friday, May 17 and 18, 3 to 10 p. m. It will be a unique and beautiful event, and those enjoying it will help swell the parish fund.

Poison in the Air We Breathe.

"Malaria" means bad air. It is air tainted with poison from decaying vegetable or animal matter. It produces periodic fevers; with one sick day and one well day. Malaria also arises from sewers, garbage, newly opened streets, or from laying street mains, damp cellars, and from a hundred unsuspected places. We inhale this poison in breathing, and cannot avoid it except by destroying the malarious influences. When malaria enters the system, it causes, perhaps, a greater variety of aches, pains and miscellaneous mischief than any other single source. Among them are severe sickness of the Stomach, Chills and Fever, Bilious Attacks, Typhoid Fever, Jaundice, Constipation, Liver and Kidney Complaints, Rheumatism and Neuralgia. Hitherto quinine has been the chief relief for the cure of Malaria, but when this drug settles in the system, it produces almost as serious troubles as it is employed to dispel. The most trustworthy preventive and cure for Malaria in all its forms is Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. This splendid tonic and alterative roots out the poison without danger to after health. By its invigorating effects upon the digestive organs and the blood, this medicine prepares the system to resist the foul and poisonous air, and renders an attack of Malaria impossible. Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy has already made a noble record in those parts of the country where Malaria is a constant pest in Summer and Fall, and where no other preparation or drug has yet been found able either to ward it off or eradicate it.

The Spring House Cleaning Wisely urged by the BOARD OF HEALTH is not complete without a proper use of DISINFECTANTS. But, in choosing these, do not be misled into paying fancy prices for "patent" specialties. Common lime is better than any of them for damp cellars and stables. For vaults, drains, cess-pools, the best and cheapest disinfectant is COPPERAS, supplied by us by the pound or barrel at low rates. But for use in the house, in the plumbing, in kitchen sinks, in closets, for purifying the air of sick rooms, deodorizing offensive discharges—in short, for all purposes of a household disinfectant, nothing can excel the powerful solution of chlorides made and sold by us for 15 years under the name of REYNOLDS'S ODORLESS DISINFECTANT. Quart bottles 25c. To be diluted for use according to directions on label.
REYNOLDS'S PHARMACY, Park and North avenues.

COST OF CONVICTING M'KANE.

Thirty-five Thousand Dollars Allowed Counsel in the Gravesend Cases.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., May 5.—Justice William J. Gaynor, of the supreme court, has handed down his decision upon the application of General B. F. Tracy, Edward M. Shepard, Col. A. E. Lamb and Jerry E. Wernberg, for compensation for their services rendered in the prosecution of the Gravesend election fraud cases.

He allows Messrs. Tracy and Shepherd $10,000 each, and Messrs. Lamb and Wernberg $7,500 each. In the course of his opinion Judge Gaynor said:

"The services of these four counsel to the community were of the most eminent character. No doubt if it were left to the people of the county or a jury drawn from them, they would insist on paying larger sums than these. But I am mindful of the great honor of serving the public, an am, I believe, legitimately influenced thereby in making the compensation so much less than could justly claimed for services equally great, if that was possible, rendered to a private client."

GREAT WOODLAND FIRE.

Valuable Timber Land Swept By Fames in Rhode Island.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., May 5.—An immense woodland fire is burning along the post-road between Wakefield and Westerly, in Washingtown county, and the most valuable timber in Charleston has been destroyed.

The fire started in the woods owned by Wanton Carpenter, near Matunick, and swept the broad woods due west to the farm of Senator Joseph Church.

The residents have turned out to fight the flames an protect their homes.

The fire can be seen 20 miles away, and South county folks are pretty well smoked out. Several farm houses are endangered.

Ending of a Murder Trial.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., May 5.—The trial of Fred S. Childs, of Clyde, for the murder of James Nichols, of the same place, which has been in progress several days at Lyons, was brought to a sudden and somewhat sensational ending yesterday by the prisoner being declared insane and remanded to Matteawan asylum for insane criminals and the case dismissed.

News From Hawaii.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 5.—An evening paper prints a statement to the effect that sensational news may be expected by the steamer Australia due from Honolulu today, private letters having been received by the last steamer indicating trouble owing to a split in the government party.

Coal Train Crews Laid Off.

ALTOONA, Pa., May 5.—About fifty freight crews of 300 men have been compelled to quit work because of the coal strike along the line of the Pennsylvania railroad.

Good Work for Mrs. Palmer.

CHICAGO, May 5.—A morning paper says that Mayor Hopkins will tender Mrs. Potter Palmer a position on the board of education effective August 1.

Killed By Storm in Illinois.

PARKERSBURG, Ill., May 4.—A building was blown down here during Thursday's storm, killing H. Sommerkhopf and Albert Kopler.

Potters Win.

The Potter bowling team defeated the Scotts on the Arlington alleys last night and thereby won the trophy series. It was decided to have another game and a great demonstration next Friday evening. The score:

CARRIE'S CUP.

Judges Decide That Her Walk Won It.

The Colored Y. M. C. A. enjoyed the second and final evening of their May dinner party in Central Hall last night. The time was spent very pleasantly with quiet amusements, and the supper was served in great style by the women of the auxiliary.

The event of the evening was the walk for a silver cup presented by Jeweler Asa Collier. Twelve young men and women were in line. It soon narrowed down to two pair and was finally decided by the judges, William Fisher, D. C. Moody, B. Harvey, William Burton and George Randolph, in favor of William Wilson and Miss Carrie Crews. Miss Crews was, therefore, the happy recipient of the prize.

Rev. H. P. Thomas, the secretary, desires contradicted the statement in another paper that the association gave a dance Thursday night. The association is careful to make its affairs attractive to the young people, but does not include dancing in its list of amusements.

HOW WE DO IT.

The times have forced many a manufacturer and importer to throw their entire stock under the merciless hammer of the auctioneer, to be sold for hard cash—that they had to have. No matter what goods brought, they had to go, and no name is so often heard or is more familiar to the auctioneer of the largest auction houses in New York than "WHITE OF PLAINFIELD." If you care to know it, that's where he gets so many good bargains—one of the reasons why he can undersell all others. We knew a man once, but that's another story.

So Is This.

MILLINERY—You can drop in anywhere almost now a days and buy a hat, and a good one. But, ladies, don't you think that your hats and bonnets were trimmed in the latest style before we ever went into the millinery business? We guess so, and you did not have to go to New York for them, either. Visit our millinery department; it will pay you both ways—style and price.

HOSIERY—You buy your hosiery here, don't you? We sell nothing but Hermsdorf dyed stockings. Import them ourselves, and sell them at the same price the other fellows pay for them. Children's fast black ribbed hose 8c., ladies do., seamless, 12c., men's seamless half hose, 3 pair for 25c.

COAT AND WRAPPER DEPT.—That new department for the sale of ladies' coats capes, wrappers and dresses is a wonderful success. When you can buy a good cambric wrapper for 89c. it does not pay to make them, and coats and capes for spring we are clearing out our entire stock at what they cost.

DRESS GOODS—Good time to buy never lower in price and never as low again. All our 50, 60 and 75c dress goods go at 39c. All on table No. 1. See that line of swivel wash silks for shirt waists; price only 55c., cost the man who made them 65c.

HOUSEFURNISHINGS—No better housefurnishing department anywhere. We have everything you want in matting, shades, crockery, tinware, dinner, tea and toilet sets. The great sale of granite ironware goes right on. Just see the assortment; the prices are interesting.

MEN'S UNDERWEAR—We have just bought from a mill hard pressed for money five cases of men's summer undeawear. Case No. 1, men's Balbriggan shirts 30c., case No. 2, do., 50c., case No. 3, men's medium weight shirts and drawers 60c., regular price $1. One case men's natural wool shirts and drawers 50c., regular $1.25 shirt. One case ladies' ribbed vests 13, 15, 18, 22, 25c.

WHITE, of Plainfield.

Simple, Beautiful, Good—these words mean much, but to see "The Rochester" will impress the truth more forcibly. Its marvelous light is purer and brighter than gas light, softer than electric light, and more cheerful than either. The choicest bric-a-brac in the palace of a Vanderbilt reveals nothing finer. We have 2,700 artistic varieties, in brass, bronze, silver and black iron.

Ladies often like to go down among the large wholesale houses and buy of first hands. They will find at our salesrooms (the largest in the world) a rare collection of Art in lamps. A catalogue to send you if you cannot come.

EDWARDS RESIGNS.

VACANCY IN THE NORTH PLAINFIELD BOROUGH COUNCIL.

Chief Marshal Pangborn Reappointed —Other Business.

Borough Councilman Edwards handed in his resignation at the meeting last night. Chief Marshal Pangborn was reappointed. All the councilmen were present. Clerk J. K. Arnold read the minutes for the first time.

Borough Magistrate T. R. Crosley presented a report of fines, amounting to $35, collected during April. Clerk Arnold reported having received $57.50 carting license fees from various boroughites, among them Christopher Columbus, who paid $2 50 for the privilege. Warren Engine Company presented a list of officers elected for confirmation and they were referred to the committee.

Garfield League, No. 22, Loyal Legion, auxiliary to the G. A. R., invited the Mayor and Council to attend their exercises in the Presbyterian Cemetery Memorial Day. The invitation was filed and ordered acknowledged.

A communication was received from the Plainfield Gas and Electric Company in regard to the controversy now in the courts. The company said they had but few poles and lights for their small custom in the borough. They agreed to put up no more poles nor wires except with the formal consent of the borough if the Council would agree to let them continue in business as at present for a year. At the end of that time they would be willing to take the poles away on 60 days' notice. They would pay all costs of the Court of Chancery and the costs of the cross action.

Borough Counsel Reed said that the case would come up next Monday. The borough's evidence was meagre as no record had been made of the company's communication asking for permission to enter the borough, accepted years ago. It would be advisable to end the controversy by accepting the proposition.

The Central New Jersey Traction Company, through Joseph H. Reall, President, applied for permission to run their proposed electric line along Somerset street from the county line to Mountain avenue and along Mountain avenue to the line of Fanwood Township. The matter was referred.

George Kirch, grocer, of 196 Somerset street, asked permission to put up a shed to shade the front of his store. The Street Committee was instructed to report on it. A number of bills were referred to the Auditing Committee.

A petition for the macadamizing of Myrtle avenue between Willow and Giraud avenues, for which $166 was subscribed, was referred.

The Fire, Water and Lamps Committee reported that measures had been taken to strengthen the unsafe floor in the rear of the engine-house. The engine's boiler tubes were worn out and $150 repairs should be made on it. The borough owned 1,400 feet of hose, but half of it the committee considered worthless, and 500 feet more should be bought. Signals and other conveniences were under consideration.

The Committee on Laws, Ordinances and Elections reported no progress in the collection of the ordinances for publication as the clerk had not given them the material. The conflicting claims of Mrs. Boice and L. A. Kline for $30 election rent had been withdrawn, and Mrs. Boice would claim $10 and Mr. Kline $20, the transfer of the building in question having been made the day before election.

A discussion of whether the borough or the chief should pay the assistant marshal's bill when the chief went away on private business was discussed. Councilman Lounsbury asked for instructions. Councilman Vallant thought the chief should have a yearly time limit of absence on private business, and suggested that Chief Pangborn had gone away on borough work when some one else could have done so. Chief Pangborn stopped the discussion by showing what the bills in question were for and explaining that he always paid when he went away on his own business.

The Street Committee reported progress made by two days work on Myrtle avenue between Sycamore and Giraud avenues. The bid of Smalley Brothers for furnishing crushed stone was accepted.

Crosswalks were ordered laid as follows:

On the east side of Somerset street, and the west sides of Westervelt and Watchung avenues, all crossing Fairview avenue; on the north side Fairview avenue, the south side of Grandview avenue and the north side of Jackson avenue, all crossing Watchung avenue; on the north side of Linden avenue, crossing Somerset street; on the east side of Giraud avenue and the west side of Sycamore avenue, both crossing Myrtle avenue.

On the acceptance of streets in Watchung Park the committee reported favorably on Watchung avenue from Jackson to Grandview avenues, but objected to taking in the others because they were not properly drained.

On Councilman Howell's motion 500 feet of cotton fire hose was ordered purchased at a cost not to exceed 65 cents per foot.

Councilman Howell moved that Chief Marshal William N. Pangborn be re-appointed to hold office at the pleasurue of the Mayor and Council. Councilman Neal seconded the resolution.

Councilman Vallant said he felt satisfied that his action in voting for the resolution would be severely criticised. He had been urged to favor another appointment. He would try to disregard the politics of candidates in determining his action. There had been objections made against Chief Pangborn, which, if true, would warrant serious consideration, but on man had been mentioned who would fill the place as well as the present incumbent. It would be better to keep the man who was so highly spoken of by many in the community, than to take a man of questionable ability. One applicant for the place had declared that he would be successful if supported by the saloonkeepers. The other councilmen knew what effect such an influence would have on the speaker, and what his action with the saloons would be if he had the power.

Councilman Neal stated that he had been instrumental in having Pangborn appointed. It was just to Mr. Valiant to say that the members of the Council at that time had told Pangborn that his continuance in the office depended upon whether he allowed his weakness to get ahead of him. Mr. Neal said he had followed up Chief Pangborn's conduct in many ways but had never discovered a single failure to discharge his duties or a sign of intemperance on the part of the marshal. If the saloon element favored Pangborn then the speaker would take a firm stand. He spoke not simply as a Democrat, but because there was no one in the borough as capable as Chief Pangborn.

The reappointment was made by the following vote: Aye—Howell, Neal, Peck, Valiant. No—Edwards, Lounsbury.

After the vote Councilman Neal said that to show his good faith in the matter it was only just for him to ask publicly for a presentation of charges against the chief. If Pangborn were found to be backed up by the saloons, then a decided action should be taken. If there were charges to be made, let them be made now and fully investigated.

George H. Fairchild was re-appointed chief of the fire department at an annual salary of $100. William B. Krewson was chosen janitor of the engine-house.

Two hydrants on Fairview avenue were accepted. The bills audited were ordered paid. John Coley was appointed a special marshal.

Zachariah Wilson and James Lines were appointed assistant marshals by a unanimous vote at a salary of $50 per month.

No action was taken in regard to changing the name of one of the Maple avenues in the borough, as the one in Bull Frog City had not been accepted.

The proposition of the Plainfield Gas and Electric Light Company was accepted and the suit stopped.

The Ordinance Committee were instructed to have an ordinance governing lights on bicycles ready at the next meeting. The peculiar construction of the act governing the licensing and tagging of dogs was discussed.

Councilman Edwards presented his resignation as he said he was unable to give the necessary time to his duties and he thought a councilman should not be so neglectful. The matter was laid over for a month.

The meeting was then adjourned.

BASE-BALL CHATTER.

This week's Sporting Life says that Turner is too valuable a player to be kept on the bench, and suggests that he be tried at first base in place of Boyle. They comment further on another Crescent graduate by asking "Would Brooklyn like to have Keeler?" The question can be answered by everyone who has watched his work, Yes.

John Burke, formerly of Plainfield, has been playing ball on a team in Tiffin, O. He was released last week and is at his home in this city.

The Young Richmonds defeated the Juniors this morning by the score of 19 to 14. The battery for the Richmonds were L. Doyle, pitcher, and W. Keefe, catcher; for the Juniors, H. Angerbauer, pitcher, Charles Jennings, catcher.

Grist of the City Court.

Bettie Shilton and Etta Windleton, colored women accused of profanity and abuse, did not appear in the City Court this morning and their hearing was necessarily adjourned again.

After two adjournments the hearing of Frank Hart, charged with disorderliness by Garrett P. Smith, was finally held this morning. The charge was dismissed.

—The street railway employes will appear tomorrow in their new Summer caps. U. B. Crane, the hatter, furnished them.

FOR THE relief and cure of a cold in the head there is more potency in Ely's Cream Balm than in anything else it is possible to prescribe. This preparation has for years past been making a brilliant success as a remedy for cold in the head, catarrh and hay fever. Used in the initial stages of these complaints Cream Balm prevents any serious development of the symptoms, while almost numberless cases are on record of radical cures of chronic catarrh and hay fever after all other treatments have proved of no avail.

THE SPRING.

Now is the Spring, the jocund spring!
When feathered animates do sing,
And honey-bee doth sharp his sting,
And "Sol" a warmer glow doth fling,
And bells of Kine do ting-a-ling,
And sowers do their arms outswing,
And those who seek a watch or ring
Go find at Collier's just the thing.

Mrs. T. S. Hawkins, Chattanooga, Tenn, says: "Shiloh's Vitalizer saved my life; I consider it the best remedy for a debilitated system I ever used. For dyspepsia, liver or kidney trouble; 75c. Sold by A. D. Mallinson, 308 North avenue, opp. railroad station."

COLLEGE SONGS IN CHAPEL.

Lorie Bragdon and Accomplices Amuse a Plainfield Audience.

With the assistance of the Rutgers Quartette and local talent the Young Ladies Mission Circle of the First Methodist Church entertained an audience that filled Vincent Chapel last evening.

The members of the quartette wore gowns and square caps. They were:

First Tenor—George W. Wilmot.
Second Tenor—Loren Bragdon.
First Bass—W. V. B. VanDyck.
Second Bass—J. A. Johnston.
Accompanist—F. Cuyler VanDyck.

The selections by the quartette were: "Not Quite"; "Lover's Complaint", glee; "That Blasted Blooming Sparrow", recitation in music; "Miss Jones, Come Back"; "A Minstrel Joke"; "He Did n't Split the Wood", imitation of a calliope; "Where Are You Going, My Pretty Maid?"; medley; Mother Goose melodies; "Chestnuts"; "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep"; "Christopher Columbo"; "Banks of the Old Raritan".

A solo by Mrs. Edward R. Douglass was encored, as was one of the second tenor. First Tenor Wilmot sang "Past and Future". One of the cleverest numbers was "Romeo and Juliet", by the second tenor and the second bass. William A. MacClymont played several selections upon the piano. Second tenor Bragdon received a gift of red roses.

Refreshments were served and a social hour was enjoyed after the programme finished. The chapel was prettily decorated in red and blue. Members of the Young Ladies Circle acted as ushers.

HIGH SCHOOL CHRONICLES.

The debate at the regular meeting of the Lyceum held yesterday afternoon was on "Will electricity be a greater benefactor of mankind than steam has been?" The affirmative speakers were E. I. Serrell, '95, and G. A. Horne, '95, and the negative H. O. Nightingale, '96, and Lambert Fish, '96. The affirmative won. E. O. Clark, '95, recited.

The Kappa Delta Phi yesterday afternoon discussed the question "Resolved that sight is more useful than hearing". For the affirmative were J. C. Whiting, '93, J. V. Beekman, Jr., '95, Walter Probasco, '97, H. C. Wells, '94; for the negative speeches were made by F. W. Geddard, '94, C. L. Riley, '94, C. B. Morse, '95, Norman Probasco, '94, Arthur Crane, '97. The house decided the debate in favor of the affirmative.

Cyclers Chase the Coach.

The tally-ho coach arrived at 11:25 this morning. It was accompanied on its way to Philadelphia by seven wheelmen who were competing for a gold medal offered by The Recorder to the first reaching City Hall, Philadelphia, after leaving Frankford.

All reported the roads good although the dust was complained of. The arrival of the riders was as follows:

M. J. Bailey, Century of Philadelphia, 11:29.
C. Andreson, unattached, of New York, 11:45.
D. H. Bratton, Brooklyn Ramblers, 11:25.
J. Talbot, Bedford C. C., 11:28.
William L. Darnell, of New York, 11:31.
C. S. Henshaw, Greenwich Wheelmen, 11:31.
G. S. Eagleton, Lyceum, 11:27.

A party of P. H. S. A. A. cyclers went to Elizabeth this morning and returned with the tally-ho. They left the High School at 9 and reached Elizabeth at 9:50. First Lieutenant E. I. Serrell was commander; C. B. Morse, pace-maker, and R. A. McGee, bugler. The others were V. H. Green, W. B. Rittenhouse, Robert Douglass, George Smith, Nathan Lane, Jr., and William Pike.

Trade Temple's Triumph.

The C. Y. M. L. played an ordinary bowling game with the Board of Trade on the Trade Temple alleys last night. The visitors were defeated by nearly 100 pins.

See It in Music Hall Next Thursday.

"The Old Homestead" is accepted by every class of theatre-goers not only as being sound in moral tone, but for possessing many true touches of human nature. To the minds of most of the spectators it recalls recollections that are dear to their hearts, and they are touched by the honest if homely virtues of its leading characters.

That Watch Run.

A careful canvass of the contest between Officers Giese and Frederickson for the solid silver badge, belt and club offered by Paugh Caugh Naugh Sinque Tribe at their fair, reveals the fact that Giese leads at the half, with Frederickson pushing him hard. They will probably pull into the stretch neck and neck. Even money is posted on the slate, and no one can pick the winner. It promises to be the closest race of the season.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the one positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio.

Sold by druggists, 75c.

The sermons to the young people which Dr. Yerkes of the First Baptist Church has been preaching for the last Sunday evenings will be continued for several weeks to come. They are proving attractive to the young, and those who attend speak highly of the helpful nature of the Doctor's sermons.

Buys to Sell Cheap.

The times have forced many an importer and manufacturer who needed ready cash to throw his entire stock of dry goods into the auction room to be sold for just what they would bring, and one to take advantage of every sale is White of Plainfield. He says that is how he can offer such inducements to his customers, and to judge from the amount of business that this house is doing the trade knows where to go for bargains.

—The Monday Afternoon Club will be well represented in the Biennial Council of Women's Clubs, Philadelphia, May 9-11.

A COMMON QUESTION.

WHERE MAY WOMEN GO FOR HELP?

How Many American Women Have Asked This Question of Themselves.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

You may call it dangerous modesty if you will. It is in woman's heart, and is part of woman's nature.

During the past 20 years thousands of women throughout the world have written in womanly confidence to Lydia E. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., and laid bare the life of misery they endured.

They wrote freely, knowing that their letters went direct to the hands of a woman who not alone understood their sufferings but whose heart was full of sympathy with them. The experience of thousands has proved how carefully their letters were studied, and how true and sure came the answer and helpfulness.

You may be suffering daily when you need not. You can tell the story of your pain to a woman, and get the help that only a woman can give.

A young lady from Boston writes to a friend, saying:—"They said I was consumptive, sent me away; told me to keep quiet, no excitement, no tennis. Just think of it! One day I found a little book called 'Guide to Health,' by Lydia E. Pinkham. In it I found out what ailed me, so I wrote to her; got a lovely reply. She told me just what to do, and I am in splendid health now."

The same assistance is waiting for you. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has relieved more female suffering than any other medicine in the world.

A REMARKABLE CURE

MIDDLEBUSH, Somerset Co., N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For the past forty years I have been afflicted with bleeding piles. I suffered constant pain in the lower part of my body, but when I had an operation of the bowels the pain was perfectly terrible, and was most always attended with the loss of a large quantity of blood. My condition was complicated with prolapse of the rectum, which at first only made its appearance when I had a movement of the bowels, but at length the parts became so weakened that the protrusion took place while walking or stooping, or after the slightest exertion, and sometimes even while I was at rest. Whenever this happened it gave rise to the most agonizing pain, and felt as though something was pulling the life right out of me. In fact only those similarly situated can imagine the suffering and distress which I had to endure from day to day, and which made my life a terrible burden. Hearing of Dr. Lighthill's wonderful success in the cure of difficult chronic diseases, I placed myself under his care, and now I am proud and happy to say that, marvelous as it may seem, he effected a complete and radical cure in my case in every respect, and he performed this cure without any painful operation or preventing me from work. Since this terrible disease has been removed by Dr. Lighthill's skill I feel new life, and for the first time in forty years I feel once more what it is to be without daily pain, discomfort and distress. I am not a wealthy man, but no amount of money would tempt me to be put back in my former condition.

I make this public statement, not only from a deep and everlasting sense of gratitude to Dr. Lighthill, but also as a simple Christian duty to let the afflicted know where they can find a physician whose skill cannot be surpassed, and in whom implicit confidence can be placed.

H. VROOM.

A LOCAL ENDORSEMENT.

No. 190 Somerset st., Plainfield, N. J.

To the Residents of Plainfield, N. J.

Mr. H. Vroom, whose statement appears above, is a brother-in-law of mine. I personally know of his case and his suffering and also know the happy fact that to the surprise of himself and his friends, Dr. Lighthill effected a radical and permanent cure. His statement is true in every respect and does not say half enough in praise of Dr. Lighthill. Anyone who wishes this statement verified is at liberty to come and see me personally.

JOHN C. KENNEY.

"I have lost my way," she said, "and I would like you to tell me the shortest way to the Sea View hotel."

Grosvenor rose to his feet and lifted his hat as he gave the directions, but the old man remained huddled up on the doorstep.

"Thank you," said the woman, and then the old man started up. A light was shining in his eyes, and he looked hungrily at the woman. He made an attempt to grasp her hand, but she drew back in a frightened way.

"Phœbe, Phœbe," he whispered huskily, "don't you know me? I knew you'd come back."

The woman recoiled and appeared alarmed. "What does he mean?" she asked, appealing to Grosvenor.

"He thinks you are some one else," replied Grosvenor.

But the man still cried the name.

"I'm not Phœbe," replied the woman. "I only want to know the way to the Sea View hotel."

He listened to her voice intently, and then it seemed to come to him that it was not his wife. The voice was another's. But might it not have changed in all those years? And the face—surely it was Phœbe's.

"Wait a moment. Don't leave me," he appealed. "Don't you remember? You left me long ago, but now you have come back to make me happy. Look at me and come into the light. Don't leave me again? I couldn't stand it."

He took the woman by the wrist and stood before her in the light. As she drew herself away from him Grosvenor told her in a whisper to hurry away.

"She is not your wife," said Grosvenor to the man kindly. "She is a woman at the hotel.

The man did not speak. He pressed his hand in a despairing way and stumbled blindly into the house. And as Grosvenor went back to the hotel to see Grace Boardman he reflected that if she had thrown him over he would be very unhappy, and yet there were men who suffered much more than he.

It had been very dull at the Sea View hotel for several days, but when Grace Boardman got up this driving party another young woman immediately took it upon herself to get up a sailing party for Monomoy point.

"We are going over this evening, starting just as soon as we can after tea," she said to Grosvenor as he stumbled upon her in the hall, "and we shall come home by moonlight. It will be awfully jolly. Will you come?"

Grosvenor was taken rather by surprise. He "didn't know really" at first, and then he said that he would like to very much, and was it to be a very large party?

"Everybody who went driving today is going. And, Mr. Grosvenor, where have you been hiding all day? We wanted you so much for the driving party. We went to South Dennis and Dennis Center and Dennisport and had no end of a jolly time."

Grosvenor had been boating at a very early hour in the morning, he explained, and had not got back until the afternoon. He had been "awfully sorry, you know, to miss the day's fun," and he would be delighted to take the sail.

And so it happened that when Grace Boardman went skipping down the landing steps and jumped on the deck of Captain Baker's lighter she found herself face to face with a tall young man, who colored slightly and said in a very formal way, "How're you?"

And she said she was very well and started to move away. But he remarked that it was a glorious evening, and she said she thought so, too, and in some way they managed to get together in the bow of the boat, and the rest of the people, seeing how matters stood, looked at one another and smiled and left them to themselves.

The boat rocked about now and then, rubbing against the pier, until at last a chubby man under the direction of Captain Baker let go the ropes, and the lighter glided away. Grosvenor looked up at the huge swelling sail above him and then down into the water. He talked in a rather stupid way to Grace Boardman, who to cover her embarrassment was telling him of the driving party that day and saying in the most innocent way that she was very sorry he had not been around to go too.

"I suppose," he said presently in a tentative manner, "that I oughtn't to be here."

"Why?" she asked innocently. He looked at her quickly, but she dropped her eyes. "Why?" she repeated, looking up at him shyly.

"You know very well," he replied, turning slightly away from her and looking down into the foaming water. "I don't see why we should go all over it again." He paused in a hesitating way, but she said nothing, and he continued: "I don't know though. Perhaps it would be better, and perhaps I could make you understand me better and see clearer exactly how it is. In the first place, I think I should apologize to you for the way I acted last night. Not that I believe I didn't mean what I said at the time—but my way of saying it. I was altogether too hasty and went away from you in a foolishly schoolboy manner, and I am sure you will tell me you didn't mind that."

He waited for her to speak, but she only turned away from him, and he could not get a glimpse of her face.

"Perhaps I am making a great deal of trifles," he continued, "and perhaps last night I scarcely knew what I was doing, but I have thought it all over since then, and now I am going to put it all before you in the best way I can, and if you think the same as you did last night I will go away and never trouble you with it again.

"I don't see," said the girl, "why you trouble me with it now."

"I am very sorry if it is a trouble to you," said he.

Back in the stern of the boat the people were making a great deal of noise. Some of them were singing, and a Yale man was picking out an accompaniment on his banjo. Grosvenor listened to their singing with a wild unrest in his heart, and he laughed cynically at their light heartedness and wondered why they were so happy and careless. Then the singing stopped, and the Yale man played a waltz on his banjo, and Grosvenor heard the tones throb in his brain. And Grace Boardman clasped her hands and looked at him with a glance that made him hope.

"You remember it?" he whispered.

"It's the 'Daughter of Love,' isn't it?" she replied indifferently.

"Yes," he said. "They played it the first time I ever saw you—the night I met you. Let me tell you about it."

"About what?"

"This is the story of a man who fell in love," began Grosvenor in a charmingly impersonal way. "It was at a dance, and he met a very pretty girl, who impressed him as being a very sweet girl as well as a clever girl. She had wonderful large blue eyes and beautiful fair skin and hair like threads of gold. That night he waltzed with her and fell in love with her. She gave him a rose—a red rose, one of a cluster that had been near her heart. He took it and held the stem in his mouth, and alone on the piazza, I think, he kissed it, which was a very sentimental thing to do and very silly. And he carried it home that night, and while driving with the sky above him he carried it in his mouth, and something told him he loved her. And in that man's room at college there hangs on the wall a rose that was once red and fragrant, but is now faded and crumbling."

Grace Boardman laughed. "It's very pretty," she said, "all that."

Grosvenor could not help feeling pained at her sarcastic tone, but he looked at her, and something told him she was not so much amused at what might seem a foolish sentimentality as he thought at first.

"That," he said, "was the beginning. If I hadn't told you last night what followed, I should tell you again. After I left you, and you sent me away as you did, I felt very miserable. And I suppose you were very angry with me, were you not?"

"Yes, I was angry with you."

"I suppose I shouldn't have said what I did."

"It wasn't so much that."

"I took you by surprise?"

"Yes, and everybody was looking, and—I didn't know exactly what to say."

Grosvenor looked back and saw that the sail, swelling far out, shut them off altogether from the people in the stern. They were so much occupied that they did not know or care what was going on forward.

"Then there is no reason why we shouldn't have it out now," said Grosvenor in a businesslike tone. "I suppose I should not go over all I did last night—about our families knowing one another so well, and all that, and what I could give you and do for you if we were married. But I love you very much, so much that if you tell me to go away again I think—I will go, for then I should know that you didn't care at all for me, and that I troubled you a great deal, and you didn't care to have me around. Now, I wish you would tell me once for all, did you mean everything you said last night?"

"Dear old Monomoy!" she said.

"Yes," she answered, ever so faintly.

"Then I will do as you want me to. I will go away in the morning."

And then as a realization of this came over Grace Boardman the prediction of Miss Eunice flashed into her mind, and she saw that the dear old lady had been right and saw very clearly that if Grosvenor left her life would scarcely be worth living, and she knew she loved him as much as he did her.

"It will be very hard for me, I know," Grosvenor was saying, "but I will do it if you say so."

"I think," said the girl, turning her face toward him at that moment, "that I meant it was too soon then. I have been doing a great deal of thinking since I saw you last night, and perhaps —you—you had better stay."

And none in the stern of the boat knew that Grosvenor held Grace Boardman's hand clasped in his all of the way over to Monomoy point.

"It was here," he said, telling her of his midnight row, "that I had a dream, and I thought I saw you walking toward me in a great light, and you were smiling and had your hands outstretched, and I awoke and found the sun rising back of Monomoy, and it was then I decided to come back and see you again."

And the girl looked over toward the strip of land which seemed like a dark shadow in the moonlight, and she clasped Grosvenor's hand very tightly.

"Dear old Monomoy!" she said.—

A REMARKABLE CURE

MIDDLEBUSH, Somerset Co., N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For the past forty years I have been afflicted with bleeding piles. I suffered constant pain in the lower part of my body, but when I had an operation of the bowels the pain was perfectly terrible, and was most always attended with the loss of a large quantity of blood. My condition was complicated with prolapse of the rectum, which at first only made its appearance when I had a movement of the bowels, but at length the parts became so weakened that the protrusion took place while walking or stooping, or after the slightest exertion, and sometimes even while I was at rest. Whenever this happened it gave rise to the most agonizing pain, and felt as though something was pulling the life right out of me. In fact only those similarly situated can imagine the suffering and distress which I had to endure from day to day, and which made my life a terrible burden. Hearing of Dr. Lighthill's wonderful success in the cure of difficult chronic diseases, I placed myself under his care, and now I am proud and happy to say that, marvelous as it may seem, he effected a complete and radical cure in my case in every respect, and he performed this cure without any painful operation or preventing me from work. Since this terrible disease has been removed by Dr. Lighthill's skill I feel new life, and for the first time in forty years I feel once more what it is to be without daily pain, discomfort and distress. I am not a wealthy man, but no amount of money would tempt me to be put back in my former condition.

I make this public statement, not only from a deep and everlasting sense of gratitude to Dr. Lighthill, but also as a simple Christian duty to let the afflicted know where they can find a physician whose skill cannot be surpassed, and in whom implicit confidence can be placed.

H. VROOM.

A LOCAL ENDORSEMENT.

No. 190 Somerset st., Plainfield, N. J.

To the Residents of Plainfield, N. J.

Mr. H. Vroom, whose statement appears above, is a brother-in-law of mine. I personally know of his case and his suffering and also know the happy fact that to the surprise of himself and his friends, Dr. Lighthill effected a radical and permanent cure. His statement is true in every respect and does not say half enough in praise of Dr. Lighthill. Anyone who wishes this statement verified is at liberty to come and see me personally.

JOHN C. KENNEY.

Dr. Lighthill

Formerly of Trenton, the well-known expert in Chronic Diseases, can be consulted daily (except Thursdays) on all OBSTINATE AND COMPLICATED diseases of the human system of whatever name and nature, at his office and residence,

LABOR'S BIG GATHERING

Eight-Hour Demonstration in London Yesterday.

Thousands of Workingmen Behind Numerous Bands March to the Park, Where Speeches from a Dozen Platforms Were Listened To—Numerous Socialist Orators Present.

LONDON, May 7.—English workingmen as usual made their eight-hour demonstration this year on the first Sunday after May Day. Signs of the coming demonstration were evident all morning throughout the east end and other laboring districts of the south of London.

The workingmen were gathering from 8 o'clock at the appointed places of meeting in Poplar, Bow, Deptford, Woolwich, Hackney and Battersea. There they were met by the musicians and banner bearers and the beribboned organizers from the trades council.

Each division was drawn up in line with a full brass band at the head and was led away at 10 or 11 o'clock to the Thames embankment.

Great Gathering of Workingmen.

By noon the embankment was densely packed from Blackfriars bridge to Charing Cross with workingmen of all trades and conditions, with here and there a vehicle carrying leaders and speakers with hundreds of banners, flags and transparencies waving overhead.

At 12:45 the many bands started as many different tunes, and 15 minutes later the head of the procession moved off toward Hyde park. The Gasworkers' General League of Laborers led. Following them came the dockers, then the builders, the riverside men, the railway men, the printers, masons and tailors.

Thousands in Line.

Behind the tailors marched thousands of others—enough, in fact, to occupy three hours in passing Trafalgar square. The route from the square lay through Pall Mall and Piccadilly.

At the park 12 platforms had been erected in a great semi-circle.

All the meetings passed the resolution in favor of the eight-hour day. They also resolved that the workingmen could free themselves economically and socially only after getting control of the political machinery now in the hands of the capitalist class. Jon Burns and Kier Hardie, labor members of parliament, spoke at length, each congratulating his audience upon the progress of the eight-hour movement in the last year.

Numerous Socialist Speakers.

The socialist speakers were more numerous and conspicuous than in any preceding year. They advised the workingmen to attack conservatives and liberals alike and try to prevent the parties from passing further legislation before both agreed to place in the foreground proposals to better the condition of the laboring class.

Enormous crowds watched the procession pass to and from the park. There was no disorder.

Meetings in Other Cities.

In Dublin the workingmen's meeting in Phœnix park passed the familiar eight-hour resolution besides calling for manhood suffrage and the payment of members of parliament.

The workingmen's meeting in Glasgow, after adopting the eight-hour resolution, demanded the abolition of the house of lords and the nationalization of the railways.

In other large towns of the United Kingdom resolutions of a similar tenor were approved by the working people.

SIX RESCUED DEAD.

BERLIN, May 7.—A dispatch from Vienna says that six of the Lugloch tourists have been taken out dead.

The youngest of the party, a schoolboy, is reported to have been rescued alive.

Several Houses Blown Down.

HUNTINGTON, W. Va., May 7.—A destructive wind and thunderstorm, accompanied by a heavy downpour of rain passed over the region of Ohio, Kentucky and West Virginia Sunday night. At least 15 houses were unroofed or blown down. At Central City, two miles below here, the Ohio river railroad shops and round-house were completely demolished and J. H. Burkhart, a man at work on the former was badly hurt. Engines and coaches were damaged.

Death of a Prominent Democrat.

HARTFORD, Conn., May 7.—Frederick Spencer Brown, for sixteen years collector of town and city taxes, is dead, aged seventy-two years. He leaves a wife and one daughter. Mr. Brown was born in East Hartford, and previous to 1878 was in the tobacco business here. He was a prominent Democratic politician, whose counsels were widely sought in the state.

Carload of Provisions for Coxeyites.

SPRINGFIELD, Mo., May 7.—Col. John O'Day, who is in sympathy with the Coxey movement, has contributed 5,000 pounds of flour to the carload of provisions which will be shipped from here to Washington this week. Four others have given 1,000 pounds. The Republic Canning factory has contributed a large amount of canned tomatoes.

BLIND INSTITUTE CRUELTIES.

BUFFALO, N. Y., May 7.—Alfred Woods, a pupil at the Batavia state institution for the blind, where for nearly a year he says he has suffered terribly under Supt. Place, was brought home by his father and tells a pitiful story of his treatment. He had written his parents a number of times but the letters were destroyed. Finally one was smuggled out by an attendant and upon its receipt Mr. Woods at once started to his son's assistance. Young Woods says:

"It was over a month ago that I was put in the den for having tobacco. Some of us boys were up-stairs and several had tobacco. I had some, too. A teacher told Place. He came up and ordered me into the den for a week. When that was up he said 'Go in for another week.' The den is a place in the corner of the reception room. A big desk is pushed into the corner, leaving just room enough behind to stand up. To get in we have to squirm under the desk. It is a horrible place. During the two weeks I had to stay in the den all the time when I was not working or in bed. When we are slow in going under the desk we are lashed.

"Some weeks ago I and Andrew Caskinett, Alexander Clute, Daniel Lewis and Ovid Comfort were walking in the grounds. I had been ordered out there from the den. All of a sudden we heard somebody near us swishing a whip. We thought that it was some of the village boys, who tease us and trip us up, and cried as the blind do 'Hello, there.' There was no answer, and we threw stones in the direction of the sound. I threw first. Then Place ran at us with a whip and began whipping us. 'Run into the house,' he yelled. We all said: 'We can't run because we are blind and there are trees here.' 'I'll make you run,' he yelled, and lashed us harder than ever. We scattered, all scared to death. I ran into a tree and cut my lip open. I fell down, and he picked me up and said, 'Run now.' I would not run if I was killed, and told him so. Then he struck me with a stick over the nose, and I did not know any more for a long time, except that I was all blood."

The livid scar on the boy's nose bore witness to the truth of his story. Woods also told how Place whipped a negro named Johnson until the blood flowed.

BISMARCK IN PRIVATE LIFE.

He Wants No Public Position But Likes To Talk.

LONDON, May 7.—The Times' correspondent at Berlin says that Prince Bismarck, in his speech to the delegation representing the military clubs of southern Holstein, which presented him with an address of sympathy at Friedrichsruhe on Wednesday, declared that he had no ambition to resume power, as his enemies persisted in insinuating.

"I remained in office," he went on, "a decade longer than I wished simply from a sense of duty, I could not bequeath to any one my experience or the confidence that I enjoyed at home and abroad, and my sense of honor bade me stay in spite of the unpleasantness of the task. I never was desirous of power, and I have little taste for the rank and titles with which I have been surfeited. I do not know what in the world should incite me to place myself again in the shackles.

"Many a minister has been in the same position. Metternich was shelved in a much more sudden and unpleasant manner than I was, yet he was cheerful and contented. I beg you to believe that I am grateful that heaven has granted to me a period of contemplative rest, but that is no reason why I should abstain from comment on subjects with which I have had to deal officially."

Simpson Still Sick.

WASHINGTON, May 7.—Representative Jerry Simpson's mail is very heavy at the present time. He receives on an average 800 letters a day. Many of these letters contain expressions of the representative's popularity. He receives scores of letters from strangers, who write that they have heard of his illness and express the hope that he may speedily recover. The patent medicine men deluge him with circulars and communications setting forth the virtues of their respective nostrums. Meanwhile Mr. Simpson's condition remains unchanged. He is not improving, nor is he growing worse, but his friends do not conceal their fear that his present illness may be prolonged indefinitely. He is greatly interested in the doings of congress, notwithstanding his enfeebled condition, and his populist colleagues in the house and senate visit him daily, keeping him fully acquainted with all that is transpiring in both branches.

Watterson Opposes Breckinridge.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., May 7.—The Courier-Journal, which has heretofore maintained a position of strict neutrality regarding the case of Congressman W. C. P. Breckinridge since the beginning of the Pollard scandal, now breaks silence in an editorial declaring that Mr. Breckinridge should be beaten for renomination for the good of the democratic party.

TALK WITH DA GAMA

Blames the United States for Peixoto's Victory.

Believes, However, That it Will Not Benefit Our Trade With Brazil in the End—Says That the Drama is Not Yet Ended—His Wounded Arm Giving Him Much Pain.

NEW YORK, May 7.—A special cablegram from Montevideo says:

Admiral Saldanha da Gama, whose recent surrender of the revolutionary fleet in the harbor of Rio Janeiro, Brazil, put an end to hostilities in that vicinity, was in a cheerful frame of mind, notwithstanding his wounds, when seen by a correspondent. The wounds in his neck and thigh have healed, but his right arm remains in a serious condition. The admiral is obliged to carry it in a sling, and splinters from the shattered bone are working out through the flesh. He suffers much from this injury, although it is believed his complete recovery is assured.

He is far from despondent and is surrounded by his officers and cadets, who live as though they were in barracks.

Denounces Cleveland and Benham.

Admiral da Gama bitterly denounces President Cleveland and Rear-Admiral Benham for their interference in Brazilian affairs while the opposing forces were confronting each other in Rio Janeiro harbor, and it is to the action taken by them that he attributes President Peixoto's triumph at that point.

He declares that had it not been for the effect produced by the attitude of the United States the revolutionists would not have yielded to the national forces. Whatever commercial advantages the United States won by the outcome of affairs at Rio, the admiral believes, will be only temporary.

Believes We Will Lose in the End.

He predicts that there will be a reaction of sentiment before long even among that class of Brazilians which now feels cordially toward the United States, and when that change comes it will counteract, he asserts, any benefits which may have accrued to the northern republic while the friendly feeling continued.

The admiral declares that he never had the least fear of the Nichtheroy's dynamite gun, which he regarded as a failure. He was convinced, he said, that he had nothing to fear from this weapon after he had heard of the tests on the voyage from New York to South America.

Brazilian Drama Not Yet Finished.

As to his own future the admiral is reticent, refusing to indicate his personal plans beyond declaring that the Brazilian drama is not yet finished.

President Peixoto's agents in Buenos Ayres are buying small arms in considerable quantities and have purchased five tons of powder. The Brazilian river fleet in the upper Uraguay is to be immediately strengthened.

Mello Still Talking War.

BUENOS AYRES, May 7.—Admiral Mello said in an interview on Friday that the Brazilian revolution would be prolonged probably on land. He believed that President Peixoto would defer the inauguration of Dr. Moraes, the president-elect, on the ground that the country was still too much disturbed to bear a change of the executive.

EXPENSIVE FOR UNCLE SAM.

Coxey Bands in the Northwest Keeping U. S. Marshals Busy.

WASHINGTON, May 7.—The Coxey movement in the northwest is putting the government to heavy expense. The treasury department has submitted to the house an estimate of a prospective deficiency of $50,000 for fees and expenses of United States marshals. Attorney General Olney says at present an extraordinary kind of expense arises from bands of restless men in various sections of the country seizing upon property in the custody of the United States courts. Authorized expenses are already going on in Washington state at the rate of $1,000 per day. An indefinite amount of expense has been incurred and is growing in Montana and other expenses may be expected.

Death of Gen. Ferron.

PARIS, May 7.—Gen. Ferron is dead of injuries received when he was thrown from his horse at a review in Lyons.

Theophile Adrien Ferron was born in 1880. He served in the Crimea, in Algeria, and in the Franco-Prussian war. He became minister of war under Premier Rouvier in 1887, serving six months. He wrote several works on military subjects. He was made a grand officer of the Legion of Honor in 1887.

Charged With Manslaughter.

UTICA, N. Y., May 7.—James Dickinson, brakeman, whose negligence, it is claimed, helped to cause the Rome, Waterton and Ogdensburg wreck at Theresa recently, when Engineer Williams was killed, has been arrested. The crime charged is manslaughter, second degree. It is understood that a warrant is out for Baggageman Van Slyke on a similar charge.

Unique Action.

WASHINGTON, May 7.—Capt. J. W. Jacobs, assistant quartermaster, who was nominated for brevet for gallant and meritorious services against Indians and who was not confirmed by the senate along with the other officers recently named for brevet rank, recently wrote to the war department saying that he did not want that nominal honor and requesting that his name be taken from the list. The nomination was sent in, however, and it is said that Capt. Jacobs wrote to a senator telling him he would decline the office if confirmed. His reasons for this unique action are not known.

KELLY'S NAVAL FLEET

It Will Consist of 150 Flat-Bottom Boats.

The Commonweal Navy Yard Busy Constructing the Craft—One Mill Will Run All Night Getting Out the Lumber—Movements of the Several Bands of Itinerants.

DES MOINES, Ia., May 7.—Commodore Kelly has established his navy yard at the junction of the Des Moines and Raccoon rivers. Fifty of the 150 boats required to transport the army are ready, and the remainder will be completed within a few hours, so that a start can be made Tuesday morning. The cost of the material for the boats was guaranteed by wealthy citizens. It will amount to $1,000. A planing-mill ran all night cutting the lumber into shape.

Three hundred of Kelly's men and a score of local carpenters put the boats together, calked and pitched them.

General Master-Workman Sovereign, of the Knights of Labor, officiated as shipbuilder, and General Weaver mixed freely with the men, giving advice.

Fifteen thousand people visited the ship yards Sunday afternoon. General Kelly conducted a meeting in an adjoining grove, at which speeches were made by various members of the army and the two women who have accompanied it, Mrs. Harper and Miss Hooten.

The collections amounted to $300.

COXEY AND BROWNE SCORED.

Hugh O'Donnell's Opinion of the Commonweal and Its Leaders.

WASHINGTON, May 7.—Hugh O'Donnell, the famous leader of the Homestead strike, accompanied Coxey's army on its march from Massillon to Washington as a newspaper correspondent. His opinions of the commonweal and its managers are by no means complimentary.

"I have," he said, "only two sentiments in regard to the movement. One is of pity for the poor deluded devils who have been induced to join in it, and the other of contempt for Browne and Coxey, the two men who have led them into the folly, for it is the greatest piece of folly ever perpetrated in this country.

"In the first place it is a fool's errand to expect congress to be influenced in this way, and, in the second place, the men who are leading this movement are neither of them sincere in the promises they hold out to their followers, or the position they assume before the public. Coxey is a horse jockey and Browne is a mountebank of the worst description. Coxey is not the sort of a man to lead in any movement.

"Any plan that Coxey would mix up in would mean Coxey first and everyone else afterward. All that Coxey stands for is Coxey, and all that Browne stands for is Browne."

WANT NO OUTSIDE PREACHERS.

Coxeyites Must Listen to Browne's Reincarnation Talk.

WASHINGTON, May 7.—The commonwealers spent a quiet Sunday. Carl Browne delivered a reincarnation sermon to the crowd during the day; the second time, he claimed, was by request. Coxey also spoke, but only on non-interest bearing bonds and good roads. Several ministers made application to hold religious services in the camp, but were refused by Browne, who wanted nothing but reincarnation preached. There are not more than one hundred men left in camp of the crowd that came over the mountains. Nearly all the old men have become disgusted and have taken their departure.

Galvin's Army at Duquesne.

HOMESTEAD, Pa., Col., May 7.—Col. Galvin's army was quartered last night at Duquesne in a dancing pavilion in a beautiful grove, Galvin and his officers accepting the hospitality of the proprietor of the St. James hotel for bed and breakfast. Homestead's parting contribution to the army was two large wagon loads of provisions. The army gained 20 recruits here.

Deposed for Drunkenness.

NORTH PLATTE, Neb., May 7.—The Colorado industrial army is still camped here and so far has shown no disposition to continue the march. Hudson, who succeeded Grayson in command of the division, has been deposed by his men on account of drunkenness. The Union Pacific officials maintain that they will not furnish transportation.

Fitz's Industrial Brigade.

ELIZABETH, N. J., May 7.—Fitzgerald's industrial delegation were the guests of the local socialistic labor party last night. They will tramp to Plainfield to-day and then to Metuchen and New Brunswick.

COAL FAMINE IN THE WEST.

Mills and Factories Closing Down and Others Will Follow.

ALTON, Ill., May 7.—The coal famine is here. The supply from Clyde & Gillespie has been cut off and the entire plant of the Illinois Glass company closed down. The mills and other factories will do likewise.

OTTAWA, Ill., May 7.—On account of lack of coal the New Jerusalem and Crescent Paper mills, employing 400 men have shut down and other factories will follow. The supply of coal is very small and as none can be procured from outside points the little city will be without a pound of coal within a few days.

Miss Moody to Wed.

EAST NORTHFIELD, Mass., May 7.—Mr. and Mrs. Dwight L. Moody have issued invitations for the marriage of their daughter, Miss Emma Reynolds Moody, to Arthur Percy Fitts, who holds a responsible position at the Chicago Training School for Christian Workers. The ceremony will take place in the North Congregational church Wednesday evening, May 16.

Hail Storm at Fonda, N. Y.

FONDA, N. Y., May 7.—A severe hail storm visited this locality Sunday afternoon. The hail stones were unusually large. There was a heavy fall of rain and much thunder and lightning. It is not thought fruit trees are far enough advanced to be injured to any great extent by the storm.

Midwinter Fair a Financial Success.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 7.—The experts' report just submitted shows that the midwinter fair is a complete financial success.

FOUR BRIGHT PROPHECIES.

Missionary McCabe Says Great Reforms Will Soon Occur.

BUFFALO, May 7.—"We will have no more wars in this country; strikes between capital and labor will be unheard of; the rum traffic will be supressed, and one million souls will be converted to Jesus Christ during the next year through the Methodist church."

These four prophesies were made by Chaplain McCabe, missionary secretary of the Methodist Episcopal church, at the final session of the Itinerants' club held at Music hall last evening.

Chaplain McCabe is considered to be one of the most fluent and intelligent speakers in the cause of Methodism in this country. During his address the chaplain took occasion to score the newspapers as advocates of intemperance.

"How treasonable the press are," he exclaimed. "Why don't they advocate the Coxeyites going to the polls and putting down the rum traffic instead of capital. The way to abolish poverty is to stop drinking whiskey. The Lord can't make you rich unless you stop doing these things. It is an anomaly in Israel to have a daily paper tell the truth once in a while.

Chicago is my country seat. Why didn't they ask me to come out on the lake front last summer and preach to these laboring men. The Gospel of Jesus Christ will settle all the labor troubles in this country. There will be no buying and selling of votes."

ALL JUDGES SENT TO JAIL.

Usually Desirable Office Goes a Begging in St. Clair County, Mo.

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo., May 7.—The three judges of the county court of St. Clair county have sent their resignations to Governor Stone. This would not be an important event were it not for the fact that an election or appointment as county judge in St. Clair means imprisonment in jail.

For more than ten years the county court of St. Clair has resisted the process of the federal courts in the matter of making a levy to pay interest on a railroad debt contracted about twenty years ago. The debt and interest now amount to $1,000,000, in round numbers, or about one-third of the assessed valuation of the county.

The people are unanimous in resisting any recognition or the debt. County judge after county judge has been sentenced to jail, and neither side shows the least disposition to yield. When the new judges are appointed they, too, will go to jail.

WIND, RAIN, LIGHTNING.

Considerable Damage Caused By Storm in the Wyoming Valley.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., May 7.—A severe wind and rain storm, accompanied by thunder and lightning, swept over the Wyoming valley Sunday afternoon. The rain came down for several hours in torrents, inundating cellars and flooding many of the streets, causing considerable damage. At Forty Fort, Simpson and Watkins massive coal breakers were badly damaged by the terrific wind, while the Sturmersville breaker, near Pittston, was also injured to a great extent. A new house at Wyoming, six miles from here, was blown down.

The damage to farm houses, barns and other buildings in the country districts is very great.

From late reports it appears that the storm will entail a loss of over $100,000 in this county.

ITALIAN EMIGRATION.

Minister Blanc Says Mexico and the United States Are Good Places.

ROME, May 7.—In his statement to the chamber of Deputies Saturday concerning emigration to America Baron Blanc, minister of foreign affairs, said that Mexico, as well as the United States, would assist Italian immigrants to join the colonizing centres, with a view to protecting them from speculators. He denied Deputy Pinchia's assertion that the massacre of Italians at New Orleans almost resulted in the sending of Italian warships to the American coast. He expressed the belief that Italian emigrants would find it especially advantageous to settle in the southern states, where the climate and other conditions would be very favorable to their undertakings and habits.

GREECE AGAIN SHAKEN.

ATHENS, May 7.—A severe earthquake was felt at 5 o'clock Sunday morning in Thebes, Livadia and Atalanta. A violent trembling was felt in Northern Euboea.

The threatening predictions made last Wednesday by Prof. Falb, in Vienna, caused the greatest uneasiness here. On Friday and Saturday nights many Athenians slept in cabs and railway carriages. Others went to the country or went on cruises along the ocean.

Situation in the Coke Regions.

UNIONTOWN, Pa., May 7.—The Sunday mass meeting of strikers in Mountain View park was largely attended. Michael Barrett, John Nugent and others urged the men to stand out together and compel the operators to recognize the organization as well as pay the 90 cent. scale rate. Sheriff Wilhelm is preparing to go to Moyer and others of Rainey's plants to disperse mobs in accordance with the injunction granted by the United States courts. Forty evictions will take place at Oliver to-day. Preparations are under way to start a number of coke works. When they do trouble will follow.

To Honor American Naval Officers.

LONDON, May 7.—The United States cruiser Chicago is expected to arrive at Gravesend to-morrow. Lord Brassey, Earl Spencer and the other heads of the admiralty, together with several eminent naval and military officers, are arranging to give the flagship's officers a warm welcome. They intend to honor Admiral Erben and Captain Mahan with a public banquet in London.

Great Change at Coney Island.

NEW YORK, May 7.—Brooklyn has assumed control of Coney Island and Gravesend, and good order prevailed at New York's most popular summer resort Sunday. The dives were closed and only "sacred" concerts were heard. Manhattan Beach was almost wholly deserted and there was a falling off in the number of visitors to the lower end of the island.

Will Defy the Mine Strikers.

DENVER, May 7.—It is reported that the heavy mine managers are planning to open Cripple Creek mines at an early day and defy the strikers who demand that eight hours shall constitute a day's work. Many guards will be employed.

THE WEEK IN CONGRESS

Senate Considering the Chinese Treaty To-day.

Tariff Amendments to Be Reported To-morrow—Republicans May Then Begin a Series of Mild Filibustering—Appropriation Bill the Principal Work Before the House.

WASHINGTON, May 7.—Immediately after the routine business to-day the Senate will go into executive session to discuss the Chinese treaty. The finance committee will meet to-morrow morning and, after giving a formal consideration to the tariff amendments, will report them favorably.

The course of debate after Tuesday is somewhat problematical. Tuesday Mr. Hoar, of Massachusetts, will speak on the pending tariff bill and it is not unlikely that Mr. Allrich will address the senate on the revenue features of the measure. Last week the clause fixing the date when the bill shall take effect was passed over, and when Saturday came the discussion was ostensibly over the second senate committee amendment found in lines 6 and 7 of the opening paragraph, which adds to the house provision that there shall be collected on all articles imported from foreign countries the words 'or withdrawn for consumption," the rates of duty, etc.

Probable Policy of the Minority.

Much of the debate of the week following the introduction of the amendments will be of an impromptu character, concerning the changes made, and it will doubtless be the policy of the minority to draw out their opponents by caustic questions and embroil them in colloquies as to why and how the numerous amendments came to be made. Mr. Harris, if the remarks he has dropped are correctly interpreted, will insist upon longer sessions, and if this course is pursued the republicans will meet it with such means as happen to come to hand. They will debate the bill as at present, until 5 o'clock, but after that hour will protest against the further discussion of the measure for the day.

May Inaugurate Filibustering.

It is not among the impossible conditions that if Mr. Harris becomes persistent in his desire for an immediate prolongation of the daily debate a mild system of filibustering may be inaugurated by the minority.

The week will, no doubt, force to the front the line of policy to be pursued by both sides, for the Democrats, confident of their ability now to ultimately pass the bill, will assume the aggressive from this time on.

Programme in the House.

Appropriation bills will continue to engage the attention of the house until the calendar has been cleared of measures of that character. There are the naval, agricultural and Indian bills in sight for this week, and the legislative, executive and judicial and general deficiency yet in store with the committee on appropriations to be reported. The first of the two last named bills will be placed on the calendar probably the first of next week, but the deficiency bill is not expected before the end of the month.

LOSS $245,000; NO INSURANCE.

The Great Whitely Reaper and Mower Works Burned.

MUNCIE, Ind., May 7.—The William N. Whitely Reaper and Mower works, the largest manufacturing establishment in eastern Indiana, which was moved from Springfield, O., two years ago, have been destroyed by fire. The loss is estimated at $245,000, with no insurance. Two thousand machines were ready for shipment and over 15,000 were partly completed. The works were insured until a short time ago, but the rate was so high that it was dropped. The greatest loss to Mr. Whitely is in the patterns, which were the work of a life time. He recently won suits for infringement of patents for $150,000, and has other suits pending which he thinks will net him $650,000 more.

La Champagne Hard Ashore.

NEW YORK, May 7.—The French line steamer La Champagne lies hard and fast upon the beach close, under the big guns of Fort Hamilton within 100 yards of the shore, and there she is likely to stay until the cargo is taken out, for she grounded at high water while going at a good rate of speed. The accident occurred during a dense fog. Work of lightening the vessel was begun at once.

Fierce Fifteen-Round Mill.

NEW YORK, May 7.—"Chappy" James, an ex-jockey, and George Hall, a stable boy, fought a desperate fifteen-round mill in a stable near Far Rockaway early Sunday morning with skin-tight gloves. The fight was declared a draw, James' friends, seeing that their boy could not last more than another round, jumped into the ring and caused the decision as stated. The boys weighed ninety-six pounds each. Both were badly battered and bruised.

Severe Storm at Poughkeepsie.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., May 7.—A very fierce wind and rain storm, accompanied by sharp lightning, passed over this section Sunday afternoon. About 40 feet of the roof of the storehouse of the Phœnix Horseshoe works was taken off and carried over the railroad track; trees were blown down in different parts of the city, and the electric light service was disarranged.

Now Mrs. Burke Disappears.

NEW YORK, May 7.—Following the sudden disappearance of Frank Burke, the much wanting prosecuting witness in the Meyer poisoning case, comes the discovery that Mrs. Burke, who is known also as Madame Sanger, has also made herself scarce.

Charged With Immorality.

PARIS, May 7.—The charge lodged against Count Elie of Talleyrand-Perigord, who was arrested at the instance of Max Lebaudy, is immorality. It is believed that he will be released on bail soon.

Italy Will Coin More Silver.

ROME, May 7.—In view of the previous withdrawal of fractional coins, Italy will mint 4,000,000 lire in silver above the usual amount in 1894, and 5,000,000 lire above the usual amount in 1895.

FOR THE relief and cure of a cold in the head there is more potency in Ely's Cream Balm than in anything else it is possible to prescribe. This preparation has for years past been making a brilliant success as a remedy for cold in the head, catarrh and hay fever. Used in the initial stages of these complaints Cream Balm prevents any serious development of the symptoms, while almost numberless cases are on record of radical cures of chronic catarrh and hay fever after all other treatments have proved no avail.

INDUSTRIAL ARMY IN PLAINFIELD.

FITZGERALD'S BOSTON DELEGATION GREETS LOCAL SOCIALISTS.

Fitzgerald's detachment of so-called Coxeyites arrived in Plainfield at 3 this afternoon on their way from Boston to Washington.

The men present a fair appearance. They do not look like knights of the road, but resemble more a body of workmen in hard luck. They look tired and wornout, having walked from Elizabeth since 9 this morning, good progress for 57 men in their condition.

The men deny that they are affiliated in anyway with Coxey's Army, and persist in calling themselves a delegation. Michael D. Fitzgerald, who leads the movements of the "delegates" is commonly called "general" by courtesy, but he disdains the title, and says he is plain M. D. Fitzgerald.

They were well satisfied with their reception in Elizabeth which they reached at noon yesterday after walking from Newark. They went quietly through East Broad street to the headquarters of the Elizabeth Socialists, corner of Sixth and East Jersey streets, where they were received by Joseph Keim, the recent Socialistic candidate for Governor, and a number of local Socialists.

After eating the dinner prepared for them the men walked to Knoll's Hall, in Fifth street, in which about one hundred curiosity seekers had gathered, and listened to Socialistic hagangue from Swift and Keim.

A collection was taken up and a number of copies sold of a poem composed by Fitzgerald, in which he extols the red flag as their banner of liberty. A second meeting of a like character was held in the evening, after which the men bunked for the night in an unoccupied building near by, Fitzgerald and Swift putting up at an Elizabeth hotel.

They carried lunches presented by Elizabeth Socialists with them on their march, eating just before they reached Garwood at 12:20. At 2:15 they enjoyed a rest in Fanwood and then pushed on to Plainfield.

Plainfield was entered by way of East Fifth street, a number of pedestrians, cyclers and amateur photographers accompanying them. They marched down Watchung avenue to North, to Park, to Front street and thence to Grant avenue. They made no disturbance but went quietly along with five American flags flying.

To a Press reporter Leader Fitzgerald said that his crowd must not be confounded with Coxey's Army. They were honest and industrious New England workmen sent on to Washington as delegates to plead with the President. Each one, he said, represented 10,000 workingmen. He had refused to let a number of Elizabeth tramps join his detachment.

The Socialists headquarters at the corner of Grant avenue and Second street will be occupied this evening. Fitzgerald and Morrison Swift will speak in the evening and the "army" will sleep there after the mass meeting. Tomorrow they will go to Metuchen and New Brunswick.

DETAILS OF THE MURDER.

Mrs. Eden L Boice, sister of the late S. R. Randolph, has received a copy of The Journal from Shoshone, Idaho, giving further particulars of the murder of her brother, S. R. Randolph. The report is as follows:

News has been received by the passengers on the Branch train of a most brutal murder which happened about 10 miles from Bellevue on Tuesday evening, April 17. S. R. Randolph, an old man, who lived on a ranch by himself, was found Wednesday morning by S. A. Stolsworth, a tenant who lived on the ranch with his family, lying in bed dead with his head beaten in with the butt end of an axe. An alarm was given to a neighbor who went to Bellevue for the coroner and sheriff.

The coroner's inquest was completed Wednesday evening at the farm, the jury returning a verdict that the deceased met his death by the hand of persons unknown.

Several of the jurors strongly suspected Stolsworth and wife, and, as a consequence, the sheriff placed the latter under arrest.

The evidence shows that the bloody axe handle was washed during the time intervening between the departure of the neighbor for the county officials and his return; also other minor circumstances.

The cabin presented a most horrible sight. The bed, floor and walls were literally covered with brains and blood. The body was lying in bed, covered, in a natural position. The assassin must have dealt the first blow while the victim was asleep, causing instant death.

Mr. Randolph was a native of New York, aged 76. He leaves one brother, Henry Clay Randolph of Plainfield, N. J., and three sisters, living in New Orleans, Dunellen, N. J., and Plainfield. He was highly respected.

It is reported that he sold several head of cattle lately, and had some money laid away. There is no doubt as to the object of the murderer, as his trunk was rifled, but the amount secured cannot be learned.

—An unknown man, under the influence of liquor, slipped while getting off a Somerset street car last night and fell into the mud. He was assisted to his feet and went his way.

Karl's Clover Root will purify your blood, clear your complexion, regulate your bowels and make your head clear as a bell; 25c., 50c. and $1. Sold by A. D. Mallinson, 205 North ave., Plainfield, N. J., opp. railroad station.

Captain Sweeney, U.S. A., San Diego, Cal., says: "Shiloh's Catarrh Remedy is the first medicine I have ever found that would do me any good. Price 50c. Sold by J. D. Mallinson, 205 North Ave., Plainfield, N. J., opp. railroad station.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

Mrs. D. E. Titsworth and Miss Mabel Potter go to Atlantic City today.

Greenleaf Voorhees of Brooklyn was entertained by Plainfield friends yesterday.

W. R. Clarkson of Brooklyn, formerly a resident of East Front street, was in town today.

Andrew Cox of Elmwood place who has been very ill was able to take a carriage drive yesterday.

Mr. and Mrs. Perry, of New York, formerly of East Front street, spent Sunday in town with friends.

Mrs. J. K. VanArsdale of Grove street and Miss Clementine Yates of Seventh street are in Asbury Park.

Mrs. William Smalley returned this morning from a short visit with Mrs. A. B. Heath, of Brooklyn.

Miss E. Gaton, milliner at Seely Edsall's, will visit friends in Hoboken this evening, returning tomorrow.

W. W. Dilts, proprietor of Hotel Windsor, Trenton, was the guest of his cousin, Mrs. Caleb Dickinson, yesterday.

Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Garretson and daughter Miss Kittie, of West Front street, spent Sunday in Ricefield.

Mr. and Mrs. Allen H. Craft of East Front street spent Sunday with Mrs. Craft's parents in Poughkeepsie.

Miss Jennie Taynor of Warren street has been very ill during the past week. A change for the better or worse is expected.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Baynon of South Orange are spending a few days with Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Ayers of West Second street.

Mr. and Mrs. John Kulp of Bayonne spent yesterday with Mrs. Kulp's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Voehl of Somerset street.

Miss Blanche Jones has returned from boarding school and will make her home with her cousin, Miss Ruby, Sandford avenue.

Spencer Crane of Brooklyn was entertained at dinner by Mr. and Mrs. Dudley S. Miller of Orchard place. Mr. Crane formerly lived in Evona.

Mr. Fisher of East Second street, who has been an invalid the past few years, is gaining strength and is much improved. He is able to walk a little every day.

Mrs. Frank O. Herring gave an afternoon tea at her home on Park avenue Saturday afternoon. About 150 guests were present and the reception was a most pleasant affair.

William Rockwell, who has been several years in Denver, where he was employed as an assayer in a silver mine, has returned to his home in this city. He will visit friends in Philadelphia for a few days.

In the parlors of the Crescent Avenue Church the City Union of King's Daughters will hold their Spring meeting, Friday, May 11, at 3:30 p. m. Tea will be served at 4:30, and Miss F. G. Foster, secretary, especially requests a large attendance.

Charles W. Runyon, Manager of the Telephone Exchange, Joseph Sohl, electrician, and Herbert Chamberlain, Inspector for the Telephone Company, went gigging in South Plainfield Saturday night. They succeeded in capturing 20 suckers and one eel.

Frank Smith of New York, was a valuable acquisition to the choir of the First Baptist Church yesterday. In the evening he sang a very pretty solo. Mr. Smith sang for two years as tenor soloist in a large Episcopal church in London. He has an excellent voice, and his singing was much enjoyed yesterday.

END OF ST. JOSEPH'S FAIR.

Contests Decided, But Amounts Not Known.

A week of work ended with the women of St. Joseph's Church Saturday evening in the Turn Verein Hall. The annual fair had been crowded all the week and Saturday night the hall was fairly packed with a crowd that bought and voted and danced.

The financial results of the contests could not be calculated exactly, but the winners appeared to be Miss Mary Regan, who won the handsome gold watch; Miss Katie Carty, who secured the gold ring; and Miss Margaret Richardson, who now owns a cross of gold.

The organ and other prizes will not be awarded until next month. The profits will be announced next Sunday.

Six Months Peace Promised.

Etta Windleton and Bettie Shilton, colored, were bound over to keep the peace for six months in the City Court this morning. Complaints of wicked talking had been made against them by Charles Scott. Mrs. Samuel Dreier their landlady gave bonds of $150 for Etta and $200 for Bettie.

For Nessler's Benefit.

Everyone should attend the benefit ball this evening in the Gesang and Turn Verein Hall. The proceeds will aid John Nessler, who has been ill for many months.

TO BRING UP your weight in firm, sound, healthy flesh, after the "Grip," or Pneumonia ("Lung Fever"), Bilious or other Fevers, or any wasting disease; to thoroughly purify your blood, rouse your liver to healthy action, and brace up your system when you feel "run down" or "played-out"—take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

Arrington, Nelson Co., Va.

DR. R. V. PIERCE: Sir—Allow me to offer my thanks to you for my good health since using your "Golden Medical Discovery." I was but the shadow of a person, so thin and haggard, without one moment's ease; had suffered for years with my stomach and liver, and this spring had a very severe attack of La Grippe. I then commenced using the "Discovery," and my recovery is wonderful. I am forty-five years old, and feel as well and strong as I did when sixteen years old; my sleep is as sound as an infant's. I remain,

Yours thankfully,

The Spring House Cleaning not be misled into paying fancy prices for "patent" specialties. Common lime is better than any of them for damp cellars and stables. For vaults, drains, cess-pools, the best and cheapest disinfectant is COPPERAS, supplied by us by the pound or barrel at low rates. But for use in the house, in the plumbing, in kitchen sinks, in closets, for purifying the air of sick rooms, deodorizing offensive discharges—in short, for all purposes of a household disinfectant, nothing can excel the powerful solution of chlorides made and sold by us for 15 years under the name of REYNOLDS'S ODORLESS DISINFECTANT. Quart bottles 25c. To be diluted for use according to directions on label.

FASTER THAN THE COACH.

Three Cyclers Reach Philadelphia Before the Tally-ho.

William L. Darmer of the Hudson County Wheelmen won the race against the coach from New York to Philadelphia Saturday, passing through Plainfield at 11:31. Although unacquainted with the road, and working under the disadvantage of a loose nut on his wheel, he managed to outride M. J. Bailey of the Century Wheelmen of Philadelphia, his fleetest rival. Of the nine riders who started, only three finished.

Although the horses were changed at many relays, the bicycle riders demonstrated their superiority. The teams of four horses were changed often, yet the men on wheels kept up the gait continuously, and in the end finished fifteen minutes ahead of the coach.

Many centuries have been ridden from Newark to Philadelphia, but very few from New York city, because of the condition of the road from Jersey City to Newark. It killed off VanEmburgh, the professional, although he might have been influenced in quitting by the fact that he could not compete for the gold medal offered as the prize by The Recorder. Darmer, besides winning the gold medal, gets a bloomer suit, given by a New York firm.

BY THE WAY.

—F. M. Hulett now has an arc light before his West Front street music store.

—The Ladies' Aid Society of Grace M. E. Church are arranging for a strawberry festival.

—After the business meeting of the Trinity Reformed Church Young People's Society, tonight, a missionary service will be held.

—West End fishermen report as out of order the slot machine in the Bound Brook station with which they have been accustomed to weigh fish.

—The police are investigating a robbery of liquors, cigars and clothing, taken from Findley's saloon some day last week and just missed yesterday.

—The Board of Trade team which will go to Westfield tomorrow night will be composed of VanEmburgh, Teel, Stephenson, Petrie, Maltby, Barnes, Littell, Davis and Vail. The Plainfielders expect to win the game and thus decide the series in their favor.

Trolley Scared the Horse.

Grocer Howell's horse met a trolley car at the corner of Watchung avenue and Second street shortly after 10 this morning. The horse became frightened and started away. The wagon was overturned and the top broken. Augustus Wilson was thrown out upon the horse and had his leg bruised. John Shefley, colored, who was in the wagon with him, escaped injury.

Electric Wire Dropped.

An electric light wire on North avenue opposite The Press office broke at 2 this morning. An end fell on the fire hydrant and splattered and blazed until Superintendent McClurg, notified by Policeman Frederickson, remedied the difficulty.

Amateur Chefs.

David King and Jed Smalley gave a dinner yesterday at the home of the latter. It was served to the family and a few invited guests. The dinner was cooked and prepared entirely by the two men.

HOW WE DO IT.

The times have forced many a manufacturer and importer to throw their entire stock under the merciless hammer of the auctioneer, to be sold for hard cash—that they had to have. No matter what goods brought, they had to go, and no name is so often heard or is more familiar to the auctioneer of the largest auction houses in New York than "WHITE OF PLAINFIELD." If you care to know it, that's where he gets so many good bargains—one of the reasons why he can undersell all others. We knew a man once, but that's another story.

So Is This.

MILLINERY—You can drop in anywhere almost now a days and buy a hat, and a good one. But, ladies, don't you think that your hats and bonnets were trimmed in the latest style before we ever went into the millinery business? We guess so, and you did not have to go to New York for them, either. Visit our millinery department; it will pay you both ways—style and price.

HOSIERY—You buy your hosiery here, don't you? We sell nothing but Hermsdorf dyed stockings. Import them ourselves, and sell them at the same price the other fellows pay for them. Children's fast black ribbed hose 8c., ladies do., seamless, 12c., men's seamless half hose, 3 pair for 25c.

COAT AND WRAPPER DEPT.—That new department for the sale of ladies' coats capes, wrappers and dresses is a wonderful success. When you can buy a good cambric wrapper for 89c. it does not pay to make them, and coats and capes for spring we are clearing out our entire stock at what they cost.

DRESS GOODS—Good time to buy; never lower in price and never as low again. All our 50, 60 and 75c dress goods go at 39c. All on table No. 1. See that line of swivel wash silks for shirt waists; price only 55c., cost the man who made them 65c.

HOUSEFURNISHINGS—No better housefurnishing department anywhere. We have everything you want in matting, shades, crockery, tinware, dinner, tea and toilet sets. The great sale of granite ironware goes right on. Just see the assortment; the prices are interesting.

MEN'S UNDERWEAR—We have just bought from a mill hard pressed for money five cases of men's summer undewear. Case No. 1, men's Balbriggan shirts 30c, case No. 2, do., 50c., case No. 3, men's medium weight shirts and drawers 60c., regular price $1. One case men's natural wool shirts and drawers 80c., regular $1.25 shirt. One case ladies' ribbed vests 13, 15, 18, 22, 25c.

WHITE, of Plainfield.

Simple, Beautiful, Good—these words mean much, but to see "The Rochester" will impress the truth more forcibly. Its marvelous light is purer and brighter than gas light, softer than electric light, and more cheerful than either. The choicest bric-a-brac in the palace of a Vanderbilt reveals nothing finer. We have 2,700 artistic varieties, in brass, bronze, silver and black iron.

Ladies often like to go down among the large wholesale houses and buy of first hands. They will find at our salesrooms (the largest in the world) rare collection of Art in lamps. A catalogue to send you if you cannot come.

THE BABCOCK BUILDING!!

Our new and elegant stores in the Babcock Building will soon be completed, and the exact date of our removal is not far distant; but in the meantime our present stock is not allowed to want for any good thing. The children have not been forgotten. We have opened a fine line of Children's Guimpes in white lawn, 2 to 12 years, from 45c to 69c.

Children's Blouse Waists, all sizes, in white 49, 55, 59c; in cambric 79c; in zephyr gingham $1.00.
Gingham Dresses 2 to 6 years, 59, 89c., $1.00.
Children's short white skirts from 33c. to 79c.
Infant's long dresses from 25c. to $4.25.
Infant's short dresses from 49c. to $2.49.
A full line of ladies' shirt waists in lawn, cambric, satine and organdie from 39c to $2.19.
The demand for the handsome stylish Hats in our new Millinery Department is on the increase.
We sell a good Tapestry Brussels Carpet for 69c., made, laid and lined free of charge.
Wait for our new Housefurnishing and Crockery Department to open. It will pay you.

BENNER GETS HIS LICENSE.

Witnesses Who Testified Against Him Unable to Satisfy the Court.

It the Court of Common Pleas, Saturday, presided over by Judges McCormick and Hyer, the application of John Benner for a renewal of his license to keep an inn and tavern on the county road in Fanwood, against which a protest was entered on Tuesday last, was taken up.

Those who opposed the granting of the license did so on the ground that there was no necessity for an inn or hotel in that locality, and, by a dozen or more persons, endeavored to prove that Benner had violated the law by keeping his barroom open on Sunday and selling intoxicants.

One witness, the principal one against Benner, declared that he was opposed to granting a license to any man for the purpose of selling liquor. He was a cold water man, out and out, and believed the selling of rum or other beverages which would inebriate to be against the interests of public morality.

A witness, called to prove that Benner had violated the law by selling on Sunday, declared that he knew nothing about liquor being sold there on the Sabbath day. He admitted, however, that he had seen the barroom door ajar on Sunday, and men on the inside, but what they were doing he could not say. He himself had drunk ginger ale at Benner's on Sunday, but nothing stronger.

Another witness, on taking the stand, when questioned by Mr. Lindabury as to whether he had ever drank beer or other intoxicants in Benner's place on Sunday, replied that he had not, and when questioned further, informed Mr. Lindabury that if he would put his questions so that he could understand them, he would be glad to answer, adding that against his will he had been summoned to appear as a witness, thereby losing $5, for, as he expressed it, a "lousy fifty cents." Nothing of any importance was gleaned from this witness.

Another deponent, named Brick, acknowledged that he had purchased a quart of gin in Benner's saloon on Sunday and had drank it before leaving the place.

The case occupied the entire morning, and at 12:25 o'clock the court announced that from the testimony submitted it did not feel warranted or justified to refuse the application. Benner was then warned about keeping his bar open on Sunday and his license was granted.

Among those present in the court room were a number of Benner's admirers, who, as soon as the court decided in his favor, began to stamp, one or two shouting out "hurrah!" Judge McCormick immediately rapped for order and instructed the court officers to arrest all of those whom they might have seen taking part in the demonstration. No one was arrested.

The Prodigal Son.

The first in the "Prodigal Son" series of People's Services, held in Trinity Reformed Chuch last night, was enjoyed by a large congregation. The subject was "Leaving Home". Excellent music was given by Organist A. L. Titsworth and choir, and the congregation joined heartily in the singing, which was a delightful feature. Pastor Schenck preached a practical sermon from the portion of the Prodigal Son parable about leaving home. The hymn "Where is my wandering boy tonight?" was sung as a solo by Miss Etta Krymer, the congregation joining in the chorus. This was a most effective portion of the service. The other services of the series are:

"Longing for Home", "Returning Home", "Rejoicing at Home", and "The Elder Brother". They will be given in their succession, the next four Sunday evenings, and are sure to be popular.

From Stratford to Westfield.

Appleton Morgan of Westfield has received from Stratford-on-Avon, an oaken gavel, the handle made of oak, by Edward Fox, from Shakespeare's Parish Church, and the head of oak from Judith Shakespeare Quiney's house. The gift is from the Shakespeare Library Association of Stratford-on-Avon, and is in graceful recognition of Dr. Morgan's services in Shakespearian archæology. The inscription read:

Presented to Appleton Morgan, LL. D.,
President of the New York
Shakespeare Society, 1885-1886.
Stratford-on-Avon,
April 23, 1893.

To Whom It May Concern.

Having suffered all the tortures of rheumatism for the past two years, and after taking any number of so-called remedies without any apparant relief, I deem it only justice to the public to recommend the sulphur and vapor baths as given by Hiram Hornish of North avenue, as not only a relief but a permanent cure.

Good Roads Make This Possible.

Coaching seems to be developing into a grand passion with some of our young swells. So intent has the interest in it become that a syndicate of New York men is ready to wager $10,000 on a coach race between New York and Philadelphia whips. The race is to be from the Waldorf in New York to the Bellevue in Philadelphia, and the one who covers the distance first will receive $20,000.

"Grey Mare" to Run Again, for Charity.

Owing to the unprecedented success of "The Grey Mare" in the Casino last Thursday, it has been decided to repeat the play Tuesday, May 15, for the benefit of the Boys Club. William B. Wadsworth will manage the affair for the club, and a second success is confidently expected.

To Buy New Books.

An excellent entertainment will be given May 17, in the Dunellen M. E. Church, by the Sunday-school, for the benefit of the library. Talent from Somerville, Newark and New York will furnish an evening of much pleasure.

CAPT. HUBBARD, DIRECTOR.

And W. R. Codington County Attorney Decided by Caucus.

The Republican Freeholders who will compose the majority of the new Board have held their first caucus and settled on the men who will be appointed to several of the offices under the Board's control, when that body meets for organization Wednesday.

Capt. J. Frank Hubbard of Plainfield will again be made Director of the new Board; ex-County Collector E. M. Wood will be reappointed to his old office; ex-Judge William R. Codington of Plainfield will be elected County Attorney; and Russell Ryno, City Clerk of Rahway, will be made Clerk of the Board.

Editor Rollinson, of the Rahway Advocate, was a candidate for clerkship, but withdrew.

The selection of County Engineer and a Road Inspector was left for further consideration. The former office will, however, probably go to ex-County Engineer Dunham of Plainfield. Other aspirants for that place are Mr. Gavett of Plainfield, Mr. Clark of Rahway, and Charles K. Moore, of Fanwood.

Who will be the lucky man to receive the nomination for Road Inspector seems to be a matter of considerable doubt. There are numerous aspirants, among whom Harry McCandless of Linden and Mr. Bonnell of Union seem at present to have the best chance.

HAD A LOVELY EYE.

It Was a Result of His Sabbath Day Festivities.

Residents of East Third street near Richmond street were much excited by a disgraceful occurrence at 2:30 yesterday afternoon.

Patrick Doyle entertained Gideon C. Polon and Joseph Eckert during the day. The refreshments were strong, and a discussion arose between Mr. and Mrs. Doyle. Doyle struck his wife and blacked her eye, Polon tried to separate the unhappy pair, while Eckert kept busy although he decided upon no definite plan of action. Doyle was the strongest of the crowd and knocked Polon down.

Word reached the police and Sergeant Kiely went to the Doyle residence. The street was full of sympathizing neighbors. He arrested Polon and Doyle. Eckert had gone away.

City Judge Goddington fined Doyle $25 with a choice of 40 days. The fine was paid. Eckert appeared as a witness to help Doyle out of the scrape, was much surprised when he was sentenced to pay $5 or stay 20 days. He paid. The Judge thought Polon had been punished enough and did not sentence him. His eye was completely closed.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

The Junior Christian Endeavor Society of the First Baptist Church will listen to Miss Golden, of Japan, Friday afternoon at 4.

The seventh anniversary of the Warren Chapel Christian Endeavor Society will be celebrated Thursday evening, May 17.

A missionary will probably address the Christian Endeavor meeting in Warren Chapel tomorrow evening.

Gratifying Growth of a Church.

Thirty new members were admitted into the First Presbyterian Church at the communion service yesterday morning. Fifteen entered on confession of faith and fifteen by certificate. There were seven baptisms.

The voluntary choir, composed of 16 voices, sang for the first time. The music was very satisfactory and the congregation seemed well pleased with the work the leader, Wm. A. MacClymont, has accomplished in so short a time.

Should Have Been Invited Out.

Four young "men" attended the service in the First Presbyterian Church last evening. They sat in the rear seat of the gallery and appeared to enjoy themselves immensely.

Pastor Herring preached a most able sermon, but those who sat near the four in question heard none of it. The noise made by the young "men", all of whom were old enough to know better, was their portion of the service.

Death of the Amphion.

The Amphion Orchestra is no more. The circumstances under which it dissolved partnership are amusing. At one of their recent entertainments, the man who played the flute complained that the music from the clarionet was too loud, while the man who played the clarionet insisted that the flute was too low. They were not able to arrange matters satisfactorily, so the organization disbanded.

In Music Hall Thursday Night.

A world of instruction is in "The Old Homestead", and it is instruction of the most wholesome and profitable description, while a moral is pointed that is salutary in the highest degree—in fact, as a moral agent, the play has never yet been equalled by any production which has seen the light upon the English-speaking boards.

Rode Without Lights.

Myran Fleming and Moses Carey were fined $1 Saturday by City Judge Goddington for riding wheels without lights. John Lowrie of Elizabeth did likewise and was fined the same.

Eight New Members.

Communion service was held in the Crescent Avenue Church yesterday morning. Five members were received into the church by letter and three on confession of faith.

Rainforth's Strange Case.

By WILL LISENBEE.

[Copyright, 1894, by American Press Association.]

CHAPTER I.

My name is Hiram Dixon. I am a man past the prime of life and more given to the pursuit of studies that pertain to my profession than dealing in romances, yet I feel that I may be pardoned if in my declining years, when one begins to feel the languor of the autumn of life, I turn for a brief diversion from the dry catalogue of science to a period in my existence which is marked by incidents so strange and romantic as to challenge belief.

By profession I am a physician and surgeon—a plain, practical man, who has found little time to indulge in idle speculations over the marvelous or cultivate a desire to penetrate the veil behind which are hidden strange forces which have for thousands of years puzzled the learned and unlearned of every land. So I shall only record the incidents of my story just as they happened, without any attempt to solve what may to some seem mysterious or reconcile such to the measurement of the rule and line of ordinary practical experience.

I am a childless widower, and aside from what my professional duties entail I mingle but little with the outside world. For more than 20 years I have followed my profession in Mayburg, and I may add that although my income is not what some who are more ambitious might call large I find it sufficient for all my needs.

It was just five years ago that I first met Gerald Rainforth. He was not over 25 at that time and possessed of all the enthusiasm of one who is ambitious and has set out to accomplish something in life, yet he was moody at times and would act and talk in the most strange and eccentric manner. Being a painter of more than ordinary skill, he had come to Mayburg to sketch the picturesque scenery to be found in that vicinity. He was rich—so rumor said—and could well afford to indulge his taste for art or whatever struck his fancy or brought him amusement.

He was staying at the Redfield inn, whither I had been called to see a patient, and as I was about leaving he came from the porch where he had been sitting and touched me on the arm.

"I beg your pardon—you are Dr. Dixon, I believe?" he said.

I bowed assent.

He handed me his card and stood watching me in silence.

"Gerald Rainforth," I read aloud, turning my eyes to the young man's face.

"You have heard the name before?" he queried.

"Yes, but it was many, many years ago. While a student at the medical college in New York I met a Horace Rainforth. We became classmates and warm friends."

"He was my father," replied the young man.

"Is it possible?" I said in astonishment. "You say he was your father? He is"——

"Dead—died in Calcutta when I was 15 years of age. A week later my mother followed him to the grave, leaving me with no near relative upon earth. I have heard my father speak of you frequently, and when I came to Mayburg I resolved to make your acquaintance."

"You are Dr. Dixon, I believe?"

There was something in the manner and frank, open countenance of the young man that impressed me in his favor on the instant. I held out my hand.

"I am glad to make your acquaintance," I said, pressing his hand. "Not merely because your father was one of my warmest friends, but because I think I shall like you."

"Thank you. Then I may come and chat with you occasionally?" he asked almost appealingly. "It is so stupid here."

"I shall be glad to have you come whenever you feel inclined," I replied. And so it happened that our acquaintance soon ripened into the warmest friendship. He came to my office frequently, and we passed many pleasant hours together. I was surprised to find that he had read many odd works on medicine and surgery while in the east, but what impressed me most was his familiarity with curious and abstruse subjects. All the established theories of transcendentalism and occult philosophy seemed to be at his tongue's end, yet he would often smile at the absurdity of them all.

"The theories of these writers are all fog," he once remarked, "simply that and nothing more. They shroud in mystery what they do not understand. Theosophy is but the distorted and imperfect reflection of a great truth whose light is just beginning to cast its first faint glimmer upon the world. The mysterious Thibetan theosophists, the Mahatmas, are a myth—except as they appear in the form of the beggar jugglers and vulgar snake charmers of the orient—and an invention of those who, having caught a gleam of the truth, seek to mystify rather than enlighten.

"But behind all this," he went on in a more serious tone, "are forces that make themselves felt in us all at times. They come to us in our dreams—in our waking hours—something we cannot analyze, yet cannot deny the truth of its existence."

He had traveled a great deal and had had some strange adventures in the semibarbarous countries of the east, of which he regaled me with many an interesting tale. But the most romantic of all his adventures had its beginning in Rome. But there, I must not get ahead of my story.

It was on the 10th of September, just three months subsequent to my first meeting with young Rainforth, that a most mysterious tragedy occurred in Mayburg. It was the first incident of the kind that had been known in the history of the town, and it at once excited a feeling of horror among the peaceful inhabitants, which grew in intensity as the mystery surrounding the incident deepened.

An unknown man had been murdered and his body found lying in the road just outside the limits of the village, and within a stone's throw of Darkwood Hall, an imposing but gloomy old building of graystone, whose owner, Isaac Dangerfield, a wealthy New York broker, had never deigned to make it his abode for even a short season.

The murdered man was about 30 years of age and dressed in a neatly fitting suit of dark gray material, but the strictest inquiry failed to disclose his identity. Near him was found a small leathern valise, which contained a few articles of wearing apparel, an opera glass, two French novels and a small black glass jar containing a colorless liquid, which proved to be alcohol. Upon his person was found a costly gold watch and a red morocco pocketbook containing some $200, mostly in small bills. It was evident that whatever the motive of the murderer had been it had not been robbery. But who had committed the deed? That was the question that was in everybody's mouth, yet none could offer even a shadow of a solution to the problem.

An ugly knife wound in the region of the victim's heart told that the murderer had done his work quickly and well. A farmer of the name of Marks had been the first to discover the body, which was still warm, and believing that life was not yet extinct he had placed the body in his wagon and brought it to my office, along with the leathern valise which he had found lying in the road near at hand.

"My name is James Marks. I am a resident of the state of New York. I am a farmer and reside on a farm three miles from Mayburg. I was in Mayburg on the 10th of September and remained till about 8 o'clock in the evening. I then left by the south road leading to Bartlett's Station. When about a half mile from town and within a short distance of the large stone house that stands near the road at that point, my horses suddenly became frightened at something lying in the road ahead. I tried to pacify them, but they only plunged the more and refused to advance a step.

"I then dismounted from the wagon, and walking a few steps ahead of the team I discovered the body of a man lying in the road. The moon was shining, but the shadows of the trees where I had stopped made it quite dark. I did not see or hear any one near the place. I supposed at first that the man in the road was drunk, but when I took hold of him I found his clothing was wet, and lighting a match I discovered that my hands were wet with blood. I saw the deceased's face by the light. I had never seen him before. The body was still warm. I thought that life might not be extinct, and I placed the body in my wagon and drove rapidly back to town. I brought the body to the office of Dr. Dixon; also a valise which I found in the road near where the deceased lay. That is all I know of the circumstance."

Jack Peters, the old gardener at Darkwood Hall, in whose charge the place had been for five years, was summoned and gave his testimony.

He stated that he lived with his wife at Darkwood Hall. They occupied the servants' quarters in the north wing of the building. He was at home on the night of Sept. 10. He heard no unusual sounds. He was a little hard of hearing. The building he occupied stood about 60 yards from the road and about 100 yards from the spot where the deceased had been found. He had come from his work among the shrubbery at 6 o'clock and had remained in the house till about 8; then he had crossed the lawn to bring a scythe he had left. He was returning with it when he saw a man hurrying across the lawn toward the front gate. He did not recognize the man. He saw his face in the moonlight. It was not the face of the deceased. He did not speak to the stranger. He was surprised at seeing him there, but it was not very uncommon for people to pass through the grounds. He thought he would recognize the man if he saw him again.

The ticket agent at Bartlett's Station was next called and stated that a man answering the description of the deceased had come in on the 4:30 train from the east. He had got off the train there, but the agent did not see which way he had gone when he left the station. The man was a stranger to him. He could not state positively that the man seen at the station and the deceased were the same. There was a strong resemblance between the two if they were not the same.

Several others gave their testimony, but no clew to the murdered man's identity or his murderer was obtained. Jack Peters, the Darkwood gardener, was the only one who gave any testimony that was likely to afford anything like a clew to the murderer, but unless the stranger whom he had seen passing through the grounds should prove to have had some connection with the murder even this would be worthless. A strict inquiry was made to ascertain who the man was, but all efforts were futile.

The inquest consumed a whole day, but no light was thrown upon the mystery surrounding the tragedy, and the coroner's jury brought in a verdict that the deceased, whose name was unknown, had come to his death by a wound inflicted by a knife in the hands of some one unknown.

The peaceful and quiet village of Mayburg, whose very nature was utterly antagonistic to anything sensational, rarely had its sober dignity disturbed by any unusual occurrence, and, as may be imagined, this startling and tragic event occasioned the most intense excitement. The whole community was shocked and indignant that such a deed could be perpetrated in their very midst and the criminal escape detection.

Keenly alive to the ignominy that the daring deed reflected upon the good name of the town, the mayor called the council together and offered a reward of $1,000 for the apprehension and conviction of the murderer.

This action resulted in bringing several detectives to the place, who at once set to work to unravel the mystery. Meantime photographs of the murdered man had been taken, after which his body was embalmed and laid to rest in the village cemetery.

On the evening of the third day after the murder I was sitting in my office, reflecting over the incident, when my eyes happened to encounter the valise which had been found with the murdered man. It lay in the corner of the room, where it had been left after the inquest. Moved by a sudden impulse, I took up the valise, and opening it began to examine the contents, with the vague hope that I might hit upon something overlooked by the coroner's jury which might furnish a clew to the mysterious affair.

I first examined the few articles of clothing for marks, but could find none. I then took the three novels and turned the leaves carefully through each one, hoping to find a bit of writing on some of the margins, but not a mark was to be found. Taking up the small black glass jar previously referred to, I removed the glass stopper. Apparently it contained nothing but about eight ounces of alcohol. After a short examination of the contents I was about to replace the stopper when on a sudden turning of the jar a low metallic sound came from the inside. It was evident that there was something in the jar, but peering in through the neck I could see nothing.

I then poured the liquid into a glass, and turning the jar mouth downward something fell out upon the table. I picked it up, an exclamation of astonishment escaping my lips as I did so. It was a human finger!

I am not a nervous man, and being a physician and surgeon it might naturally be supposed that my experience in the dissecting room and hospital had rendered me indifferent to such sights, yet I must confess that the unexpected discovery of that bit of human anatomy gave me an unpleasant start.

The finger, which was the first of the left hand, was small and shapely and was encircled by a plain gold ring set with a single diamond of rare brilliancy. That the finger was that of a woman was plainly evident by its size and shape as well as the character of the ring it contained. Here indeed was another mystery, even more perplexing than the first, and the more I reflected over the matter the more puzzled I became. It was a strange enough proceeding that the deceased should carry a human finger about with him in that manner, but the presence of the diamond ring thereon served to intensify the mystery that surrounded the whole affair.

I removed the ring from the finger for the purpose of discovering any initials or inscription that might be engraved thereon, but none was found. I had just replaced the contents of the jar, having made no further discoveries, when there came a tap at my office door. Crossing the room, I threw open the shutter and was greeted by the constable.

"I was passing by and just stopped to say that we have arrested the murderer," he said. "I supposed you had not heard of it."

"No. That is indeed news to me," I replied. "Who is it you have arrested?"

"A young man stopping at the Redfield inn—Gerald Rainforth!" was the reply.

CONTINUED TOMORROW.

A YOUNG GIRL'S FORTUNE.

AN INTERESTING SKETCH.

Nothing appeals so strongly to a mother's affection as her daughter just budding into womanhood. Following is an instance: "Our daughter, Blanche, now 15 years of age, had been terribly afflicted with nervousness, and had lost the entire use of her right arm. She was in such a condition that we had to keep her from school and abandon her music lessons. In fact, we feared St. Vitus dance, and are positive but for an invaluable remedy she would have had that terrible affliction. We had employed physicians, but she received no benefit from them. The first of last August she weighed but 75 pounds, and although she has taken only three bottles of Nervine she now weighs 106 pounds; her nervousness and symptoms of St. Vitus dance are entirely gone, she attends school regularly, and studies with comfort and ease. She has recovered complete use of her arm, her appetite is splendid, and no money could procure for our daughter the health Dr. Miles' Nervine has brought her.

When my brother recommended the remedy I had no faith in patent medicines, and would not listen to him, but as a last resort he sent us a bottle, we began giving it to Blanche, and the effect was almost immediate."—Mrs. R. R. Bullock, Brighton, N. Y.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is positively free from opiates or dangerous drugs.

A PUBLIC BENEFACTOR.

THEY ALL SAY THE SAME.

Don't Hesitate, but Call and Be Convinced That Every Statement We Make Is True.

To those who do not already know that there is established in Newark, at 105 Halsey street, a physician who stands in the foremost rank of his profession, who is indorsed by the leading colleges of the country and who can prove by witnesses right here in Newark (not by one, but by hundreds) that he has succeeded in curing cases that have been utterly given up by other physicians, and good ones, too. To those who do not these facts we state that any person, rich or poor, old or young, is welcome here and receive examination and advice free of charge.

Thousands praise the day they came to us for treatment. There is no guess work, no experimenting, no painful operation. No matter how difficult the case, no matter how much of the physician's time it may consume, the diagnosis will not only be thorough, it will be absolutely free. There is no taint of quackery or deception; no claim or statement is made that is not borne out by facts and living witnesses.

Mrs. Abby A. Ray, late of 86 Grove street, East Orange, who now lives at 400 Ellmore street, Escanaba, Mich., writes, under date of January 12: "The medicine arrived this morning and I am so glad it came. I am almost out, and it has helped me so much and I am so much pleased with its wonderful effort on my broken down system that I would like to testify to your great success in my case. I am feeling as well now, in fact better, than I had ever hoped to again."

This is one of many letters that we receive daily. We have the originals at our office and if you wish you may see them. Another thing: We never publish or reveal a patient's name unless they so desire.

DR. STARKWEATHER.

There is not a penny to pay for the fullest medical advice. Dr. Starkweather is a graduate of the Berkshire Medical College, Massachusetts, and of the Medico-Chirurgical College of Philadelphia; endorsed also by the College of Physicians and Surgeons and Bellevue Medical College of New York. We invite all sufferers from whatever cause to call at our office, No. 105 Halsey street, Newark, where Dr. Starkweather is in attendance daily to give examination and advice entirely free of charge. It matters not what the disease, or how many years you have suffered, in spite of means adopted in your behalf, a visit to this office and the privileges of the same will cost you nothing, and may be the means of saving your life. We prepare all our medicines and prescribe the remedies indicated. This plan enables the patient to receive directly from us such remedies as will produce the results promised.

Our office is open daily from 10 a. m. to 9 p. m. Sundays 4 to 6 p. m.

A REMARKABLE CURE

MIDDLEBUSH, Somerset Co., N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For the past forty years I have been afflicted with bleeding piles. I suffered constant pain in the lower part of my body, but when I had an operation of the bowels the pain was perfectly terrible, and was most always attended with the loss of a large quantity of blood. My condition was complicated with prolapse of the rectum, which at first only made its appearance when I had a movement of the bowels, but at length the parts became so weakened that the protrusion took place while walking or stooping, or after the slightest exertion, and sometimes even while I was at rest. Whenever this happened it gave rise to the most agonizing pain, and felt as though something was pulling the life right out of me. In fact only those similarly situated can imagine the suffering and distress which I had to endure from day to day, and which made my life a terrible burden. Hearing of Dr. Lighthill's wonderful success in the cure of difficult chronic diseases, I placed myself under his care, and now I am proud and happy to say that, marvelous as it may seem, he effected a complete and radical cure in my case in every respect, and he performed this cure without any painful operation or preventing me from work. Since this terrible disease has been removed by Dr. Lighthill's skill I feel new life, and for the first time in forty years I feel once more what it is to be without daily pain, discomfort and distress. I am not a wealthy man, but no amount of money would tempt me to be put back in my former condition.

I make this public statement, not only from a deep and everlasting sense of gratitude to Dr. Lighthill, but also as a simple Christian duty to let the afflicted know where they can find a physician whose skill cannot be surpassed, and in whom implicit confidence can be placed.

H. VROOM.

A LOCAL ENDORSEMENT.

No. 190 Somerset st., Plainfield, N. J.

To the Residents of Plainfield, N. J.

Mr. H. Vroom, whose statement appears above, is a brother-in-law of mine. I personally know of his case and his suffering and also know the happy fact that to the surprise of himself and his friends, Dr. Lighthill effected a radical and permanent cure. His statement is true in every respect and does not say half enough in praise of Dr. Lighthill. Anyone who wishes this statement verified is at liberty to come and see me personally.

JOHN C. KENNEY.

COTTOLENE IS MADE TO EAT

Made from clarified oil, expressed from Cotton Seed—as pure and golden as the Southern Sunshine which produces it.

For convenience in handling, there is added to this oil enough beef suet to make it a semi-solid.

The combination of these two pure natural products makes Cottolene, a shortening and cooking fat, with which in healthfulness, cleanliness, flavor and economy, nothing in the world can compare.

IMITATIONS are MADE TO SELL

To sell on the merits of the genuine. To sell by substitution; or by deception. To sell to the injury of the genuine, to the dissatisfaction of the consumer, to the detriment of the dealer, to the loss of all concerned—except the scheming counterfeiter himself.

If you wish the best food and the best health, you should insist that your cooking be done with genuine Cottolene. Refuse all counterfeits.

OVER 400 AMENDMENTS

Compromise Tariff Measure Completed at Last.

Many Duties as Fixed By the House and Decreased By the Senate Restored—A Number of Articles Taken From the Free List—Duty on Leaf Tobacco Very Materially Increased. Coal, Iron Ore and Lumber Not Touched—Big Changes in Woolen and Cotton Schedules.

WASHINGTON, May 8.—After more than two weeks of patient and hard work the democratic members of the finance committee, acting through the committee of "revision" of which Senator Jones has been the head, late last evening gave to the public the amendments which has been heralded as the compromise measure upon which the democratic party was to solidify and after a brief debate pass the tariff bill.

The committee was in session all day Sunday and the experts charged with formulating the amendments upon the conclusions reached by the committee were kept at work all through Sunday night.

The final print of the bill reached the committee room shortly after noon when the majority members of the committee went into executive session. Meanwhile the senate had gone into executive session and it was supposed the amendments would not be reported until to-day. During the afternoon, however, copies of the amendments were laid on the desks of each senator and in this informal way they were reported as public.

As printed they comprise 81 pages of the ordinary bill size and a careful count of the number of amendments shows the aggregate to be a little more than 400.

Many House Duties Restored.

Many of the changes are unimportant and consist of a restoration of the house duties which the senate had decreased.

A number of articles have been taken from the free list, among these being agricultural products. The sugar schedule is identically the same as has been heretofore published in these despatches, namely, 40 per cent. ad valorem on all raw sugars and an additional 1-8 of a cent on all sugar above No. 16, Dutch standard, with a discriminating duty of 1-10 of a cent against those countries that pay an export bounty. The polariscope test has been dropped from the schedule. A provision that will set at rest much of the discussion likely to grow out of this section is that which expressly stipulates that the treaty with Hawaii shall not be construed to be abrogated or in any manner impaired by the passage of this act.

Probably as the results of the criticism that the bill has been drawn on sectional lines, the committee has reduced the duty on rice.

Leaf Tobacco Duty Increased.

Another exceedingly important amendment is that relative to leaf tobacco, in which there is a very material increase in the rates of duty.

The chemical schedule, against which the republicans have levelled some of their arguments, has been reconstructed in many particulars, and here, as in other schedules, the change is noted from ad valorem to specific duties, to say nothing in the increase in the rates.

The iron and glass schedules have been overhauled and changes demanded by manufacturers have been made, some of them not so much in the nature of increases as they are in the way of reclassification and the equalization of duties.

Changes in Woolens and Cottons.

The rumors that have been floating about for some days of the mysterious influences at work in regard to woolen and cotton schedules appear to have had some ground for the changes in these lines have been numerous and in some cases very material.

Coal, iron ore, lead ore and lumber were not touched. The lead trust was not the gainer by these amendments for there was not an increase in the duty on lead products.

Nothing was done with whiskey, but if all the rumors in connection with that article be true it is very likely that a vigorous fight will be made to put the tax on whiskey back to the one dollar a gallon it carried when the bill came from the house.

New York Constitutional Convention.

ALBANY, May 8.—The sixth constitutional convention convenes here at noon in the assembly chamber. The room has been thoroughly renovated and made ready. The convention consists of 175 delegates and as there were only 128 assembly desks, the thirty-two desks of the senators and fifteen others have been brought into use and placed along the north and south sides of the chamber, taking up room formerly devoted to spectators. The latter will now be obliged to view the proceedings in the chamber from behind the outer rail or from the commodious galleries. Back of the speaker's desk is the coat of arms of the state around which is tastefully draped the American colors.

Kearsarge Relics Return.

WASHINGTON, May 8.—The bell of the old corvette Kearsarge, with her log-book, a piece of her memorial tablet and other relics, have just been received at the navy department by express. They were purchased by Mr. Lloyd Phonenix, a New York yachtsman, from some natives of the Carribean sea and by him sent to the department. These articles will probably be placed in the naval museum at the Washington navy yard.

New York to Aid Greek Sufferers.

NEW YORK, May 8.—Mayor Gilroy has issued a letter of appeal to the people of New York in behalf of the earthquake sufferers of Greece. Any contributions received at the mayor's office will be forwarded through the proper channels of relief. Provisions or supplies may be sent to United States Minister Alexander at Athens.

To Make Way for Democrats.

SALEM, Mass., May 8.—Custom house inspectors J. B. Osborne and J. W. Stocker, Boarding Officer J. Howard Hay and Boatman W. F. Frank Powers, republicans, have just been notified that they will be relieved from duty. Their places will be filled by democrats.

Novel Question Over a Confirmation Announced But Not Made.

WASHINGTON, May 8.—Charles H. Taylor, of Kansas, president of the negro democratic league, who was nominated by President Cleveland for recorder of deeds for the District of Columbia, to succeed ex-senator Blanche K. Bruce, has raised a curious point in regard to the announcement in the official record of senate action on nominations. It will be remembered that, owing to an error on the part of the senate clerks the name of Mr. Taylor appeared among the list of confirmations made by the senate on Thursday. So far that body has failed to take action on his nomination, which was reported adversely, eight of the eleven members of the district committee having voted against confirmation.

Mr. Taylor, however, is of the opinion that the president was informed through the Congressional Record, an official channel, that favorable action had been taken on his nomination and such being the case the senate has no further jurisdiction in the matter. Under such circumstances, he claims, the only way to dispose of him without giving him the office will be for the president to discharge him, a matter entirely outside the scope of senatorial power. He accordingly has applied to the proper department for his commission and this being refused him he proposed to make the matter lively in the courts and elsewhere and says he has no doubt of eventual success.

COMPLETE SHUT DOWN.

Such Is the Condition in the Pennsylvania Coke Region.

CONNELLSVILLE, Pa., May 8. — The strikers have gained their point of a complete shut down in the coke region. Rafney's men are nearly all brought out, leaving only a few at work at Paul and Moyer. Fort Hill, Rainey, Elm Grove and Mount Braddock are shut down tight. When the other operators learned that Rainey had been closed down they concluded to remain idle. The entire region is quiet. The mob that marched to and fro through the Vanderbilt region, terrorized the men who were at work, and they were afraid to resume. A mass meeting was held near Paul, the strikers voting that as they had forced a practical shut down at Vanderbilt they would go to their homes. Many of these men have been on the march for three days with very little to eat. A mob from Broadford and the works along the Mount Pleasant branch marched to Moyer and camped. They brought food and are prepared for a week's siege. They met the workmen on their way to the plant, and persuaded most of them to return home. It is reported that large numbers of coke workers are coming here from the West Virginia and Alabama coal fields.

Mary Washington Monument.

WASHINGTON, May 8.—Mrs. Waite, widow of the late chief justice of the United States, who continues to reside in this city, is president of the Mary Washington monument association, which has had charge of the raising of funds for the monument to the mother of Washington, which is to be unveiled at Fredericksburg, Va., next Tuesday. The city of Fredericksburg has contributed five acres of ground and $1,000. The Mary Washington society of Washington city has raised about $10,000, but the labors of the society are not ended, and it is intended to build a comfortable house for a keeper or superintendent, so that the monument shall not be knocked to pieces by vandals, as the old one was. It is also proposed to reclaim the swampy grounds surrounding the rock upon which Mrs. Washington was accustomed to sit, and Mrs. Waite is endeavoring to raise a fund for these purposes.

Trouble Over Kim Ok Kum.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 8.—From advices received by the China steamer it is learned that Japan is greatly excited on account of the murder of the Corean refugee Kim Ok Kum at Shanghai and the orgies held by the victim's enemies when the news of his murder was received. The Corean king made no attempt to conceal his satisfaction over the killing of Kim, congratulating the commissioner of public works that Hong, the assassin, had been so successful. Hong was a devoted retainer of the commissioner. It is charged that the king not only knew of the murderous plot, but gave his sanction. It is said that the murderer has been rewarded with a high army position and will be made a noble. A Japanese newspaper says that the Chinese minister at Tokio knew of the plot and helped to lure Kim to Shanghai.

P. T. Barnum's Estate.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., May 8.—The P. T. Barnum estate is to undergo another partial distribution, only enough being kept intact to pay Mrs. Barnum's annuity of $40,000 and several smaller amounts. This is one condition upon which Clinton Barnum Seely has withdrawn his contest against the executors, report. The estate is now valued at about $2,500,000, and of this about $1,500,000 will be retained, including the property at Broadway and Houston streets, New York, which is valued at $625,000 and gives an annual income of $35,000.

Providence's Fourth Smallpox Case.

PROVIDENCE, R.I., May 8.—Another case of smallpox has been discovered in this city, making the fourth person stricken within two weeks.

Dr. Cyrus Edson, Health Commissioner, says:

H-O Hornby's Oatmeal

Is Unquestionably The Best Breakfast Food.

MORE DEAD THAN ALIVE

Awful Plight of the Rescued Logloch Tourists.

They Will All Recover, However—One Woman Gives Premature Birth While in the Cave and Another Goes Mad From Fright—Heard the Rescuers Working.

GRATZ, May 8.—The rescue alive of the imprisoned cave explorers, after it was believed surely they were dead, has caused the greatest rejoicing.

The poor victims presented a ghastly appearance as they were brought into the daylight, so weak from exhaustion that they were barely alive.

The church bells of the village of Logloch rang out joyous peals, and the diver to whose efforts the rescue was due, was carried on the shoulders of the villagers. The rescued tourists were in a condition so near death that a report arose that six of them were dead. This, however, proved untrue. Mrs. Fashings, one of the party, gave premature birth to a child while in the cave, and a Mrs. Zwaier was driven mad from despair and fright.

It was late last evening when the last one of the tourist party was taken from the cave, although the diver, Fischer, succeeded in reaching them at 10:30 in the morning. Six of the seven persons who were in the cave have so far recovered that they are able to walk.

They still had a small supply of bread and cheese when they were found, and they also had a few candles remaining.

When the diver made his first descent to the mouth of the cave he reported that the entrance was so blocked by huge timbers, rocks and small flood debris, that it would be necessary to use dynamite to clear it. Accordingly several cartridges were exploded, but the extreme caution the workmen were obliged to observe made it necessary that only light charges should be used, as heavier ones might bury the unfortunate prisoners beneath a mass of rock, and the explosives were not effective.

Yesterday morning several more cartridges were exploded, when Fischer was able to gain an entrance to the cave. He was gone longer than usual this time and everybody expected him to report that the tourists were dead. When he returned with the news that they were all alive a mighty shout went up from the crowd. Fischer reported that he found the tourists almost on the verge of madness from the terrible nervous strain they had undergone. They had kept a candle burning in order to be able to keep together.

They Heard the Rescuers.

The prisoners had heard the attempts to rescue them, but the slow progress the rescuers were making had made it seem certain that they would die before they could be reached, and their anxiety and terror were intense.

They were cheered by the noise of the explosion and the dynamite blasts, but the shocks were so violent that they were in constant fear of being killed by falling rocks. The tourists have all been made as comfortable as possible, and every attention is being shown to them.

A box of provisions floated into the cave and reached the imprisonsd tourists on May 2. The worst sufferer is the youth, Heidt. The others are likely to recover speedily.

SENSATIONAL STATEMENT.

Southern Grand Army Posts Accused of Misapplying Funds.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., May 8.—Commander J. A. Watrous, of the Wisconsin department G. A. R., has just made the sensational statement that of tens of thousands of dollars sent to the two southern grand army posts during recent years by northern veterans only a small portion was ever devoted to the purpose for which it was given, namely, the decoration of the graves of union soldiers buried in the south.

Most of the money, said Col. Watrous, has apparently been put into a new memorial hall at Richmond. One of the posts that is accused of thus misappropriating funds is located at Richmond, the location of the other is not stated. Veterans are warned against giving any further aid to those posts which have heretofore solicited money for the work of decorating graves.

Col. Watrous says hundreds of women's relief corps have been swindled out of small sums by these posts since the alarm was first raised in the G. A. R. posts some time ago.

MORE DESTRUCTION IN GREECE.

Earthquake Shocks Continue—A Severe Quake Yesterday.

ATHENS, May 8.—A severe earthquake shook the whole region around Atalanta yesterday. The fort works at Chalcis, capital of Euboea, were damaged badly, and several building in the city were shaken to pieces.

The shock was severe in Athens.

Prison Superintendent Removed.

BOSTON, May 8.—The following is the governor's communication to Superintendent of State Prisons Jones:

SIR—After a careful consideration of the report of the legislative committee on prisons, recently transmitted to me, in regard to your management as general superintendent of prisons, I do not consider it is for the best interest of the public service that you shall continue longer in said office, and declare the same vacant.

Yours, truly,
FREDERICK T. GREENHALGE.

Constructing Kelly's Navy.

DES MOINES, Ia., May 8.—One hundred and twenty boats of the Kelly industrial fleet were finished so far as carpenter work is concerned this morning, but the construction of the remaining 30 and the calking and finishing touches will require all of to-day if not longer.

ALL GENUINE HOBOS

Steady and Rapid Accessions to Coxey's Army.

Reported That Washington Officials, Fearing Trouble, May Decide to Scatter the Commonwealers—Coxey, Browne and Jones' Trial to Go to the Jury To-day.

WASHINGTON, May 8.—An evening paper here prints the following:

It is about settled that the handful of idle men now in camp here must be scattered or there will be trouble later. The handful is growing rapidly. No other "army" has joined the Coxey band now here, but it has been receiving stragglers until the 336 men Coxey had on Tuesday last was 530 this morning, and by to-morrow night will be fully 700.

Tramps Flocking In.

Tramps are coming into the city by twos and threes at a great rate. The policemen on suburban posts report almost hourly of the passing city-ward of little groups of genuine hobos, who are inquiring for Coxey's camp.

Three of Gen. Galvin's men got here from Pittsburg and went straight to the white house. They demanded admittance, but as their bearing and appearance so clearly betokened their bad character they were refused and made to go away. They said the "army" would be here in a few days. They had come on in advance.

Officials Realize the Situation.

The commissioners realize the necessity of doing something. Various schemes were taken under consideration, the best and most feasible being to have the camp condemned at once by the health officer. This will drive the men out of the dump lot. If they will not go the police will move them. They will not be allowed to open another camp in the district. Orders will be given to the police to strictly enforce the vagrancy laws, and anyone found begging will be arrested and sent to the workhouse.

Trial of the Leaders.

The trial of Coxey, Browne and Christopher Columbus Jones, which has already occupied the attention of the court for three days, will go to the jury to-day.

There is no denying that the interest the commonwealers have excited in the case caused the officials great surprise. General Coxey made a good witness for himself. In the course of his testimony he stated that according to the programme the march was to be on the north side of the capitol, but they were under the lead of the police, and if the army had not been escorted to the south of the grounds the misdemeanor might never have been committed.

Coxey spoke of his efforts to secure permission from Speaker Crisp and Vice-President Stevenson to speak on the grounds. He went on to tell how, after pushing his way through the crowd he had reached the capitol steps. Two men whom he did not know were at his side the while and he had said to them that he could get through without assistance, but they did not leave him until he was escorted from the steps. At the steps he saw the police assembled there to prevent his making the speech. "Colonel Bright's right bower" he continued, "said to me that he had charge of the capitol and that I could not make an address there. I had a protest in my pocket to present in case they would not allow me to make the petition, but he even would not allow me to read that. I then said to him, "I wish to tender it to you, as being the officer in charge." He replied, "I won't take it. He told me I would have to move away, and wanted to know where I wished to go, and I told him to my carriage. I did not want to do anything contrary to law and I went away peacefully with the officers who escorted me from the steps."

The defense attempted to prove by several witnesses that the police in rushing upon the crowd forced the defendants upon the grass and shrubbery.

Coxey in referring to the good behavior and law-abiding character of his followers said that throughout their long march "not a feather could be traced to their camp."

Sullivan and Randall's Armies.

WESTVILLE, Ind., May 8. — Randall's army of 325 men camped last night about four miles east of here on the Laporte road with Sullivan's army of 212 men about 100 yards west in the same grove. Both camps had out picket lines, which were strengthened by about 50 deputy sheriffs who met the army at the Porter county line. Each of the deputies was armed with revolvers and cartridges. This village was fortified by forty deputies who lined the streets while the armies passed through. The sheriff's posse will accompany the two armies through Laporte county. Trouble is anticipated as there is great dissatisfaction over the way General Randall conducts himself. He stops at the best hotels and the men claim instead of dividing the money collected, keeps it himself.

Steamship Rate War Still On.

NEW YORK, May 8.—The cutting of steamship rates to Europe still continues between the Hamburg-American, North German Lloyd and American lines. The rate to Queenstown is $14; to Liverpool, $18, and in both cases $4 commission is paid. Passengers to any point in England are forwarded for $18, practically for $14, the commission being deducted.

New Industry for Saugerties.

KINGSTON, N. Y., May 8.—James W. Purcell, of Hudson, N. Y., who was awarded by Postmaster-General Bissell the contract for making stamped envelopes and gummed wrappers for the post-office department, will manufacture those articles at Saugerties, using the buildings of the Sheffield Blank Book manufactory, which has been shut down for over a year. The plant, which is an immense one, is suitable for the purpose for which it will now be utilized.

La Champagne Floated.

NEW YORK, May 8.—The steamer La Champagne, which went ashore Sunday morning off Fort Hamilton, was floated last night after her cargo had been removed.

Elgin Butter Market.

ELGIN, Ill., May 8. — Butter market opened this week active at 15c. Twenty-three thousand pounds were sold at 15c.; 5,000 at 16.

DOINGS IN CONGRESS.

Matters of Interest Considered By the Senate and House.

WASHINGTON, May 8.—The senate spent about five hours in executive session yesterday in the discussion of the Chinese treaty without coming to any conclusion. A number of amendments, intended to prevent the incoming of Chinese illegally under the parent and child clause and the debtor provision, were made, but none of them prevailed.

Nothing of public interest occurred in open session except the offering of a resolution by the populist senator from Nebraska, Mr. Allen, in relation to the police assault upon, and the arrest and imprisonment of Coxey and his two subordinates on the 1st of May, "while peaceably entering the capitol grounds in a quiet and orderly manner."

The resolution provides for a select committee of five senators to investigate the facts and circumstances and to make such recommendations "as will prevent such outrages hereafter."

The resolution went over till to-day, and may lead to an interesting discussion.

House of Representatives.

Under an order from the committee on rules the house spent nearly all the day in discussing a bill reported from the committee on public buildings and grounds for the purchase of a site for the government printing office. Toward the close of the session the tariff question obtruded itself into the discussion, Mr. Milliken (rep. Me.) taking the lead. After this bill shall have been disposed of, by the terms of the order mentioned, the bill for the erection of a hall of records, for the storage of government papers, in the city of Washington, will be the pending business, subject, only to the consideration of general appropriation bills. The New York and New Jersey bridge bill, on motion of Mr. Dunphy (dem., N. Y.), was passed under a suspension of the rules.

BRAZILIAN CONGRESS OPENED.

The Government Expects Increased Trade With the United States.

RIO DE JANEIRO, May 8.—Congress opened with Dr. Prudente de Moraes, president of the senate and president-elect of the republic, in the chair. President Peixoto's speech to the members touched upon many questions relating to the insurrection. Peixoto says that he regards the insurrection as squelched. The few bodies of insurgents still in the field he described as weak and insignificant.

The foreign relations of the country, Peixoto said, were satisfactory, although the government still awaited Portugal's decision as to giving the conquered insurgent officers an asylum. The commercial outlook was good. The government expected that commerce with the United States would develop with exceptional rapidity beyond the limits of recent years. The treasury deficit was $9,00,000.

Reported That Mrs. Ives is Ignored By Her Husband's Will.

LOCKPORT, N. Y., May 8.—Private advices from New York give statements made by intimate friends of Mrs. Henry S. Ives to the effect that Mr. Ives left all of his property to his sister, Mrs. Stryker, of Brooklyn.

Undue influence on the part of relatives is hinted at. If the will is contested it will probably be on this ground.

Mrs. Ives was a former resident of this city. The will names Mr. Stryker executor and Mrs. Stryker executrix.

Sold Out for Taxes.

RED BANK, N. J., May 8.—A sale took place at Monmouth Park hotel yesterday, consisting of hotel furniture, wagons, mules, horses, etc., belonging to the Monmouth Park association, to pay the taxes and costs due the township of Eatontown for 1893. Only a small number of people were present. The sale of goods in the hotel amounted to $1,101.85 and that realized by the sale of the wagons, live stock, etc., was $1,124. The excess of money raised was $2,171. Mr. M. R. Yankewen bought everything except a farm wagon. It is surmised that he represented the Monmouth Park association.

Berne Rioters Sentenced.

BERNE, May 8.—Of the 71 workingmen tried for rioting and attacking Italian laborers in the streets of Berne last fall, the jury found 61 guilty. The guilty men have just been sentenced to terms of imprisonment varying between one week and 18 months. The fines which were imposed upon all will be used to compensate the Italians injured in the riots. Wassilieff, the Russian found guilty of leading the rioters, was sent to prison for one year.

Killed Himself for Love.

NEW YORK, May 8.—A young man named John D. Taylor, favorably known in Jersey City, killed himself sometime during Sunday by taking carbolic acid, because, as his friends say, of a lovers' quarrel with a young woman, Miss Emma Terrize, to whom he had been paying attention. Taylor was 28 years old. He lived with his mother, a widow.

Against Overhead Wires.

BOSTON, May 8.—The senate without debate ordered to a third reading the bill requiring electrical wires in the city of Boston to be placed under ground.

GAVE HIM AN OVATION

Breckinridge Talks to the People of Paris, Ky.

His Speech About the Same as That Delivered at Lexington on Saturday, But Much Bolder—At the Close He Introduces One of His Opponents and Receives a Scoring.

PARIS, Ky., May 8.—Five thousand people crowded around the little court house of this city last night to hear Hon. W. C. P. Breckinridge speak. He had come upon the invitation of 400 of his followers, who were the first to send him a cheering word during his recent trial. Of this immense audience fully 3,000 crowded into the court house and took in every word he said, while the others, like an animated wall, got as close as they could and cheered at every opportunity.

Accorded an Ovation.

Col. Breckinridge arrived from Lexington, with some 600 others, early in the morning and without straining the truth in the slightest it must be said he was accorded an ovation.

Col. Breckinridge's speech was much the same as that delivered at Lexington on Saturday, but was much bolder, showing plainly that he feels encouraged and more certain of his footing. His attack upon the press and the ministerial union of Lexington, which is fighting him, as well as of his foes generally, was the most brilliant and dramatic display of denunciatory oratory ever heard in the Ashland district.

Following is a short account of the more important points made by Col. Breckinridge.

In a Certain Sense on Trial.

"Whatever at any time has been part of my past, whatever I have done of which I may have been proud, or whatever I have done for which I should ask forgiveness I need on this rostrum no introduction to my friends. Whatever I am and whatever I have been you know I love you and I throw myself upon your friendship. I come at the invitation of citizens of Bourbon county to speak of matters common to the country and myself. In a certain sense I am here on trial and if there is a jury under heaven that will give me justice it is men who respect manhood and if there are those who are willing to do a kindness that spirit can be found here in Bourbon county.

His First Apology.

"I have been a Confederate soldier and I have never had any apology to make to anybody for being one, nor have I done so until this day. No matter where I have spoken, in the lyceums of Boston or before Philadelphia audiences, I have worn on the lapel of my coat the head of Robert E. Lee and I have no apology nor defence to make for having done so. I believe a confederate soldier could stand before any audience and say the animosities of the past ought to be buried. I have fought for free wool, free hemp and free raw material, for I was willing to sacrifice myself for the benefit of the whole people. And when some Annanias of the press disseminated the rumor that I was afraid to face my constituents he published a lie. I pleaded for negro testimony at a time when to do so was odious. I never shirked a duty nor failed to meet an issue.

Introduces One of His Opponents.

At the conclusion of Col. Breckinridge's speech he introduced Hon. Evan Settle, who, with Hon. W. C. Owens, is opposing him. Mr. Settle was deliberate, keen and caustic. He began by saying that he had lots of sins, and might confess them if he just had a cue as to which was most likely to draw the people to him. In view of this doubt he was at a serious disadvantage. This reference to the colonel excited him noticeably. Then gliding smoothly along for a time Mr. Settle returned to the colonel and dealt him several blows that made him wince.

Pointed References to the Scandal.

"I come to you unbersided," he said, "hampered by youth and the lack of an illustrious name. But, sirs, I would rather be one of an obscure but honest family than have the distinction of bearing unworthily the name of a distinguished ancestry."

The excitement during his delivery of this and other pointed references to the Breckinridge scandal was intense, and though the audience was largely against him there were many anti-Breckinridge men present, who made themselves heard.

Owens Cheered at Frankfort.

FRANKFORT, Ky., May 8.—Hon. W. C. Owens, candidate for congress, spoke to 2,000 people at the opera house, concluding at 3 o'clock. He referred to the race in the following eloquent and pointed language: "It is not for me to say 'By the standard of your own manhood you must determine right.'" This reference to Breckinridge was at once seen by the audience and greeted by loud and prolonged applause.

Chance for Inventors.

ALBANY, May 8.—Some months ago the Metropolitan Traction company of New York city offered a prize of $50,000 for the best invention for street car propulsion. Last week the governor signed a bill authorizing the state railroad commission to be the judges of the various inventions submitted and award the prize. Over 500 drawings of inventions have already been submitted, coming from nearly every country on the globe.

Voorhees Retires from the Lehigh.

PHILADELPHIA, May 8.—Theodore Voorhees, who since the abrogation of the lease of the Lehigh Valley railroad to the Reading railroad has filled the position of general manager of the Lehigh Valley road in connection with the position of first vice president of the Reading, has severed his official relations with the Lehigh Valley. Mr. Voorhees retains his position with the Reading company.

Died From His Injuries.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., May 8.—Eugene W. Armstrong, a member of the city fire department, is dead. Armstrong was formerly night watchman at the state prison, and on April 10, 1893, was assaulted by Jim Ryan, the Pawtucket highwayman, who was trying to escape. The officer was badly wounded and never recovered from his injuries.

Griffo-Murphy Fight.

BOSTON, May 8.—The much talked of Griffo-Murphy fight came off last night at the casino. The decision was awarded Griffo in the eighth round amid great confusion.

FOR THE relief and cure of a cold in the head there is more potency in Ely's Cream Balm than in anything else it is possible to prescribe. This preparation has for years past been making a brilliant success as a remedy for cold in the head, catarrh and hay fever. Used in the initial stages of these complaints Cream Balm prevents any serious development of the symptoms, while almost numberless cases are on record of radical cures of chronic catarrh and hay fever after all other treatments have proved of no avail.

TALKING SOCIALISM.

FITZGERALD'S INDUSTRIAL DELEGATION HAS AN OUTDOOR MEETING.

Demand Work, Not Charity—Spend the Night in a Store, Raise a Collection, and March on.

The Industrial Delegation from Boston which arrived in this city yesterday afternoon made their headquarters at the store corner of Grant avenue and Second street. A meeting was held in the lot opposite, last evening at 8, about 200 people being present.

The meeting was called to order by John James, of the Plainfield Socialists, who in a few words welcomed the delegation. He then introduced J. B. Keim, of Elizabeth, recently nominated for Governor by the Socialists. He spoke as follows:

"I am glad to be present tonight, gentlemen, to speak a few words of encouragement to this delegation. It represents 300,000 workingmen in Massachusetts, who today are suffering because they are out of employment, and can find nothing to do. They are men who are anxious to work, but cannot get it. Their last resource confronts them, and are now on their way to Washington to petition Congress to grant their requests by giving them work to earn a living. Before starting on this journey they sought the aid of the Mayor of Boston and the Governor of Massachusetts, but failed. The people they elected to represent them, gave them the cold shoulder. What we want now is to meet Congress in session and have an opportunity to present our petition. If they will not admit us, we want to know the reason why, and we have a right to know. I am glad to say that the delegation does not look like a lot of tramps, but a respectable crowd of honest workingmen, who are too good to travel in a Pullman palace car, and prefer the dusty roads."

Mr. Keim spoke at some length about the wealthy capitalists of the country who, he said, were not willing that the workingman should live decently, but were oppressing him continually.

Mr. James introduced Fitzgerald, the leader of the delegation.

Fitzgerald preceded his remarks by reading the petition which they intend to present to Congress. The principal feature of the petition is the desire that employment be given the unemployed of their State.

Mr. Fitzgerald said:

"I wish to explain to you more fully our objects, for there is a possibility that some have misunderstood them. We represent the true Socialist, whose aim is to make men better, to teach them higher principles and purer motives. Instead of being destructionists we are instructionists, and it is our plan to build up rather than tear down. The condition of the workingmen in Massachusetts is worthy of consideration, and after all attempts toward bettering them in our own State have failed we decided to go to Congress in person and seek redress. We want employment, and we want the men that represent us in Washington to intercede in our behalf. Capitalists have shut down their mills and factories, and say they shall not open, unless we accede to their demands and meet them at their figures. We are tired of charity; that's not what we want. Work to earn a respectable and decent living is what we are after."

Mr. Fitzgerald's language became quite heated during his talk, and told many startling facts to which the crowd gave their endorsement by hearty cheering.

At the close of his remarks, a poem composed by himself was recited, and was cordially received.

A collection was then asked for, and $11.95 was received, one man giving $5.

The crowd then dispersed, and the delegation sought their headquarters for the night, the store at Grant avenue and Second street.

They marched away for Metuchen and New Brunswick at 8 this morning.

In Music Hall Thursday Night.

No one should attend "The Old Homestead" with the idea that they are going to see a thrilling play with an absorbing plot; if they do they will be disappointed. But everyone who wishes to see a charming picture of simple life and manners as found down east in New England, should see it. Every possible accessory of stage setting and effects is brought into play to make the performance realistic; the effort is successful. From the old well and bucket in the first act to the old fashioned country dance to the accompaniment of fiddle and jewsharp in the last act, everything is in perfect harmony with the play and its location among New England rural folk and customs.

Dunellen and New Market.

Z. P. Osmun, Stanley Day and James Dunham, committee on electric lights in New Market, will meet this evening. There is $50 in the bank for the fund, which was raised some time ago.

Next week Friendship Cornet Band will visit Cranford and give a concert. It is also expected that a quartette from Plainfield will be present. The members of the band meet tomorrow evening to decide about a strawberry festival.

Star Shooters of the State.

The fourth contest of the New Jersey Trapshooters League will be held on the grounds of the Climax Gun Club tomorrow. Sweepstake shooting, open to all, will begin at 10 a. m. At 2 p. m., the championship team race will be called. This event is for teams of five men, at 25 Empire targets per man; seven teams are entered, and the contestants are the shooting stars of the State.

A Good Year's Work.

The annual business meeting of the Ladies Christian Work Society of Trinity Church was held yesterday afternoon in the church. Reports of the secretary and treasurer showed a good year's work. The following officers were elected:

President—Mrs. J. Arnold.
First Vice-president—Mrs. C. Schenck.
Second Vice-president—Mrs. G. Dolliver.
Third Vice-president—Mrs. R. Clark.
Secretary—Mrs. Harry Marshall.
Treasurer—Mrs. VanName.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

William H. Voorhees of Brooklyn is in town today greeting his old friends.

Lorenzo Paoli, who has been ill with malaria for a week, was able to be about town yesterday.

The many friends of Mrs. George McGinnis of Somerset street will be glad to hear she is slowly improving.

Miss Mollie Bohli and Edward Boland have returned to Hoboken after a brief visit with West Front street friends.

Vincent L. Frazee purchased a handsome mouse-color horse this morning from Fred Moore of North Plainfield.

Miss Cecelia Staats of Dunellen has been spending some time with relatives in Weston, Bound Brook, Finderne and Somerville.

Edward E. Vail of Elmwood place entertained at dinner Sunday Wm. Archibald of Brooklyn, who rode to Plainfield with a party of six.

Conductor Taylor of the street railway went to Somerville last evening to bring his young daughter home. She was taken ill while visiting there.

Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Blimm and daughters of Somerset street will attend the wedding tomorrow of Mrs. Blimm's niece, in Freeport, Long Island.

Mrs. Isaac Smalley has returned from her daughter's to her home, 333 East Front street, not much improved in health. It is hoped by her many friends that she may soon recover.

Mrs. Charles I. Ames having sold her attractive house on Crescent avenue to E. B. Clark, has moved, with her family, into her very handsome residence on Eighth street, corner of Plainfield avenue.

Dress Reform for Women.

The women and young girls of Plainshould not fail to attend the Symposium on Improved Dress to be given by Miss E. Marguerite Lindley and Mrs. Etta Morse Hudders, Thursday, May 10, at 3, in Grace Church chapel. The subject is one of great importance, affecting the health and happiness of all women. Miss Lindley does not undervalue beauty in dress; in fact she thinks it of the utmost importance, but she claims that it may be attained without wearing garments which hamper organs whose free action is necessary to health.

A New York paper in commenting on this lecture, as given in the Madison Square Garden Concert Hall, says: "Can you imagine yourself feeling as though you trod on air and as though you might bend and sway, and feel only more pliable by the movement? That would be your delicious condition if you had attended the National Christian League Fair, and had listened, with intent to learn, to what Miss E. Marguerite Lindley had to say on the subjects of 'Environment', 'Influence on Dress on Mind and Health.'"

Charts, skeleton and manikin will be used in illustrating this lecture, and there will also be a display of the latest and most approved ladies' underwear as well as a complete baby's outfit.

It is expected that women of the audience will take part in the discussion.

Public Charities.

A meeting of the county branch of the State Charities Aid Association was held in Elizabeth last night. H. B. Newhall presided and Rev. Hobart Clark was secretary. Other Plainfielders present were H. P. Reynolds, David P. Hall and Mrs. Dexter Tiffany. Reports were received and general business transacted.

The annual meeting of the State Association will be held tomorrow morning at 11 in Newark. H. P. Reynolds, David P. Hall and Mrs. Tiffany, committee, will report on the case of ex-convicts.

The $1 Gas Bill Passed.

Assembly 177, Salinger's bill, fixing the price of gas in cities at $1 per thousand, was warmly advocated in the Assembly yesterday by its introducer, who insisted that gas could be manufactured and delivered in pipes for seventeen cents per thousand cubic feet. He also stated that in several large cities gas was furnished at 75 cents per thousand. Messrs. Carroll and McEwan also favored the bill, and Mr. Flynn opposed. It was passed, 33 to 16.

An Excellent Portrait.

The crayon portrait of the late Charles P. Leggett executed by Miss Grace Nevius has been hung in Alert Hose parlors and is highly praised as a striking likeness. Little Margaret, daughter of decedent, was invited into the parlors and the moment she saw the portrait she exclaimed, "That's my papa!" This settled the question of the merits of the picture.

Sewerage Action Expected.

At the adjourned meeting of the Common Council to be held Monday evening, May 21, some definite decision will probably be reached in the matter of adopting a sewerage system and in regard to the proposed street railway extension ordinance, besides other business of less importance.

Spilled Milk.

Thomas Hyland's horse ran away with his milk wagon shortly before noon today. The start was made on Cottage place, and the route was to Washington street, to Third, to Richmond, where the rig was finally stopped. Milk was spilled and the top of the wagon broken.

"Grey Mare" Date Changed.

Because of the Choral concert the night of May 15, the reproduction of "The Grey Mare" has been postponed to May 17.

—While a young man was riding along Front street last night he lost his lantern and rode two blocks before he discovered the loss. He returned for the lantern, which he found in the road.

The Spring House Cleaning Wisely urged by the BOARD OF HEALTH is not complete without a proper use of DISINFECTANTS. But, in choosing these, do not be misled into paying fancy prices for "patent" specialties. Common lime is better than any of them for damp cellars and stables. For vaults, drains, cess-pools, the best and cheapest disinfectant is COPPERAS, supplied by us by the pound or barrel at low rates. But for use in the house, in the plumbing, in kitchen sinks, in closets, for purifying the air of sick rooms, deodorizing offensive discharges—in short, for all purposes of a household disinfectant, nothing can excel the powerful solution of chlorides made and sold by us for 15 years under the name of REYNOLDS'S ODORLESS DISINFECTANT. Quart bottles 25c. To be diluted for use according to directions on label.
REYNOLDS'S PHARMACY. Park and North avenues.

PETITIONS DO N'T COUNT.

Persuasive Counselor Reed Can Get a Man to Sign Anything.

(From The Elizabeth Herald.)

Lawyer Charles A. Reed, of Plainfield, declared in the Court of Common Pleas Saturday, in opposing Mr. Lindabury, that so far as applications or protests gotten up among men who go about obtaining signatures are concerned, he did n't believe in them. They in no manner expressed the feeling of the public Then (turning to Mr. Lindsbury) he said:

"Notwithstanding the unblemished character of Mr. Lindabury and the high esteem in which he is held, I venture to say that if I was so disposed I could go about with pencil and paper and induce at least fifty reputable citizens to place their signatures to the paper to have Mr. Lindabury prohibited from practicing law.

"The trouble is"—Mr Reed said—"that good citizens, rather than be bored, will sign their names to almost anything in the shape of a petition in order to get rid of the petitioner."

HIGH SCHOOL CHRONICLES.

The boys of the High School were divided into two companies this morning. Practice will be commenced for a prize competitive drill the last of next month. Officers were chosen as follows:

COMPANY A.

Captain—Llewellyn Bull.
First Lieutenant—J. W. Kirkner.
Second Lieutenant—H. C. Wells.
First Sergeant—T. D. Blair.
Second Sergeant—F. W. Goddard.
Third Sergeant—H. B. Drake.
First Corporal—Fred Loizeaux.
Second Corporal—J. V. Beekman, Jr.

COMPANY B.

Captain—Albert Woltmann.
First Lieutenant—E. I. Serrell.
Second Lieutenant—V. H. Green.
First Sergeant—F. W. Cornwell.
Second Sergeant—Lambert Fish.
Third Sergeant—E. O. Clark.
First Corporal—C. C. Gallup.
Second Corporal—Arthur Crane.

An Accession to Plainfield.

The Cloak Journal for May says:

"Miss Laura Powers, who lately assisted John Ferris in the cloak department of McWhirter & Wilson, Newark, has become the buyer for Edward White, proprietor of one of the largest dry goods houses in Plainfield. The departments devoted to suits, cloaks, wrappers and infants' wear are in her charge. Miss Powers is a lady whose unusual intelligence has enabled her to profit as far as possible the opportunities for observation which she has had in the course of her business experience. Her equipment is such that her friends need have no fears for her success."

Good Samaritanism.

An intoxicated man walking along East Front street with a pail of beer fell on the sidewalk opposite Casper's Hotel. He was unable to rise and lay floundering in a pool of beer.

A barber passed by on a bicycle. He was so much amused that he turned and went by again, calling attention to the man's condition. A letter carrier came up next and was more charitably inclined. He helped the man up and sent him home.

Frightened by the Army.

A horse and wagon belonging to A. M. Griffen, and in charge of Frank Krewson, was driven on Watchung avenue opposite North avenue yesterday, when the Industrial delegation was passing by. The horse became frightened and almost upset the wagon in which was seated a little girl. Krewson jumped out and with a little assistance controlled the horse.

—Four electric lamps on West End avenue have been broken by boys. The Edison Company has printed notices announcing the penalty, but does not display them.

The times have forced many a manufacturer and importer to throw their entire stock under the merciless hammer of the auctioneer, to be sold for hard cash—that they had to have. No matter what goods brought, they had to go, and no name is so often heard or is more famailiar to the auctioneer of the largest auction houses in New York than "WHITE OF PLAINFIELD." If you care to know it, that's where he gets so many good bargains—one of the reasons why he can undersell all others. We knew a man once, but that's another story.
So Is This.
MILLINERY—You can drop in anywhere almost now a days and buy a hat, and a good one. But, ladies, don't you think that your hats and bonnets were trimmed in the latest style before we ever went into the millinery business? We guess so, and you did not have to go to New York for them, either. Visit our millinery department; it will pay you both ways—style and price.
HOSIERY—You buy your hosiery here, don't you? We sell nothing but Hermsdorf dyed stockings. Import them ourselves, and sell them at the same price the other fellows pay for them. Children's fast black ribbed hose 8c., ladies do., seamless, 12c., men's seamless half hose, 3 pair for 25c.
COAT AND WRAPPER DEPT.—That new department for the sale of ladies' coats capes, wrappers and dresses is a wonderful success. When you can buy a good cambric wrapper for 89c. it does not pay to make them, and coats and capes for spring we are clearing out our entire stock at what they cost.
DRESS GOODS—Good time to buy; never lower in price and never as low again. All our 50, 60 and 75c dress goods go at 39c. All on table No. 1. See that line of swivel wash silks for shirt waists; price only 55c., cost the man who made them 65c.
HOUSEFURNISHINGS—No better housefurnishing department anywhere. We have everything you want in matting, shades, crockery, tinware, dinner, tea and toilet sets. The great sale of granite ironware goes right on. Just see the assortment; the prices are interesting.
MEN'S UNDERWEAR—We have just bought from a mill hard pressed for money five cases of men's summer undeawear. Case No. 1, men's Balbriggan shirts 30c, case No. 2, do., 50c., case No. 3, men's medium weight shirts and drawers 60c., regular price $1. One case men's natural wool shirts and drawers 80c., regular $1.25 shirt. One case ladies' ribbed vests 13, 15, 18, 22, 25c.

WEST END RAILWAY.

CITY COUNCIL DICTATES ITS TERMS FOR EXTENSION.

Ordinance Introduced Stipulating Under What Terms Dunellen Rapid Transit May Be Established.

At the Common Council meeting held last night a street railway extension ordinance was adopted on first reading and the purchase of fire hose was finally decided upon. Councilman Ginna took the chair in the absence of President See.

A petition of residents of Elmwood place between Front and Second streets for a hydrant to be placed 500 feet south of Front street was referred with power. Other petitions for improvements referred were for two lights on Church street, one between Front and Second streets and one between Second and Third; for two lights on Madison avenue, southeast of Ninth street; and for an established grade in the same part of the avenue.

The water company reported as ready four new fire hydrants on Hillside avenue, Garfield League, No. 22, of Loyal Ladies, asked the Council to visit the First Presbyterian Church Cemetery Memorial Day and the request was filed. Charles H. Smith's petition was referred with power. He wishes to move to John street the house 422 West Seventh street formerly owned by Charles Potter. Chief Grant asked for an appropriation of $145 for police uniforms and $30 for other department expenses. The petition was referred with power.

Twenty-four residents of the West End asked for an extension of the street railway on West Front street to the city line, using T rails on crossties, the street to be macadamized to the level between and for 18 inches on each side of the rails and octagonal wooden poles being used. Quick action was urged because of present inconvenience. The petition was received.

The resignation of Michael Seader as engine driver was accepted. Elections in the companies held last evening were confirmed. City Physician Simpson presented a quarterly report of cases he had treated. The City Treasurer handed in his regular report.

Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh made an annual report of the city's legal affairs. In the Supreme Court, he reported, Charles K. Moore had failed to prosecute his suit on contract with due diligence, and notice has been served on his attorneys of a motion to non-suit which will be heard in Trenton June 5. The Watchung avenue extension was treated under the two cases against the city and borough on certiorari of the State, Jacob Miles, prosecutor, and the State, Adaline Brock, Henry B. Lounsbury, Ira Mundy and Firman Long, prosecutors. The Supreme Court declared repealed the special act under which the assessments for the improvement had been made.

In the County Court of General Sessions the case of John Cahill against the city had been prosecuted to judgment. He appealed to the Quarter Sessions and gave bond. As he failed to go on with his appeal the prosecutor of the pleas brought suit on his bond and will shortly levy on the judgment. In the Court of Common Pleas the City Treasurer against M. F. Watson on appeal from the sentence for selling liquor without a license, has been set down for June 4 before the Court and jury in Elizabeth.

Councilman Fisk's action in sending back Frank E. Miller's improperly drawn application for a license for the Netherwood Hotel was sanctioned. The lease on the Council chamber was extended for one year on the same terms. The committee were given the power to place a light at 946 Central avenue, one on Muhlenberg place, and one on Third street near Clinton avenue.

An ordinance to amend one of 1887 was introduced by Councilman Fisk, adopted and ordered re-engrossed and advertised. It amended by substituting the words five instead of four in section four, making it read five inches in ten feet. Another introduced in the same way added the following territory to the tract laid down in 1887 and 1890 where durable walk should be laid: both sides of Watchung avenue from Richmond street to Woodland avenue; Park avenue from Ninth street to the Randolph road; Grant avenue from West Front street to Sherman avenue; West Front street from Plainfield to Grant avenues; and East Front street from Richmond street to Farragut road. The ordinance was adopted on second reading and ordered advertised before final passage.

Extra copies of last year's ordinances, 1,000 curb and sidewalk notices, and a small quantity of stationery for the overseer of the poor, were ordered. Councilman Fisk moved and it was carried that the next meeting be held May 21.

As a report on the western extension of the street railway, the Street Committee introduced an ordinance, which was adopted on first reading and ordered advertised. The main provisions are in short: The Plainfield Electric Street Railway Company is given the right to establish and maintain a single track extension on West Front street, from Grant avenue to the City line, under the restrictions of this ordinance and of future resolutions of the Council. A detailed map of the proposed work must first be approved by the city. The single track must be laid in the middle, with no turnouts longer than 150 feet or nearer together than 500 feet. The company must macadamize the street from curb to curb and keep it repaired to the satisfaction of the Council, as they must also do when laying any more track. In the case of the repairing of streets where any track is laid the company must re-pave between the rails for 18 inches on each side. If it refuses, the city can, with ten days notice, do the work and charge the company for it. Other rights and privileges are the same as those contained in sections four to eighteen of the grant of April 7, 1894.

If the company fails to complete the road within nine months, or fails to run cars daily for three months after completion, the track will be removed and sold at auction by the city and necessary repairs made with the money thus obtained. For each mile already laid by virtue of the ordinances of 1891 or 1892 or this ordinance, the company shall pay to the city for the first ten years $250 per year, and thereafter $500 a year. Payments will begin June 1, 1895. As a condition the company must file a contract binding them to the performance of the work. It must agree to protect the city by paying all damages and fully defend such suits, and file a bond of $20,000 to keep the contract. To take effect the ordinance must be accepted by the company within 90 days.

Copies were ordered sent to the councilmen and the company and it was adopted on first reading, to be finally dealt with at the next meeting.

Councilman Fisk, in the absence of Chairman Erickson of the Fire and Building Committee, recommended the purchase of 2,500 feet of new hose, 500 feet of each of the following makes and brands:

Eureka Hose Company, New Enterprise at 70 cents,

Calahan Company, Adriatic at 70 cents.

Councilman Fisk said that the hose could be paid for in October. The idea in dividing up the the order was that, although none of the samples burst under the 400 pounds guaranteed test, the different brands should have a practical test so that some standard hose could be selected.

The chairman asked why cheap hose should not be bought exclusively if it were as good as the other.

Councilman Fisk said that hose which stood the test alike might not wear the same. They were satisfied with all of the brands except the cheapest, which they wanted as an experiment, and that was fully guaranteed. Objections were made because of lack of money, but it was finally voted to buy the hose if it could be paid for next December.

The election of officers in the fire department was ratified, a number of hack and peddler's licenses granted, and the Council then adjourned.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

A stereopticon lecture on Africa will be given under the auspices of Christian Endeavor society in the Park Avenue Baptist Church Friday evening, May 11, at 8. Admission is free. All who attend will receive a Christian Endeavor welcome.

At the missionary service of the Christian Endeavor society of Trinity Reformed Church last evening interesting and instructive papers were read by Miss Phebe Mills on China, Miss Ella Benedict on India, and T. E. Hazell on Japan. Miss F. E. Mattison sang a solo "Have You Sought?" The young ladies composing the Flower Committee did themselves credit by the beautiful display of flowers. The president of the society, Fred E. Smith, presided at the meeting, with his usual ability.

At the anniversary exercises of the Christian Endeavor Society of the East Third Street Mission this evening, addresses will be made by Miss Alice B. Spangenberg and E. M. Cave. A musical programme has been arranged in which Miss F. May Grant, Miss Bessie Blair, Miss Glenn, B. T. Barnes, Elmer Bunyon, F. Howard Case will take part. This is the first anniversary of the society and everything will be done to make it a pleasant event.

A Gloriously Good Cause.

The friends of John Nessler gave a benefit ball in the Turn Verein Hall last night to help make up what he has lost by his long illness.

Everyone helped to make the money for Nessler as much as possible. The Saengerbund charged nothing for the use of the hall and E. M. O'Reilly furnished music free. Charles Meyer and his pupil, Master Schroeder, gave an acrobatic exhibition.

How Plainfield Looks on Paper.

A. H. Muller, the engraver of City Engineer Dunham's new atlas of the city and borough, says it is one of the finest pieces of work that has left his hands.

The double page outline map of the city and the plan of Hillside Cemetery are worthy of special notice. The other maps, showing the lots, buildings, etc., are models of fine engraving as well as of accuracy. Mr. Dunham is making a great effort to have the atlas a model in every respect and worthy of a place in every office and library.

Electric Wiring Tested.

Supt. McClurg started up one of the domestic circuit dynamos about 3 yesterday afternoon. The electric current was turned on the Babcock Building through the underground cable laid across Front street. The result was very satisfactory, and all interested expressed themselves as much pleased with the test.

WEST END NOTES.

The West End Fishing Brigade will start for a fishing trip Wednesday morning. President Thomson and Captain Fahye made a trip today and caught four large carp. Harry Turner caught 32 fish, one weighing 7 pounds.

William Crawford of Spooner avenue has received his artificial leg and is able to be out.

The West End ball team have challenged the Cuban Giants for a game for Saturday afternoon, May 12, on the Scott Printing Press grounds.

The Young People's Society will hold their regular meeting tonight in Hope Chapel.

Fitzgerald and his army were well fed. Mrs. Grieb of West Third street gave them 63 eggs, Mrs. Scott of West Third street gave them 100 cups of coffee, and a resident of West Seventh street gave them $5 in cash.

WEST ENDER.

National Council of Women.

PHILADELPHIA, May 8.—The executive committee and committee of arrangements of the national council of women, representing a membership of over 700,000 in the United States, is in executive session in the Continental hotel here. While there are a number of reports and subjects to be considered, the most important matter will be the arrangement of a programme for the session of the national council in Washington in February, 1895, and the determination of the number of delegates to which each local council will be entitled.

Yale Baseball Changes.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., May 8.—Three important changes have been made in the personnel of the Yale nine. Murphy, whose work at second base has been unsatisfactory, will be dropped to the list of substitutes; Quinby, the short stop, will for the present supersed him, and Captain Case will come in from centre field to short stop. Captain Case's position will be filled by either Keator, a freshman, or Redington, of the law school.

Abbott and Bowen Fight to a Draw.

NEW ORLEANS, May 8.—Stanton Abbott, of England and Andy Bowen, of New Orleans, fought for a purse of $2,500 at the auditorium in the presence of 4,000 people last night. The fight was for ten rounds only, at the request of Attorney General Cunningham. At the end of the tenth round the contest was declared a draw and the purse was divided equally between the boxers.

Getting Chummy.

BERLIN, May 8.—The betrothal of the czarvitch to Princess Alice of Hesse was preceded and followed by a friendly correspondence between Emperor William and the czar.

Oswego Casket Works Burned.

OSWEGO, N. Y., May 8.—Fire destroyed the works of the Oswego Casket company, causing a loss of between $30,000 and $35,000.

TO HELP WOMEN.

That Is Why This Woman Writes.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

Few people have any idea of the suffering that oppresses some women.

Pains run rampant through their entire bodies. They suffer secretly as long as they can, and then go all to pieces and don't care what happens.

Yet this misery is easily relieved; thousands of American women proclaim the fact.

The portrait presented here is that of Mrs. J. M. Bender, who lives on the old York Road at Nicetown, Pa. She has been for many years in very poor health.

She had falling of the womb and other forms of female weakness, with headache, severe backache, pains all over her body, and serious kidney trouble.

Her blood was in such a bad state that physicians said she had dropsy. Nearly discouraged she tried Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and to her great surprise it made her a well woman.

She now wishes to tell women all over the world to take the Vegetable Compound and be well. Any druggist has it.

Nothing in all the world has cured so many cases of female weaknesses as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Why don't you try it?

Rainforth's Strange Case.

By WILL LISENBEE.

CHAPTER II.

Had the earth opened to swallow me I could not have been more surprised than I was at the constable's announcement.

"Gerald Rainforth arrested for murder!" I gasped in astonishment. "Surely there must be some dreadful mistake!"

The officer shook his head.

"I hope the young man will be able to prove himself clear," he said, "but the detectives claim to have some very strong evidence against him."

"It is all a terrible mistake. He is as innocent of any crime as you or I."

"I hope so, but we can't always judge by appearances."

"Where have they taken him?"

"To the Mayburg jail." And with this the officer bade me good afternoon and walked up the street.

I threw myself into a chair and began to reflect on the startling news I had just heard. I must go to Gerald Rainforth at once. I had no doubt of his innocence and felt confident of his speedy release. Perhaps he could easily explain how it had happened that he had been suspected of committing the crime. I knew that the detectives, hoping to gain the reward, would jump at the most flimsy plea to arrest some one.

A half hour later I called at the jail. I found Gerald seated by the grated window, calmly puffing a cigar while he perused the columns of a late New York paper.

He greeted me warmly as I came in, then pushed me a chair and bade me be seated with an air as calm and unruffled as if nothing had happened.

"In the name of heaven, what does this mean, Gerald?" I exclaimed.

"Only another blunder of those stupid, blockhead detectives," he answered carelessly. "I suppose they thought it necessary to arrest some one, and I happened to be the victim selected. I hope they won't detain me long," he added, "for I have planned to be off for France within a week."

I was surprised at his expressed intention to go away so soon, but I felt greatly relieved to know that he regarded his arrest so lightly and had confidence in speedy release.

I remained with him for nearly an hour, but to my surprise he gave no hint of any circumstances regarding his arrest. In fact, he seemed to wish to avoid the subject altogether, and I left him more mystified than ever. On my way to my office I met the mayor of Mayburg. He had just had an interview with the detective who had caused the arrest to be made, but that individual, like all those of his profession, was very reticent regarding the affair, but seemed very positive in his belief that the right man had been captured. He had stated, however, that Jack Peters, the gardener at Darkwood Hall, had recognized young Rainforth as the man he had seen passing through the grounds on the night of the murder. He had other evidence, he asserted, which would be brought forward at the proper time.

In spite of the light manner in which young Rainforth regarded the affair I recognized the fact that matters were assuming a serious complexion. He was a comparative stranger in the place. Even I, who was perhaps more intimately acquainted with him than any one in Mayburg, knew little of his past history, and it was plain to see how easily suspicion might point to him, being the only stranger in the village.

Was it really he whom the gardener had seen at Darkwood Hall on that fatal night? If so, what errand could have taken him thither? He had never mentioned the matter to me. Then it was claimed that there were other things back of this which would be made known at the proper time. It did not require much reflection for me to see that, although I felt convinced of the young man's innocence, there might be woven about him such a network of circumstantial evidence as to give him far more trouble than he dreamed to escape from its meshes.

As I walked on toward my office the surprising intelligence I had just received gave me ample food for reflection. Then another event had occurred, which, had it happened at any other time, would have caused considerable comment. The master of Darkwood Hall, so the report ran, had at last come to make his abode in his long neglected country seat. Strange servants had been seen about the place, and a young woman of surpassing loveliness—evidently the daughter of old Isaac Dangerfield—had been seen walking in the grounds. When they had arrived no one seemed to know, for the recent murder had so absorbed the attention of the inhabitants of Mayburg that they gave little heed to events of a social character.

It was almost sunset when I reached my office. To my surprise, I found a servant from Darkwood Hall waiting for me with a carriage. He informed me that my services were required at the hall at once. Miss Dangerfield was very ill—in fact, she was lying in an unconscious condition at that moment—and the housekeeper had dispatched him for a physician with instructions to make all possible haste.

As soon as I could enter my office and get my case I climbed into the carriage and was driven rapidly away. From the servant, who was very talkative and volunteered to impart a great deal of information, I learned that Isaac Dangerfield had died a year before, and that his daughter Grace, now the sole mistress of the hall, had arrived there with her servants on the 9th inst. and would probably make the place her permanent abode.

The mysterious tragedy which had taken place so near the hall, the servant informed me, had completely unstrung the nerves of the young lady. She had been fearfully shocked and horrified at the event and had for days been confined to her room, and now her symptoms had grown decidedly alarming.

On reaching the hall I was met at the door by the housekeeper, a kindly faced woman of about 40, who conducted me through a long wide hall and up a flight of stairs. Then, passing through another hall, I was ushered into a room occupying the eastern wing of the building. Every article of furniture in the room betokened opulence and exquisite taste, and upon a luxurious couch, from a curiously fashioned dragon shaped chandelier overhead, a cluster of waxen tapers shed a subdued radiance, revealing the face and arms of a young woman of surpassing beauty. Her face was of the purest type—olive tinted, with traces of suffering about the delicate mouth. Her eyes were closed, and her hair trailed in a dark wavy mass across the snowy pillow.

The nurse, who was seated by the bedside, arose as I entered.

"I think she is better now;" she said in a low tone. "She must have fainted, for she was unconscious for some time, but she revived, and now she has fallen asleep."

I seated myself by the couch and laid my hand gently on the patient's wrist. Her pulse was a little weak now, but there was no indication of any specific complaint aside from what might have been occasioned by undue excitement or overtaxed strength. I readily perceived that all she needed was rest and quiet and perfect freedom from all mental disturbance. I prepared a soothing mixture, which I instructed the nurse to administer to her when she should awake, but not to disturb her on any account as long as she would sleep.

I remained nearly a half hour to see if the patient would awake, but as she did not and seemed to be resting quietly I rose to leave. As I did so my movement caused her to move uneasily upon her pillow, and drawing her left hand from beneath the coverlet she threw it across her breast. As my eyes rested for one moment on the shapely hand I gave a start of astonishment. The first finger was missing!

Like a flash, the finding of the human finger in the murdered man's valise came to me, causing me to stand there for several moments as if in a dream. The nurse must have noticed my agitation, for stepping noiselessly to my side she threw a light covering across the sleeper's breast, casting a glance of impatience and displeasure at me at the same time.

Quickly recovering myself, I gave a few orders regarding the medicine I had left, then quitted the apartment and was conducted to the outside, where the carriage was waiting to carry me back to the village.

On reaching my office I found other calls awaiting me, and it was almost 12 o'clock before I was permitted to retire for the night. But it was 2 before I closed my eyes in sleep, for the strange discoveries I had made during the day rendered sleep impossible and kept my mind greatly disturbed.

Was it possible that the object found in the dead man's luggage could in any way be connected with the young mistress of Darkwood Hall? The finger missing from her hand corresponded in every way with the one found in the murdered man's effects, yet it seemed absurd to look upon the matter save in the light of a coincidence. But in spite of my efforts to dismiss the matter from my mind it kept coming up, like Banquo's ghost, and wouldn't be downed.

At last a conviction began to take possession of me that there was something more than a mere coincidence in the affair and ought to be investigated. Should I communicate my discoveries to the detectives and have the matter investigated? This seemed the only course left for me to pursue, yet I hesitated to use evidence that had come into my possession through a professional call.

So the thoughts over the affair kept my mind agitated till late in the night, and then I finally decided to lay all the facts before young Rainforth and consult with him as to how I should proceed.

From what I had learned from the garrulous servant it appeared that the mistress of Darkwood Hall had arrived on the 9th of the month. On the night of the 10th the murder had been committed. From this it was plain that she was at the hall when the tragedy had taken place, yet I was confident that this fact had not been known at the time the inquest had been held. If so, why had not some member of the household besides Jack Peters been summoned to testify before the coroner's jury?

The murdered man was a stranger. He had arrived at the place on the day following the arrival of the occupants of Darkwood Hall. He had been found within a stone's throw of the house, murdered, and added to these facts was the discovery I had made regarding the missing finger. All these facts taken together forced the conviction upon my mind that the mistress of Darkwood Hall was in some strange and inexplicable way mixed up in the terrible affair, yet from what I had seen of her it was impossible for me to believe she had been guilty of any crime.

CURES OTHERS

MRS. PRINGLE.

Mrs. MARTHA JANE PRINGLE, of Chase, Jackson Co., W. Va., writes: "Having been a great sufferer for many years with nearly every disease my sex is heir to, I can now say I am well and hearty. Have done more hard work in the past year, and with more ease, than I have done for twelve years.

Before consulting you I was the most wretched among women, unable to walk or sit up in bed, and now I owe my good health all to Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, 'Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Pellets.' I gained twelve pounds while using the first bottle of 'Prescription.'

I send you my picture together with my most heartfelt thanks. To any one suffering as I did who wants to know the particulars of my case and who will send a stamped envelope with name and address on, I will write particulars."

Don't Hesitate, but Call and Be Convinced That Every Statement We Make Is True.

To those who do not already know that there is established in Newark, at 105 Halsey street, a physician who stands in the foremost rank of his profession, who is indorsed by the leading colleges of the country and who can prove by witnesses right here in Newark (not by one, but by hundreds) that he has succeeded in curing cases that have been utterly given up by other physicians, and good ones, too. To those who do not these facts we state that any person, rich or poor, old or young, is welcome here and receive examination and advice free of charge.

Thousands praise the day they came to us for treatment. There is no guess work, no experimenting, no painful operation. No matter how difficult the case, no matter how much of the physician's time it may consume, the diagnosis will not only be thorough, it will be absolutely free. There is no taint of quackery or deception; no claim or statement is made that is not borne out by facts and living witnesses.

Mrs. Abby A. Ray, late of 86 Grove street, East Orange, who now lives at 400 Ellmore street, Escanaba, Mich., writes, under date of January 12: "The medicine arrived this morning and I am so glad it came. I am almost out, and it has helped me so much and I am so much pleased with its wonderful effort on my broken down system that I would like to testify to your great success in my case. I am feeling as well now, in fact better, than I had ever hoped to again."

This is one of many letters that we receive daily. We have the originals at our office and if you wish you may see them. Another thing: We never publish or reveal a patient's name unless they so desire.

DR. STARKWEATHER.

There is not a penny to pay for the fullest medical advice. Dr. Starkweather is a graduate of the Berkshire Medical College, Massachusetts, and of the Medico-Chirurgical College of Philadelphia; endorsed also by the College of Physicians and Surgeons and Bellevue Medical College of New York. We invite all sufferers from whatever cause to call at our office, No. 105 Halsey street, Newark, where Dr. Starkweather is in attendance daily to give examination and advice entirely free of charge. It matters not what the disease, or how many years you have suffered, in spite of means adopted in your behalf, a visit to this office and the privileges of the same will cost you nothing, and may be the means of saving your life. We prepare all our medicines and prescribe the remedies indicated. This plan enables the patient to receive directly from us such remedies as will produce the results promised.

Our office is open daily from 10 a. m. to 9 p. m. Sundays 4 to 6 p. m.

We Figure This way.

A new gown will cost you all the way from ten to twenty four dollars. To have last season's dress cleaned or dyed, costs two dollars - perhaps a little more.

We save you money and incidentally make a little ourselves.

A REMARKABLE CURE

MIDDLEBUSH, Somerset Co., N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For the past forty years I have been afflicted with bleeding piles. I suffered constant pain in the lower part of my body, but when I had an operation of the bowels the pain was perfectly terrible, and was most always attended with the loss of a large quantity of blood. My condition was complicated with prolapse of the rectum, which at first only made its appearance when I had a movement of the bowels, but at length the parts became so weakened that the protrusion took place while walking or stooping, or after the slightest exertion, and sometimes even while I was at rest. Whenever this happened it gave rise to the most agonizing pain, and felt as though something was pulling the life right out of me. In fact only those similarly situated can imagine the suffering and distress which I had to endure from day to day, and which made my life a terrible burden. Hearing of Dr. Lighthill's wonderful success in the cure of difficult chronic diseases, I placed myself under his care, and now I am proud and happy to say that, marvelous as it may seem, he effected a complete and radical cure in my case in every respect, and he performed this cure without any painful operation or preventing me from work. Since this terrible disease has been removed by Dr. Lighthill's skill I feel new life, and for the first time in forty years I feel once more what it is to be without daily pain, discomfort and distress. I am not a wealthy man, but no amount of money would tempt me to be put back in my former condition.

I make this public statement, not only from a deep and everlasting sense of gratitude to Dr. Lighthill, but also as a simple Christian duty to let the afflicted know where they can find a physician whose skill cannot be surpassed, and in whom implicit confidence can be placed.

H. VROOM.

A LOCAL ENDORSEMENT.

No. 190 Somerset st., Plainfield, N. J.

To the Residents of Plainfield, N. J.

Mr. H. Vroom, whose statement appears above, is a brother-in-law of mine. I personally know of his case and his suffering and also know the happy fact that to the surprise of himself and his friends, Dr. Lighthill effected a radical and permanent cure. His statement is true in every respect and does not say half enough in praise of Dr. Lighthill. Anyone who wishes this statement verified is at liberty to come and see me personally.

JOHN C. KENNEY.

Dr. Lighthill

Formerly of Trenton, the well-known expert in Chronic Diseases, can be consulted daily (except Thursdays) on all OBSTINATE AND COMPLICATED diseases of the human system of whatever name and nature, at his office and residence,

No. 144 Crescent Avenue.

Containing a large array of testimonials of remarkable cures, similar to that above, and giving valuable medical information on important matters, will be mailed free to any address, or furnished on application at Dr. Lighthill's office, No. 144 Crescent avenue.

LATEST TARIFF TINKER

Senate's Work Not Acceptable to House Democrats.

Hoped to Have the Bill Returned in Practically its Original Form—Disappointed That the Measure Has Been So Materially Changed—No Demand for Some of the Increases.

WASHINGTON, May 9.—The changes made by the senate committee in the tariff bill are not acceptable to the democrats of the house. The democratic members of the ways and means committee who framed the Wilson tariff bill and other representatives do not conceal their disappointment that the house measure should have been so materially modified.

A general canvas of the house disclosed no intention on the part of the democrats to resist the senate changes in arbitrary spirit, but developed the fact that the house democrats generally were entirely satisfied with the bill as it went to the senate and no attempt was made to conceal their regret that it should not have been returned to them in practically its original form.

Mr. McMillin, of Tennessee, said, in speaking of the amendments made by the senate committee, that some of the increases are not demanded either by the manufacturers or by the country.

"I realize that the senate committee has labored under many difficulties," he said, "and that they have yielded some points which they would gladly have refused. But many of the increases are excessive and I hope that the senate itself will reject them and not call upon the house to concur with them. The democrats have only a majority of one in the senate and they must move cautiously. They have not dared to reduce the rate in the tax imposed on incomes, and that never will be reduced either by the senate or the house."

Mr. Whiting, of Michigan, another member of the ways and means committee, said that he did not see how the house could accept an increase in the cotton schedule.

Mr. Rayner, of Maryland, who was a sturdy supporter of the bill, said: "I think the Wilson bill as reported by the committee with the committee amendments was as good a bill as can be framed and I regret that it has been found necessary to change it in any substantial particulars. It is impossible to tell what the outcome in the house will be. The people of the country want the tariff uncertainties settled as speedily as possible."

These interviews might be extended indefinitely, but the gentleman quoted above apparently reflect the sentiment of all their democratic associates, many other of whom were seen and whose objections to the changes were based upon substantially the same lines.

MR. REED'S CRITICISMS.

The Ex-Speaker's Views on the Latest Tariff Changes.

WASHINGTON, May 9.—Ex-Speaker Reed makes the following criticism on the amended senate tariff bill:

"The presentation by the senate finance committee of 81 pages of amendments, apparently more than 400 in number, is a delicate compliment to Mr. Wilson and the house of representatives.

It virtually says that the house bill was right except on 400 or 500 points, and that the senate committee, after a month's work, find 400 mistakes in their own bill. This will hardly tend to restore confidence in the country, especially as every amendment smacks of prior ignorance or present barter.

"It seems impossible that a document so constructed as to show traffic in every item should be permitted to see daylight in one batch. It would have been wiser to have let the matter come before the country item by item rather than agglomerate the dreadful total in one bunch.

"Evidently it will be the duty of the senate to fully investigate these proposed amendments, for when a committee of finance refuses hearings, because it knows intuitively all things, but finds by some kind of backstairs influence that it has made 400 mistakes, it is evident that that committee will bear watching."

Constitutional Convention.

ALBANY, May 9.—The constitution convention committee on privileges and elections met last night and appointed Messrs. Cookinham, Lincoln and Chipp a sub-committee to look into the Buffalo contests; and Messrs. Lester, Crosby and Gibney a sub-committee to inquire into the Brooklyn contests; Chairman Hirschberg as ex-officio a member of each sub-committee, which has the power to employ stenographer and summon persons and papers and may sit in the districts where the contests arise.

Lottie Evans Convicted.

TORONTO, May 9.—The Sharon poisoning case which has been in progress before the court of assizes during the past ten days has been concluded, the jury finding a verdict of guilty against Lottie Evans and George Osman. They were charged with conspiracy to poison Walter Evans, a Sharon, York county, hotel keeper, and husband of Lottie Evans. Charles Pegg, charged with being an accomplice, was discharged. Sentence of the two guilty ones was deferred.

Sugar Trust Not Barred from Illinois.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., May 9.—Attorney General Moloney, on being asked if it were true that he had ordered the sugar trust to keep its goods out of Illinois, replied with emphasis that it was not and there was absolutely no foundation for any such statement.

George K. Duckworth Dead.

CINCINNATI, May 9.—Mr. George K. Duckworth, widely known on account of his connection with the failure of the Metropolitan bank, is dead of pneumonia. Mr. Duckworth for many years has been a prominent member of the whiskey trust.

Fatally Beaten By White Caps.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., May 9. — Hevier county white caps Monday night took Frank Smith, an indolent farmer out and whipped him so badly that he is dying. His wife has been notified to leave or she will be beaten to death.

Commissioner of Fisheries.

ALBANY, May 9.—Gov. Flower has appointed Hon. Isaac N. Cox of Ellenville, Ulster county, commissioner of fisheries in place of A. S. Joline, whose term of office has expired.

DOINGS IN CONGRESS

Mr. Hoar Delivers a Somewhat Caustic Speech.

Principally Against the Finance Committee's Chairman and the "Three Tariff Bill Doctors"—Government Printing Office and Naval Appropriation Bills Considered.

WASHINGTON, May 9.—The debate on the tariff bill was taken up in the senate early yesterday and continued throughout the day. Senator Allen's resolution as to the police assault upon Coxey and his two adjutants having gone over without discussion or action till to-day, Senator Hoar, spoke for two and a half hours in opposition to the tariff bill, and Mr. Quay delivered the sixth instalment of his speech against it.

Mr. Hoar's speech was made up largely of invectives against the chairman of the senate finance committee and against the "three doctors" who had prepared the senate bill—Senators Mills, Vest and Jones. He told an anecdote of Sir Walter Scott who once, traveling near the famous battlefield of Flodden, required the services of a physician, and recognized in him a Scotch blacksmith of his acquaintance. This old horse doctor told him that he treated his patients with two specifics, laudanum and calomel, and that although "whiles they died, and whiles not, it would be a long time before they made up for Flodden."

Making an application of the anecdote, Mr. Hoar said that "the three doctors," of the finance committee had also two specifics—free trade and ad valorem—and that although "whiles" American industries would die under this regime, and "whiles" not, it would be a long time before they would make up for Appomattox.

Mr. Hoar also held up to ridicule the position of the senator from Tennessee (Mr. Harris), who had got as protection for Tennessee marble a duty of 40 cents per cubic foot in the rough and 75 cents per cubic foot when sawed and dressed and yet favored "a tariff for revenue only."

He declared that from all parts of the country and from all occupations came up one unbroken chorus of loathing and abhorence for the Wilson bill, for the man who begot it, and for the men who were its godfathers. In the course of his speech he got into an altercation with Senator Gray (dem., Del.) over the charge that democratic senators who would vote for the pending bill would, in view of their construction of the constitution, violate their oaths.

The senate then adjourned at 6:10 p. m.

House of Representatives.

The bill to purchase a site for the government printing office was recommitted to the committee on public buildings and grounds with instructions to report a bill providing for the erection of a printing office on ground already in the possession of the United States. This was agreed to by a vote of 149 to 89, after a long discussion of the policy which it foreshadowed, of erecting public buildings upon the public reservations of the city.

The naval appropriation bill for the year ending June 30, 1895, was taken up in committee of the whole and read a first time and made the unfinished business on the calendar after a brief explanation of its provisions by Cummings (dem., N. Y.), chairman of the committee on naval affairs.

"LUCKY" BALDWIN SUED.

Miss Lillian Ashley, of Boston, Demands $75,000 for Betrayal.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., May 9.—Miss Lillian Ashley, of Boston, has sued "Lucky" Baldwin, the millionaire horseman, for $75,000 for betrayal.

Closed on Account of a Strike.

OLEAN, N. Y., May 9.—Pierce's tannery has closed on account of a strike and 135 men are out.

Henry Ward Beecher
Said:—
"Dyspepsia is equal to seven devils. If H-O can cast it out, success to H-O."
H-O Hornby's Oatmeal
H-O owes its popularity and unprecedented success to its uniformity of quality—it is never bitter, sour, or unclean—it is made and sold on honor, and has gained the entire confidence of the people.
THE H-O COMPANY, NEW YORK.

IN THE COKE REGIONS.

Threatening Notices Posted—Secret Scheme of the Operators.

CONNELLSVILLE, Pa., May 9.—The strike in the coke region has generated into secret attempts by the operators to start an open warfare by the strikers for a continuous shutdown. The strikers have scored the most points. The strikers posted notices on all the company houses in the vicinity of Hill Farm. The notices were headed with skull and crossbones, written in red ink, and read: "Death—All men who go to work at the Hill Farm plant—Prepare to meet your God." Only ten men went to work.

The company gave notice that they would keep the furnace in blast at all hazards and that if the men did not go to work new men will be imported. The situation at Hill Farm is fast becoming critical. The Frick company are making strenuous efforts to start a few plants in full. With this end in view they are collecting men who are willing to work from all their plants, sending them to Valley, Southwest Nos. 3 and 4, and United No. 2. As soon as these works are fired up, others will be started on the same plan. By this plan the Frick company broke the last strike and they expect to be successful now.

United States Marshal Scanlon arrived at Moyer and served the United States court injunction on about a dozen of the alleged leaders of the Moyer mob. Marshal Scanlon went to Vanderbilt to serve injunction papers on the men at Rainey's works. The deputies at Moyer threw a number of the strikers out of their homes. There is a general complaint about the cruelty of the strikers by the deputies which has won the strikers' universal sympathy. It is given out that a number of the operators have offered the strikers their scale, but the latter are now fighting for a recognition of their organization.

Militia and Employers.

CLEVELAND, O., May 9.—Col. C. L. Kennan of the Fifth regiment, O. N. G., has been notified that three members of company B have been discharged by their employers for responding to Mayor Blee's call for militia to suppress the riots on Wednesday last. The discharged men are E. L. Bruck, of the Morrean Gas Fixture company; W. Byron, employed at Rumsey's bathrooms, and the third man's name is missing. Mayor Blee has taken the matter up and will force a settlement with the employers. The Ohio law imposes a penalty of six months' imprisonment and $1,000 fine for just such attempts to prevent a soldier from responding to a call.

Coming Conference.

CLEVELAND, May 9.—An officer of the Massillon Coal Operators' association, who has been travelling in the Ohio and Pennsylvania fields for several days, said that the conference which will be held in this city next week will put an end to the strike, whether an agreement is reached or not. "There are dozens of the big operators," he said, "who have offered what the men have asked, viz., the rate that was fixed several years ago, which averged about 70 cents. Many of them have the assurances of their men that they will go to work, whatever the result of the conference, and the moment any of the large mines are put into operation, the strike will be broken.'

Striking Miners Hungry.

PEORIA, Ill., May 9.—The striking miners of Peoria county are now face to face with hunger. Many of them, especially those with families to support, are without the common necessities of life. They have no money, and their supply of food is exhausted in many cases. The distressing situation was the subject of a meeting of the United Mine Workers' officers and the local organization at Bartonville. It was decided to make an appeal to the people of Peoria for contributions of food, clothing and cash. All single men are expected to care for themselves. The men at the Collier mine, who were driven out Friday, returned to work.

Stranding of La Champagne.

NEW YORK, May 9.—A decision has been reached at the French Line Steamship company's office which relieves Captain Laurent of any blame for the stranding of La Champagne. A. Forget, the company's agent in this city, said that Pilot Keeley was entirely to blame. "There are two bell buoys which mark the channel," said Mr. Forget, "and Pilot Keeley did not hear the ringing of the left hand buoy, and so ran the ship to the right of the inner buoy and into shoal water." Nothing can be done to Pilot Keeley, however, as a pilot cannot be held except in cases of criminal negligence.

New York Nominations.

WASHINGTON, May 9.—The New York nominations for marshal and district-attorney are still hanging fire in the senate. When they were not confirmed by the executive session of about a week ago it was said that Mr. Hill was not present, and that nothing would be done until Mr. Hill returned. At the last executive session Mr. Hill was in attendance, but the New York men were not confirmed, after all. This is taken as conclusive evidence that the reason the nominations are still kept in suspense is due to Mr. Hill's personal objections.

Nominations.

WASHINGTON, May 9.—The president sent to the senate the following nominations: H. H. D. Peirce of Massachusetts, to be secretary of the legation of the United States at St. Petersburg, Russia. Postmasters: Connecticut—E. R. Carter, New Hartford. New Jersey—J. P. Flynn, Salem; J. M. Hetfield, Plainfield. New York—Elijah Griswold, Riverhead.

New Britain Liquor Men Scared.

HARTFORD, Conn., May 9.—As a result of the raids on the saloons of T. B. Farrell and Frank Koletzki's at New Britain, the liquor men are badly scared and it is now impossible to get a glass of beer in the city.

Chiefs of Police in Session.

ST. LOUIS, May 9.—The annual meeting of the National Union of Chiefs of Police is in session here, with an attendance of 75 members.

IN THE LAW'S CLUTCHES

Trouble for Commonwealers at All Points.

Coxey, Browne and Jones Convicted, and Probably the "General" Will Receive Orders To-day to Vacate the Present Camp—Randall and Staff and Sweetland in Jail.

WASHINGTON, May 9.—Coxey's troubles in Washington may now be said to be fairly begun. Convicted yesterday with his lieutenants in the police court he will probably receive a peremptory order to-day from the district commissioners to remove his so-called army from their present camp at once under penalty of himself being arrested and the men ordered to leave the city or be sent to the workhouse.

The doctors who investigated the Coxey camp under orders from the district commissioners reported in part that the surroundings of this square, including the premises inside of the fence, are of a germ breeding character, likely to cause all forms of contagious and infectious diseases. The hospital tent is also used for a commissary department and is located in what might be termed a "mud hole." The earth in nearly all portions of the ground is spongy and is composed principally of decomposed vegetable and animal matter. The men composing the so-called army sleep on straw laid on bare ground of this character, which makes it necessarily injurious to their health.

"In view of the condition of this square as we described it," the report concludes, "we are of the opinion that it is entirely unfit for human habitation, and that it should be vacated at once to avoid a possible epidemic of disease to the people of the surrounding neighborhood, as well as to the inhabitants of the whole district. It is a menace to health which cannot be overlooked, and we would recommend in the strongest language that immediate steps be taken to have it vacated in the interests of the public health of the people of the District of Columbia."

It is not believed that Coxey can find any other place in the city on which to camp his men, and an order to leave the present came would mean the end of the commonweal, as a body, in this city.

The result of the police court trial of Coxey, Browne and Jones was no surprise except for the accused and their following. When the verdict was announced the foreman of the jury had some difficulty in explaining it and this led a lawyer for the defence to object to the finding on the ground that the clerk of the court had misunderstood the verdict and had wrongly recorded it. The objection was overruled. The finding of the jury was that Coxey, Browne and Jones are guilty on the first count, which charges them with carrying banners designed to bring the Coxey army into prominence in the capitol grounds.

On the second count, of unlawfully tramping on the grass of the capitol grounds, Coxey and Browne are found guilty, while the charge against Jones was dismissed.

Mr. Lipscomb gave notice of a motion for a new trial, and asked for an arrest of judgment. The motion will be returnable in four days.

At the instance of the district attorney the bail of the defendants was renewed in the sum of $500 for each, after which the court adjourned.

The penalty imposed by the statute for offences of this kind is: "Fine or imprisonment or both at the discretion of the judge of the police court—the fine not to exceed $100, the imprisonment not to suceed 60 days."

CAME TO GRIEF IN NEW YORK.

Capt. Sweetland Looked Up and His Army Not Permitted to Parade.

NEW YORK, May 9.—Captain Sweetland with his 60 followers arrived at 146th street and Third avenue last evening intending to continue the march down the avenue to the people's party headquarters in 10th street. He was intercepted by a policeman who asked him what this meant. Captain Sweetland replied:

"It means an addition to Coxey's army."

"Have you got a permit to travel through the city in marching order with your men?" continued the officer.

"No, sir; I have not," replied the captain. "I did not know it was necessary. I sent my advance representative to the city early in the day to make arrangements for my arrival and my reception, and I had agreed to meet him at 129th street and Third avenue."

"I can't help your arrangements with your advance agent," said the policeman. "As you have no permit you will have to go to the station house. So roll up your flags and come along."

Captain Sweetland turned over his men to the command of Lieutenant Timothy Whalen with instructions to break ranks and make their way to the city as ordinary, free Americans. He then accompanied the policemen to the station house, where he was locked up for the night in a cell.

The men scattered and finally reached the headquarters in 10th street, where they were quartered for the night.

Randall and Staff in Felons' Cells.

LAPORTE, Ind., May 9.—"Gen." Randall and his staff were unable to secure bail and are now in a common cell, accused of conspiracy to commit felony. The 300 loyal followers of Randall are waiting for his release in the open air two miles out on the Yellow river road. They are more determined than ever to walk to Washington or die on the road. The grand jury is not in session, but the mayor will appear before the circuit judge and file the information.

Kelly's Fleet to Sail To-day.

DES MOINES, Ia., May 9.—It is the intention of General Kelly to start the flotilla of flatboats bearing his army, now swelled to 1,400 men, down the Des Moines river sometime to-day. The general insisted on being reimbursed for all the money invested in the flatboats and most of it was given to him. Ample provisions have been furnished the army for one day and reports from points along the river indicate that the men will be cared for.

Galvin's Army Moves on Foot.

MCKEESPORT, Pa., May 8.—Colonel Galvin's army of the commonweal left McKeesport this morning on foot for Washington. Railroad transportation, paid or unpaid, could not be secured. The camp to-night will be at Monongahela City. There are now 235 men in the command. That part of the army expelled for mutiny started for Washington on freight trains.

RETIRES FROM TAMMANY.

But from the Turf, That is the Last Thing Croker Intends Doing.

NEW YORK, May 9.—Mr. Croker was seen at Tammany Hall this morning. He was surrounded by friends and appeared in remarkably good humor.

"I have nothing more to say as to the newspaper reports of my intention to resign my leadership of Tammany Hall," he said. "All the reports are substantially correct. I cannot stand the constant strain and confinement. I want to live as long as I can, and my health is precious to me. I have been 30 years in harness now, and want some rest. If I were dead, the organization would find another leader."

"Do you intend to sell your stud and retire from the turf?" asked the reporter.

At this Mr. Croker laughed heartily, and said: "Retire from the turf? That is the last thing I intend doing. Why, I want to get time to get on the turf. That statement is pure invention."

FEAR MEYER MAY GO FREE.

Toledo Officials Requested to Be Ready With Extradition Papers.

TOLEDO, O., May 9.—New York authorities are evidently fearful that the second trial of Dr. Henry C. F. Meyer will result in acquittal or disagreement, as Detective Julian, who made the arrest in Detroit last summer, has telegraphed the chief of police to have extradition papers prepared.

Al Baldwin, the liveryman from whom Dr. Meyer stole a horse last spring, swore out a warrant charging him with horse stealing, and Chief Raitz left presumably for New York. The authorities have a clear case against him for horse stealing and hope to secure evidence enough to convict him of murder while he is serving his sentence for the lesser crime.

The young woman whom he is said to have poisoned here in April, 1893, has never been identified.

FLOODS AND LANDSLIDES.

Houses Falling and Being Swept Away at St. Anne.

QUEBEC, May 9.—A despatch from St. Anne de la Paradesays the place is in great danger of destruction by landslides caused by floods, which recently nearly wiped St. Anne out of existence.

A short distance from here houses are falling into the river and others are crumbling to pieces.

The Canadian railway bridge is washing away and when it goes it is almost certain to take the whole village with it.

Farmers and villagers are abandoning their homes and removing their portable property to places of safety.

A later despatch says:

The situation is alarming. Houses are falling one by one and being carried away by the stream which is being made a raging torrent by the heavy rain fall.

Sanders' Men Steal a Train.

PUEBLO, Col., May 9.—Gen. J. S. Sanders and his army of commonwealers departed for Washington last night in a highly sensational manner. They seized a switch engine and empty coal cars and started east. A posse of 50 officers started for Olney where the legion is delayed by an action of the Missouri Pacific in dumping an engine and freight car off the track, to place them under arrest. It is reported that the commonwealers stopped their train between here and Boone and tore up the track to prevent pursuit. The Santa Fe train leaving here at 10 o'clock is preceded by a hand car as a matter of precaution. Bloodshed is feared.

Competition Drill Prizes.

EASTON, Pa., May 9.—In the competitive drill in Centre square for prizes offered by the local Knights of the Golden Eagle to the visiting knights, the first prize was won by the West Philadelphia commandery. The second prize was won by St. Mary's commandery, of Allentown. To the East Bangor castle was awarded the prize for the largest number, and to the first regiment, Philadelphia, the prize for the finest appearance.

Nominated By Gov. Werts.

TRENTON, N. J., May 9.—Gov. Werts has nominated Wilson H. Jenkins for prosecutor of Camden county. Lawrence T. Fell was renominated for inspector of factories and workshops and Joseph H. Gaskill was nominated for law judge of Burlington county court. The governor has vetoed the repealer of the act under which the census of the school children of the state is now taken.

The Gould Children Injured.

LAKEWOOD, N. J., May 9.—While out driving with the Gould family coachman the two sons of Mr. George Gould, aged 5 and 7 years, were thrown to the ground by the overturning of the vehicle. Kingdon, the eldest boy, escaped unhurt, but Jay, the other child, received a number of bruises and cuts which will lay him up for a while.

Breckinridge Off for Washington.

LEXINGTON, Ky., May 9.—The short but sharp campaign conducted by Col. Breckinridge in his own behalf for renomination by the democrats of the Ashland district for congress came to an end by the departure of the colonel for Washington. There was a large assemblage of his supporters at the railway station to bid him good-bye.

Champ Clarke Will Visit York, Pa.

WASHINGTON, May 8.—Representative Champ Clarke, of Missouri, has accepted the invitation of the democratic society of York, Pa., to attend their annual banquet which occurs on the 16 instant. Representative John Allen, of Mississippi, has also been invited but has not yet accepted.

Because He Doesn't Pay His Debts.

JERSEY CITY, May 9.—The board of education has dismissed Joseph Evans, the principal of school No. 21, for the reason, as stated at the meeting, that he does not pay his debts. As Evans is sick and out of town his side of the story cannot be had at present.

Collyer and Handler Matched.

NEW YORK, May 9.—A match has just been made, to a finish, between Jack Collyer and Jimmy Handler, to take place in the near future. The men are to fight with small gloves for $250 a side.

Loss for the Sub-Treasury.

NEW YORK, May 9.—The $500,000 gold engaged by Kuhn, Loeb & Co. for shipment to Europe by the steamer Normannia, will be withdrawn from the sub-treasury.

Cruiser Chicago at London.

LONDON, May 9.—The cruiser Chicago dropped anchor at the mouth of the Thames last evening.

POSTMASTER HETFIELD.

OPPOSITION BEFORE THE PRESIDENT, PROVES FRUITLESS.

Nomination Sent to the Senate, and the Nominee Immediately Notified by The Daily Press.

Yesterday afternoon, after this paper had gone to press, the President sent into the Senate the name of John M. Hetfield for Postmaster of Plainfield. The Press immediately notified Mr. Hetfield by telephone, congratulated him, and received his thanks, he not having heard of the news until then.

The nomination of Mr. Hetfield is a result of the action of Congressman Dunn and Postmaster-General Bissell as exclusively predicted in these columns some time ago. The Press told the full story of how Mr. Hetfield had been assured of nomination by Mr. Bissell. The General sent the name to the President as promised, and Mr. Cleveland had the nomination ready to send into the Senate when an avalanche of protests descended from Plainfield. Mr. Hetfield was notified to present himself for examination, prepared to refute the charges that he was not a worthy Democrat and that he was incapable. A large batch of communications had been received by the President against Mr. Hetfield. As an offset Mr. Hetfield presented a number of personal endorsements urging his appointment and assuring the President of his capability and worthiness. Chief of these were letters from Councilman V. L. Frazee, School Board President J. B. Probasco, C. Potter, Jr., C. Schepflin & Co., C. H. Rugg, J. P. Homan, J. E. Townsend, C. M. Ulrich, Frank Rowley, H. L. Freeman, C. W. Tallman, A. Manning, M. D., T. S. Davis, M. D., John Morton, Manager Plainfield Ice and Cold Storage Company, W. C. Boone, M. D., A. L. Cadmus, L. W. Randolph, D. Thickstun, Rev. C. Schenck, Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes.

A MAD NEWFOUNDLAND.

It Bites a Woman and Lacerates Both Arms of a Little Boy.

The Rev. C. H. Patton of Westfield gave his Newfoundland dog to Squire Peckham a few days ago. Yesterday the dog broke his chain and returned to the parsonage. It seized Mr. Patton violently by the arm, and he drove it out doors. The dog then ran into T. D. Carter's yard and bit a servant girl on her arm. It also frightfully wounded Mr. Carter's little son. The lad fought the dog, and flesh was torn from both forearms. He was bitten also on the nose.

The dog then ran through the town and bit several other dogs, among them Fred VanEmburgh's valuable mastiff. John M. C. Marsh and John Nelson finally killed the mad dog and the dogs that had been bitten. Dr. Harrison dressed the wounds of the boy and the woman, and they will be treated by Dr. Gibler in the Pasteur Institute, New York.

For the Hospital Benefit.

In every city where the "Phantasma" entertainment has been given under the direction of its originator, John W. Sherman of Jersey City, it has achieved a marked success. In the Oranges the society people fairly went wild over it, and the charity organization under whose auspices it was conducted reaped a substantial benefit. Its success has been so marked everywhere that the Women's Auxiliary Board of Muhlenberg Hospital have decided to present three performances in Music Hall, two evening and one matinee, on May 24 and 25. Most of Plainfield's prominent young society women will assist in the productions, although the parts allotted to each are still unselected. Mr. Sherman will meet the Auxiliary Board's Committee at the house of Mrs. M. E. Edgerton, the President of the Hospital, on Thursday afternoon, to complete plans for the entertainment.

"The Old Homestead."

The pathos and comedy intermingled in the story of "The Old Homestead" are so natural and so forceful that it seems that it will never wear out. Certain it is that in its interpretation some of the truths that lie along life's pathway spring up without so much as your leave, and create an impression that will ever remain fresh in one's memory. It is a pity that there are not more plays of the order of "The Old Homestead". Don't miss it in Music Hall tomorrow night.

FOR THE relief and cure of a cold in the head there is more potency in Ely's Cream Balm than in anything else it is possible to prescribe. This preparation has for years past been making a brilliant success as a remedy for cold in the head, catarrh and hay fever. Used in the initial stages of these complaints Cream Balm prevents any serious development of the symptoms, while almost numberless cases are on record of radical cures of chronic catarrh and hay fever after all other treatments have proved of no avail.

Water-Works Officials.

At the annual meeting of the stockholders of the Plainfield Water Supply Company held last evening the following officers were re-elected:

President—Frank Bergen.
Secretary and Treasurer—E. R. Pope.
Directors—John Kean, Jr., James Maguire, H. G. Runkle.

Tied The Score.

The Board of Trade bowled in Westfield last night. Most of the Plainfielders left before the Westfields finished, and it was then discovered that the scores were tied. The game will be rolled over again next week.

Would Suit Plainfield Temperance People.

A bill introduced by Senator Bradley prohibits the granting of retail licenses to sell spirituous or malt liquors within 400 feet of any church.

On the Slightest Sign

Of anything wrong with the kidneys or bladder, recourse should at once be had to Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, of Rondout, N. Y. Neglect may lay the foundation for painful difficulties. Favorite Remedy has completely cured cases of stone in the bladder, from which relief had been vainly sought. Where there is a tendency to rheumatic gout relief follows its use.

DR. HURLBUT OF PLAINFIELD.

He Gives a Great Talk to Epworth Leaguers, and Is Given a Reception.

The Epworth League of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Westfield celebrated their fourth birthday, last evening. The audience was a representative one, and comprised the members of the League and their friends, the members of the Christian Endeavor Union of Westfield, and also members of the League from Plainfield, Elizabeth, Cranford and Roselle.

Samuel Burhans, the President, presided. After the opening prayer by Rev. W. H. Ruth, pastor, an instrumental trio was rendered by Miss Ella L. Ferris, organ; E. C. Barlow of Roselle, violin; and Lyle Brittingham, cornet.

The music of the evening was well chosen, and was sung by a choir of sixteen voices, their numbers being a chorus, "The Lord is My Light and My Salvation", and a quartette, "The Land to which we go", by Miss May Moffett, Miss Kate Brittingham, S. H. McQuoid and W. H. Ruth, Jr.

Excellent and promising reports were received from all departments of Epworth League work, and confirmed the idea that the members of the League are workers and deserve great credit for their untiring activity. There are about 125 members, with some 35 in the Junior Society.

The address of the evening was delivered by Rev. Jesse Lyman Hurlbut, D. D., formerly of Plainfield. His subject was one which would at once attract the thought and consideration of the young people, and it was listened to with marked attention. The subject "The Beauty of a Perfect Manhood", was treated by the doctor in an original manner. He showed that a perfect manhood was the result of the growth or development of a true character, and the attributes of character in its building process were an ideality, an unceasing activity, an undaunted loyalty, an earnestness of purpose, and a development of the social nature.

His illustrations in these several points were drawn from the lives of noble and successful men, who had come through adversity and trial to see their work at last crowned with honor. His remarks were heartily applauded, and at the close of the service a reception was given in honor of Dr. Hurlbut in the elegant parsonage of the church.

Preparing for a Good Time.

A regular monthly meeting of the C. Y. M. L. was held last evening. The nomination of officers was postponed for a month. The following were appointed to arrange an entertainment and sociable for May 30: Michael Mack, Morris Owens, Peter McDonough, Cornelius Guinee and Edward Delahanty.

To Eat and Elect.

The directors and committees of the Y. M. C. A. will take supper together in the Y. M. C. A. rooms tomorrow evening at 6:30. The annual meeting for the election of officers and directors for the ensuing year will be held at 8.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the one positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio.

Sold by druggists, 75c.

Corporation Notice.

Notice is hereby given that the following Ordinance has been introduced before the Common Council, read the second time and ordered engrossed preparatory to its third reading, and that it is the intention of the Council to adopt the same.

JAMES T. MACMURRAY,
City Clerk.

Plainfield, N. J., May 7, 1894.

An ordinance to amend an ordinance entitled "An ordinance relating to streets and sidewalks and encroachments thereon," approved December 7, 1881.

The inhabitants of the city of Plainfield, by their common council, do enact as follows:

Sec. 1. That section 4 of said ordinance be and the same is hereby amended by striking out the word "four" in said section before the words "inches in ten feet," and substituting therefor the word "five", so it will read "five inches in ten feet."

Corporation Notice.

Notice is hereby given that the following Ordinance has been introduced before the Common Council, read the second time and ordered engrossed preparatory to its third reading, and that it is the intention of the Council to adopt the same.

JAMES T. MACMURRAY, City Clerk.

Plainfield, N. J., May 7, 1894.

An Ordinance to amend an ordinance entitled "An Ordinance concerning the construction, maintenance and repair of Sidewalks," approved October 4th, 1887, amended August 5th, 1890.

The Inhabitants of the City of Plainfield, by their Common Council, do enact as follows:

Sec. 1. That section 2 of said ordinance be amended by adding to the description of territory therein contained after the words "to the point or place of beginning," the following words: "also on both sides of Watchung avenue from Richmond street to Woodland avenue, both sides of Park avenue from Ninth street to Randolph road, both sides of Plainfield avenue from Ninth street extended to Randolph road, both sides of Grant avenue from West Front street to Sherman avenue, both sides of West Front street from Plainfield avenue to Grant avenue, and both sides of East Front street from Richmond street to Farragut road.

Sec. 2. That section 3 of said ordinance shall hereafter be known as section 4, and section 4 shall hereafter be known as section 5, and section 3 of said ordinance shall be as follows: "Sec. 3. That within that portion of the said city not embraced within the foregoing limits described in section 2 as amended by this ordinance, in all cases in which sidewalks are not now constructed of blue flagstone, cement, concrete, brick or hard and durable substance, sidewalks shall be constructed at the expense of abutting land owners, and unless otherwise permitted by resolution of the common council shall be composed of bluestone flagging as for the width of not less than four feet, (if said sidewalk will admit of that width, and if not, then of the greatest width of which said sidewalk will admit) and in case bluestone flagging is used, the flags to be not less than two feet in width and not less than one and one-half inches thick in the thinnest part.

The Spring House Cleaning Wisely urged by the BOARD OF HEALTH is not complete without a proper use of DISINFECTANTS. But, in choosing these, do not be misled into paying fancy prices for "patent" specialties. Common lime is better than any of them for damp cellars and stables. For vaults, drains, cess pools, the best and cheapest disinfectant is COPPERAS, supplied by us by the pound or barrel at low rates. But for use in the house, in the plumbing, in kitchen sinks, in closets, for purifying the air of sick rooms, deodorizing offensive discharges—in short, for all purposes of a household disinfectant, nothing can excel the powerful solution of chlorides made and sold by us for 15 years under the name of REYNOLDS'S ODORLESS DISINFECTANT. Quart bottles 25c. To be diluted for use according to directions on label.

REYNOLDS'S PHARMACY, Park and North avenues.

HIGH SCHOOL CHRONICLES.

C. B. Fernald is the president of the Kappa Delta Phi for May.

Miss E. E. Niles, teacher of the third class of the High School, is out of town and will not return until Monday.

The Lyceum Friday will listen to a declamation by E. O. Clarke and will hold a debate on "Resolved, that the capital of the United States should be moved further west". Llewellyn Bull, Walter Raynolds and Elwood Sebring will talk in the affirmative and C. C. Gallup, Morton Pierson and Herbert Richardson in the negative.

The Friday afternoon debate of the Kappa Delta Phi will be on the question "Is the ballot a right or a privilege?" The affirmative speakers will be H. C. Wells and J. C. Whiting. They will be opposed by C. L. Riley and Norman Probasco.

Life Saver Gets a Gold Medal.

WASHINGTON, May 9.—Secretary Carlisle has awarded a gold medal to Captain Alfred Sorensen, of Sommerville, Mass., for rescuing a man from drowning on Aug. 21, 1892, who fell from an excursion steamer in Boston bay.

HOW WE DO IT.

The times have forced many a manufacturer and importer to throw their entire stock under the merciless hammer of the auctioneer, to be sold for hard cash—that they had to have. No matter what goods brought, they had to go, and no name is so often heard or is more famailiar to the auctioneer of the largest auction houses in New York than "WHITE OF PLAINFIELD." If you care to know it, that's where he gets so many good bargains—one of the reasons why he can undersell all others. We knew a man once, but that's another story.

So Is This.

MILLINERY—You can drop in anywhere almost now a days and buy a hat, and a good one. But, ladies, don't you think that your hats and bonnets were trimmed in the latest style before we ever went into the millinery business? We guess so, and you did not have to go to New York for them, either. Visit our millinery department; it will pay you both ways—style and price.

HOSIERY—You buy your hosiery here, don't you? We sell nothing but Hermsdorf dyed stockings. Import them ourselves, and sell them at the same price the other fellows pay for them. Children's fast black ribbed hose 8c., ladies do., seamless, 12c., men's seamless half hose, 3 pair for 25c.

COAT AND WRAPPER DEPT.—That new department for the sale of ladies' coats capes, wrappers and dresses is a wonderful success. When you can buy a good cambric wrapper for 89c. it does not pay to make them, and coats and capes for spring we are clearing out our entire stock at what they cost.

DRESS GOODS—Good time to buy; never lower in price and never as low again. All our 50, 60 and 75c dress goods go at 39c. All on table No. 1. See that line of swivel wash silks for shirt waists; price only 55c., cost the man who made them 65c.

HOUSEFURNISHINGS—No better housefurnishing department anywhere. We have everything you want in matting, shades, crockery, tinware, dinner, tea and toilet sets. The great sale of granite ironware goes right on. Just see the assortment; the prices are interesting.

MEN'S UNDERWEAR—We have just bought from a mill hard pressed for money five cases of men's summer undewear. Case No. 1, men's Balbriggan shirts 30c., case No. 2, 50c., case No. 3, men's medium weight shirts and drawers 60c., regular price $1. One case men's natural wool shirts and drawers 80c., regular $1.25 shirt. One case ladies' ribbed vests 13, 15, 18, 22, 25c.

FREE SCHOOL BOOKS.

NORTH PLAINFIELD SCHOOL TO SUPPLY THEM FOR THE CHILDREN.

Views of Leading Citizens Make an Interesting Discussion.

The school trustees of the borough were empowered to furnish free books throughout the school at a district meeting last night. The question was freely discussed. President McCutchen called the meeting to order and Charles Matthews was chosen chairman and Horace J. Martin secretary.

Mr. McCutchen explained that the trustees had called the meeting from a sense of duty. At the meeting in March the voters had been practically unanimous in favor of having free books. They had ordered the board to investigate and report and the trustees were now ready to do so.

They had found that the average initial expense of the change was about $1.50 per pupil and the average cost each year afterward would be from 75 cents to $1.25. The scheme had worked well in other districts and was approved by the State authorities. The trustees could not ask for an appropriation after the heavy expenditures of last year. The number of scholars had increased rapidly since the building of the addition. Fifty scholars were taken from the primary class a short time ago, and yet the class now contains 120. The trustees simply reported and did not demand an appropriation.

Counselor Charles A. Reed said he had been present at the previous meeting and did not believe that nine out of ten there had fixed opinions on the subject. He had examined into the question of school taxes. The payment of bonds would begin in 1902. Last year the special school appropriation was $3,500 and the tax rate $2.64 on $1,000. This year it would be $5,000 and the rate $4.35 without the books. Adding $1,000 for books would make the tax $5.10. There were few, the counselor thought, who could not furnish their children with books, and for them it would not be difficult to provide. The size of the tax rate greatly influenced the borough prosperity. Its increase could be used as a reason for not locating there. It was very unwise at the present time to make the rate larger.

John Goodwin asked how much money the district received from the State, and after Mr. McCutchen had said it was about $6,061, demanded the reduction of the force of teachers so that the books could be bought.

Dr. H. K. Carroll agreed with Counselor Reed. It was unadvisable to have the borough's tax rate higher than the city's. He had been a trustee for nine years in a district where the poor children could obtain books free and remembered but six such cases. There exists a general disregard of public property. Carelessness would not only damage the books but injure the children. Books would pass from scholar to scholar, and the fact that the one before him had mutilated the book would influence the child receiving it to do likewise. It would not be right to give the teachers the additional work of enforcing rules against the destruction of the school property.

Councilman Feck said the carrying out of the plan would add but $1 to every $40 of taxes paid. In regard to frightening people away with the tax rates, he thought it should be remembered that most new residents would come from cities where free books are furnished. They would come for their children's benefit, and free books would prove an attraction. It was not a question of how large the increase was, but whether an equivalent was received for the money.

Justice Sperry thought the children would not object to old books. Horace J. Martin favored the plan because he expected to save money by it. He now paid considerable for books and would be glad to have the expense divided with taxpayers who had no children attending school.

Chairman Matthews expressed his position against the movement very plainly. Adding $1,000 a year to the expense was equal to increasing the borough debt by $20,000, the yearly expense being the interest on that amount. They had been unwilling to pay for his children's books, but wanted others to share the burden. The State gave but little money to the district. The largest item in the taxes was the school expense, now a third of the total being expended by the trustees. It was easy for men who paid but little taxes to come and say that more should be spent. Their demagogic action cost nothing. It was the speaker and others who owned considerable property that paid for the schemes of those who wanted to shirk paying for their own advantages. He had lived in the borough 25 years and in spite of the increase in the value of property he had seen the rates go steadily up. He admitted that the meeting would go against him, and he and other large taxpayers looked upon the movement as a raid on their pockets.

Mr. McCutchen explained that the trustees would try to induce parents to continue the books now in use or to give them to the school.

The motion authorizing the Board to spend $1,000 in introducing the system was carried by a vote of 49 to 9.

Ovation to Governor Werts.

Arrangements are being made by the admirers of Governor Werts to give him an ovation at Roselle, Westfield and Cranford as he drives through Saturday on the tally-ho coach. It is proposed to have a mounted escort to accompany the turnout from Elizabeth to Plainfield.

Not a Candidate.

Referring to the report that he was an aspirant for the position of County Engineer, Mr. Gavett informs The Press that there must be some mistake about it, as he has not authorized anyone to present his name for that position.

—Within a month, two dynamos have been burned out at the Plainfield electric light station, from unexplainable causes. They had to be renewed at a cost of $350 each.

PROGRESSIVE ENDEAVORERS.

East Third Street Society Celebrates a Year of Success.

The first anniversary of the Christian Endeavor Society of the East Third Street Mission was celebrated last evening in the mission.

The rooms were very prettily decorated with potted plants and wild flowers. Two large American flags were hung on the walls.

There was a large attendance of Christian Endeavors, who joined heartily in the fifteen minute song service led by E. C. Pease. Following this, "Jesus Lover of My Soul", was sung as a duet by Miss F. May Grant and E. C. Pease.

President Charles Thompson announced the hymn, "True Hearted, Whole Hearted". The reading of the 91st Psalm, and prayer, were conducted by Superintendent L. W. Randolph.

Miss Bessie Blair sang a very pretty solo, "One by One", which was much enjoyed.

President Thompson welcomed all to the meeting, and urged all to assist by their presence and prayers the work of the coming year. After a pleasing solo by William Holmes, President E. M. Cave of the Christian Endeavor Local Union was introduced and spoke as follows:

"I greet you tonight on this the occasion of your first anniversary. When I heard of the work you were doing, I felt constrained to tell the members of my society about it hoping it would prove an incentive to them. God's hand has guided the Christian Endeavor societies for 13 years, and if its growth continues it will supplant all other societies.

"One point should be emphasized, and that is regular attendance at the prayer-meetings, and be sure to take some part. If this is not done don't say that the meetings are dull and uninteresting. Stay away and you miss a blessing. Be loyal to Christ; keep banded together, and may God bless you in your work!"

Mr. Cave's remarks were followed by a piano duet by Miss Crane and Miss Lillian Glenn.

Miss Alice B. Spangenberg was introduced and said: "Time has passed very quickly since I was with you one year ago, when this society was organized. I was in hopes that I might call on you often during the year, and perhaps be of some assistance. There are many here tonight whose hearts are full to overflowing with the love of God, and for what He has done for us. But possibly there are some who are disappointed with the year's work, in their own lives. It is my desire that you may do more the coming year."

Continuing, Miss Spangenberg spoke of the individual responsibility and effort in the society, and many interesting and helpful thoughts were given.

After the close of the address, Miss F. May Grant sang another very pretty solo.

Miss Happe, Secretary of the society, read the yearly report, which was very encouraging. It showed that there were 39 members in the society—22 active, 11 associate, 5 honorary. During the year there was an aggregate attendance of 1,460.

A solo followed, by Elmer E. Runyon, which was very much enjoyed.

Rev. Dr. Yerkes made a few remarks with his accustomed earnestness.

Miss F. May Grant sang another solo, "Flee as a Bird."

L. W. Randolph was called on, and spoke encouragingly of the society's work, and urged all to be more faithful than ever. He spoke of the earnest efforts that had been put forth during the first year.

In conclusion, the hymn, "What a Wonderful Saviour", was sung. The Christian Endeavor benediction was pronounced, and the audience was dismissed with the benediction by Dr. Yerkes.

The Spring Conference of the Plainfield Local Union will be held tomorrow evening in the South Plainfield Baptist Church. An interesting programme has been provided, including an address by Rev. Frank Fletcher of New Market. It is hoped that a large delegation of Endeavorers from Plainfield and vicinity will attend.

TUNLAW HOSPITALITY.

Miss Wilson, daughter of Col. John F. Wilson, gave a breakfast in honor of Miss Streull of Hillside avenue at her home, Tunlaw, Greenbrook road, at 12 today. Those invited were Miss Streull, her prospective bridesmaids, and a few friends.

The decorations on the table were very pretty. Smilax, tied with pale green ribbon, was twined about the centre, and at each place were lilies of the valley, the flower of the Streull coat-of-arms. The room was lighted with candles shaded with pale green.

The guests were: Miss Laura Underwood, Mrs. James H. Hallock, Miss Jessamy Harte, Miss Florence Underwood, Miss Margaret Tracy, Miss Underwood, Miss May Tracy, Mrs. Clifton Wharton, Jr., Miss Barker of Montclair, and Miss Katheryn Yates.

A musicale given by Miss Wilson at her home on Greenbrook road yesterday afternoon was well attended and proved very enjoyable. The parlor was tastefully decorated with lilacs and dogwood. Miss Marion Dumont gave a piano solo, Miss Annie Stewart sang, Mrs. Clifton Wharton, Jr., read, Miss Catherine Underwood played upon the piano, Miss Nellis Whiting rendered a violin solo, Miss Streull sang and Miss Jessamy Harte gave a piano solo.

—The meeting at the East Third Street Mission tomorrow evening will be in charge of Rev. Arthur Crane, evangelist.

PALEFACE INDIANS.

THE NEW TRIBE OPENS ITS FAIR AND DANCE.

Royal Time of Paugh Caugh Naugh Sinque in Central Hall.

Paugh Caugh Naugh Sinque fair began last night. The Red Men belonging to the two-months-old organization have been working hard. Business and amusements have been neglected and groups of them have been in consultation continually since the appointment of the committees and the sub-committees. Almost every one of the 160 members who could spare the time has done something and as the aid of the women was called in the force at work has been a large one.

It was no wonder, therefore, that Central Hall was a beautiful, busy place last evening. The accomplishments of the decorating committee were, of course, the most effective in making the entering visitor realize how attractive a room can be made.

Next to the stairs stood a booth of snowy white, lighted with candles and decorated with frost effects. Ice-cream was sold there, of course, and with it cake, both served by Mrs. J. W. Klein, Miss Kate Courtwright, J. H. Carney and J. William Klein.

A central position was occupied by the octagonal booth, covered with American flag and decked with streamers of bunting. Within were Miss Anna Searing, Miss Katie Blimm and Miss Young. Their goods were among the most easily disposed of.

The entire eastern side of the hall was devoted to the sale of fancy articles. A long counter was draped with flags and arched over with a mass of evergreens. The attendants were Mrs. C. M. Ulrich, Mrs. Leland, Miss Ada Nash and Mrs. Edward Miller.

Other salespeople were the Misses Armstrong, Stevens, Connett and Flack, who sold flowers; Miss Sadie Searing, who sold fruit; T. J. La Rue, and John Odam, who sold soda water; and Harry Meyers, cigar dealer. Miss Blimm, attired as an Indian maiden, impersonated Rebecca at the well.

The lengthy name of the tribe stretched along the western wall in evergreens. The ceiling was hung with Japanese umbrellas and lanterns. Flags, large and small, were placed wherever there was room for them.

Sam Frazee's orchestra were the musicians, and dancers in the crowded hall were numerous. Besides buying, another amusement which the managers were wise enough to provide was the purchase of chances and of votes for articles of all kinds. The tribe is especially grateful for donations from C. H. Rugg, Garret Q. Packer, E. H. Clevely, Charles M. Ulrich, William Tier, Eli M. Odam, E. H. Holmes, F. X. Schoonmaker, W. J. Stephenson and Stephen Schleif.

The chairman among the women was Mrs. Fred. Canfield. The general committee consisted of V. W. Nash, F. X. Schoonmaker, William Bullock, William K. McClure, E. H. Neal, Eli Odam, J. H. Blimm.

The assisting sub-committees were:

On the Room—Wm. S. Bullock, J. T. Odam, Charles Ball, James Wagner, I. LaRue.

On Securing the Women's Assistance—E. H. Neal, John Blimm.

On Decorations—W. K. McClure, J. William Klein, Levi Cline, T. J. Young, Harry Meyers.

On Donations—John H. Blimm, John H. Tier, Jr., Wm. Stevens, J. T. Odam.

On Printing—Daniel Gulick, John Hicks, George Serrell, John H. Carney, Dr. L. S. Pocock, L. B. Woolston.

On Contests—Dr. Bedford, Joseph Blimm, R. Kersting, S. Schleif, Charles Lister.

On Music—T. J. Kurzhals, Jr., Elias R. Pope, Jr., David S. Dunavan, W. R. Chamberlain.

On Refreshments—Charles M. Ulrich, J. H. Tier, Jr., W. J. Stephenson, J. H. Harned, J. T. Odam.

On Communication—H. C. Runyon, H. C. Bush, George DeMeza.

Floor Committee—Wm. Tier, Louis Coombs, John Becker, Fred Canfield, J. W. Bowman, Jacob Blimm, J. S. Jones.

Champagne No Cure for Hot-Box.

The westward tally-ho coach had to return to Plainfield last evening because of a hot-box, and was housed in Blair's stable. It had been delayed by a broken spring, earlier in the day. An effort to cool the box with champagne proved fruitless. The passengers were transferred to another vehicle.

The Human Electrical Forces!

How They Control the Organs of the Body.

The electrical force of the human body, as the nerve fluid may be termed, is an especially attractive department of science, as it exerts so marked an influence on the health of the organs of the body. Nerve force is produced by the brain and conveyed by means of the nerves to the various organs of the body, thus supplying the latter with the vitality necessary to insure their health. The pneumogastric nerve, as shown here, may be said to be the most important of the entire nerve system, as it supplies the heart, lungs, stomach, bowels, etc., with the nerve force necessary to keep them active and healthy. As will be seen by the cut the long nerve proceeding from the base of the brain and terminating in the bowels is the pneumogastric, while the numerous little branches supply the heart, lungs and stomach with necessary vitality. When the brain becomes in any way disordered by infirmity or exhaustion, the nerve force which it supplies is lessened, and the organs receiving the diminished supply are consequently weakened.

Physicians generally fail to recognize the importance of this fact, but treat the organ itself instead of the cause of the trouble. The noted specialist, Franklin Miles, M. D., LL. B., has given the greater part of his life to the study of this subject, and the principal discoveries concerning it are due to his efforts. Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, the unrivaled brain and nerve food, is prepared on the principle that all nervous and many other difficulties originate from disorders of the nerve centers. Its wonderful success in curing these disorders is testified to by thousands in every part of the land.

Restorative Nervine cures sleeplessness, nervous prostration, dizziness, hysteria, sexual debility, St. Vitus dance, epilepsy, etc. It is free from opiates or dangerous drugs. It is sold on a positive guarantee by all druggists, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid.

Rainforth's Strange Case.

By WILL LISENBEE.

[Copyright, 1894, by American Press Association.]

But as a duty I owed not only to justice, but to one who was my friend, I was resolved to make an investigation of the matter.

Early on the following morning I called on Gerald Rainforth, who was still confined in the jail awaiting preliminary examination. I found him still cheerful regarding the prospect of his release, yet I could notice a gloomy cast upon his countenance at times, which plainly told of some deep mental trouble.

"Do you know," I said after we had exchanged friendly greetings, "that the gardener at Darkwood Hall claims to identify you as the man he saw passing through the grounds at the hall on the night of the murder?"

I saw him start visibly as I made the announcement, and for a moment he remained silent. Then he said:

"Of course that proves nothing."

"Certainly not," I went on, "but it is a very unfortunate circumstance that the old gardener should make such a stupid mistake."

"But it isn't a mistake," he answered.

"What! Then it was really you whom he saw on the grounds that night?"

"Yes."

I looked at him in astonishment. He noticed my look and added:

"Of course you are surprised at my being there at that time?"

I nodded assent.

He arose and paced the room for several moments, his head bent as if in deep thought. Then he walked to a table by the window, and picking up a roll of manuscript came and laid it in my hand.

"This will explain matters to you," he said. "You are the only friend I have on earth in whom I can confide. When you have read this, come to me, and I will tell you of my plans. I have telegraphed to New York for my attorney and a detective. They arrived early this morning, and I am now expecting them every moment."

"I thank you for your confidence," I said, "and let me assure you that whatever circumstances may point to the contrary I shall never question your innocence."

He pressed my hand warmly.

"I am more than grateful for your friendship and the assurance of your confidence in my innocence," he replied. "I trust soon to prove to you that it has not been misplaced."

"Gerald," I said, "I have made some important discoveries in this case, and it was to acquaint you with these that I came this morning."

I then related the circumstance of my discovering the human finger containing the diamond ring in the murdered man's luggage; then of my visit to Darkwood Hall, of Miss Dangerfield's sudden illness and the discovery that one of her fingers was missing.

A look of utter astonishment and perplexity crossed his face at my revelation.

"It's something that I can't understand," he remarked after a long pause. "It is very strange—very strange."

It is indeed," I answered, "and I think the facts ought to be given to the detectives at once."

"No, no," he said, with sudden energy. "Keep your discoveries a secret for the present. I have good reasons for asking this—reasons which you shall know in due time."

"But surely this matter ought to be investigated at once," I replied, not a little puzzled at his strange request. "You are accused of a great crime, and it is my duty as well as yours to see that everything relating to the matter should be brought to light."

"I know it," he replied, "but I should prefer that you keep your discoveries a secret for a short time at least. Remember that I ask this thinking it is for the best."

"But the preliminary examination is set for this evening, and there is no time for delay."

"Never fear about that. I will consult with my attorney and then decide on some course of action. We can introduce you as a witness if we think proper to do so."

"Just as you please," I replied. "I am willing to do whatever you advise."

At this instant the jailer came to the door and announced that a gentleman was waiting to see the prisoner.

"It's my attorney," said Gerald. Then to the jailer, "Show him in immediately."

Thrusting the manuscript which the young man had given me into my pocket, I withdrew from the room, promising to be present at the preliminary examination.

It is hardly necessary to state that I was considerably mystified at young Rainforth's strange conduct, yet I saw no course left but to follow his advice. He was certainly the most interested party in the affair and would doubtless do what was most to his own advantage.

My calls kept me busy till near the middle of the afternoon. Then eating a hurried lunch I started for the courthouse, not yet having found time to read the manuscript Gerald had given me. What strange story the manuscript had to tell I was very anxious to ascertain, but it was far more important that I be present at the preliminary.

When I reached the little courthouse, I found it already well filled with an eager, expectant crowd, all anxious to catch every detail of the terrible case. Edging my way through the mass of humanity, I managed to obtain a seat inside the railing near the prisoner, where I was introduced to Gerald's attorney, who was one of the great criminal lawyers of the metropolis.

The attorney for the state was a shrewd man and possessed great ability as a criminal lawyer, and I knew that he would make a strong fight. What evidence he was to present against the prisoner was not known.

While the prosecuting attorney was getting ready to open the case Rainforth called me to his side, and we conversed in a low tone for some time. He was not going to make any fight, he informed me, save as far as it was necessary to enable him to be released on bail. He would shortly be in possession of evidence, he confidently asserted, which would not only result in establishing his own innocence, but would secure the conviction of the real criminal. How this evidence was to be obtained or what was its character he gave no hint. He would introduce no evidence at the preliminary examination—in fact, he had none to offer at present, he said—but he felt confident that no evidence could be offered against him of sufficient importance to prevent his being admitted to bail.

The first witness called for the prosecution was James Marks, who had discovered the body of the murdered man. His testimony was substantially the same as that given at the inquest. The next witness was Jack Peters, the gardener at Darkwood Hall.

He stated that he saw the prisoner passing through the grounds at the hall about 8 o'clock on the night of the murder. He had seen his face distinctly in the moonlight. He was coming from the direction of the house and going toward the spot where the murder had taken place. He did not know the man at the time, but had seen and recognized him while in Mayburg a few days later. He was positive that the prisoner was the same man he had seen in the Darkwood Hall grounds.

The next witness to take the stand was Webb Davis, a laborer. The substance of his testimony was as follows:

"My name is Webb Davis. I am a laborer and reside on the Bentley farm, three miles southwest of Mayburg, in the state of New York. I am employed as a farm laborer by Mr. Bentley. I was in Mayburg on Sept. 10. I came on foot. I left for home about 8 o'clock. I did not go by the road, but to shorten my journey I took a near cut through the Darkwood park. When about midway of the park and about an eighth of a mile from the road, I saw a man coming at a rapid walk from the direction of the hall and traveling toward Mayburg. I stopped in the shadow of a tree. He passed within a rod of where I stood. I saw his face in the moonlight. He did not see me, to my knowledge. I recognize the prisoner here as the man seen in the park."

John Judd, the porter at the Redfield inn, was the next witness. I will only give the leading points of his testimony, which were as follows:

"I am employed as porter at the Redfield inn. I have known the prisoner since the 1st of last July when he came to the inn to stay. He is a painter and has two of the best rooms in the house. He has always paid liberally for everything he received. He spent a good deal of his time sketching scenes in the vicinity of Mayburg. He was at the inn on Sept. 10. About half past 6 on the evening of the 10th he left the inn. He did not return till between 8 and 9 o'clock. I was on the porch as he came in. He seemed greatly disturbed, for he paced restlessly up and down the porch for some time. Then he went to his room. I don't think he retired. I went to bed at about 10. I think it was almost midnight when I was awakened by hearing voices in the office below. I got up and dressed and went down stairs. As I passed the room occupied by the prisoner I saw that a light was still burning. He was not in the habit of leaving his light burning after retiring.

"I found the constable in the office talking with the proprietor. He (the officer) informed me that a murder had been committed and wanted to know if there were any strangers staying at the place. I went down to Dr. Dixon's office and saw the murdered man. I didn't see the prisoner among the crowd there. I think he remained at the inn. He seemed out of sorts for days after the murder and spoke of going abroad soon and got me to assist him in packing some of his things. On the second day after the murder I was cutting some weeds in the yard when I found this knife under the prisoner's window."

Here the witness produced a large pocketknife, with a blade about 5 inches long, which opened and fastened with a catch. The blade was almost covered with blood. The knife was passed to the justice, and a great sensation ran through the courtroom.

But at that instant there was a little stir near the door. Those who were packed in the aisle began to move aside to allow some one to pass who was approaching through the crowd. Presently a woman richly dressed came through the aisle. She wore a thick veil over her face. Approaching the sheriff, she said something in a low tone. Instantly the officer conducted her forward to the justice's desk.

"If your honor pleases," the officer said, "here is a lady that wants to be put on the witness stand. She states that she has a confession to make that will clear up the whole mystery surrounding this case."

A buzz of excitement ran like an electric thrill through the audience.

"Let her come forward and be sworn," said the justice.

The prosecuting attorney arose quickly, evidently believing that this was some subtle maneuver of the defense.

"If it please your honor, I object to this witness taking the stand," he said. "This is an unusual proceeding, and I ask that Mr. Judd be allowed to continue his testimony."

Rainforth's attorney came forward and was about to address the court when the justice said:

"I overrule the gentleman's objection. The lady will please take the stand and be sworn."

The lady advanced and threw back her veil, revealing the face of Grace Dangerfield of Darkwood Hall. As she reached the stand she staggered like one groping in the darkness, her face as white as death. She stretched out her hands as if grasping some invisible support. Then she spoke, despair and agony in her face and voice:

"It—it was I who committed the murder!" And with the words upon her lips she sank down in an apparently lifeless heap upon the floor.

of the physical constitution often comes from unnatural, pernicious habits, contracted through ignorance or from excesses. Such habits result in loss of manly power, nervous exhaustion, nervous debility, impaired memory, low spirits, irritable temper, and a thousand and one derangements of mind and body. Epilepsy, paralysis, softening of the brain and even dread insanity sometimes result from such reckless self-abuse.

To reach, reclaim and restore such unfortunates to health and happiness, is the aim of the publishers of a book written in plain but chaste language, on the nature, symptoms and curability, by home treatment, of such diseases. This book will be sent sealed, in plain envelope, on receipt of ten cents in stamps to pay postage.

A PUBLIC BENEFACTOR.

THEY ALL SAY THE SAME.

Don't Hesitate, but Call and Be Convinced That Every Statement We Make Is True.

To those who do not already know that there is established in Newark, at 105 Halsey street, a physician who stands in the foremost rank of his profession, who is indorsed by the leading colleges of the country and who can prove by witnesses right here in Newark (not by one, but by hundreds) that he has succeeded in curing cases that have been utterly given up by other physicians, and good ones, too. To those who do not these facts we state that any person, rich or poor, old or young, is welcome here and receive examination and advice free of charge.

Thousands praise the day they came to us for treatment. There is no guess work, no experimenting, no painful operation. No matter how difficult the case, no matter how much of the physician's time it may consume, the diagnosis will not only be thorough, it will be absolutely free. There is no taint of quackery or deception; no claim or statement is made that is not borne out by facts and living witnesses.

Mrs. Abby A. Ray, late of 86 Grove street, East Orange, who now lives at 400 Ellmore street, Escanaba, Mich., writes, under date of January 12: "The medicine arrived this morning and I am so glad it came. I am almost out, and it has helped me so much and I am so much pleased with its wonderful effort on my broken down system that I would like to testify to your great success in my case. I am feeling as well now, in fact better, than I had ever hoped to again."

This is one of many letters that we receive daily. We have the originals at our office and if you wish you may see them. Another thing: We never publish or reveal a patient's name unless they so desire.

DR. STARKWEATHER.

There is not a penny to pay for the fullest medical advice. Dr. Starkweather is a graduate of the Berkshire Medical College, Massachusetts, and of the Medico-Chirurgical College of Philadelphia; endorsed also by the College of Physicians and Surgeons and Bellevue Medical College of New York. We invite all sufferers from whatever cause to call at our office, No. 105 Halsey street, Newark, where Dr. Starkweather is in attendance daily to give examination and advice entirely free of charge. It matters not what the disease, or how many years you have suffered, in spite of means adopted in your behalf, a visit to this office and the privileges of the same will cost you nothing, and may be the means of saving your life. We prepare all our medicines and prescribe the remedies indicated. This plan enables the patient to receive directly from us such remedies as will produce the results promised.

Our office is open daily from 10 a. m. to 9 p. m. Sundays 4 to 6 p. m.

A REMARKABLE CURE

MIDDLEBUSH, Somerset Co., N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For the past forty years I have been afflicted with bleeding piles. I suffered constant pain in the lower part of my body, but when I had an operation of the bowels the pain was perfectly terrible, and was most always attended with the loss of a large quantity of blood. My condition was complicated with prolapse of the rectum, which at first only made its appearance when I had a movement of the bowels, but at length the parts became so weakened that the protrusion took place while walking or stooping, or after the slightest exertion, and sometimes even while I was at rest. Whenever this happened it gave rise to the most agonizing pain, and felt as though something was pulling the life right out of me. In fact only those similarly situated can imagine the suffering and distress which I had to endure from day to day, and which made my life a terrible burden. Hearing of Dr. Lighthill's wonderful success in the cure of difficult chronic diseases, I placed myself under his care, and now I am proud and happy to say that, marvelous as it may seem, he effected a complete and radical cure in my case in every respect, and he performed this cure without any painful operation or preventing me from work. Since this terrible disease has been removed by Dr. Lighthill's skill I feel new life, and for the first time in forty years I feel once more what it is to be without daily pain, discomfort and distress. I am not a wealthy man, but no amount of money would tempt me to be put back in my former condition.

I make this public statement, not only from a deep and everlasting sense of gratitude to Dr. Lighthill, but also as a simple Christian duty to let the afflicted know where they can find a physician whose skill cannot be surpassed, and in whom implicit confidence can be placed.

H. VROOM.

A LOCAL ENDORSEMENT.

No. 190 Somerset st., Plainfield, N. J.

To the Residents of Plainfield, N. J.

Mr. H. Vroom, whose statement appears above, is a brother-in-law of mine. I personally know of his case and his suffering and also know the happy fact that to the surprise of himself and his friends, Dr. Lighthill effected a radical and permanent cure. His statement is true in every respect and does not say half enough in praise of Dr. Lighthill. Anyone who wishes this statement verified is at liberty to come and see me personally.

JOHN C. KENNEY.

Dr. Lighthill

HAVEN FOR COXEYITES

Kansas Troops Will Not Protect the Railroads.

At Any Rate, Gov. Lewelling Will Be in No Hurry About Calling on Them—Sanders' Band Abandon Their Train—Kelly's Army Afloat—Coxey Must Obey Sanitary Laws.

TOPEKA, Kas., May 10.—Baillie Waggener, general solicitor in Kansas for the Missouri Pacific railroad, has arrived in Topeka on a special train for the purpose of preparing to meet and intercept the Coxey train stealers who left Pueblo with a Missouri Pacific train. He addressed a letter to Gov. Lewelling asking him if he could be depended upon to furnish military assistance and received a reply in part as follows:

"No information has been received at this office that the peace officers of any particular county have failed or refused to perform their duty. If, as stated by you, the county authorities have failed to act as demanded by your company it is safe to presume that, in their judgment, no criminal offense has been committed.

"I beg to say therefore, that without additional evidence and until the peace officers themselves or the citizens of the respective counties are heard from I would deem it unwise to take official action. Indeed if the peace officers themselves have failed to perform their duty it still remains that no authority is conferred by the statute books upon the executive except the power to order out the militia of the state and I am constrained to believe that the circumstances in the case are not sufficient to warrant such action."

The sheriff of Saline county was telegraphed to procure warrants for the arrest of the train stealers but replied that he could not provide for 500 prisoners in any way and that he would not put the county to the expense necessary to make the wholesale arrests.

KELLY'S ARMY AFLOAT.

Experience of the Naval Fleet on the First Day Out.

DUNNELLS, Ia., May 10.—Commodore Kelly's navy on its first day out from Des Moines encountered a choppy sea and a heavy head wind which rendered the progress of the flatboats slow. This point is twenty miles by river from Des Moines and not more than a hundred members of the army have reached here, the others encamping last night at different places for ten miles up the river.

The advance contingent left the commissary department behind and this little town is in a state of terror from the number of backdoor callers who ask for food.

But one mishap has occurred and that was just as the last boats were leaving Des Moines. A heavily loaded boat was capsized. Among the passengers were several foolish women who were infatuated with the Kelly army and wanted to travel part the distance with them. One of the woman had a very narrow escape from drowning.

ABANDON THEIR TRAIN.

Feared, However, That the Sanders Army Will Capture Another One.

CHIVINGTON, Col., May 10.—The Sanders industrial army which started out of Pueblo on a stolen Missouri Pacific train came to a sudden halt four miles west of this city last evening, 126 miles nearer Washington than they were when they boarded the train. After building tracks around two obstructions which the railroad officials had thrown in their way, the industrials came upon one in a deep cut west of here, which could not be moved, nor could a track be constructed around it. The men gave up the struggle, abandoned their train and struggled into Chivington about dark.

Supt. Derby at Pueblo was advised of the abandonment of the train and immediately made preparations for the resumption of traffic which had been entirely suspended since Tuesday evening.

The army contains many railroad men and, notwithstanding the tremendous speed made at different points target men report that all crossing signals were scrupulously obeyed.

It is feared here that the army will capture the train coming from Scott City and proceed east with it.

Randall Released from Jail.

LA PORTE, Ind., May 10.—On the recommendation of Judge Noyes, who admitted there was little chance, for a conviction, "General" Randall and his staff of commonwealers were released from jail last evening. Randall now says he will bring suit against the mayor for malicious prosecution, placing his damages at $10,000, and lawyers here believe he has a good case. In the meantime he will try to get to Washington with the remnant of his followers.

Coxey Must Obey Health Laws.

WASHINGTON, May 10.—"General" Coxey has been served with a notice to comply with the health regulations in regard to his camp within 48 hours, otherwise he will be prosecuted under a statute which imposes a fine of from $5 to $25 for each offence.

The President's Trip To-day.

WASHINGTON, May 10.—The president on his trip to Fredericksburg to attend the Mary Washington monument ceremonies will be accompanied by Secretary and Mrs. Gresham, Secretary and Mrs. Carlisle, Secretary and Mrs. Lamont, Postmaster General Bissell, Secretary and Miss Morton and Private Secretary and Mrs. Thurber.

Look Out for This $2 Bill.

BOSTON, May 10.—There is a new $2 counterfeit bill in circulation here. It is of series 1891, check letter B. J. Fount Tillman, register; D. N. Morgan, treasurer; McPherson portrait. The note is a trifle smaller than the genuine and is printed on very soft, flimsy paper with dull coloring.

Scared Into Striking.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., May 10.—The negro miners at Millidale have quit work because they received three formal anonymous notices threatening death if they did not do so.

METHODISM IN ROME.

Corner Stone of the New Church Laid With Imposing Ceremonies.

ROME, May 10.—The corner stone of the new Methodist Episcopal church and college was laid yesterday afternoon, with imposing ceremonies, in the presence of a distinguished gathering of church dignitaries, diplomats, public officials and others.

Among those present were United States Ambassador Wayne MacVeagh and family, Mr. W. S. Jones, United States consul general, and Miss Jones, Mr. Charles Wood, United States vice consul general, and Mrs. Wood, Mrs. John P. Newman, wife of Bishop Newman; delegates from the evangelical churches of all countries, and a large number of American ladies.

The Rev. W. Burt, president of the Methodist church in Italy, presided. A large box containing a history of the building and of the Methodist Episcopal church in Italy was placed inside the stone.

Bishop Newman delivered an oration, in the course of which he spoke of the christianity of Rome and its advancement. Seeing the flags of the United States and Italy floating over his head the bishop expressed the hope that the two countries might always be united.

KIDNAPPING STRIKERS

Six Slavs Prisoners in the Moyer Mine.

Held There, It is Alleged, By Orders of the Company—Proceedings for Their Release—Sheriff Wilhelm Regards the Situation in the Region as More Serious Than for Weeks.

UNIONTOWN, Pa., May 10.—Rev. C. L. Orbach, Rev. Lambardin, Rev. Dauber and two Polish representatives are in town consulting counsel in regard to an alleged action of the Rainey company at Moyer yesterday.

They say that Frank Bradford and two deputies went to the house of John Demeter and attempted to force the six Slavs boarding with Demeter to go to work.

Bradford asked them why they did not come out to work. The men replied that they would not work unless others did.

It is alleged that Bradford then seized one of the men by the throat and placing a revolver to his head threatened to kill him if he did not go to work.

The men still refused, and were told by Bradford that they were discharged, and to go to the pit and get their tools and then come to the office and get their money.

They were lowered into the pit and are said to be there still an hour, prisoners of the company.

The strikers feared such action and told friends before going to report their whereabouts unless they returned immediately. After several hours Mrs. Demeter went to Connellsville and reported to the police. Constables who at once sent six men to the mine to inquire for the imprisoned men. They returned and reported that Supt. Bradford had refused to let them come on the grounds and had said the six men were in the mine and would not be released.

Proceedings will be begun by the strikers ejected from the lot of ground they have leased adjacent to the Moyer works asking for an injunction against the Rainey Co., preventing the company from molesting them at that place.

Sheriff Wilhelm regards the situation in the region more serious than for several weeks. He fears trouble at Moyer, Hill Farm and Valley works.

Incendiary Attempt in Coal Regions.

PHILLIPSBURG, Pa., May 10.—Incendiaries attempted to burn the shaft and several buildings belonging to Wighton & Son, coal operators. Resolutions condemning the act have been passed by the strikers. At Hughes mine in the Osceola district, in the presence of over 1,000 men, the siege inaugurated yesterday morning has just been brought to an end by the operators agreeing to suspend all work in the mine until after the 15th inst.

Bonfire of Their War Implements.

SCOTTDALE, Pa., May 10.—President Barrett has just returned from the Sewickley district, where he and Vice President Nowaski addressed a mass meeting of 6,000 workingmen. Several delegations marched in with clubs, pick-handles and other weapons. Barrett made the men pile them all up in a heap and then made a bonfire of them. He then warned the men to beware of carrying clubs or any other weapons, saying that the desire of the officials was to win the strike peaceably.

Miners Refuse to Strike.

HUNTINGDON, W. Va., May 10.—Most of the miners along the Norfolk & Western railroad for one hundred miles up the line have been given an advance in prices for mining and refused to strike.

Destructive Fire at Norway, Me.

NORWAY, Me., May 10.—Fire, shortly after noon, which originated in Cummings' box factory, on Main street, on which some of the finest residences were located completely gutted the street for nearly three-quarters of a mile. Aid was asked from Lewiston and Portland, both places responding. Among the buildings burned are the Opera house, postoffice, First National bank, Norway National bank, foundry, tannery, carding mill, Beal's block, Congregational church, academy, school house, and at least fifteen other smaller stores and shops, while at least thirty private residences are in ruins. The vaults of the burned banks are thought to be all right. Firemen Walker and Bixby were injured by falling from a building.

Confirmed By the Senate.

WASHINGTON, May 10.—The senate has confirmed the following nominations:

Collectors of customs, Walter J. Cramer, district of Castine, Maine. John B. Redman, district of Frenchman's Bay, Maine.

Pennsylvania—Elmer E. Caseber, Charleroi; W. L. Haukey, Wilmerding.

Delaware—W. H. Moore, Middletown.

Maryland—S. D. Warfield Baltimore.

Shot His Sister-in-Law.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., May 10.—John Hillock, son-in-law of William Schilling, of Scarsdale, was driven from the Schilling home sometime ago on account of his dissolute habits and went to New York. He returned Tuesday and was invited in by his sister-in-law, Mathilde Schilling, and while she was shaking the grate in a stove he drew a revolver and shot her. It is thought she will recover. It is believed that Hillock's purpose was to kill his brother-in-law. Hillock escaped.

Death of a Well Known Republican.

AMSTERDAM, N. Y., May 10.—Alfred Peck, a well known republican politician, of Mohawk Valley, is dead at Minaville. He was 60 years of age. He was prominent in Masonic circles.

HIGH-HANDED OUTRAGE

McCormick Blamed for the Lake Erie Seizures.

Claimed That the Collector Has Said He Will Only Grant Fishing Permits to His Boarders—The Seized Boats Taken to Amherstburg,—Gunboat Michigan Also There.

AMHERSTBURG, Ont., May 10.—There is nothing new regarding the seized American vessels, Visitor and Brooks. The captain of the cruiser Petrel has turned the two vessels over to the collector of customs at this place and placed a force of men in charge until the matter is adjusted by the authorities at Ottawa. The United States gunboat Michigan with 117 men on board has just arrived here. Lieutenant Commander Barry says he has been instructed to make a survey of the boundary line which will probably occupy his time for two or three months.

SANDUSKY, O., May 10.—The steamer American Eagle, which is chartered by the Pelee club party, has just arrived here and Captain Magle gave an account to a reporter of the seizing off Pelee island, Tuesday, by the Canadian revenue cutter Petrel, Captain Dunn commanding, of the two American vessels Visitor and Leroy Brooks with a party of Americans aboard fishing with hook and line.

The captain stated that the Visitor and the Leroy Brooks cleared from Put-in-Bay with parties from Dayton and Pittsburg, and the latter steamer went on into South Port, Pelee Island, for the purpose of getting a clearance.

Dr. McCormick, the collector of customs, had left word with his deputies not to allow any American vessels to clear on the same day they entered and clearances were refused.

When the Leroy Brooks got back to the visitor, Captain Dollar, of the Visitor, who had been on the Brooks into port, found the machinery had been taken apart.

There was considerable excitement at the time of the capture. Two men were put aboard each steamer from the Petrel and the passengers were allowed to be transferred to the American Eagle, which took them to Put-in-Bay.

A heavy sea was running and John Brick, of Put-in-Bay, was getting from one small boat into another when one of the cruiser's men who had charge of the Brooks pulled a revolver on him. A Cincinnati gentleman, who was behind them, also drew his revolver and said: "Don't shoot that man; if you do I will shoot you!"

It is claimed that the collector of Southport has said he will only grant fishing permits to persons who board at his house. There were 60 persons in the vessels when they were seized.

Excitement among the fishing parties on the island runs high, and there is great indignation at the high-handed action of the authorities. McCormick is blamed for all the trouble.

The whole matter will be called to the attention of the authorities at Washington, and there is no dobut that the matter will be thoroughly investigated by the state department and reparation demanded.

STEPHEN ARCHER PARDONED.

Maryland's Defaulting ex State Treasurer Released From Prison.

BALTIMORE, May 10.—Ex-State Treasurer Stevenson Archer has just been pardoned out of the state penitentiary. He had been confined there since July, 1890, under a five-year sentence for robbing the state treasury of $133,000.

Archer attempted to commit suicide at his home in Harford county when his defalcation was made public. His downfall was one of the most sensational occurences in the history of the state. No man within the confines of Maryland was more popular nor trusted further. He had been a political leader for years and held many high offices, being chairman of the democratic state central committee when proven a defaulter.

The Coming Y. M. C. A. Jubilee.

LONDON, May 10.—Great preparations are making for the Young Men's Christian association jubilee, which is to be celebrated here in about three weeks. Among the 2,000 delegates who will attend the convention will be 100 from the United States and Canada, 230 from Germany, 140 from Norway and Sweden, 100 from France, 19 from Austria and many others from India, China and Turkey. Prince Oscar of Sweden will come with the Norwegians and Count Bernstorff with the Germans. The celebration will be observed throughout the United Kingdom, and on June 3d 1,200 jubilee sermons will be preached in England, Scotland and Wales.

Bill to Increase Letter Carriers' Pay.

WASHINGTON, May 10.—Mr. Hunton of Virginia, by request, introduced in the house a bill increasing the salary of letter carriers as follows: In cities under 75,000 in population, first year $600; second $800; third year and longer $1,000: In cities with more than 75,000 population, first, second and third years the same; fourth year and longer $1,200.

Sugar Trust in Illinois.

CHICAGO, May 10.—It is currently reported that the noted corporation law firm of Moran, Krans & Mayer has been retained by the sugar trust, and this is taken as indicating that despite the denials of Attorney General Moloney the trust has information or belief that quo warranto proceedings are to be instituted against them.

Pickpocket is a Mud Horse.

PITTSBURG, May 10. — Captain Sam Brown, the owner of Pickpocket, entered in the Brooklyn Handicap, was asked what the chances were for his horse to win. "Well," said Brown, "if he starts he has a chance. Rogers never starts a horse unless he has a show to win. If there is mud look out for him. Mud is what we want."

Armor Plate Fraud Inquiry.

PITTSBURG, May 10.—The naval investigation of charges against the armor plate department of the Carnegie Steel company is being conducted behind closed doors. No information of any character was given out for publication.

Spoiling the Fun.

NEW YORK, May 10.—The governing committee of the Stock exchange has instructed the chairman to stop hazing at the initiation of new members.

BRUTAL PERSECUTION.

An Inoffensive Jewish Family Driven From Their Home.

BOSTON, May 10.—A despatch from Portland, Me., says: The Slavonski family, consisting of John, his wife Mary and their 10-months-old baby, were driven from their home by a drunken mob. John Slavonski is an inoffensive, hardworking Russian Jew, and is employed in the rolling mills. He moved his little family, with their scanty household effects, into a tenement in a block on Newbury street court. Just as the family was about to eat supper a drunken mob marched into the court. Although there are a dozen or more tenants in the same alley, the mob confined their attention to the Slavonski tenement, hurling a shower of bricks and stones through the windows and at the door. The leader, Patrick Callahan, rushed into the house with an axe. Mrs. Slavonski grasped her baby to her breast and tried to reach the door. As she did so a stone struck the baby in the side, inflicting an injury which may prove fatal. The mother, father and baby escaped by the back way. The mob pursued them, and they ran over to Monument street, where they took refuge with some of their countrymen in the basement of a tenement house.

TALK OF MORE BONDS.

Decreasing Gold Reserve Makes a New Issue Probable.

WASHINGTON, May 10.—The reduction of the treasury gold below $94,000,000 has started speculation as to a new bond issue. When the recent bond issue was made the treasury gold had declined to $65,000,000, but with the present high rate of exchange it is known that gold will flow from us. Secretary Carlisle did not deem it wise to permit the gold reserve to fall below $65,000,000, and it is argued now that he will not now allow it to fall below that figure.

The temper of congress is such that no legislation is expected on financial measures to strengthen the treasury, so it leaves the secretary with no discretion except to use the means the law gives him by selling bonds to replenish the treasury when it is depleted of gold. So far no steps looking towards a bond issue have been taken, and if the gold output ceases none will be necessary, but among well-informed treasury officials, if the present conditions continue, a bond issue in the near future is looked upon as almost unavoidable.

RAILROADS SEIZE COAL.

New Feature of the Shortage from the Great Strike.

BALTIMORE, May 10.—The Baltimore & Ohio railroad company has put an embargo on the coal on its tracks between this city and Cumberland. The company will hold the coal for its own use if its supply should run so short as to threaten a stoppage of trains. This action has resulted in a number of vessels being tied up here waiting for coal cargoes. At no time for many months past have so many coal carrying vessels been at this port. It is said that the Pennsylvania railroad may follow the same course as the Baltimore & Ohio in regard to the coal en route from the Maryland region to Pennsylvania. The railroad companies are permitted to do this by paying the market price for the coal they divert and apply to their own use. Should the miners remain out for any length of time the injury to business here will be great, as most of the factories and manufacturing industries depend upon the soft coal supply for fuel, and, being so near the source of supply, no large reserve stock is kept on hand.

Plenty of Work South.

GREENVILLE, Miss., May 10.—If the various divisions of Coxey's army desire to work they can get all they want to do in the lower Mississippi valley. Never in the history of this section has reliable farm labor been so scarce as it is this season. There are hundreds of acres of fine farm land lying idle for lack of people to cultivate it. The planters of Arkansas and Mississippi have been in the habit of importing negroes from other sections of the south to cultivate the land, but this has grown to be so impracticable and expensive that they have decided to abandon the practice. After making one crop and securing the proceeds the negroes would move to other parts, leaving their employers in the lurch. A convention of planters met here to devise ways and means to import farm laborers from Europe. The meeting was largely attended.

Boston Hatters May Strike.

BOSTON, May 10.—Trouble is expected by the organized hatters of this city, and preparations are being made by the hatters' association for a strike involving several of the largest hat factories of what is known as the Boston district. A special meeting of the association was held to consider a proposal from the employers, that on and after June 1 the association lower its scale of wages 20 per cent. After a lengthy debate, this proposition of manufacturers was rejected. Boston district so called, comprises all the union hatters in this state. It is expected that if the bosses insist upon the reduction a strike will result.

Wage Question in Court.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., May 10.—Attorneys for the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, Order of Railway Conductors and Order of Railway Trainmen have filed in the United States circuit court a petition in the case of the Central Trust company vs. the East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia railroad, asking an injunction restraining the receivers of that road from reducing their salaries 10 per cent. Judge Lurton has cited the receivers to appear at Cincinnati on May 18 to show cause why the relief prayed for should not be granted.

African Exploration.

LONDON, May 10.—Dr. Donaldson Smith, of Philadelphia, who explored Somaliland, on the African coast of the gulf of Aden, in 1893, will start on June 1 on a scientific expedition to the unknown region 200 miles west of Berbera, the chief town on the coast, and lake Rudolph. He will be accompanied by Gillett, the explorer. Dr. Smith will return, if all goes well, by the more northerly route, reaching England, en route for the United States, at the beginning of 1895.

Oil for Locomotive Fuel.

GALESBURG, Ill., May 10.—The Chicago, Burlington & Quincy is seriously considering using oil in its engines if the miners' strike continues, and believes this is practicable. Experiments with this end in view are now being made in the Aurora yards.

The Bluefields Situation.

WASHINGTON, May 10.—The state department is officially informed that the Nicaraguan government has restored the exequatur of Braida, the American consul at Greytown.

PLAIN TALK BY MILLS

Disgusted With the Present Tariff Measure.

However, So Long as It is a Little Better Than the McKinley Bill He Will Vote for It—Part of Coxey's Speech Heard in the Senate—Work Before the House.

WASHINGTON, May 10.—Although Coxey was not permitted to deliver his speech from the steps of the capitol, that same speech, or the greater part of it, has since been read in a far more exclusive place—the United States senate chamber. During the discussion of Senator Allen's resolution for a committee of inquiry into the circumstances of the police assault on Coxey, the Nebraska populist senator read portions of the speech in support of his contention that Coxey was striving only for the good of his fellow men, and in a lawful and peaceful manner. Mr. Allen made a long speech in support of his resolution, and was followed by Senator Sherman (rep., O.), who characterized the whole thing as a sham and pretence, and advised Coxey to go home to Ohio and take care of his property, his wife and his family.

The resolution went over without action till to-day and a substitute was offered for it by Mr. Teller (rep., Col.), and accepted by Mr. Allen, which substitute will be the resolution that will be acted upon to-day. It simply provides for the investigation, omitting entirely the preamble.

The rest of the day's session was occupied in the consideration of the tariff bill. The pending amendment to the enacting clause, adding the words "or withdrawn from consumption," lead to a spirited discussion and was, at the end, agreed to without division.

The most exciting portion of the discussion was a short and impassioned speech made by Senator Mills, (dem., Texas). He declared that a change had come over the spirit of the situation since his declaration that he stood between "the devil and the deep sea." He was a little nearer the devil (the McKinley act) than when he made that speech. The bill before the senate was not the Wilson bill, but one which ought to bear the name of Senator Gorman or the name of Senator Brice. He did not intend to vote for a single one of the amendments changing ad valorem duties to specific duties. He was humiliated at finding the bill turning nearer and nearer to the McKinley act in the rates of duty and in the amount of robbery inflicted upon the people.

Mr. Mills said there was a very little margin of difference between the two bills now; but so long as it was a little better than the McKinley act, he would vote for it. But he wanted the democrats who were responsible for the measure as it now stood to stand out and assume the responsibility.

Then Senator Lodge offered an amendment to impose discriminating duties upon Great Britain until that government should assent to, and take part in, an international agreement for the coinage use of silver. The amendment, after discussion, was laid on the table by a party vote of 32 yeas to 20 nays, and the senate, at 6 p. m., adjourned.

House of Representatives.

The republicans were successful in securing what time they desired for general debate on the naval appropriation bill for the year ending June 30, 1895. After several private and unimportant bills had been disposed of, Representative Cummings (dem., N. Y.), chairman of the committee on naval affairs, called up the bill and asked that general debate be limited to four hours. Mr. Reed asked that debate proceed at once without limitation, and Mr. Dolliver (rep., Iowa) suggested that seven hours be allowed. Mr. Cummings declined to concede this until the republicans evinced a disposition to filibuster. Then he agreed, and by unanimous consent the arrangement was ratified.

Storm Damage in Tennessee.

UNION CITY, Tenn., May 10.—This city was visited by a terrible wind and rain storm Tuesday evening. Reports from every section of the county indicate great destruction of property and the loss will be very heavy. The bridges over the small creeks have all been swept away. Considerable stock was killed by lightning.

It's Right Against Common Sense

to suppose that an imitation offers the customer any guarantee like the original does. Take Cottolene for example. FAIRBANK & Co. discovered it, perfected it, and spent thousands in making its merits known. It is plainly to their interest to make and keep it what it is to-day—the most popular shortening in the world.

But when you come

To accept any Counterfeits for Cottolene

these guarantees all disappear, and the housekeeper is at the mercy of an imitator who deals on others' reputation and who profits only by others' loss.

To ensure having good cooking and healthful food stick right to COTTOLENE and let all imitations severely alone.

State Senator Christopher Staats, of Washington, Warren County, accompanied by his wife, paid a flying visit to his cousin, S. G. Staats of West Second street, last evening.

The Choral Society has none but the best soloists. In Harper's Weekly this week appears proof of this, for portraits of their contralto and tenor, Mrs. Carl Alves and W. H. Rieger, are given alongside that of Theodore Thomas, who has engaged them to sing at the May Music Festival in Cincinnati.

EXPLOSION.

Joseph Powlison Has an Exciting Experience.

Furniture dealer Joseph Powlison of Somerset street luckily escaped being injured by a mysterious explosion yesterday morning. He set fire to a pile of rubbish in his yard on Grandview avenue taken from a barn which had been torn down.

He turned away just as the heap was lifted into the air and scattered about by some unknown explosive which had been in the rubbish.

Had Mr. Powlison been nearer he might have received serious injuries. It is not known what the nature of the explosive was or how it came to be in the barn.

Climax Team Crippled.

Upward of fifty different shooters participated in the State League shooting at Benner's yesterday, and for the team championship seven teams of five men each presented themselves. The Climax Gun Club were short two of their best men in the persons of Apgar and Smith, who are ill; but the team put up a good score, and finished in third place. The next shoot of the League will be held in Springfield in June under the auspices of the Union Gun Club.

HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY PASSES THE PLAINFIELD SCHOOL BILL.

Not a Vote Against It — Governor Werts Sure to Sign.

(Special by Wire to The Press.)

TRENTON, May 10. — The Plainfield School Bill passed the House of Assembly by a unanimous vote at 10:30 this morning. It now goes to Governor Werts to become a law. It is known that the Governor will sign it.

DRUGGIST ARRESTED.

Horsley Barker Pleads Guilty to Selling Liquor Illegally.

Druggist Horsley Barker, of West Front street, pleaded guilty in the City Court of violating the eleventh section of the City Ordinance regulating the sale of liquors this morning.

The charges were made by Charles Wilson, who said he had bought liquor without a prescription twice, on April 8 and 22. Barker admitted having sold under such circumstance but said he was ignorant of the law.

He was placed under $100 bonds to appear for sentence Saturday morning.

From the Yerkes Chapel.

Dr. Wm. B. Boggs, President of the Theological Seminary in Ramapatam, India, now on a visit to this country after many years of hard labor on the mission field, will make an address on Mission Work Sunday evening at 7:30, in the First Baptist Church. Dr. Boggs also has charge of the Yerkes Chapel in Fettu, India, a chapel built with the money furnished by the Missionary Society of the First Baptist Church. As Dr. Boggs is a very interesting as well as an able speaker, all are earnestly invited to be present.

His Enterprise Unabated.

Benjamin Mills, the energetic builder who has done so much to beautify and benefit Plainfield by the erection of modern model homes for small families, has staked off another lot on Westervelt avenue (Plainfield side), and is about to build another cozy home for some fortunate tenant. They do say that Mr. Mills constructs just as perfect a small home as the genius of carpentry knows how to devise. The site of his latest enterprise is the lot at 42, making another extension of the row towards Front street. At a reasonably early date there will be no vacant lots left on this avenue of pretty homes.

Borough Realty Changes.

Peter Struve and wife to Charles Schwed, $1.
William G. E. See, special Master, to Eunice Codington and others, $1,925.
Charles Johnson and others to Kate Smith, $1.
Fidelity Title and Deposit Co. to Aaron D. Thompson, $1.

Dr. Lewis on the Horseshoe.

The horseshoe as a sign of good luck originated in Babylonia, where it was used as a symbol to charm away the Evil Eye, which they supposed existed, before the people entered church. This was very interestingly explained yesterday afternoon by Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, to a few friends who happened to inquire about it.

Walk Easy and Save Money.

You can wear blisters on your feet, and holes in your purse, trying to get shoes that suit you, in metropolitan stores. Or you can save your carfare and get elegantly fitted, at Doane & Edsall's, whose stock is enormously varied, just to fill your wants.

King's Daughters.

The City Union of the King's Daughters will hold their Spring meeting tomorrow afternoon at 3:30, in the Crescent Avenue Church parlors. A full attendance of all members of the order is desired. Tea will be served at 4:30.

Clark Township Shrinks Again.

Clark Township is not as large as it thought it was. Governor Werts has vetoed the bill annexing a part of Middlesex County to Union, and the pet bill of Mr. Codding, of Westfield, goes down.

Growth of Grace.

The trustees of Grace M. E. Church last evening decided to purchase the lot adjoining the church, with a view of enlarging the church, and are now negotiating for the same with the owner, Mr. Lutkins.

Not the Same.

The daily papers yesterday spoke of Councilman Feck as having spoken for free school books. It was a case of mistaken identity. Councilman Lounsbury was meant.

Preparing for Prizes.

Several ambitious bicycle riders are practicing daily for the races on the new track this Summer, and some excellent time is being made.

Ready for Business.

Edsall announces in his ad today that his new house-furnishing and crockery department is now open for business. His full opening will occur in a few days.

Preaching in Swedish.

Pastor Ahlberg of Newark will preach in Swedish in the Park Avenue Church at 3:45 Sunday. Special music will be given.

He's in Luck.

BOY BADLY BURNED.

The Little Fellow Played With a Rubbish Fire, With Serious Results.

Reynold Coon, age four and a half years, son of Mr. and Mrs. Matthias Coon, who live back of Watchung avenue near the race, was badly burned this morning.

The boy went out from the house at 11 when his mother was at work upstairs. A moment later Mrs. Caroline Vermeule, who lives nearby, discovered that his clothes had caught fire from a heap of burning rubbish lighted by Mrs. Matthews Coon. Mrs. Vermeule grasped the boy and her hands were slightly burned.

Mrs. Coon came out and wrapped the boy in her dress. Men working across the brook then ran over and the flames were extinguished. The boy's back and leg were terribly burned and his injuries are quite serious. Mrs. Coon's left hand and her knees were painfully burned. Dr. J. T. Fritts took charge of the case until relieved by Dr. M. B. Long, the family physician.

ICE COMPANY DEFEATED.

Wm. Calaway Wins His Suit for Wages.

William Calaway won his suit for wages against the Plainfield Ice and Cold Storage Company by the verdict of a jury before Justice Nodyne yesterday afternoon. City Judge William A. Coddington appeared for the plaintiff and Charles A. Reed for the defendant.

Calaway had a contract dated April 1, 1893, by which the company agreed to pay him $6 a week until December 1, 1893, including his house rent until April 1, 1894, less $25 rent from November 1, 1892 to the date of the contract. He worked at handling ice, at farming and odd jobs until the first part of September when the company discharged him.

The principal reasons given by the company for this action was that Calaway had been drunk and had neglected his work. It had five witnesses, Andrew Wilson, John W. Coddington, Harrison Coddington, Allen Coddington and John Morton. The plaintiff denied the charge of drunkenness and was supported by nine witnesses, Leonard Calaway, Aaron S. Brower, John Powers, John Oleman, Charles Oleman, LeGrand Fulton and Moore Coddington, who said they had seen Calaway nearly every day and had never seen him too intoxicated to work.

The jurors were Abraham Angleman, foreman, Lewis B. Coddington, William Winn, Michael Coyne, William Husted, T. F. VanHorn, Isaac Boss, Charles Burnett, John Milligan, G. Giddis, Andrew Love, Jr., and Garret Smith. They remained out but a few minutes and rendered a judgment for the plaintiff for the amount claimed, $62.50, with costs and $2 interest.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Miss Roiman, the missionary from Japan who will address the Society of Christian Endeavor in the First Baptist Church tomorrow evening, has been very successful in her mission work, and is a very interesting speaker.

Stages have been provided to accommodate those who desire to attend the local union meeting of the Christian Endeavor societies this evening in South Plainfield. They will start from Warren Chapel at 7:15 sharp.

A convention stage will leave the First Baptist Church tonight at 7:30.

After Timber Thieves.

The attention of Chief Marshal Pangborn has been called to the destruction of timber on lands belonging to Mrs. Elizabeth G. Paree on the side of the mountain near Scribner's brick yard. The Press predicts that somebody will be arrested if the offense continues.

Long Distance Cyclers.

Mr. and Mrs. Smith, of the Smith Wheel Company, took dinner with F. L. C. Martin today. They are on a bicycle trip from New York to Washington. Mrs. Smith wore an improved cycling costume of dark green consisting of a blouse waist, a loose divided skirt, and leggings.

Death of an Old Resident.

Jacob R. Shotwell died yesterday at his residence in Rahway, from a stroke of paralysis which he suffered last Friday. He was 81 years old and a life-long resident of Rahway.

The Spring House Cleaning Wisely urged by the BOARD OF HEALTH is not complete without a proper use of DISINFECTANTS. But, in choosing these, do not be misled into paying fancy prices for "patent" specialties. Common lime is better than any of them for damp cellars and stables. For vaults, drains, cess-pools the best and cheapest disinfectant is COPPERAS, supplied by us by the pound or barrel at low rates. But for use in the house, in the plumbing, in kitchen sinks, in closets, for purifying the air of sick rooms, deodorizing offensive discharges—in short, for all purposes of a household disinfectant, nothing can excel the powerful solution of chlorides made and sold by us for 15 years under the name of REYNOLDS'S ODORLESS DISINFECTANT. Quart bottles 25c. To be diluted for use according to directions on label.

Red Men's Fair.

The commuters ticket contest of Paugh Caugh Naugh Sinque fair is the talk of the town. Everybody knows the value of a yearly commutation ticket to New York. That's the reason the new tribe offer this as one of their numerous prizes. The contest is open to all. If you do not already hold coupons, it would pay you to get them at once.

Edward Pope, the fortunate winner of the prize cake at Paugh Caugh Naugh Sinque fair last evening, generously gave it back to the tribe to be raffled for again. That the members of the tribe appreciated Mr. Pope's generosity was evinced by the three rousing cheers which he received, given in true Indian style.

HOW WE DO IT.

The times have forced many a manufacturer and importer to throw their entire stock under the merciless hammer of the auctioneer, to be sold for hard cash—that they had to have. No matter what goods brought, they had to go, and no name is so often heard or is more familiar to the auctioneer of the largest auction houses in New York than "WHITE OF PLAINFIELD." If you care to know it, that's where he gets so many good bargains—one of the reasons why he can undersell all others. We knew a man once, but that's another story.

So Is This.

MILLINERY—You can drop in anywhere almost now a days and buy a hat, and a good one. But, ladies, don't you think that your hats and bonnets were trimmed in the latest style before we ever went into the millinery business? We guess so, and you did not have to go to New York for them, either. Visit our millinery department; it will pay you both ways—style and price.

HOSIERY—You buy your hosiery here, don't you? We sell nothing but Hermsdorf dyed stockings. Import them ourselves, and sell them at the same price the other fellows pay for them. Children's fast black ribbed hose 8c., ladies do., seamless, 12c., men's seamless half hose, 3 pair for 25c.

COAT AND WRAPPER DEPT.—That new department for the sale of ladies' coats capes, wrappers and dresses is a wonderful success. When you can buy a good cambric wrapper for 89c. it does not pay to make them, and coats and capes for spring we are clearing out our entire stock at what they cost.

DRESS GOODS—Good time to buy; never lower in price and never as low again. All our 50, 60 and 75c dress goods go at 39c. All on table No. 1. See that line of swivel wash silks for shirt waists; price only 55c., cost the man who made them 65c.

HOUSEFURNISHINGS—No better housefurnishing department anywhere. We have everything you want in matting, shades, crockery, tinware, dinner, tea and toilet sets. The great sale of granite ironware goes right on. Just see the assortment; the prices are interesting.

MEN'S UNDERWEAR—We have just bought from a mill hard pressed for money five cases of men's summer undewear. Case No. 1, men's Balbriggan shirts 30c., case No. 2, do., 50c., case No. 3, men's medium weight shirts and drawers 60c., regular price $1. One case men's natural wool shirts and drawers 80c., regular $1.25 shirt. One case ladies' ribbed vests 13, 15, 18, 22, 25c.

POETIC VANDERBEEK.

HE EXPRESSES HIS CONDOLENCE IN A BLIZZARD POEM.

The retiring Board of Freeholders of Union County held their concluding session yesterday, and after closing accounts for the year indulged in many little pleasantries.

Mr. Hubbard offered a resolution, thanking the retiring Director, John S. Sauer, for the able and impartial manner in which he had presided over the deliberations of the Board, and his uniform courtesy to his associates.

Mr. Erlick offered a vote of thanks to the retiring Engineer, Louis Quien; Mr. Vanderbeek a resolution in honor of County Collector Hicks; Mr. Boll a tribute to County Attorney McClure and Clerk A. B. Cook.

Mr. Howard presented a resolution regretting the separation to take place and bearing tribute to the retiring members.

In reference to the latter resolution speeches were made by Freeholders Donahue, Vanderbeek, Trahon and Moore. Mr. Hubbard in speaking of the members who go out, concluded his tribute to Director Sauer by presenting to him in behalf of the members of the Board a beautiful ivory gavel ornamented with silver and appropriately inscribed.

Mr. Sauer made a fitting response. The gift was a grateful surprise to him and he spoke feelingly. He thanked his associates for their co-operation and kindness and bore special tribute of his indebtedness to Mr. Hubbard for advice and assistance. He said in Mr. Hubbard the county had a grateful and able representative. In conclusion Mr. Sauer complimented especially the County Road Committee, and said the time would come when those who had criticised the committee will recall the criticisms and approve the action of the committee.

All the gentleman who spoke referred pleasantly to Mr. Vanderbeek, who retires after so many years of faithful service.

Mr. Donohue said he was used to making speeches of this kind, as it was the third time his constituents had voted him into retirement.

Charles Moofe made one of his characteristic speeches. He said he felt sad, as he had hoped to go back again to the Board. He was glad the Board had met for the last time after the Coxey Army had gone through the city. If it had been on the same day some of the retiring members might have been induced by their despondency to have joined the army. He had thought of going into business with his old friend Vanderbeek, but he had learned that Mr. Vanderbeek is raising chickens, and at an expense of $108 had raised four roosters. That kind of business was too rich for his blood. Then Mr. Moore defended the County Road Committee which had been the most abused he said, and he praised the efficiency of Road Inspector Corbet, who, he said, had been one of the most faithful and most competent of county officials.

Mr. Vanderbeek after some appropriate remarks, interspersed with humor, afforded his associates a great deal of amusement by reading an original poem, which here follows:

A BLIZZARD.

A blizzard in Jersey swept over the State,
And some of its ravages, I'll now relate:
At the State House in Trenton, it blocked the way
To all legislation from day to day.
It blustered and beat through its walls and doors
Till Justice and Right took hold of the oars,
Then Rings and Race-Tracks melted away,
Like snow in the sunshine of a warm April day.
In the County of Union 'twas very severe,
It turned topsy turvy things held very dear.
In the Board at Elizabeth it first wrecked a Trahon,
And one Donahue next by sleet and the rain.
Some said a "Hot Journal" was what caused the disaster,
Others said the sore was too big for the plaster,
They oiled it the Moore, and it Sauer-ed the greater.
'Twas put on the ice by an old Undertaker.
At Cranford the wind was a Littell too great,
To Hunt for relief, the storm to abate.
At Fanwood the "Doctor" who is prompt in distress
Found his patients snowed under beyond redress.
In Plainfield we thought we had nothing to fear,
But it struck one so sadly that it brought forth a Tier.
When the storm cleared away, in the track of its journey
We found that it had injured our County Attorney.
Storms have their mission, in goodness disguised,
For out of these clouds there comes brighter skies.
Then fill up the bowl with bright, sparkling nectar;
Take the old and tried one and make him Director;
Then let us be happy, wishing all a good cheer,
That all wrongs will be righted in the coming year.

Chief Doane President.

The annual meeting of the Firemen's Relief Association was held last evening. Reports showed that $1,566 had been paid out during the year to sick and disabled firemen and firemen's widows.

The following officers were elected:

President—T. O. Doane.
Vice-president—Auguste Saltzman.
Treasurer—J. A. Hubbard.
Secretary—G. Thorn.

Housekeepers' Desires Satisfied.

The desire of fond parents these lovely days is to have a fine new coach for baby. That's one reason for the Spring rush at Packer's, where the great display of baby carriages daily diminishes because of the eager purchases. Another reason for the rush is that just now many house-furnishing wants are developed, and it's a well-known fact that no dealer in New Jersey or New York can surpass Packer in quality of goods, style of finish, or moderation in price.

FOR THE relief and cure of a cold in the head there is more potency in Ely's Cream Balm than in anything else it is possible to prescribe. This preparation has for years past been making a brilliant success as a remedy for cold in the head, catarrh and hay fever. Used in the initial stages of these complaints Cream Balm prevents any serious development of the symptoms, while almost numberless cases are on record of radical cures of chronic catarrh and hay fever after all other treatments have proved of no avail.

UNION FREEHOLDERS ORGANIZE.

Republicans Carry Out Their Caucus Plans—Hubbard Elected Director.

The new Union County Board of Freeholders, which will control the county affairs until 1896, organized yesterday at the Court House in Elizabeth, and the slate, as already published in The Press, went through with bells on. J. F. Hubbard, of Plainfield, was made Director; S. Rusling Ryno, of Rahway, Clerk; Edward M. Wood, of Elizabeth, County Collector, and William R. Codington, of Plainfield, County Attorney.

The Board decided to retain County Engineer Quien, Democrat, until improvements now being made on the county roads are completed, when his office will be abolished. Road Inspector Corbet, Democrat, will have to walk the plank when his term expires in July.

The new Board consists of thirteen Republicans and four Democrats. Director Hubbard appointed as the Committee on Appropriations Freeholders Howard, Ogden, Littell, Clark and Woodruff. They will report May 17 the cost of running the county another year.

Rogers, the Wheelman's Friend.

The conveniences, comforts and joys of cycling are an old story to the people of Plainfield, where everyone rides; and consequent upon the growth of the life-prolonging custom of wheeling is the growth of important cycling centres in the town. Such a centre is the wheelmen's headquarters of W. H. Rogers, at West Fifth street and Central avenue. Mr. Rogers has at this stand developed a veritable mechanical beehive. He is prepared to supply any of the latest styles in cycles and full equipment of cycling sundries. He has every device ready for quick repair or replacement of worn or broken parts. He has a fine stock of wheels for rental. In new wheels, his specialty is the famous Victor, which has so many enthusiastic riders in Plainfield and everywhere. Mr. Rogers has time and again proved his enterprise and cycling zeal. He has done much to extend the usefulness of the wheel in Plainfield. When you want a wheel of your own, or the transient use of one, or when you need a competent bicycle physician, remember that Rogers is ready for you, at the old stand, and you can get his ear from a distance by telephone.

Leaders in Popularity.

There are no more enterprising dry-goods men in New Jersey than L. Bamberger & Co., who today commence using the columns of The Daily Press to push their sales in this part of the State. Bamberger & Co. have not been in business in Newark as long as some houses, but they are giving points to some of the older firms who have been selling goods to people in Newark and the suburbs for years. In coming to Plainfield for trade they prove once more their ability as business men by selecting as their foresight for advertising, The Press, Plainfield's best medium.

Plenty for All.

Love, corner of North and Watchung avenues, says he wants 3,000 readers of The Press to know that the great advertisement sale of wall paper still continues. He has stock enough to supply them all. Those who do n't want paper can find anything they want in rugs, window shades, paints, oils and varnishes. He wants them to come this minute; if they can't, to come later. The 30,000 pieces of wall paper Love has in stock would be just 10 pieces for each of 3,000 readers of The Press. If still more of The Press readers go, they will all get supplied.

Sudden Death.

Samuel B. Gaston Willet of Succasunna Plains dropped dead Monday, while on his way home from work. Mr. Willet was a prominent resident of the Plains, and was highly respected by all who knew him. He leaves a widow and two married sons. One son is the proprietor of the County Hotel in Somerville, and the other is station agent in Berkley Heights.

Free Open-Air Concerts.

The first open-air concert of the season will be given at the Arlington Hotel, Thursday, May 24. A celebrated cornetist from New York, together with the Plainfield Cornet Band, has been secured, and Proprietor Windham promises a good time to those attending. These concerts will be given twice a week—Tuesdays and Fridays.

Fast Drivers Brought to Court.

Fred Moore and Jed Smalley raced with trotters on West Fifth street April 29. Both horses broke at the same time and then Policeman Flanagan saw them.

They acknowledged their guilt this morning in the City Court, although Smalley claimed he had driven a North avenue livery horse and could n't have gone very fast. Sentence was suspended.

Lost and Found.

Miss Mabel Force of Bound Brook lost a gold bracelet Monday afternoon while on a trip with the Linnæan Society of the High School. Yesterday it was found near Coddington's stone-crusher by Miss Swain, who went with other members of Miss Petrie's class of the North Plainfield school on a similar expedition.

The Crescents to Go.

The biennial National Encampment of the Uniformed Rank, Knights of Pythias, will be held during the last week in August in Washington, D. C. The New Jersey Brigade, including Crescent Division of Plainfield, will go down on a special train, Monday, Aug. 27, and will return the following Saturday.

Dr. Pittis of Plainfield.

At a public commencement of the Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia, held at the American Academy of Music, May 9, the degree of Doctor of Medicine was conferred on 163 candidates in cape and gowns. Among the graduates was Thomas Pittis of Central avenue, Plainfield.

—The Salvation Army now numbers in all, including the Auxiliary, about 300 members, and is steadily growing.

PEACE ST. EXTENSION.

TOWN COMMITTEE DISCUSSES THE CHANCES OF APPEAL.

Decide to Wait the Opinion of Township Counsel—Return of Assessment Demanded.

The North Plainfield Township Committee met last night and considered the question of appealing from the decision against the Watchung avenue extension.

After bills had been ordered paid, the paying back of assessments collected for the extension was brought up by the reading of a letter from Mrs. Martha Campbell, a resident of Martinsville. It was addressed to H. N. Spencer and was as follows:

I see no way of ever coming again in possession of the money, $62.25, wrested from me in the matter of the assessment for that proposed street except by a continued agitation of my claim, for it seems inherent in a large portion of humanity to retain to the last gasp any booty in their actual possession.

It must be apparent to all parties to the above matter that, in view of the decision reached by the higher courts, the assessments paid in should revert at once back to the parties from whom they were drawn and the fact that any one of such has not thus reverted back is plain evidence to my mind that official neglect or perfidy is at the bottom of it.

I saw Judge William A. Coddington as he passed through this village a few days ago, who, upon being informed that my assessment had not been paid, seemed rather surprised and said that the money should be, or rather should have been paid back to me. He intimated to me that you are at liberty to pay it back on application to you of the parties who paid their assessments, and he recommended proceedings to recover the money if it were not at once forthcoming.

I should like to have you furnish me the names of the Town Committee of your town and their individual addresses so far as you can, for, if I in conjunction with others who paid their assessments am obliged to commence suit for the recovery of our money, I want it shown why we should not lay claim to the refunding of the full amount of the assessment with legal interest to date.

Chairman Fountain said he had called the meeting because Mr. Spencer was undecided as to what to do in the matter. The $600 assessments collected was lying in the First National Bank of Plainfield and was doing no one any good.

Committeeman Smith again gave the the history of the extension and thought the township's action legal because the Joint Committee had been advised by as able counsel as there was in the State, Craig A. Marsh and Charles A. Reed. Nearly $3,000 had been spent at law; it would be best to go on, especially as the appeal would probably cost no more than $200.

Chairman Fountain gave his ideas on the cost of law. First the $200 would go and then the other costs would pile up. Bloomfield and Bound Brook had been defeated in such actions and under the circumstances it would be best not to run the risk of losing any more money. When a lawyer said an action would cost $200, the actual amount would reach $2,000. It would be different if the lawyers would agree to undertake the appeal for a fixed amount.

Committeeman Smith persisted that the case should be carried to the Court of Errors. He had heard on good authority that it would cost but $200 and that the decision would probably be reversed. A discussion of the public spirit of the Park people followed, and then the chairman said that the street was certainly a necessity but the question seemed to be how to get at it. Committeeman Smith said it would be opened if the counselors could make anything out of it.

A resolution was passed that no further legal action be taken in the case and that the money received on the assessments be refunded. Committeeman Smith voted against the resolution.

After the discussion the motion was reconsidered and it was decided to ask Counselor Reed for a written opinion to be presented at the next meeting. The committee then adjourned until next Wednesday evening.

To Delight All Senses.

The entertainment in Vincent Chapel this evening promises to be very pleasant. Light supper will be provided; and choice fancy goods, pure candies and fragrant flowers will be dispensed at reasonable prices. The object is a worthy one.

From Arabia.

Rev. Mr. Scudder of Asbury Park will preach in the Trinity Reformed Church Sunday morning, on missionary work in Arabia. He is a young man, an excellent speaker, and full of information concerning that missionary field.

The March of Improvement.

Mr. Gulon has still further improved his property at 51 Westervelt avenue by removing the front fence and extending the lawn to the sidewalk.

SAVED TWO WOMEN,

THOUGH MANY MILES APART.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

Many curious and interesting experiences are found in the correspondence of a woman like Mrs. Pinkham, who for many years ministered to the sufferings of her sex all over the land. Here are two notable cases, one from the Pacific and the other from the Atlantic coast.

MRS. LILLIE MEYER.

The Brooklyn woman is Mrs. Lillie Meyer. Five years ago she began to feel sharp pains in her abdomen, with the bearing-down feeling and pains in her back. She tried doctors and got no relief. A friend told her of Mrs. Pinkham's Compound, and after using it the pain left her, and menstruation now comes without suffering.

The Riverside, Cal., woman is Mrs. J. E. Dewey, who says, "I have used three bottles of your Vegetable Compound for painful menstruations.

"Every month my suffering was terrible, and I was obliged to go to bed.

"After using the first bottle, my general health was much improved, and now, after using three bottles, all pain has left me, and I am a well woman. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is as unfailing as the sun." Get it from your druggist.

WOMEN AND MISSIONS.

District Conference in Grace M. E. Church.

The district meeting of the Woman's Home Missionary Society opened this morning at 10, in Grace M. E. Church, North Plainfield, with devotional exercises conducted by Mrs. Robert M. Moore, of Elizabeth, who is president of the district.

An address of welcome followed, by Rev. Dr. C. B. Barnes, pastor of the First M. E. Church, in place of Rev. H. F. Randolph, who was unable to be present.

Mrs. Moore responded to the words of greeting, thanking all for the generous hospitality shown.

After the singing of a hymn, reports from Westfield and Cranford Auxiliaries were read, which showed most gratifying results of the work accomplished.

Mrs. Drake of Jersey City, President of Conference Organization, and Mrs. Boswell of Elizabeth, Secretary, made appropriate remarks in regard to the work, and gave a number of valuable suggestions.

A vocal solo by Miss Alice Carroll, entitled "He was not willing that any should perish", was rendered in a pleasing manner. This took the place of the solo that was to be sung by Miss Brown, who was absent.

Continuing the reports, Elizabeth, Plainfield and Rahway were heard from, and the same growth and progress were evidenced.

The First Methodist Episcopal Church raised $250 the past year for the work, and eighteen life members are on the roll.

Grace society is only three months old, but gives promise of great usefulness.

All of the reports spoke of the death of Mrs. Rosamond Ham, of Cranford, who was a very active member of the society.

$100 was raised to furnish and provide a room in one of the society's homes. The committees appointed were:

Resolution—Mrs. Moore, Elizabeth, and Mrs. Chamberlain, Westfield.
Home Missions—Miss Hawk, Elizabeth.
Mite Boxes—Miss Mendell, Cranford.

The Committee on District Meeting from Grace Church, to provide dinner and entertainment is:

Mrs. E. P. Stevens, chairman, Mrs. J. H. Carney, Mrs. John Valiant, Mrs. Anna Most, Mrs. Stine Mrs. Loomis, Mrs. J. S. Lunger, Mrs. A. Lutkins, Mrs. Garey, and Mrs. Edward Vermeule.

The officers of the district society are:

President—Mrs. R. M. Moore, Elizabeth.
Vice-presidents, presidents of Auxiliaries—Mrs. Blake, Elizabeth; Mrs. Simpson, Westfield; Mrs. Hyde, Plainfield; Mrs. Lunger, North Plainfield; Mrs. Magee, Rahway.
Corresponding Secretary—Mrs. Isabella A. Miller, Cranford.

The officers of the local society are:

President—Mrs. Wm. Lunger.
First Vice-president—Mrs. Ezra Loomis.
Second Vice-president—Mrs. Most.
Third Vice-president—Mrs. L. A. Hummer.
Secretary—Mrs. A. A. Taft.
Treasurer—Mrs. J. S. Lunger.

A recess followed the morning session, when lunch was served. The afternoon session began at 2. Mrs. C. X. Henderson of Elizabeth is acting secretary.

—Ex-Borough Clerk Vetterlein has begun to take the North Plainfield school census.

—George Cook's horse ran away on Park and North avenues this morning. It was easily caught, by Frank Motley, and no harm was done.

NEW JERSEY NEWS.

Her Infant Served Her Well.

JERSEY CITY, May 10.—Mrs. Catherine Mohr was sentenced in the general sessions court last week to three and a half years imprisonment in state prison for stealing $140 from Mary and Catherine Cosgrove and forging the girls' names to a check for $160, on which she obtained the money. When the woman was arrested her husband disowned her and her three months old baby, and as she could not take the child to state prison Judge Hudspeth did not know what disposition to make of the infant. He has just settled the matter by having Mrs. Mohr again arraigned, when he reconsidered her sentence and sent her to the penitentiary for two years, where she can take the child with her.

To Break Up Large Estates.

TRENTON, N. J., May 10.—In the house Mr. Watson, of Camden, introduced a bill making it unlawful to will property above the value of $1,000,000, and providing that all property of a decedent in excess of that sum shall revert to the state. The attorney general is required to see that the state gets its proper share of such estates, and the treasurer is authorized to distribute such funds among the several counties to be used for public purposes. Heavy penalties are provided for violation of the act.

Pearce Sentenced to Death.

CAPE MAY, N. J., May 10.—After being out half an hour the jury in the case of Richard Pearce, colored, on trial for the murder of his wife, brought in a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree. Pearce was sentenced to be hanged on June 29, next. If Pearce is hanged it will be the first case of capital punishment ever inflicted in Cape May county.

Rainforth's Strange Case.

By WILL LISENBEE.

[Copyright, 1894, by American Press Association.]

CHAPTER III.

A thrill of horror went through the room. It was a moment long to be remembered in Mayburg.

The audience farthest away from the justice's desk only knew in a vague way what was taking place and strained their ears to catch every sound.

"Grace Dangerfield! It can't be so! My God, she could not have committed the deed!"

It was the agonized voice of Gerald Rainforth that broke the stillness, and leaping forward he knelt beside the woman's prostrate form.

"It is Grace Dangerfield of Darkwood Hall. She has confessed to committing the murder!" From lip to lip the words flew through the densely packed audience till the subdued murmur of many voices swelled into a continuous hum.

Hastening forward to where the prostrate woman lay, I bent over her. Her face was as pale as death, and she lay so motionless that I feared she was already dead. But presently the faint flutter of her pulse told that she still lived.

"She must be removed from this close room at once," I said, arising and addressing the sheriff. "Where shall we take her?"

The sheriff consulted the justice for a moment and then said:

"Bring her into my house. I'll see that she's well cared for till she recovers."

Court was immediately adjourned, and then strong arms lifted the unconscious woman and bore her through a side door from the courthouse to the sheriff's dwelling that stood adjoining the jail a short distance away. She was deposited upon a lounge in the little back parlor, where the sheriff's wife—a kind, sympathetic woman—came forward, anxious to administer to the wants of the stranger.

I shall not go into the details of what immediately followed, save in a few hasty sentences. Miss Dangerfield recovered consciousness in a short time after being taken to the sheriff's home, but she immediately grew delirious with all the symptoms of brain fever. As a matter of form, she was placed under guard, but it was plainly evident that there would be little need of such, for there were several chances to one that she would never recover from the illness the great excitement had thrown her into. The housekeeper of Darkwood Hall, one of the patient's most trustworthy servants, came to assist in taking care of her mistress.

The sudden turn of affairs in the mysterious murder case was a seven days' wonder to the inhabitants of Mayburg. It was the all absorbing theme of every tongue. Yet the whole matter was veiled in as much mystery as it had been at the very outset. Since her startling declaration that she had committed the awful deed Miss Dangerfield had remained in such a condition as to make any explanation on her part impossible. So there was nothing to be done but to wait patiently for her recovery.

All sorts of reports and stories were set afloat, some of which were to the effect that she who had confessed to the murder was insane. Others said that she was evidently trying to shield the young artist, who was the real criminal.

So strongly and so inconceivably mixed had the affair become that the justice refused to release Gerald Rainforth even on the heaviest bail till the whole matter could be subjected to a thorough investigation.

And thus matters stood. Miss Dangerfield lay at the point of death at the sheriff's home with but small chance of recovery, while Gerald Rainforth had been returned to the jail to wait further developments.

It was not until the day following the one on which occurred the dramatic scene in the courtroom that I found an opportunity to read the manuscript given me by Gerald Rainforth. It contained a strange, romantic story and was full of interest. I give it in full below:

GERALD RAINFORTH'S STORY.

I hardly know why I write this, for nothing seems less likely at this moment than I shall ever find it necessary to give to the world the particulars of the incidents I am about to record, yet something seems to tell me that I am writing this for a purpose, but if it is ever given to another it will be to one who is my dearest friend and to whom some explanation of my past conduct is due.

After the death of my parents I spent four years in college, and then, having developed a taste for painting, I took up that art as a study, and for three years I received instructions from the best painters of Europe. Then I began traveling, and possessed of an ample fortune, with no near relatives with whom I might make my home, I drifted about wherever fancy led. It was just three years ago last June that the series of incidents of which I shall write began to take place. I was in Rome at that time, whither I had gone to pursue my studies as an artist. Shortly after my arrival in the Eternal City I accidentally stumbled upon Ralph Redburn, a former schoolmate, who was an artist full of enthusiasm, and, I might add, airy dreams. He had his studio near the Piazza di Spagna, in what had doubtless once been a palace of considerable magnificence, but which was now so tumbled down and given to neglect as to resemble a barn more than a place for human habitation. But Ralph Redburn was eccentric and had a great passion for ruins, especially when it came to paying rent, for ruins rent very cheaply in Rome, and the young artist found it necessary to use economy.

By his urgent invitation I established myself in his studio, which might easily have accommodated a half dozen others, and by a liberal use of rugs and draperies I succeeded in making the place quite comfortable.

I had been three months in Rome and was beginning to feel a desire for a change of scene when one evening as I was strolling past the church of Trinita del Monte I saw a young lady emerge from the edifice and enter a carriage that stood in waiting. She was an American, I knew at the first glance, and was possessed of such rare loveliness of form and face that for a moment I stood staring after her as if stupefied. She was of medium height, with a complexion of the clearest olive, and eyes large and lustrous, with a hue of deep violet in their shadowy depths. She passed so close to me that I caught the faintest odor of the strange sweet perfume that clung to her garments. Then she entered the carriage and was driven rapidly away.

I stood there as if transfixed till the carriage had vanished from sight; then recovering myself, and noticing that my stupid staring had excited the attention of a group of beggars who were collected near the church entrance, I hastily drew a few pieces of silver from my pocket, and tossing them to the ragged mendicants I walked on.

But I could not forget the face of the strange beauty, and in spite of my efforts to banish her from my mind she would reappear before my mental vision with such frequency as to astonish even myself. For the next few days I spent a great deal of my time in the vicinity of the church of Trinita del Monte, but my visits to that neighborhood were unproductive of any result save to increase my desire to again behold her who had awakened in me an interest I had never before felt in woman.

In the next week that followed I think I must have searched for her through every portion of the city, yet I failed to discover the slightest trace of her. One evening nearly a month later something very strange happened. For more than an hour I had been sitting alone in the studio, puffing away at a cigar or indulging in reflections over the past. It had grown quite dark in the room when suddenly I seemed to become aware of a presence near me. Then the strangest thing happened—was I dreaming, or what was it that came to my vision? It seemed as if a door in the old ruined wall swung open, revealing the interior of a room beyond. There were two persons in the room—one a stoutly built man of about 50; the other a young girl—she whom I had seen at the church of Trinita del Monte! She was half reclining upon a luxurious couch, while one white arm, from which the loose flowing sleeve had fallen back, rested affectionately upon the shoulder of the man whose easy chair was drawn close to her side. Presently the man turned and laid his arm about the girl's waist, and although I heard no sounds the expression of his face and the movements of his lips told me that he was speaking to her upon some subject of grave importance.

Her face was turned to his, and I could plainly see traces of sorrow and pain depicted upon her countenance. Then apparently the man ceased speaking and fixed a look of entreaty upon the beautiful girl. Suddenly she lifted her hand above her head, her lips moved, while a strange look of pain and determination crossed her face. Then the man caught her in his arms and pressed a kiss upon her brow.

A moment later the scene changed. The man was alone in his easy chair. Suddenly the door opened, and an evil visaged man of perhaps 28 years entered. As he entered the other rose from his chair with a violent start, rage and astonishment upon his face. With a quick gesture the older man pointed to the door, but was met with a smile of scorn from the other. The next instant he strode forward and grasped the intruder by the arm as if to eject him from the house. A ferocious light gleamed in the eye of the young man. Then, disengaging himself from the grasp upon his arm, he dealt his adversary a blow in the temple. The old man reeled backward, then sank down in a heap upon the floor. The other stood over him for several moments as if stupefied; then bending down he laid his hand over the victim's heart. For 10 seconds he remained motionless, bending over the prostrate man; then he arose, a look of horror upon his countenance, which gradually gave place to one of abject terror. Glancing quickly about the room as if to assure himself that he had not been discovered, he turned and fled.

CONTINUED TOMORROW.

Don't Hesitate, but Call and Be Convinced That Every Statement We Make Is True.

To those who do not already know that there is established in Newark, at 105 Halsey street, a physician who stands in the foremost rank of his profession, who is indorsed by the leading colleges of the country and who can prove by witnesses right here in Newark (not by one, but by hundreds) that he has succeeded in curing cases that have been utterly given up by other physicians, and good ones, too. To those who do not these facts we state that any person, rich or poor, old or young, is welcome here and receive examination and advice free of charge.

Thousands praise the day they came to us for treatment. There is no guess work, no experimenting, no painful operation. No matter how difficult the case, no matter how much of the physician's time it may consume, the diagnosis will not only be thorough, it will be absolutely free. There is no taint of quackery or deception; no claim or statement is made that is not borne out by facts and living witnesses.

Mrs. Abby A. Ray, late of 86 Grove street, East Orange, who now lives at 400 Ellmore street, Escanaba, Mich., writes, under date of January 12: "The medicine arrived this morning and I am so glad it came. I am almost out, and it has helped me so much and I am so much pleased with its wonderful effort on my broken down system that I would like to testify to your great success in my case. I am feeling as well now, in fact better, than I had ever hoped to again."

This is one of many letters that we receive daily. We have the originals at our office and if you wish you may see them. Another thing: We never publish or reveal a patient's name unless they so desire.

DR. STARKWEATHER.

There is not a penny to pay for the fullest medical advice. Dr. Starkweather is a graduate of the Berkshire Medical College, Massachusetts, and of the Medico-Chirurgical College of Philadelphia; endorsed also by the College of Physicians and Surgeons and Bellevue Medical College of New York. We invite all sufferers from whatever cause to call at our office, No. 105 Halsey street, Newark, where Dr. Starkweather is in attendance daily to give examination and advice entirely free of charge. It matters not what the disease, or how many years you have suffered, in spite of means adopted in your behalf, a visit to this office and the privileges of the same will cost you nothing, and may be the means of saving your life. We prepare all our medicines and prescribe the remedies indicated. This plan enables the patient to receive directly from us such remedies as will produce the results promised.

Our office is open daily from 10 a. m. to 9 p. m. Sundays 4 to 6 p. m.

A REMARKABLE CURE

MIDDLEBUSH, Somerset Co., N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For the past forty years I have been afflicted with bleeding piles. I suffered constant pain in the lower part of my body, but when I had an operation of the bowels the pain was perfectly terrible, and was most always attended with the loss of a large quantity of blood. My condition was complicated with prolapse of the rectum, which at first only made its appearance when I had a movement of the bowels, but at length the parts became so weakened that the protrusion took place while walking or stooping, or after the slightest exertion, and sometimes even while I was at rest. Whenever this happened it gave rise to the most agonizing pain, and felt as though something was pulling the life right out of me. In fact only those similarly situated can imagine the suffering and distress which I had to endure from day to day, and which made my life a terrible burden. Hearing of Dr. Lighthill's wonderful success in the cure of difficult chronic diseases, I placed myself under his care, and now I am proud and happy to say that, marvelous as it may seem, he effected a complete and radical cure in my case in every respect, and he performed this cure without any painful operation or preventing me from work. Since this terrible disease has been removed by Dr. Lighthill's skill I feel new life, and for the first time in forty years I feel once more what it is to be without daily pain, discomfort and distress. I am not a wealthy man, but no amount of money would tempt me to be put back in my former condition.

I make this public statement, not only from a deep and everlasting sense of gratitude to Dr. Lighthill, but also as a simple Christian duty to let the afflicted know where they can find a physician whose skill cannot be surpassed, and in whom implicit confidence can be placed.

H. VROOM.

A LOCAL ENDORSEMENT.

No. 190 Somerset st., Plainfield, N. J.

To the Residents of Plainfield, N. J.

Mr. H. Vroom, whose statement appears above, is a brother-in-law of mine. I personally know of his case and his suffering and also know the happy fact that to the surprise of himself and his friends, Dr. Lighthill effected a radical and permanent cure. His statement is true in every respect and does not say half enough in praise of Dr. Lighthill. Anyone who wishes this statement verified is at liberty to come and see me personally.

JOHN C. KENNEY.

Dr. Lighthill

Formerly of Trenton, the well-known expert in Chronic Diseases, can be consulted daily (except Thursdays) on all OBSTINATE AND COMPLICATED diseases of the human system of whatever name and nature, at his office and residence,

No. 144 Crescent Avenue.

Deafness, Catarrh and Diseases of the Head, Throat and Lungs successfully treated.

Piles of the most aggravated nature radically and permanently cured in a few weeks, without pain or detention from business, and all other rectal diseases are treated with equal success.

Mental and Nervous Derangements, Epilepsy, Diseases of the Skin and Blood, Rheumatic, Neuralgic and Scrofulous Affections.

Diseases of the Heart, Stomach, Liver, Bowels, Kidneys and Bladder are successfully treated, even when other medical skill has failed.

Containing a large array of testimonials of remarkable cures, similar to that above, and giving valuable medical information on important matters, will be mailed free to any address, or furnished on application at Dr. Lighthill's office, No. 144 Crescent Avenue.

BY THE INSIDE ROUTE

Successful Trip of the Torpedo Boat Cushing.

From Washington to New York Through Rivers, Bays and Canals—An Experiment Ordered By the Navy Department—Enthusiasm of the People Along the Route.

NEW YORK, May 11.—The United States torpedo boat Cushing arrived at the Brooklyn navy yard from Washington, having come by the inside route. The purpose of the trip was to test the practicability of using this route by vessels of her class in times of war. This is the first time the experiment has been tried by an armed vessel.

The Cushing is 133 feet 9 inches between perpendiculars, 14 feet 10 inches extreme breadth and draws 5 feet 6 inches, with all weight and full compliment of men.

She started from Washington Tuesday morning, ran down the Potomac 90 miles, through Chesapeake bay 110 miles to Chesapeake City, and at 9 p. m. entered the Chesapeake and Delaware canal. She steamed through the canal to Delaware City, a distance of 14 miles, in 2 3-4 hours, being detained somewhat less than five minutes in each of the three locks. The canal has a depth of nine feet.

She anchored in Delaware bay for the night, and at 6 o'clock Wednesday morning lifted her anchor and came up the Delaware bay and river to Bordentown, N. J., 55 miles, where she entered the Delaware and Raritan canal and proceeded to Kingston, 20 miles further.

She met a number of canal boats, whose occupants viewed with surprise the odd looking craft of destruction, while people who had gathered along the banks threw up their hats and cheered the first fighting craft ever seen along the Jersey bays.

Four hours and ten minutes were taken on the run to Kingston, six locks being encountered and the speed being from five to six knots.

The Cushing made no more wash than a launch would going at the same speed.

She went at less speed in this canal than in the first as there are two feet less water. Going at greater speed than she did draws the stern down through the displacement of the water and in this case would have caused her propellor to churn up the mud at the bottom.

At Kingston, the canal officials and lock keepers showed every attention. She remained there over night and got under way again at 6 o'clock Thursday morning, arriving at New Brunswick, where the canal enters the Raritan river, at 10:20 o'clock, a run of 24 miles, the length of the canal being 44 miles.

They received an ovation here. From factory windows girls waved their aprons, the naval officers lifting their hats in return. The banks were filled with people old and young and locomotive and factory whistles were kept wide open.

The Cushing then proceeded on the last stage of her journey, 37 miles, down the Raritan river, the Raritan bay, around through the narrows and up the navy yard through Buttermilk channel, back of Governor's Island, mooring alongside the coaling dock.

Her running time from Washington was 28 1-2 hours. She used only one of her boilers, only 1-8 of her horse power with only 1-2 steamer pressure. The total run was 350 miles and was entirely satisfactory.

TO MARY WASHINGTON.

Dedication of Her Monument at Fredericksburg, Md.

FREDERICKSBURG, Va., May 11.—The weather being propitious there was nothing in the way of a most successful celebration of the event to which patriotic women and the people of Virginia particularly, have looked forward to for so many months—the dedication of the monument to Mary Washington, the mother of the first president. From an early hour visitors arrived at this ancient city where so many memories of Washington have been centred for a hundred years. From Richmond there came Gov. O'Farrall and a large number of civil and military visitors, and every part of the state contributed its quota. From the national capital a special train brought President Cleveland, Secretary and Mrs. Carlisle, Secretary and Miss Morton, Secretary and Mrs. Lamont, Postmaster-General Bissell, Private Secretary and Mrs. Thurber and many distinguished men in public life. The procession, including various patriotic societies and benevolent orders, companies of the state militia, the governor's staff and representative ladies on horseback, was then formed and proceeded to the monument, where a grand stand to accommodate the 400 guests had been erected. On Washington avenue in front of the stand nearly 10,000 people were massed. Ceremonies commenced with prayer by Rev. James P. Smith, followed by a brief address by A. P. Rowe, mayor of Fredericksburg. Gov. O'Farrall followed with an impassioned address of welcome on the part of the state of Virginia which was frequently interrupted with applause, and in an eloquent peroration presented the president of the United States.

For several minutes the enthusiasm which greeted the president was without bounds. When the cheering finally subsided, President Cleveland delivered a short address.

There was a great outburst of enthusiasm when the president finished and gave way to the Masonic societies, who performed the dedicatory exercises. Senator John W. Daniel, the orator of the day, was introduced by President Cleveland.

A brief address by Lawrence Washington, a lineal descendant of the mother of the first president, closed the programme at the monument. President Cleveland held a reception during the afternoon at the Mary Washington house, shaking hands with several thousand persons.

At the conclusion of the ceremonies at the monument, the president and Governor O'Ferrall were escorted to the old historic Mary Washington residence, where they partook of luncheon.

Contrary to reports that the president would not attend the banquet, the chief magistrate put in an appearance and made a happy impromptu speech.

Governor O'Ferrall and Vice-President Stevenson both made short addresses.

The evening passed away most delightfully in the enjoyment of the substantial and intellectual repast spread by the generous hosts of the occasion.

At 10 o'clock promptly the grand ball opened and the gallant beaux and maidens moved through the many figures of the cotillion with characteristic grace.

Ancient Deserted City.

NEW YORK, May 11.—A Recorder special from Mapimi, Mex., says: The excitement over the recent discovery of an ancient deserted city in the heart of the Sierra Madre mountains, to the southwest of here, seems to have spread to nearly all parts of the world, and many letters have been received making inquiries as to the wonderful discovery and the result of explorations. A party of American archeologists from New York and Philadelphia passed through here on their way to the deserted city. They are accompanied by Mexican guides, and expect to experience but little difficulty in finding the wonderful city. They will make a thorough study of all that is to be found in the city, and will probably not complete their work for several months. A similar expedition is reported to be on its way from the City of Mexico.

Trouble in India.

BOMBAY, India, May 11.—Trouble arising from an infringement of the caste system has broken out in the 17th Bengal native infantry (the loyal Poorbeah), stationed in Agra province, a division of the northwest province of British India. It is feared in government circles here that grave results may follow. It appears that some men from the 13th Bengal infantry (the Shekhawattee) were drafted into the 17th, and that promotion was given to newcomers. This the old members strongly resented, and two companies gave evidence of their indignation by parading without permission. This form of protest recieved the hearty approval of the other companies. The colonel ordered the ringleaders arrested, but without avail, and finally he ordered them all confined in the guardroom.

Smallpox at Chicago.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., May 11.—The state board of health claims to have information that smallpox is dangerously prevalent in Chicago, and that some action by Indiana is necessary. The board is disposed to quarantine against the city and cites the appropiation of $50,000 at the governor's disposal to enforce the quarantine. The board has presented the case to the governor. He has not decided on his line of action.

Smooth Pension Swindler.

LEAVENWORTH, Kan., May 11.—The Leavenworth postal authorities discovered a smooth pension swindler in the person of a middle-aged colored man, who was getting $24 a month under the name of Peter Gillespie, and $12 under the name of J. R. Brown. This he has been doing for three years. When accused of securing two pensions he said that he served in the war under two different names.

New Colony Scheme.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 11.—Representatives of prominent labor organizations of New York have reached this city on their way to Merced in the San Joaquin valley, where they propose to establish a colony if the land is found satisfactory. The intention is to buy 2,500 acres and settle eighteen families, giving each a tract for farming purposes.

Sick of America.

CLEVELAND, O., May 11.—The riots of last week had their effect on some of the unemployed foreigners. Thirty-five people took passage for the old country to remain. Others are leaving for their homes in Poland, Hungary, Bohemia, and Italy. They say conditions are better in the old country than here.

Brutal Assault on a Doctor.

UTICA, N. Y., May 11.—Dr. J. Lyman Bulkley was brutally shot and pounded in his own dooryard at Sandy Creek last night, by a young man named Williams, who said the doctor had treated him some 13 years previous and did not cure him and that he had come to settle the matter.

ROSEBERY'S VICTORY

Majority of Fourteen on the Budget Division.

Exciting Session of the House of Commons—The Government's Supporters Burst Into Roaring Cheers at the Announcement of the Vote—Balfour's Speech in Opposition.

LONDON, May 11.—The debate on the budget bill in the commons la st night was begun before a well filled house. As it continued signs of intense interest in the coming division became evident on all sides. The members' seats were occupied, the lobbies were packed, the galleries were filling quickly and a great crowd was rapidly gathering outside.

The heavy oratorical artillery was brought out by Arthur Balfour, leader of the unionists. Whether good or bad, he said, the budget was wholly inconsistent with the traditions of liberal finance. It was not a national, but a class budget. In it the government assailed certain interests to propitiate others. They dealt unjustly with the brewers and publicans on the fallacious assumption that excessive profits justified excessive taxation.

The graduated income tax might be good in principle, but the method of application proposed by the government directly menaced trade and individual interests. The budget might empty the country houses, might deliver over the small sporting estates to become portions of the larger aggregate owned possibly by some American millionaires, but the exhaustive drafts upon the greater properties under the estate duties would in nowise bring nearer by a single day the millenium which the government pretended to bring forward.

Sir William Harcourt, chancellor of the exchequer, defended the budget. The motion to reject the bill, he said, represented the land and liquor interests.

When Sir William Harcourt closed his speech the house was packed and suspense was written on many faces in the ministerial ranks.

The division was made slowly, as the members went into the lobbies with painful deliberation. When they came back there was no demonstration. The return of the tellers was awaited with keen anxiety.

They came in after a short pause with the announcement that 308 members had voted for the second reading and 294 against it.

When the speaker read these figures to the house the supporters of the government burst into roaring cheers. The unionists replied with equal vigor, and nearly two minutes elapsed before quiet was restored.

Dinner to General Harrison.

NEW YORK, May 11.—Ex-President Harrison was entertained at dinner last night at the City club on Fifth avenue, where he was the guest of John A. Sleicher, editor of the Mail and Express. The dinner party was not large and the affair was entirely informal, having no political bearing as several of the guests were prominent democratic business men. The guests were all personal frie nds of General Harrison and the dinner partook of the character of a social reunion.

LIABLE TO HEAVY PENALTIES.

Several Firms Counterfeiting World's Fair Diplomas and Medals.

WASHINGTON, May 11.—Counterfeiting world's fair diplomas and medals of awards for advertising purposes will be put a stop to if the treasury department can do it. Chief Hazen, of the secret service, now has three cases on his hands, one a root beer firm, one an organ firm and one an infant food firm.

Photographic copies of the diploma and medal of award with the name of the firm printed on them are being published in the newspapers as advertisements, as is alleged, for the evident purpose of deceiving the public into believing that these firms had received official awards from the world's fair commission. As a matter of fact the design of the medal has not yet been made and the diplomas, it is stated, not yet issued, while some of the firms using the diplomas in the newspapers in connection with their business have not received any awards for their goods.

The law provides a fine of $10,000 and imprisonment for three years as the maximum penalty for its violation and Chief Hazen says guilty parties will be prosecuted.

B. & O. SEIZING COAL.

Confiscating for Their Own Use All Fuel Sent Over the Road.

WILMINGTON, Del., May 11.—It is learned here that the officials of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad company have seized for the roads use all soft coal in transit to customers, owing to the strike of miners and the scarcity of coal.

A local firm had a contract to coal the steamer Farncliffe, now here, but could not get coal.

There was a big forfeit for any delay in coaling the vessel and the contracting company made an appeal to the railroad officers and secured coal enough to fill the ship's bunkers.

Railroads carrying mails have the right to seize coal in transit, if needed to run the locomotives.

Soft coal is now very scare in this city.

Reformatory Prisoner Shot Dead.

HUNTINGDON, Pa., May 11.—Edward Woods, who was sent to the industrial reformatory here from Philadelphia, was shot dead by guard Bookheimer in the cell house last evening. Woods had been reduced to the third grade by Bookheimer some time ago for misconduct, and last evening he and another prisoner attacked the guard with an iron bar, knocking him down several times. The guard fired in self defense and was exonerated by the coroner.

Turf Reinstatements.

CHICAGO, May 11.—The board of review of the National Trotting association has reinstated Alcryon, the famous stallion ruled off the turf with Nelson on account of crookedness in connection with the notorious Balch $10,000 race in Boston. The case of J. B. Miller, of Newburg, N. Y., expelled, was referred to the president for decision. Joe A. Lyman, the driver of Grover S., which "broke dead" at Point Breeze Park, Philadelphia, in 1892, was reinstated.

His Name Is McDennis.

QUINCY, Ill., May 11.—Alderman Thad. Rogers, proprietor of the St. James hotel, has extended the hospitalities of his house to General Kelly, and sent him an order for 1,000 loaves of bread and 1,000 pounds of meat when they reach Quincy. Kelly's real name is McDennis. His mother lived here, and when she married Kelly, a second husband, the son took the new name. He was formerly a Quincy printer.

Vetoed By Gov. Flower.

ALBANY, May 11.—Gov. Flower has vetoed Assemblyman Wilcox's bill providing that every savings bank shall annually publish a statement containing a list of all accounts of depositors upon which no new deposits have been made and from which no sums have been withdrawn in five years. The governor has also vetoed the assembly bill making an appropriation for the state land survey.

Lillie Showing Her Age.

LONDON, May 11.—Mrs. Langtry reappeared on the stage last evening in Buchanan and Murray's "A Society Butterfly" at the Opera Comique. She had the leading part and did satisfactory work, although the organized gallery claque treated her badly. She has aged rapidly since her last public appearance. She was fairly supported. The piece was well staged and probably will be successful.

Mrs. Schilling Will Probably Recover

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., May 11.—Drs Schmidt and Curtis made an unsuccessful attempt to take the bullet out of the back of Mrs. Mathilda Schilling, who was shot by her brother-in-law, John Hillock, at her home in Scarsdale. The doctors now agree that Mrs. Schilling will recover, provided blood-poisoning does not set in. As yet Hillock has not been apprehended.

Old Man Hennessy Gets Ten Years.

LITCHFIELD, Conn., May 11.—The Hennessy murder trial ended with a verdict of guilty of manslaughter, and defendant was sentenced to 10 years in the state prison. He can hardly live out his sentence, as he is over 70 years old. The defence was that he was drunk at the time of the assault and did not know what he was about; also claiming that his wife fell into the fire.

Hemmed in By an Ice Floe.

ST. JOHN'S, N. F., May 11.—The Allan line steamer Corean, which has just arrived here, reports a large number of icebergs south of Cape Race in the track of ocean steamers. The wind changed yesterday and the ice floe was driven against the coast, making it impossible for the Corean to get out at present.

Death of an Old Boston Merchant.

BOSTON, May 11.—Otis Munroe, one of Boston's oldest merchants, is dead at his home in Brookline, aged 66 years. His father was a revolutionary veteran. Mr. Munroe was the purchaser of the first boatload of northern corn shipped through the Erie canal.

ALL THEIR OWN WAY

Sanders' Coxeyites Outwit Railroad Officials.

Run Their Stolen Train 214 Miles in Spite of Numerous Obstructions Put in Their Way, and, After Arriving at Fort Scott, Surrender to United States Officers.

FORT SCOTT, Kas., May 11.—"General" Sanders and his industrial army, after an exciting trip of 214 miles eastward from Pueblo on a stolen train, have surrendered to the United States authorities. The men stole a Denver & Rio Grande engine and six Missouri Pacific coal cars at Colorado city Tuesday night and after a run unprecedented in western railroad history, and skilfully avoiding officers of the law, rail road officials and obstructions placed in their way, arrived at Scott City late yesterday afternoon.

As already told in these despatches the men were utterly worn out by their long ride and exposure and went into Chivington for rest and refreshment, abandoning their train for the time being. Later, however, hearing that a wrecking train was on the way to remove the obstruction to allow the resumption of traffic, they returned on handcars to the deep cut and awaited the arrival of the company's crew.

When the train arrived Sanders signified his willingness to help in removing the cars thrown across the track, and in a drizzling rain the commander and his men worked for four hours. The obstruction removed Sanders, cooly signalled "all abord, and forcing the work train before him proceeded on his way eastward with his original train.

When the men reached Chivington they made a meal on cold potatoes and bread. Here the work-train was sidetracked and Sanders being informed that no further attempt would be made to hinder his passage eastward they started forward, arriving at Horace, Kas., about noon.

Here a westbound passenger train, which had stood for 36 hours, was waiting for the stolen train to pass.

After Engineer Cosgrove coaled his engine and took water at the tank the stolen train started out just as the eastbound mail from Pueblo entered the Horace yards. This changed the situation. The westbound passenger was released and started for Pueblo.

Cosgrove slipped back upon the siding while Sanders ran up to the station to notify the conductor of the passenger train to go on ahead.

In the yards stood five or six locomotives on their way back to Pueblo. Cosgrove audaciously selected the best passenger locomotive in the lot with which he replaced the stolen Denver & Rio Grande switch engine.

There was a long delay.

The officials did not want the passenger train to leave ahead of the stolen train as that would interfere with the plans laid to entrap Sanders at Scott City, but Sanders and Cosgrove were familiar with railroad rules and they declined to make the first move.

Finally the officials ordered the passenger train to go ahead. The coal car special followed just ten minutes later.

Then ensued a wild ride.

The passenger train ran at a speed of 45 miles an hour, down the straight stretches of track, while the wet and dirty passengers in the open coal cars in the midst of showers of cinders followed at the same speed. They were 12 minutes behind the mail train at Selkirk and but six minutes in the rear at Leoti. The mail entered Scott City only ten minutes ahead of the coal car tourists.

Meanwhile the special bearing the deputy United States marshals and H. G. Clark, general superintendent, had been racing westward. Rails had been ordered removed just west of this city, as there the scene of contest, if there was to be any, had been planned. The coming of the eastbound mail changed these plans, however, and the rails were re-laid.

Just as the Coxeyites reached Scott City the westbound mail that had been held there was ordered west. When the men saw this new move upon the part of the railway people they quickly retreated down the line.

This action was quickly wired to Supt. Derby in Pueblo and he wrote a brief order to a crew at Selkirk to ditch a locomotive in White Woman's cut four miles away.

But here again the Coxeyites fooled the railroad people. They only dropped back to Modoc switch, where they let the westbound mail pass them and then they returned to Scott City where they arrived shortly after 5 o'clock.

By this time the special with deputies had reached Scott City. Sanders asked for a conference, which was granted. The result of this was that Sanders was given a half hour to decide what course he would choose to take. He returned to his men and after a parley the men decided to peaceably surrender.

The entire delegation was taken east at midnight to answer to the charge of obstructing the mails. This movement will bring them nearer Washington, they think. They are happy to think that they had crossed 214 miles of almost barren plains with their stolen train before their progress was finally arrested.

Coxeyites Steal Another Train.

TACOMA, Wash., May 11.—Sixty industrials seized a train of coal cars at Clealum yesterday and started eastward on the Northern Pacific. Deputy Marshals Jolly and Chidester, who were shot while attempting to eject the crowd of industrials from the stolen train Wednesday night at Yakima, are on their way back to Tacoma. Jolly, it is believed, will die. The marshals are now masters of the situation at the scene of the conflict.

Kelly's Men Are "Mashers."

RUNNELLS, Ia., May 11.—The main body of Kelly's army is still located just where it was camped Wednesday night near this point. The revolt against Kelly which was threatened yesterday is still in the air, but is not so pronounced as it was. Kelly spoke in the town hall here last night to some 400 people and took up a collection which netted about $25. Mrs. Harper and Miss Houten, of Council Bluffs, occupied seats on the platform with Kelly. They are the only women allowed by the commodores in the flotilla. Most of the women who left Des Moines with the Kelly crowd have been taken from the boats by officers along the line at the request of Commodore Kelly. But one woman is now known to be with the army aside from those who travel in the commodore's flagship. This woman is in one of the advance boats and is about 18 years old. She refuses to give her name but claims to to have come from San Francisco to join her husband who is a member of the army. The army seems to be working havoc with the hearts of impressionable women. Yesterday a wild-eyed man passed this place going down the river in a skiff. He carried a shot gun. Of every group of loungers along the river bank he asked if they knew of the whereabouts of a woman with brown hair and blue eyes, about 30 years of age, whom he said was his wife and who had become infatuated with one of Kelly's men. He declared that he would shoot the man on sight.

DOINGS IN CONGRESS.

Progress Made With the Tariff Bill—Work in the House.

WASHINGTON, May 11.—The progress made on the tariff bill yesterday was to the extent of just one line. Two amendments were offered by Allison (rep., Ia.) to the first item in the chemical schedule, "acetic or pyroligneous acid." They were to subject that article to specific duties instead of an ad valorem duty of 20 per cent. They were discussed at some length and were rejected by votes of 27 to 32, and 27 to 33. The next item on the schedule was "boracic acid, 20 per cent. ad valorem."

The first of the Jones batch of amendments was offered to this item, to make the specific duty two cents per pound. An amendment to the amendment was offered by Perkins (rep., Cal.), to make the specific duty five cents a pound, and the matter was undecided at the adjournment.

In the course of the tariff discussion some little unpleasantness was developed on account of Senator Voorhees' sharp answers to some questions from the republican side of the chamber.

Senator Hoar remarking that it was the first time that such a thing had happened in the parliamentary history of the country, as the treatment given by the chairman of the finance committee to courteous and proper inquiries.

But the leading event of the day's proceedings was the two hours' debate on the resolution for a special committee to investigate the arrest and imprisonment of Coxey, Browne and Jones.

Mr. Hoar made a strong speech against it. He declared that he sympathized with the public duties a great deal more than senators did who sought to make of it an instrument for their own political purposes or their own reckless political ambition. By this sentence he won the loud applause of the galleris, and he added, with equal vehemence, that senators would not lay down their constitutional functions and be clamored out of their character as American legislators by any mob spirit, whether it found its utterance from a Coxey car or from the seat of the senator from Nevada (Mr. Stewart). The resolution went over without action and will come up no more.

The new senator from Michigan, Mr. Patton, was sworn into office and took the seat formerly occupied by his predecessor, Mr. Stockbridge. The senate adjourned at 5:15 p. m.

House of Representatives.

Owing to the death of Representative Brattan (dem., Md.) the house adjourned at 12:30 o'clock, after having passed a few private bills. The one of most importance was that directing that a re-survey be made of the counties of Grant and Hooker, Nebraska, to correct gross errors made in the original survey.

FIRE CAUSES TWO FATALITIES.

A Young Wife and Her Brother Leap Into the Canal and Are Drowned.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., May 11.—Fire broke out shortly after midnight in the lumber yards of C. H. Baker & Co., on the bank of the Oswego canal. The gospel boat "Good News," of the Rescue mission of this city was moored beside the burning lumber piles. The flames completely surrounded the boat. Three persons on the boat, Bert Wilson, its captain, his young wife and Alonzo Delaney, a brother of Mrs. Wilson, all jumped into the water in their night clothes, and Mrs. Wilson and her brother were drowned.

The boat was burned to the water's edge, entailing a loss of about $3,000. The loss on the lumber is about $60,000.

Major John W. Powell Resigns.

WASHINGTON, May 11.—Maj. John W. Powell, of Illinois, director of the United States geological survey for the past 16 years, has voluntarily tendered his resignation to the president, to take effect July 1, and the president has accepted it with regret. For several years past Major Powell has been an intense sufferer from his old army wounds, especially from his left arm, which is amputated above the elbow, and this alone induces him to retire. Within a short time he will go to Johns Hopkins university hospital in Baltimore for treatment, where it is feared that a re-amputation of the arm will be necessary.

Anti-Tobacco League.

BOSTON, May 11.—Since the formation in New York of anti-cigarette and tobacco leagues among the school children the subject has been seriously considered by several head masters of schools in this city. The Phillips school on Anderson street took the intiative, and out of 900 scholars in the school 650 of the boys have organized a league and signed the pledge to abstain from the use of the weed in any form. Other schools are considering the matter. There is not so much necessity for the formation of cigarette leagues in Boston owing to the work of the Loyal Legion of the W. C. T. U.

No Damages Awarded.

PITTSBURG, May 11.—In the suits of Charles Fetters' administrators and others against Baird Brothers, contractors, of this city, for damages for loss of life, a verdict for the defendants has just been rendered in the three cases. These suits grew out of the great Licking river bridge disaster in Kentucky, near Cincinnati, where 30 persons were killed.

Connecticut Foresters.

NORWICH, Conn., May 11.—The delegates to the convention of the Ancient Order of Foresters met behind closed doors yesterday. Methods were discussed for the increase of the order in the state. Hartford has been decided upon as the place for the next convention. Grand chief officers were elected. The convention closed last night.

Denied By Captain Picking.

WASHINGTON, May 11.—Captain Henry F. Picking, who was the commanding American naval officer at Rio Janeiro prior to the arrival of Admiral Benham, was at the navy department yesterday. He denied the statement attributed to him that he had said he did all the work at Rio while Admiral Benham secured all the credit.

DICK CROKER IS OUT

No Longer Leader of the Tammany Organization.

His Resignation as Chairman of the Finance Committee Accepted By the Executive Committee—Only One Negative Vote—Still a Member of General Committee.

NEW YORK, May 11.—Mr. Richard Croker tendered his resignation as chairman of the finance committee of Tammany Hall, which position takes with it that of leader, to the meeting of the executive committee yesterday afternoon. The resignation was accepted by a vote of 51 to 1. The negative vote being John J. Scannell.

Mr. Croker still remains a member of the general committee of Tammany Hall. No successor was elected.

Beyond Mr. Croker's connection with the general committee he has now no affiliation with the organization.

The meeting of the committee on organization which took place in the evening to ratify the action of the executive committee in accepting Mr. Croker's resignation was one of the largest that has ever been held. Not only were the 900 men who constitute it there, but several thousand others wanted to get in and could not. The meeting was held in the basement hall.

Maurice F. Holahan, deputy commissioner of public works, made a eulogistic address, in which he referred to Mr. Croker's records of nine years' leadership, during which he had never met defeat. He moved the approval of the executive committee's action which was passed.

The Gale Comet Has a Tail.

ANSONIA, Conn., May 11.—John E. Lewis, an Ansonia astronomer, photographed the Gale comet at Yale observatory Monday night, assisted by Dr. Elkins. The camera was exposed 100 minutes and moved to keep the focus on the comet, which is located in the constellation Hydra. The plate shows a tail four degrees long coursing for the first two straight as an arrow. This is the first report of the discovery of the tail as the telescopes show no sign of one.

A Literary Sensation

All the world is talking about the latest successful novel

Ships That Pass In The Night

You may read it as a Serial

IN THIS PAPER

Watch for It.

The Daily Press was seven years old yesterday.

The necessity for six pages today is the pressure of live and unsolicited advertising, paid for at regular rates. The same necessity will exist and be met in tomorrow's issue. The Press leads all Plainfield in circulation and advertising. Measure the ads, or count the papers, any day. You're always welcome. Each edition is freely open to public inspection.

The fascinating serial "Rainforth's Strange Case" will conclude in The Press tomorrow, and "A Bird of Passage" will be published entire from the pen of Beatrice Harraden. This remarkable woman has written another wonderful story which The Press has secured for publication in Plainfield. It is entitled "Ships That Pass in the Night", and is the reigning literary sensation. Another feature of the six-page Press tomorrow will be a special sporting page in which all lovers of manly sports will be greatly interested.

Rev. W. E. Honeyman and George W. Rockfellow, representing North Plainfield and Plainfield Boards of Health respectively, ask The Press to state that there is no cause for alarm because of tuberculosis in Plainfield cattle. They repudiate the sensational statements of another paper and report that the local milk supply is under the sanitary safeguard of their official action which has for weeks been in progress. They exercise a jurisdiction which will result in continued inspection of cattle and milk as a preventive of the sale of infected meat or milk.

EARLY INTELLIGENCE.

—"The Old Homestead" played to a crowded house in Music Hall last night.

—Chief Marshal Pangborn has purchased a Columbia bicycle from Frank L. C. Martin.

—Lovers of sport should not miss the grand opening of the Manhattan Bowling Alleys Monday night.

—The local trade hustlers, Putnam & DeGraw, have much important information for the gentler sex in their new ad today.

—Carpenter work will be begun on the Emmanuel Baptist Church on Fillmore street between North avenue and East Third street next Monday.

—The attempt to kill elephant Tip in New York today was a failure. He tasted the poison offered him, and would n't take a fatal dose.

—Frances Conshee, an old offender, was fined $10 by Borough Magistrate Crosley this afternoon for being drunk and disorderly about his home.

Own Your Home.

They way to do it is easy enough, as shown by Wm. H. Moffitt in his big ad in The Press today. To become a landowner costs only 50 cents a week through him. You'll regret it if you do n't accept his advice and this rare opportunity.

Miantonomoh Moving Up.

Two adoptions are expected at the council fire of Miantonomoh Tribe of Red Men tonight, and thirteen members have been notified to attend and receive the hunters degree.

Catching Carp.

Harry Dreier, Alvin VanName and Edward Eaton fished in Bound Brook yesterday and caught a number of carp. The bass they captured were thrown back because of the season.

Quarantined.

The house of Andrew F. Marsh, 15 Linden avenue, is still quarantined. One child has nearly recovered from diphtheria, but yesterday Mr. Marsh's second child caught the disease.

Wear One.

U. B. Crane, hatter, says he has just received something less than a million straw hats, and never had such bargains to offer as this season.

Right You Are.

VINCENT CHAPEL FAIR.

Piano Fund Materially Benefited by a Pleasant Methodist Event.

Vincent Chapel looked very Spring-like with its decorations of pretty white dogwood blossoms last evening, while the fair for the benefit of the piano fund of the Sunday-school was in progress. In the centre of the room was the flower booth, prettily draped with white and green, while around were grouped the tables which displayed different articles to please the eye or tempt the fancy of prospective purchasers. In the ample parlor refreshments were served, and as is usual in such cases this department of of the fair did a large business.

Flower Booth—Miss Pangborn, Miss Cornwell.

Lemonade Table—Miss Whitney, Chairman; Miss Hyde, Miss Crosley, Miss Humble, Mr. Hyde, Mr. Smith.

Fancy Table—Mrs. J. W. Jackson, Chairman; Mrs. S. W. Clark, Mrs. H. A. McGee, Mrs. O. L. Jenkins, Mrs. J. R. Joy, Mrs. C. R. Cornwell, Mrs. C. T. Pond, Miss L. Chandler, Miss G. Barnes, Miss E. Carey.

CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE

ENDEAVORERS OF THE LOCAL UNION HOLD SPRING MEETING.

Interesting Reports of a Busy Winter Season.

The Plainfield Local Christian Endeavor Union held its Spring conference last night in the South Plainfield Baptist Church. The building was well filled and much interest was manifested in the work of the Union. President E. M. Cave, of Plainfield, presided.

The meeting began with a praise service of 15 minutes. Rev. Ernest Thompson, of South Plainfield, prayed. "Standing Up For Jesus" was sung and then the minutes were read by the Secretary, Miss Florence Hawkins. President Cave's address to the conference was one of welcome to the individual societies and of encouragement and direction to the Endeavorers.

Reports of progress since the last conference were made by the different societies as follows:

For South Plainfield Endeavorers, of whom 20 were present, Secretary Walter J. Harris reported the organization of Missionary and Temperance Committees. One associate member had been admitted. The attendents at the prayer meetings averaged 16 and the interest was well sustained.

Warren Chapel's work was related by Miss Sadie M. Searing, the Recording Secretary, in a letter read by Miss Lizzie Stafford. Since January the most important achievement had been the forming of a Junior Society with an average attendance at meetings of 32. Fifteen Endeavorers usually took part in the regular prayer meetings. Sixteen attended the conference.

Washingtonville was represented by 16 and made its report through Secretary John Bicknell. The 34 active and one associate member are not organized in connection with any church and hold meetings every Tuesday. A new feature was the special service of prayer preceding the consecration meeting.

Fourteen Park Avenue Baptists were present. Mrs. Lowrie read the report which showed that the society was especially active in missionary work, having donated $50 during the last six months through the church board. The committees were all doing their best and participation in the church prayer-meetings was regular.

Trinity Reformed Church had four Endeavorers present. Frank Storr's lengthy report was very favorable. The society was steadily gaining in both spirituality and numbers. The average April attendance at prayer-meetings was 104. From April last year to now the increase in contributions by the Fulton plan had been nearly 100 per cent. Questioning cards were being used with a promise of good results. The Junior Society was flourishing.

The First Church of Christ sent a greeting by ten members which was read by John Staats. Organized January 4 last they now had fifteen active members and rejoiced in the knowledge that the Spirit of the Lord was with them at meetings.

First Baptists of Plainfield in attendance numbered 11. Miss Emily Coriell read the report. Not yet a year old, much good had been accomplished. Special features were assistance at the revival meetings, excellence of music and the work of the Juniors.

Plainfield's First Presbyterian Society had five representatives. Augustus V Searing, Jr., the president, stated that 15 active members had been received since January. They were engaged in no special line of work, but worked where they could do the most good. Three missionaries had been added and work had been done among the life-savers. Two-thirds of the members attended the church prayer meetings

Six were present from the Seventh-Day Baptist society of New Market. A. W. Vars reported a total membership of 59, one-third of whom attended the church prayer-meetings. Cottage prayer-meetings had been held and interest in foreign missions sustained. A Junior Society was about to be organized with a membership of 20.

Other Endeavorers present were from the Third Street Mission, 8; and from the New Market Baptist Church, 16. A collection was taken up and afterward Rev. Mr. Fletcher, of the New Market Baptists, made an address. He emphasized the importance of planting the right principles in the minds of the coming citizens. He especially urged the taking up of temperance work and, in referring to the Epworth League's stand on this, said that the League had made more progress during the last year in proportion than the Endeavor movement. President Cave spoke briefly on temperance instruction in the schools under the new law, and the conference ended with singing.

Cars and Whistle Scared Him.

W. P. Henderson, of First place, was taking a carriage drive this morning in the neighborhood of Fanwood. While he was crossing the bridge near the railroad station, a train passed, and at the same time the engineer blew the whistle. This frightened the horse, which started to run. Mr. Henderson's son was thrown out of the wagon, but was not injured.

The horse continued to run, going through Scotch Plains to Front street, down Front street towards Plainfield. He was caught near the Johnston place.

The wagon was completely wrecked, and the horse sustained several injuries.

Dr. Titus, of Somerville, was sent for and carefully treated the horse, which is a valuable one, and it is hoped that he may come around all right.

The horse was taken to the Johnston stables.

Social After Election.

After electing the new board of officers this evening at its meeting in Vincent Chapel the Epworth League will have a social, for which the committee have prepared an original and amusing programme of entertainment.

Post-Office Prospects.

John M. Hetfield emphatically denies the rumor that he has decided to appoint William H. Shotwell his first assistant in the post-office. Mr. Shotwell says the place was offered him but he declined.

Red and White, Not Green and Black.

The Young Ladies Missionary Society of the First Baptist Church are arranging for a red and white tea, to be given early in June.

FOR THE relief and cure of a cold in the head there is more potency in Ely's Cream Balm than in anything else it is possible to prescribe. This preparation has for years past been making a brilliant success as a remedy for cold in the head, catarrh and hay fever. Used in the initial stages of these complaints Cream Balm prevents any serious development of the symptoms, while almost numberless cases are on record of radical cures of chronic catarrh and hay fever after all other treatments have proved of no avail.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

Bert, youngest son of Samuel Frazee, is ill with pneumonia.

Mrs. V. L. Frazee of West Front street is spending the day with friends in Raritan.

Mrs. Wm. B. Montgomery, formerly of Plainfield and now of Brooklyn, is seriously ill.

Rev. Mr. Hanser of Jersey City will preach in the Craig Place German Reformed Church at 7:45 Sunday evening.

J. K. Myers has qualified as a director of the City National Bank, to which office he was elected, and the board is now complete.

William Reuswig, the valuable assistant in James Field's pharmacy, Somerville, was entertained by friends in Plainfield yesterday.

The funeral of Harold Elsworth Moffett, aged five weeks, son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Moffett, was held yesterday afternoon, the Rev. Dr. Yerkes officiating.

The funeral of Mrs. Alice Noonan will be held tomorrow morning at 8:15 at the home of James Barry, 680 West Third street, and in St. Mary's Church at 8:45. The burial will be made in Jersey City. Mrs. Noonan was 53 years old. She died in Muhlenberg Hospital Wednesday night from chronic pneumonia.

Miss Virginia C. Taynor died at the home of her mother, 52 Warren street, shortly before 12 last night. She had been ill for ten days with pneumonia. Her father was the late J. L. Taynor and she leaves three sisters and two brothers. The funeral will be held in Warren Chapel, Sunday afternoon at 4, and the interment will be in the North Plainfield Cemetery.

Columbia Rules.

The ambition of every wheelman is to become the owner of the great bicycle advertised at the top of Page 2. The Columbia sells on its name, and lives up to that name. Frank L. C. Martin, the Plainfield agent, will be glad to show you its surpassing points.

The Lad May Recover.

Dr. M. B. Long reports the conditions favorable for the recovery of Reynold Coon, the little boy who was burned yesterday. When such burns cover a third of the surface of the body they are often fatal, but the boy's wounds are not so extensive.

HOW VICTOR CAMP CAME TO BE BITTEN.

He Interrupted Mr. Peckham's Setter's Raid on His Mud Turtles—Doing Well.

Victor Camp, the eleven-year-old son of T. H. Camp of Westfield, who was bitten Tuesday afternoon by W. G. Peckham's mad Gordon setter, is now at the Pasteur Institute, New York, and is apparently on the road to recovery.

Rev. C. H. Patton of Westfield's Congregational Church, gave Mr. Peckham about a week ago the setter, which had belonged to him for several years. Tuesday morning Mr. Patton saw the dog on his lawn and went out to play with him. As soon as the dog saw its former master it sprang at him and tried to bite him. Mr. Patton returned to the house for a chain, as he thought it might be advisable to fasten the setter up on account of Mr. Camp's children, who lived next door but one. While he was looking for the chain the dog disappeared.

In the afternoon little Victor Camp saw the setter meddling with his tub of pet turtles. Now Victor loves his turtles, and when he saw the dog was troubling them he was afraid they might get hurt, so he attempted to drive the dog. When he ran toward the tub crying "Go 'way!" "Go 'way!" the setter sprang at his throat. Victor dodged and the animal caught his right arm with its teeth, tearing flesh, while its paw landed between the boy's eyes and scratched his nose. Victor is plucky and struck back with his left hand. The setter not having time for a spring snapped at the boy's hand and made his teeth meet in the child's left wrist.

Meanwhile Victor's cries had been heard by the Camp's servant girl, and she came running out to his assistance, flourishing a broomstick. The dog turned and sprang at his new assailant, tearing the skin of her right shoulder. She dropped her broom, and, picking up the child, succeeded in reaching the house and closing the door without sustaining any more injuries. The dog then ran off, and after biting a pet terrier of Frederick VanEmburgh was shot by Chief Marshal John Nelson, who had been notified to look out for him.

Mrs. Camp was in bed, but Victor's aunt and his father who were at home sent for Dr. J. B. Harrison. The doctor after having examined the wounds washed them with carbolic acid and cauterized them with nitrate of silver. He pronounced the servant girl's injury to be insignificant, but advised that Victor be sent as a precaution to Dr. Gibler for treatment.

This advice was followed, and Mr. Camp brought his son to New York by the next train and placed him at the Pasteur Institute, where he was inoculated. When the reporter went to inquire after him he was quietly sleeping, and, according to Dr. Gibler, was not likely to experience any serious inconvenience from his misadventure.

Wisely urged by the BOARD OF HEALTH is not complete without a proper use of DISINFECTANTS. But, in choosing these, do not be misled into paying fancy prices for "patent" specialties. Common lime is better than any of them for damp cellars and stables. For vaults, drains, cess-pools, the best and cheapest disinfectant is COPPERAS, supplied by us by the pound or barrel at low rates. But for use in the house, in the plumbing, in kitchen sinks, in closets, for purifying the air of sick rooms, deodorizing offensive discharges—in short, for all purposes of a household disinfectant, nothing can excel the powerful solution of chlorides made and sold by us for 15 years under the name of REYNOLDS'S ODORLESS DISINFECTANT. HOW WE DO IT.

The times have forced many a manufacturer and importer to throw their entire stock under the merciless hammer of the auctioneer, to be sold for hard cash—that they had to have. No matter what goods brought, they had to go, and no name is so often heard or is more familiar to the auctioneer of the largest auction houses in New York than "WHITE OF PLAINFIELD." If you care to know it, that's where he gets so many good bargains—one of the reasons why he can underself all others. We knew a man once, but that's another story.

So Is This.

MILLINERY—You can drop in anywhere almost now a days and buy a hat, and a good one. But, ladies, don't you think that your hats and bonnets were trimmed in the latest style before we ever went into the millinery business? We guess so, and you did not have to go to New York for them, either. Visit our millinery department; it will pay you both ways—style and price.

HOSIERY—You buy your hosiery here, don't you? We sell nothing but Hermsdorf dyed stockings. Import them ourselves, and sell them at the same price the other fellows pay for them. Children's fast black ribbed hose 8c., ladies do., seamless, 12c., men's seamless half hose, 3 pair for 25c.

COAT AND WRAPPER DEPT.—That new department for the sale of ladies' coats capes, wrappers and dresses is a wonderful success. When you can buy a good cambric wrapper for 89c. it does not pay to make them, and coats and capes for spring we are clearing out our entire stock at what they cost.

DRESS GOODS—Good time to buy; never lower in price and never as low again. All our 50, 60 and 75c dress goods go at 39c. All on table No. 1. See that line of swivel wash silks for shirt waists; price only 55c., cost the man who made them 65c.

HOUSEFURNISHINGS—No better housefurnishing department anywhere. We have everything you want in matting, shades, crockery, tinware, dinner, tea and toilet sets. The great sale of granite ironware goes right on. Just see the assortment; the prices are interesting.

MEN'S UNDERWEAR—We have just bought from a mill hard pressed for money five cases of men's summer undewear. Case No. 1, men's Balbriggan shirts 30c., case No. 2, do., 50c., case No. 3, men's medium weight shirts and drawers 60c., regular price $1. One case men's natural wool shirts and drawers 80c., regular $1.25 shirt. One case ladies' ribbed vests 13, 15, 18, 22, 25c.

TWO CAVALIERS.

By ALFRED R. CALHOUN.

(Copyright, 1894, by American Press Association.)

In early October, 1865, I traveled on horseback from Asheville, N. C., into east Tennessee by way of the precipitous and picturesque valley of the French Broad river. Here, if any place on the continent, one might have thought that the battle storm that raged for four years on either side of the Great Smoky range would have been unfelt and the sound of its wild tumult be heard only as an echo. But the ash heaps marking the sites of log cabins, defenses thrown up to command the sweeps and angles of that rough mountain road, haggard men in ragged blue or gray, with one leg or one arm, and, more than all, the shallow graves hastily hollowed in the thin soil of the hills, told that even this sanctuary had been defiled by the red hand of war and its sylvan aisles lit up by the torch of the destroyer.

During years of fighting and scouting on the heights and through the valleys of the Appalachian mountains I had never before been so impressed by the variety and splendor of coloring of these wooded crests and slopes. The autumn tints were bewildering in their brilliant beauty, the dark green shafts of balsam and fir serving to bring the crimson hues of the maples and the russet gold of the mountain oaks into intenser lights.

As the sun was setting myself and my companion, Captain Singer of the Thirty-third Ohio, halted at a cabin, hoping to find accommodations for ourselves and animals for the night. But even with the thoughts of self in mind we had to turn in our saddles for one more glance at the valley of gold and another long look at the marvelous slopes and cones of the mountains now blazing and flaming with the crimson, igneous glow that one felt must continue to light up the landscape after day had faded from the crests of the Cumberland range to the west.

It was a double log cabin, with a meadow in which cattle were grazing, down in the valley, and a large field of shocked corn on the slope above. In the open space a tall, fine looking young woman appeared in response to our call.

"You uns want to stay fo' the night, eh?" she said, and she shaded her eyes from the western light and looked down the road in a direction opposite to that by which we had come as if expecting some one. Then as she did not see the object of her search she turned to us and added: "Git off yer critters and rest a bit till Andy and Phil come up. I reckon hit won't be long, fo' we uns hez been lookin fo' 'em back evah sence the sun drapped ovah Cartah's ridge. Ah, thar they is, and right smart glad I am to see 'em, fo' Andy ain't no use of his'f when hit gets dark."

With our bridles over our arms, Singer and myself turned in the direction indicated by the young woman's extended arm and saw two men coming up the road, which, being some distance below us, was in shadow almost as dark as night. As the men approached we could see that one walked with his hand on the shoulder of the other, as if for guidance. The man who appeared to be blind wore a faded blue jacket, the yellow facings of which told me that it had been designed for a Federal trooper.

The woman came out, and linking her arm in that of the man whose eyes were shaded by the glazed peak of a cap that looked very odd under his slouched cavalry hat she turned him toward us and said: "Andy, har's two strengers with critters as seems bound fo' Knoxville way, and they sez as how they'll pay ef so be we uns ken keer fo' 'em till mawnin."

"Andy, har's two strengers with critters as seems bound fo' Knoxville way."

Without moving his head the man responded, "Strengers, we uns ain't got much, but sech ez hit is you uns is welcome to hit." Then, addressing the other man: "Phil, ef so be the strengers' critters ain't breachy, I reckon they'll find good paster down in the run meder. Show 'em the way, and ef the critters is used to cohn yo' ken tote 'em down some aftah suppah."

"All right, Andy," responded the other man.

Phil was dressed in a butternut suit that had seen its best years ago. His grayish felt hat had been water soaked and wind beaten out of shape, and his rusty, wrinkled boots, into which his trousers were pushed after the fashion of the mountains, were not mates. One was open at the toes and shrunken till its top seemed to rest on the ankle, while the other was a cavalry boot extending to the knee and flaring out at the top. He was about 30 years of age, tall and slender as an Indian, to which his bronzed face and long black hair gave him a resemblance, and he carried himself with an ease and a grace that indicated strength and activity and told that he had been a soldier.

On the way to the meadow he confirmed the latter impression. He told us his name was Phil Ross; that he had served in the Thirty-seventh Tennessee infantry, and that he had had his "chock fill uv fightin."

"Andy Maxwell is uv the same kin with me," continued Phil Ross in response to our questions, "but he was a Yank durin the wah and fit in the Fifth Kaintuck fo' the gov'ment."

"Did Andy Maxwell lose his sight in the war?" I asked.

"Yaas, but Andy ain't what you uns mout call plum blin. Thar's a doctah, a Yankee doctah, down to Knoxville, ez is a-curin him, and he 'lows that Andy 'll git to see right smart aftah a bit, but his face won't nevah be much fo' looks, and I ken tell yo', strengers, befo' the wah thar wasn't a man in all the hills ez had a finer pair o' gray eyes in his head than Andy. Reckon you uns been in the wah? Yes, on the Union side? Well, hit don't mattah a d—n, a sojer's a sojer to me, and I don't keer the side he fit on so long's he did his plum best and wasn't a cussed sneak."

This easy moving, low voiced man attracted me very much. I felt there was a romance in the lives of himself and his "Yankee" kinsman, Andy Maxwell, and now that I am reading over my journal, in which was kept the record of that trip, all the first impressions come back to me intensified, and I find myself wondering why I did not write out the story before.

We went up to the cabin, where we found Andy Maxwell sitting with his back to the fire, at which the woman was preparing supper, while he dandled a chubby year-old youngster.

We had wheat flour biscuits, fried bacon, "genuwine" coffee, with cream, butter and new milk for supper—luxuries not often seen in the cabins of these mountaineers.

I was particularly struck with the appearance of the room in which we found ourselves. Side by side from the pegs there were suspended two old overcoats, the one blue and the other gray. A saber with a dented scabbard, a Spencer carbine, a Belgian musket, such as many of the Confederate troops in the west carried; a tattered guidon, with the staff broken and a gilt "B" on its faded blue field, while two old fashioned rifles, with powder horns and an unmistakable Yankee canteen, hung from pegs near by and suggested a feeling of good fellowship between at least two late foemen which was unfortunately not very prevalent at that time.

As soon as Andy Ross learned that Singer and myself had been in the Union army and fought in a number of battles with himself he insisted on shaking hands with us, and he assured us again and again that he was "doggone glad" to see us, and he promised that if we staid for a week Phil Maxwell would give us some of "the best wild turkey shootin to be had a-top uv the Lor's fahr arth."

While smoking our pipes after supper that night the men, with the help of the woman, Sally, whose status at first puzzled me, told their story. I cannot pretend to quote these kind hearted, simple minded people, and so as I am giving an actual experience I shall tell the story in my own way, though I am well aware that my method violates all rules of literary art.

As in every other part of the Appalachian mountains south of the free states, the people of the Great Smoky range were divided on the question of the war, and hence, as elsewhere, those knit by ties of blood and who had been the closest friends became the fiercest enemies when the presence of the Confederate conscripting officers forced them to take sides.

The fathers of Andy Maxwell and Phil Ross were first cousins, but for no good reason that any one could see or that they could give themselves they took opposite sides when secession began, and their sons did the same.

The young men—neither had a brother—were brought up together. They played together as children, fished together as boys and hunted together in the mountains when they became old enough to be intrusted with a rifle. They fell in love at the same time, but it was unfortunately with the same young woman, Sally Jordan. Sally Jordan was at that time the belle of the Great Smoky range, and her fame brought many an amorous youth from the valleys to the hills, but if her heart was touched at that time by the devotion of any of her admirers she kept the secret to herself.

The neighbors, who knew that the cousins, Andy Maxwell and Phil Ross, were "dead a-love" with Sally Jordan, shook their heads and prophesied trouble between the young men. Even their respective fathers feared they would become enemies, "all on account of that gal Sally," and they were planning for a compromise when, following the thunder of Sumter's guns, the conscripting officer appeared in the hills.

There was at first among the mountaineers a pretty general feeling that they should stand together and repel the men who came to recruit or conscript, but gradually the latent likes or prejudices asserted themselves, and old neighbors who adhered to the Union began to hold aloof from old neighbors who came gradually to sympathize with secession, till at length they passed each other on the hills without speaking. Anger grew into hate, and the opposition that silenced the tongues gave speech to the rifles.

The Maxwells and the Rosses, "bein nigh neighbors, so thick and uv a kin," it was at first believed would hold together and take sides with the Union, as did a majority of their friends, and it was "gen'ally 'lowed" that they would have done so had it not been for Sally Jordan. The girl herself at first took neither side, but as Phil Ross and Andy Maxwell were rivals for her hand, and so were no longer "friendly disposed," it was not thought strange that they should carry their opposition still further and take opposite sides in the war.

Neither of these two men knew the meaning of the word "chivalric"—it is indeed doubtful if it ever came up from the flat slave plantations to make their acquaintance—yet Phil Ross' conduct was at this time most chivalric.

In January, 1862, the Confederates were masters of the situation, and they swarmed over from Asheville to keep the mountaineers from "refugeein" northward and to force every man able to bear arms into the southern ranks. Having already volunteered, Phil Ross was high in the confidence of the Confederates then in the Great Smoky country. From them he learned one day that that night Andy Maxwell would be seized and forced to fight against his will and convictions. Instead of glorying in the prospective humiliation of his rival, Phil Ross sought him out and spoke as follows:

"Andy, we uns hain't been very thick uv late, and I'm doggone sorry fo' hit. We uns know hit's all on 'count uv Sally Jordan, but now that hain't har no' thar. I've come to say that ef so be yo' don't light out afoah sundown the conscriptin officers 'll be har. Go north to Kaintuck, whar thar'll be lots uv show fo' fightin, and I'll see no hahm comes to yer dad and mam. And, Andy, I'll tote fair with yo', by ——! and I'll promise not to speak to Sally Jordan no' to see her alone till you uns come back; then ef so be I'm livin we uns can start in again without one havin mo' show than t'other."

Even if Andy Maxwell had not been a manly fellow his cousin's conduct would have touched him. For the first time in months they shook hands, and that night Phil Ross, with his rifle on his shoulder, saw his rival safely out of the hills.

Among the many gallant regiments Kentucky gave to the Union there was not one that excelled in the length and splendor of its record the Fifth cavalry. It was the good luck or misfortune of this heroic command to participate in nearly all the terrific western battles from Shiloh to Chickamauga and beyond, but as in the latter battle Andy Maxwell's active service terminated I must make it the ending and culminating point of my narrative.

In the language of the Cherokees, who once occupied northwestern Georgia and southeastern Tennessee, "Chickamauga" means "the river of blood." We do not know the reason for the aboriginal name, but we do know that it is no longer a misnomer. Along the southern spurs of Missionary ridge and by the scrub covered banks of the west Chickamauga on the 19th and 20th days of September, 1863, was fought perhaps the most stubborn and sanguinary battle of the war. Here the Army of the Cumberland, which up to this time had with good reason boasted itself invincible, met with a crushing defeat at the hands of Bragg and Longstreet.

But it is not my purpose to repeat history. This narrative is concerned with only two of the combatants—Andy Maxwell in blue and Phil Ross in gray. On the afternoon of Saturday, when the right and left were broken and when the center, under Thomas, was falling slowly back to its impregnable position, Andy Maxwell fell in the retreat with a bullet in his right breast. This was just before dark, and when the awful thunders of the day were dwindling into occasional shots and the flashes of spasmodic shells threw a lightninglike glare on the landscape.

The men who were at Chickamauga do not need to be told that the country over which much of the fighting was done was a dense jungle of dwarf cedars, blackjack and red oak. Before the destructive volleying of Friday and Saturday much of the jungle was cut down as if by a mighty scythe, and as the ground was already covered with dry leaves it needed but a favoring flash at some point to fire the woods, in which lay hundreds of men in blue and gray, wounded or dead.

Of the night following his wound Andy Maxwell retained only the dimmest recollection. He bled a great deal and was unconscious much of the time. He was bitterly cold, for there was a heavy white frost, something unusual in that latitude at that season, on the night of the 19th. His own canteen had been shot away, but he found one in his groping and allayed the maddening thirst that always follows a great loss of blood.

With daylight the fighting began again, and to the wounded, who must listen helplessly, it seemed as if the roar of cannon, the long roll of rifles and the yells and cheers of charging lines were louder and fiercer than when they were participants in the struggle.

About noon a wall of black smoke, against which the powder smoke of the guns looked silvery white, rose up between the armies, and from friend and foe burst out the cry, "My God, the woods are on fire!"

From 20 points the black clouds rolled up, and appalled at the spectacle the combatants on that part of the line ceased for a time the work of carnage.

Through the forest smoke lightninglike tongues of flame darted, and the rising wind blew the furnace into a fierce roar. Out of this furnace men in blue and gray staggered or crawled, unheeding the lines in which they sought refuge from cremation. That conflagration was horrible to look at, and it is burned into the memory of those who saw it and felt its blistering breath on their powder stained faces.

Andy Maxwell, like one in a tortured dream, heard the groans of the dying, the shrieks of the stronger but equally helpless wounded and the crackling and hissing of the fire about him. He rubbed his eyes and sat up. He saw men struggling through the smoke and flame.

On every side he heard piteous cries for help. The instinct of self preservation made him indifferent to everything but the awful danger and his own safety. He rose to his feet, and like a drunken man he staggered and fell. With the help of a tree that had been shredded with bullets, though it still stood, he pulled himself up again. Through the smoke veil he saw a line of men not more than a hundred yards away, and he tried to shout for help, but the clotted blood in his throat rose and dwarfed the shout to a hoarse whisper.

From tree to tree he dragged himself on. His clothes were on fire. The glowing brands blistered his hands. The flames leaped at his face, and he felt that his eyes were melting in the heat. His strength at last gave way. His brain swam, and he fell unconscious on the edge of the furnace.

He did not know that the Confederates were near him and were making noble efforts to save the poor fellows crawling from the fire. He did not know that one of these men had rushed to his side, picked him up in his strong arms and received a shot through both cheeks before he finally brought his poor burden to a place of safety. It was many days, indeed, before Andy Maxwell knew anything. When consciousness came back, he seemed to be in a dark world, and he heard two men talking beside his cot, and one said:

"He'll get over that hole through his breast, for he's strong as a mule, but I reckon his eyes are done for."

And then Andy Maxwell lifted his poor blistered hand to his face, and he felt the plasters on his cheeks and the bandage across his eyes, and in his agony of soul he cried out:

"Whar am I? Whar's the light?"

He was told that he was in the Confederate hospital at Dalton.

"A prezzner?"

"Yes, old fellow," was the response, "but that don't matter. As your fighting days are over you'll be paroled, I reckon, as soon as you can get about."

"O God! And you uns say I'm done gone blin?"

"We fear so," said the doctors as they turned away.

"Then why didn't they let me die on the field? What did they tote me back fo' to live without friend or guide when my eyes is gone?"

"One of your old friends is responsible for that," said the doctor. "Here he is."

Andy Maxwell heard the pounding of a cane on the bare floor. He felt that there was some one bending over him. If he could have looked up, he would have seen a haggard man with the beard, hair and eyebrows burned from the thin face. He would have noted the plasters on the bullet pierced cheeks, but he would not have known that this was his old friend, his old rival, Phil Ross. He did, however, recognize the voice, tremulous though it was with suppressed excitement, and on the instant suggestion carried him back to the Great Smoky mountains and to the valley of the French Broad, which he felt that he was never to see again.

"Andy Maxwell, Andy, ole friend, I'm har a-watchin and a-waitin," sobbed Phil as he dropped into a chair beside the cot and took one bandaged hand between his own blistered palms.

"An yo' saved me from the fire, Phil?"

"Yes, Andy, with God's help I toted yo' back. Don't give up. Don't take no stock in what them doctahs says, fo' they don't know everything, though I reckon they means well enough. And, Andy, ole friend, jest ez soon ez yo' ken walk I'll guide yo' back to the ole home, and I'll keer for yo' uns till the light comes back, praise the Lor!"

For two months Andy Maxwell remained in the hospital at Dalton. Then there came a day when the doctors told him he must leave and make his way to the Great Smoky range as best he could. These doctors wondered why Phil Ross remained sick on their hands. They did not know that he had induced violent nicotine poisoning by carrying at times damp pieces of tobacco under his arms. At length they concluded that the man was broken up and would never be fit for field service again. Then Phil was given a furlough and told that he might go home.

And so the blind "Yankee" was guided back to the mountains by his Confederate friend.

"We uns had a mighty hard time uv hit," said Phil Ross, who told much of the story, but kept himself modestly in the background. "At last we uns made hit. We struck ole Jordan's house—hit's jest below har—and Sally told us that Andy's father and mother was dead."

"Yes," broke in Andy Maxwell, "and didn't I say that I wanted to die, too, though I'll allow that I didn't know what was best fo' me?"

"Then one day after we uns had been back a bit Sally she takes me to one side and says, 'Phil, Andy's got to hev some one to keer fo 'him right straight along, so I've 'lowed to marry him.' And she did, and I'm d——d glad uv hit, fo' she's made him a good wife, and she has a sister that's to be mine when the craps is all in."

Sally Maxwell stopped rocking the cradle, in which the baby was now sleeping, and said:

"Hit was Andy's blin'ness that settled me. Hit wasn't till I seed him so helpless that I knowed jest how much I thought uv him. But, bless the Lor, the sight 'll come back in good time, but that won't make us no happier, fo' we uns couldn't be happier now that peace has come and the ole friends parted by the wah is gettin together agin. The baby's name, strengers? Waal, Andy and me 'lowed that thar wasn't no other name fo' hit but 'Phil Ross.'" And Sally stooped and kissed the sleeping child.

THE END.

When the doctor orders medicine in the middle of the night for the sick one, wha will you do—how, will you get it? Rem mber that

A PUBLIC BENEFACTOR.

THEY ALL SAY THE SAME.

Don't Hesitate, but Call and Be Convinced That Every Statement We Make Is True.

To those who do not already know that there is established in Newark, at 105 Halsey street, a physician who stands in the foremost rank of his profession, who is indorsed by the leading colleges of the country and who can prove by witnesses right here in Newark (not by one, but by hundreds) that he has succeeded in curing cases that have been utterly given up by other physicians, and good ones, too. To those who do not these facts we state that any person, rich or poor, old or young, is welcome here and receive examination and advice free of charge.

Thousands praise the day they came to us for treatment. There is no guess work, no experimenting, no painful operation. No matter how difficult the case, no matter how much of the physician's time it may consume, the diagnosis will not only be thorough, it will be absolutely free. There is no taint of quackery or deception; no claim or statement is made that is not borne out by facts and living witnesses.

Mrs. Abby A. Ray, late of 86 Grove street, East Orange, who now lives at 400 Ellmore street, Escanaba, Mich., writes, under date of January 12: "The medicine arrived this morning and I am so glad it came. I am almost out, and it has helped me so much and I am so much pleased with its wonderful effort on my broken down system that I would like to testify to your great success in my case. I am feeling as well now, in fact better, than I had ever hoped to again."

This is one of many letters that we receive daily. We have the originals at our office and if you wish you may see them. Another thing: We never publish or reveal a patient's name unless they so desire.

DR. STARKWEATHER.

There is not a penny to pay for the fullest medical advice. Dr. Starkweather is a graduate of the Berkshire Medical College, Massachusetts, and of the Medico-Chirurgical College of Philadelphia; endorsed also by the College of Physicians and Surgeons and Bellevue Medical College of New York. We invite all sufferers from whatever cause to call at our office, No. 105 Halsey street, Newark, where Dr. Starkweather is in attendance daily to give examination and advice entirely free of charge. It matters not what the disease, or how many years you have suffered, in spite of means adopted in your behalf, a visit to this office and the privileges of the same will cost you nothing, and may be the means of saving your life. We prepare all our medicines and prescribe the remedies indicated. This plan enables the patient to receive directly from us such remedies as will produce the results promised.

Our office is open daily from 10 a. m. to 9 p. m. Sundays 4 to 6 p. m.

CHAPTER I.

Augustus Fitz Clarence Boobie was a young gentleman of exceedingly good parts, at least as far as the outward man was concerned, who had recently arrived in the little village of M—— with the avowed design of establishing himself in the practice of the law. He had taken an office upon the main avenue of the town and over the door had caused to be placed a very showy sign bearing on a field azure his cognomen in golden letters, appended to which was the usual legal addition of "Attorney and Counselor at Law."

No sooner was he fairly installed in his new headquarters than he commenced the study of the law, the ladies and love, of which, however, the last two were destined to receive by far his greatest attention.

A more absolute devotee at the shrine of fashion never tripped Broadway. Not a mere fop was he, but the concentrated quintessence of dandyism, bejeweled, bescented and bedecked in the very latest style that foreign importations had developed.

Daily he promenaded the pave of the little street, to the envy of the village beaux, who stared with jealous glance as he sauntered gracefully along, twirling his mustache and rattan with an air of self evident superiority and the most supreme contempt and indifference to all their operations.

It is proper here to be stated that his tailor had never as yet received an equivalent for the magnificent suit of French broadcloth, Genoa velvet and Turk's satin that enveloped his elegant person, but of what consequence was that fact to him, so long as the suit retained its pristine elegance and his tailor remained ignorant of his whereabouts?

"Was Solomon in all his glory arrayed like" Augustus Fitz Clarence Boobie? Could that sapient monarch have risen to behold this unique specimen of humanity he would doubtless have hurried back to his long repose heartily ashamed of the shabby appearance of his own obsolete wardrobe.

Time passed on, and our hero had ingratiated himself in the good opinions of many of the wealthiest families of M——, with whom he was a general favorite—in fact, quite the rage—and there was much strife as to who should make a conquest of this "love of a man."

He was such a nice, genteel, moral young man—at least "so everybody said," and surely "everybody" ought to know.

As regularly as the Sabbath morning dawned and the little bell had ceased tolling Augustus, prayer book in hand, sauntered gracefully up the aisle to his pew, and devoutly bending his head upon his perfumed cambric handkerchief offered—at least so people imagined—a silent prayer, and then, after finding the service for the day, in a clearly audible tone he made the responses very reverently and paid the most profound attention to the worthy pastor's discourse, "even unto the end thereof."

Many stolen glances were directed toward him from all parts of the little church. The chorister sang his loudest, and the lady members of the choir evinced a perceptible consciousness of his presence within the sacred walls.

And when the "forty-fifthly" of the good dominie was ended, the last strain of the hymn had died away and the benediction had been pronounced, what a jostling and hurrying down the gallery stairs to obtain a glimpse of our hero or perhaps the honor of a bow from his lordship! Thrice happy the young lady whom he condescended to accompany homeward, and how many thoughts wandered to him instead of holier objects upon that sacred day!

His presence in the village had a tendency to render society unusually gay, and many balls and parties were given expressly in honor of him. He was lionized by the young ladies, petted by their judicious mammas, clapped upon the back familiarly by their papas—in short, his invitations to breakfast, dinner and tea were so numerous that it was exceedingly difficult for him to accept them all. It would have been no very surprising result had a person with a far more ample allowance of brains under such circumstances been completely bewildered and guilty of equal indiscretion.

It was the young men alone who shunned him. They were his sworn enemies.

The "head and front of his offending had this extent, no more." He was, as they imagined, usurping the places they had formerly occupied in the good graces of the opposite sex, while they were now almost forgotten, or at least treated with the utmost indifference by his devoted followers.

Among their ranks, however, no "bright particular star" had as yet arisen upon his mental vision. No fair one had made any indelible impression upon his apparently susceptible heart. No graces of form, feature, mind, or, last, though far from least, fortune had served to touch its tender chords. "He wandered in maiden meditation, fancy free." His stock of knowldge was limited to a familiarity with the current gossip of the day, a superficial acquaintance with all the latest and most trashy novels in yellow cover, and a tolerably good memory enabled him to quote from Byron and Moore to just that extent which gave the lackadaisical young ladies of M——a most exalted idea of his conversational powers. Charming Augustus, thou wert all that sentimental schoolgirl could picture or scheming mamma could conceive of as the beau ideal, not to say beau real, of romantic perfection. Those were thy halcyon days when

Eyes looked love to eyes, which spoke again,
And all went merry as a marriage bell.
But hush! Hark!

CHAPTER II.

Among the village belles was one who was pre-eminent for beauty, wit and the thousand little accomplishments which serve to make woman more lovely and to win them the attentions of the genus homo.

Kate Lincoln was a born beauty—none of your die away fairies—pale, hectic, consumptive looking creatures, whose chief ambition is to be thought in an interesting decline—nor, on the other hand, was she one of those bouncing country girls of the milkmaid order, who

Walk in the morning
And are shod like mountaineers,

but a refined and perfect lady in every respect. Bright and beautiful was she and justly admired by the whole circle of society in which she moved. She was a genuine lover of fun, provided it did not border on rudeness, and her repartees were proverbial for the delicacy of their satire, which the most fastidious could not construe into anything overstepping the bounds of strictest courtesy. She was envied by not a few for her many personal attractions and yet beloved by all. Her natural warm heartedness won her sincere friends among all classes, and while her dignity of character always commanded respect there was nothing forbidding in her manner, but a certain indescribable something which always made you feel at your ease in her presence.

Of course Augustus in his triumphal progress was brought in contact with the fair Kate, and after having obtained an introduction was completely under the spell of her influence.

Rumor had previously whispered to him that she was the heiress of all her father's wealth, and it required little forethought on his part to decide that she was at least worth an effort of attainment. Not capable of keeping his intentions a secret to himself, he confided them to a friend of Kate's, who perceiving at once the object of his designs communicated the fact to her. Kate was no mean reader of human nature, and no very deep scrutiny was necessary on her part to ascertain the depths of our hero's intellect. She discovered that he was a hypocrite as far as he knew how to be, unprincipled and by no means as sapient as many people of acknowledged discernment imagined him. His foppery, his senseless chitchat and above all his unbounded pride disgusted her, and she resolved to bring down the latter.

But how could she effect the desired humiliation without compromising the dignity of her character as a lady? A plan soon suggested itself. For the successful furtherance of it she accepted his attentions with the utmost grace at every party where both were present, danced, waltzed and conversed with him upon every festive occasion, to the great surprise and some little envy on the part of the feminine portion of the community, to say nothing of the indignant looks and speeches of the beaux.

The gossips decided that it was a most reprehensive case of flirtation and a downright infringement of the laws of propriety, of which the fair Kate ought to be heartily ashamed, and they even deputed a committee to wait upon the good natured judge, her father, to report the "disgraceful conduct of his daughter." But then they only received their trouble for their pains, inasmuch as the judge gave them to understand that Kate was but exercising the prerogative of her sex and intimated that the institution of a home mission would appear far less quixotic than this voluntary and unsolicited interference with the affairs of others.

Poor, inconsistent women! They never called to mind the ancient fable of the fox and the unattainable fruit of the vine, never reflected how much it would have ministered to their vanity could their Sallies and Nancy Janes have been the happy recipients of Augustus' flattering attentions. But no such good fortune awaited them. Kate, and Kate only, was the chosen object of Augustus' imperial predilections.

Induced by these flattering indications of success to believe that he should encounter no obstacles to his suit, he soon became a frequent visitor at her father's house and was received with distinguished consideration by the judge, who was in the secret and used his inventive faculties to aid Kate in the accomplishment of her plans.

He proposed little social rides and picnics and was so extremely condescending and polite that Augustus, who considered these opportunities most favorable to the furtherance of his suit, accepted their invitations with delight and entered into the spirit of them with infinite zest.

CHAPTER III.

To finish the gayeties of the season Kate had obtained the consent of her father to give a large and brilliant party.

Invitations were scattered far and wide, and great calculations were made by the village ladies for a grand display of wardrobes upon the occasion. For a week preceding the event the stores were besieged, and many were the yards of lace and ribbon that were carried away in triumph.

To Miss Jones, the milliner, it was a season of unusual profit. Indeed she had never known a greater demand for the various articles of female adornment, and her two assistants were busily engaged from "morn till dewy eve" in cutting and trimming and altering silks, satins and muslins which had been lying carefully enveloped in pillowcases for years in dark closet drawers, which were strewn with bits of gum camphor or chips of red cedar, sure preventives against the ravages of moths and other destructive annoyers. At the judge's no one was idle, and the occasion was one which called forth an exhibition of Kate's domestic accomplishments. The great parlors had been thoroughly overhauled, the carpets removed to admit of dancing, and the old fashioned dining hall had been carefully cleansed and very tastefully decorated with evergreens, among which were arranged numerous candles and lamps. The busy notes of preparation were heard "from the rising of the sun even unto the going down of the same," and when they were at last all completed the whole house never looked more cheerful or inviting in its interior appearance.

The expected night at last arrived. The halls were brilliantly lighted, and up the broad oaken stairway guest after guest passed to the dressing rooms. Kate, arranged in a dress of simple white and with no other ornament than a simple white rose in her glossy hair, stood at the head of the long parlor, leaning upon the arm of her father and receiving her guests with the grace of a queen. Never had she looked more charming, and there was a silent yet unmistakable feeling of admiration plainly perceptible upon the countenances of those who had the pleasure of any conversation with her. She was the acknowledged belle of the evening and the cynosure of all eyes.

At a late hour the doors of the supper room were thrown open, and the gay company proceeded thither to discuss the merits of Kate's housewifery. Many were the compliments she received, and many the exclamations of delight at the appearance of the table, which groaned beneath its load of delicacies. Augustus was appointed by Kate to aid her in doing the honors of the supper room and to make himself generally useful in seeing that no one was overlooked. After the guests had done ample justice to its merits and the doors were again closed Kate took Augustus' arm and returned to the supper table to partake of some refreshment herself, having been too busily engaged in her duties as hostess to think of self before. Now was the long looked for opportunity, and Augustus at once embraced it to declare the ardor of his passion and offered his hand, his heart—in short, all that Dame Nature and his tailor had produced under the name and title of Augustus Fitz Clarence Boobie.

Kate directed her glances to the floor and for a moment hesitated to reply, but at last, summoning all her resolution, she referred him to her father, saying that if he was not opposed to it she would accept him.

So intent was Augustus upon the consummation of his hopes that, not able to restrain his impatience until the close of the evening, he hastened at once to her father and requested his presence for a moment in the library. The judge followed him thither and closed the door behind them. Augustus, with the air of one who was rather conferring than soliciting a favor, informed the judge that the attractions of his daughter had made more than ordinary impressions upon his heart, and that he had accordingly addressed her upon the subject. She had, he said, considered it in a favorable light, but referred him to her father before giving a decisive answer to his proposal. He had therefore the honor of announcing himself as a candidate for her hand and flattered himself that he should meet with no opposition whatever from the judge.

The latter had anticipated this piece of information, but was not quite prepared for the pompous manner in which it was delivered. However, he soon recovered his equanimity and gave our hero to understand that he must decline the honor with which Augustus was about to invest him. Moreover, he would suggest that his visits at the house should from that time be discontinued. He acknowledged that he had previously shown him more or less civilities, but further than as a guset he had not regarded him and therefore looked upon his proposal as but a poor return for those civilities, especially so as he had made it without first consulting him. Augustus expostulated, but in vain. The judge was inexorable and would listen to no further arguments upon the subject. Finding, therefore, that his attempts were unavailing and only served to exasperate the judge, who put on a most fierce frown and spoke very tragically, Augustus returned to the drawing room in search of Kate, to whom he communicated his want of success. He then proposed that if she had the slightest regard for him to fly at once from "parental tyranny" and make him without further delay the happiest man alive by being joined in the holy bonds of matrimony at a neighboring town, to go thence to Philadelphia, pass the honeymoon there, after which they would return and throw themselves at her father's feet, and obtaining his forgiveness settle down quietly, as married people should do, for the remainder of their natural lives. He painted the delights of a home such as theirs would be in very much the same strain as that in which Claude Melnotte described his to Pauline and represented the magnificent estates which he was to inherit from his father as sufficient to enable them to live in courtly style.

To all this Kate gave an attentive ear and then argued very sensibly against a compliance with his request, but she was sufficiently versed in diplomacy to know that such objections would but serve to render him only the more importunate, and after a long discussion she, with apparent reluctance, gave a silent consent and named the corresponding evening of the following week as the one on which the elopement should take place. Then bidding him "good night" she cautioned him not to venture to meet her except at the house of a friend, where all the preliminaries could be arranged, and returned to her guests, who soon after separated, and the party ended.

CHAPTER IV.

During the week following Augustus complied strictly with Kate's request to meet her only at the house of a friend, and there they arranged all the preparations for the flight.

Happy Augustus—happy in thine ignorance of the snare which is being laid for thee!

Since ignorance is bliss, 'tis folly to be wise.

It was decided that on the proposed evening a carriage should be in readiness at the corner of a street one or two blocks distant from the house, and that at midnight precisely our hero should make his appearance under Kate's window, give a signal and then repair to the back piazza and remain in concealment till her appearance.

Accordingly, all preliminaries having been satisfactorily arranged on the proposed evening, the darkness of which was relieved only by a few struggling stars, Augustus Fitz Clarence Boobie, in a bridal suit of the finest of black broadcloth, a vest of snowy whiteness and the other various articles of his toilet in corresponding style—all of which had been obtained "on tick"—Augustus, ecstatic youth, proceeded to the rendezvous under Kate's window and in a low tone gave the preconcerted signal. The window was raised gently, and Kate in a whisper asked him if all was in readiness. Being answered in the affirmative, she as noiselessly closed the casement, and Augustus on tiptoe hastened to the back piazza, at one end of which was a trellis covered with honeysuckles, just behind which a private door led from the hall. Behind this trellis he ensconced himself, trembling with excitement and the bold step he was about taking and all impatience to be beyond the reach of pursuit.

A few moments only elapsed when the door slowly and silently turned upon its hinges, and a female figure, enveloped in a large cloak and closely veiled, emerged. She said nothing, but silently took his arm and pointed toward the gate at the back of the garden, through which they were to pass. Hurrying on, they soon reached the carriage, and Augustus, having handed his companion in, took his seat beside her and bade the driver hasten on. His directions were obeyed, and they were soon beyond the confines of the village, in which not a light was visible. Augustus' happiness was complete. He had exceeded his most sanguine hopes, and in a delirium of joy he clasped the gloved hand of his companion and pressed it to his lips.

The veiled head soon rested upon his shoulder, and he endeavored to fathom its impenetrability and "look love to eyes" which he fancied would "speak again," but the darkness resisted all his attempts. He could see nothing but a lighter shade where the sky was visible through the coach window. But it was well enough to feel that Kate was beside him, and from her he would not part—at least until she was his wedded wife.

On, on they drove, through woodland and over plains. Hill and dale were swiftly passed, and just as the old church clock was striking 2 they entered the village of G——. The driver had slackened his speed a little, that no suspicion might be excited in the village, and drove quietly up to the hotel. The carriage door was opened simultaneously with that of the hotel, and the landlord came out to welcome them. He had been previously apprised of Augustus' wishes and led them to a private parlor, where a cheerful fire was blazing upon the hearth. The minister who was to perform the ceremony was also engaged, and the landlord went at once to summon him. Augustus had intended that they should remain as short a time as possible at G—— and then hasten on to the railway to take the early morning train for Philadelphia.

The landlord at length returned, accompanied by the clergyman, who, being duly introduced to the parties, commenced an exhortation upon the duties of the state matrimonial. Augustus listened impatiently, and perceiving that there was no immediate prospect of a conclusion reminded the good man that his time was limited and desired him to proceed at once to business. He accordingly commenced a prayer by way of preliminary, which threatened to be of equally long duration, and Augustus inwardly muttered anathemas upon the devoted man's head.

At length, however, he drew to a close after taking a census of the world in general and praying "for all sorts and conditions of men" and then requested the candidates for matrimony to make ready for the ceremony. The lady had thus far kept her veil closely drawn over her features, but at the request of the clergyman made preparation to remove it.

The landlord was to be a witness to the ceremony and had taken his seat by the side of the minister. While waiting for his companion to divest herself of bonnet and veil Augustus fell into a reverie and was lost in a brown study, from which he was suddenly aroused by a burst of laughter from the jolly landlord. What could be the matter? He glanced at his dress inquiringly to see if there was anything there to excite these demonstrations of mirth; but, no, there was not a spot or blemish. What, then, could it mean? Another and another peal of merriment caused him to look around, and—oh, shade of Uncle Tom—what think you, gentle reader, met his astonished vision? There stood his "compagnon du voyage," the one whose hand he had pressed to his lips and into whose ears he had breathed such vows of endless love and unchanging fidelity—but, oh, how changed! She to whom in five minutes more he was to have been united for life was metamorphosed into a young negro boy, whose height and figure were the counterpart of Kate's! He was enveloped still in the cloak, but had removed the bonnet and veil and stood shaking his sides and grinning as only a darky can grin, while Augustus stood completely bewildered and horror stricken.

"Waal, wat's the matter, massa?" quoth Sambo. "I specs you radder not be jined in de bon's ob mattermony now, eh? I golly, I nebber hab a feller kiss me afore. Waal, I guess Massa Lincoln know he cards, and Missy Kate she am up to snuff too."

Like a flash of lightning, it occurred to Augustus that he had been victimized. He raved and swore, and it was with difficulty that the parson and landlord could quiet him. At length his passion cooled down, and he paid his bill—the only one he ever was known to be guilty of discharging—and left the house.

The supposed Kate returned in the carriage the next morning to M——, highly elated with the exploit. The real Kate and her father laughed heartily at the success of their plot and felt that they had relieved the village of a most dangerous character. All the village was agog before noon with a thousand and one different versions of the story, but all praised Kate's ingenuity and rejoiced at the benefit she had conferred upon the community at large.

Then did the creditors of Augustus hunt up their accounts and cry "Sold, sold!" Then was the sheriff consulted, but he only gravely shook his head and said all was in vain, for our hero was beyond the bounds of his jurisdiction. Then did he who rented him the office repair thither to obtain collateral security for past quarters still unpaid.

Vain search! He found a broken, wornout trunk containing three soiled collars, a pair of false mustaches, an antiquated shoebrush, a well thumbed pack of cards and a dilapidated bootjack. All other articles had vanished no one knew whither.

Our hero has never reappeared upon the stage of M——. Still he is not forgotten, and Kate has many a laugh over her midnight elopement with Augustus Fitz Clarence Boobie.

REPORTS ON MISSION WORK.

End of the Woman's Conference in Grace Methodist Episcopal Church.

The afternoon session of the district meeting of the Woman's Home Missionary Society began at 2, yesterday afternoon, in the Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, with a cornet solo by Miss Allen of Cranford, and after the singing of a hymn a very interesting map exercise conducted by Miss Mendell of Cranford was enjoyed, as was also the Bureau for Orientals conducted by Mrs. C. X. Hutchinson of Elizabeth. These two numbers of the programme were full of practical and instructive ideas along missionary lines of work. A very pretty solo by Mrs. Pearsall of Westfield was listened to with pleasure.

The address of the session was made by Dr. Baldwin of New York, who gave an intensely interesting talk on missionary work. His ideas and methods advanced were up to date, and put in practice would bring forth large results.

Following this the Mothers Jewel Band of Grace Church rendered a pretty character song which was very much enjoyed. There are thirty-nine boys and girls in the band. Miss Belle Lunger is superintendent and Miss Anna Most assistant superintendent.

Next came the reports of the committees appointed at the morning session.

Mr. Chamberlain of Westfield presented the resolutions on the death of Mrs. Rosamond Hann of Cranford, and another thanking the members of the First M. E. and Grace churches for their generous hospitality. Both were adopted.

Mrs. Purchance of Westfield, for the Nominating Committee, reported the list of names prepared for officers. They were all elected except Mrs. Hyde, who declined, and Mrs. E. P. Stevens took her place. The officers elected are:

President—Mrs. B. M. Moore, Elizabeth.
Mite-box Treasurer—Miss Florence Hawk, Elizabeth.
District Treasurer and Recording Secretary—Mrs. E. P. Stevens, Plainfield.

Mrs. Drake of Jersey City, President of the Newark Conference Home Missionary Society, presided at the afternoon session.

The next meeting of the district is likely to be held in Cranford. This place is chosen conditionally, awaiting furthur arrangements.

The session closed at 5.

Cypress Commandery Dance.

The seventh annual reception of Cypress Commandery, No. 6, K. T., was given in Turn Verein Hall last night. E. M. O'Reilly furnished music to a large crowd of colored people who danced through the night in harmony. There were delegations from a number of other commanderies in the State.

The committee who arranged the reception were: Wm. R. Connett, George VanBlake, Nelson Betts, Wm. H. Cheek, Cyrus Benn, Wm. Fisher, Birl Gibson, Wm. Philips, James Jones, Jos. Belden, Henry Freeman, Walter Benn, J. D. Brinkley, Nathan J. Polard and Richard Yetman.

Rector Murphy and the New Parish.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—The statement in the Courier of Wednesday to the effect that Rector Murphy was at the convention and made no protest against the new parish, was misleading. Mr. Murphy was not at the convention until after the petition was granted and he did make a written protest, and also do everything in his power to prevent its being granted. He told different persons from time to time that we could never get the new parish as he had two-thirds of the Standing Committee with him.

SECEDER.

A Fine Pulpit Orator.

In securing Secretary C. H. Payne, of New York, as their anniversary orator, the Epworth League of the First Methodist Episcopal Church have made a hit. Dr. Payne is one of the most prominent men in his denomination, and a noted pulpit orator. The musical features of their programme are very attractive. The other young peoples societies are especially invited and the public generally will be welcome. The exercises take place in the First Methodist Episcopal Church at 7:30 p. m., Sunday, May 13.

Base-Ball Tomorrow.

The employes of the Central Railroad and the West Ends of Somerville play ball tomorrow afternoon, on the West End grounds, Somerville. The proceeds are for the benefit of the Emergency Hospital recently established in Somerville, and all who patronize the game will thus do an act of very worthy charity, and at the same time see a good game of base-ball. The game will be called at 3:30. Admission is ten cents.

Another Plainfield Will Contest.

James Thomson, who is entirely cut off from any participation in the estate left by his mother, Anna D. Thompson, the estimated value of which is $600,000, has instituted a contest over her will in the Surrogate's court. Mrs. Thomson died at her home, 33 Willow avenue, March 15 last. She executed a will Nov. 6 last, making no mention of James, but leaving her entire fortune to her other children.

Memorial Music.

Miss Opdyke of Somerville who sang so pleasingly at the concert given by Mr. MacClymont in the First Presbyterian Church, last evening, has generously consented to sing at the memorial services in Music Hall, Decoration Day. She will be accompanied by Chauncey Hyde Demaray who will also play the ever-popular "Caprice" on the piano.

Dr. Morgan Comes to Town.

The next sermon in the special course at the Grace Protestant Episcopal Church will be preached next Sunday evening by Rev. D. Parker Morgan, D. D., rector of the Church of the Heavenly Rest, Fifth avenue and Forty-fifth street, New York city.

Into the Babcock Building.

Doane & Edsall will be at the old stand until Monday night. Tuesday morning, go to the new store in the Babcock Building, when they will be all ready for business, as they will move in the night so as not to interfere with trade.

Ladies Nine and Press Thanked for Their Co-operation—Secretary Manning Highly Praised.

Thirty-five members of the Y. M. C. A. partook of a bountiful supper prepared for them by the Ladies' Nine in Association Hall from 6:30 to 8 last evening. The room was very nicely decorated with wild flowers, and on each of the four large tables was a banquet lamp.

After supper, the members adjourned to the reading room, where chairs had been taken, and the annual business meeting took place, President Murray presiding.

Scripture was read (II Timothy, 2) by President Murray, and prayer offered by A. C. LaBoyteaux. The minutes of the last meeting were read by Secretary F. W. Yates, and approved. A report of the Educational Committee, by Chairman S. Cahoone, was received and ordered filed.

A Nominating Committee was appointed consisting of J. A. Robinson, A. J. Gavett and George S. Clay.

The reports of Treasurer H O. Newman and President W. D. Murray were received. A motion of Mr. Newman that a vote of thanks be extended to Mr. Gavett and his corps of lady workers for their efficient help at the socials, was adopted, as was also that of Mr. Cahoone that the entire press of the city be thanked for their courteous treatment during the past.

The Nominating Committee reported the following officers:

President—W. D. Murray.
Vice-president—E. L. Bonny.
Recording Secretary—F. W. Yates.
Corresponding Secretary—R. H. Radford.
Treasurer—H. O. Newman.
Directors—Stephen Cahoone, Nelson Runyon, Ernest R. Ackerman, H. M. Maxson, Geo. S. Clay, T. E. Hazell, John Valiant, George R. Cornwell, A. B. Beers, Wm. Thompson, C. E. Boss, A. C. LaBoyteaux, G. A. Chapman.

On motion the secretary was given power to cast the ballot, which resulted in the election of the above-named officers and directors for the ensuing year.

The report of President Murray is in full as follows:

To the Members of the Young Men's Christian Association of Plainfield, New Jersey:

Our annual meeting this year is almost coincident with the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the Young Men's Christian Association. On the 6th of June, 1844, in a little upper room in a warehouse in St. Paul's churchyard in London, George Williams, now the head of Association work in that great city, organized the first Young Men's Christian Association. In a few days delegates from all the world will assemble in London, not only to discuss the progress and prospects of the Association the world around, but to do honor to the man who conceived the idea and who has been its constant friend for fifty years. It is inspiring to remember that we are a part of this great movement for the uplifting of young manhood, and I think we may be pardoned if we congratulate ourselves at such a time as this because our own Association has been no mean example of all that is best in work for young men.

That our work has been such that we can be proud of it tonight is due to the faithful efforts of those of our members who have the welfare of young men most at heart, to the tireless perseverance of our beloved general secretary, to the good wishes and financial aid of the Christian people of this city and to the kindly interest and substantial help of all the pastors of our churches.

We still believe that the reason for the existence of the Young Men's Christian Association is that it leads young men to Jesus Christ as their Saviour and raises Christian men to a higher plane of living. And so our all important work is that which we do for the spiritual life of the young man. In this department our Sunday afternoon meeting has been our chief agency. This meeting has had an average attendance of fifty-four, and from it eight men have been led into church membership. The committee on music deserves commendation for the excellent singing they have provided for this meeting. For a week or two we had a series of special meetings for men led by the evangelist Rev. Arthur Crane. We also observed the Week of Prayer for young men, and presented the broad work of the International Committee. A collection was also taken for this work amounting to over $90.

Our Bible class work, while not as good as we wish it to be, is the third largest in the State, and continues to be a reservoir of spiritual power not only for the Association, but to a certain extent for the churches of the city. Another interesting feature of this department has been a prayer meeting for workers. For the eighth time we were represented at Mr. Moody's Summer school for Bible study at Northfield. Somewhat foreign to our real work, yet gladly undertaken by us, have been the meetings conducted each Sunday evening at our two outposts, Mt. Pleasant and Washingtonville. At each of these places a strong spiritual influence has existed during the year and a number of the attendants at each meeting have confessed Christ.

The first worshippers of our Saviour accompanied their adoration with gifts, and we have not neglected this grace. In addition to the collection already mentioned we made an offering to Mr. Moody's Summer campaign in Chicago. And through our Extension Work Committee our members have contributed the sum of $122.10 to help the State Committee, the International Committee and the Springfield School in their efforts to extend the influence of the Association.

The membership of our Association has changed little although the hard times have interfered with the renewal of some memberships. During the year we have elected eighty-eight new members and we now have 439. Sixty-six of these have served on the committees by whom the work is carried on. There has been little opportunity for entertainments or receptions, although some have been held. A number of interesting talks have been given, together with an amusing mock-trial, a gymnastic exhibition and a concert. Whenever it has been possible the ladies have given us their generous and appreciated services.

As was to be expected many unemployed men have frequented the rooms, and our secretary, Mr. Manning, has been a friend in need to them. He has counseled with them on almost every subject on which men need help; he has found them employment, sent them to good boarding houses, been their banker, advised them about numerous matters, led them to Christ, the friend that sticketh closer than a brother. He has been tactful, judicious and self-sacrificing, and has continually reproduced before the young men of this city the example of the young man of Nazareth who went about doing good.

A feature of our work is the introduction of young men leaving Plainfield to the Associations in the towns to which they go. A number of letters have been written for this purpose this year, some of them at the request of parents. Letters have also been sent to the Associations in the colleges to which our young men have gone.

At the annual meeting of the representatives of the Associations throughout the State we had nine representatives. This wonderfully helpful gathering of young men we hope to have in Plainfield next February.

Our educational work, which now takes first place in the State, has assumed such importance during the year that it has been thought wise to render a separate report of that department. It is only necessary to say here that 92 scholars have attended classes in stenography, book-keeping, arithmetic, mechanical drawing, plane geometry, English branches, trigonometry, applied mechanics, and singing. It ought also to be mentioned that three men from these classes have been converted during the year.

What to do with the boys is a question which we cannot answer until we have more room in which to work. We admit that something ought to be done. However, poor as our facilities are, a boys society has been conducted. The boys have indulged in socials, debates, mock trials, religious meetings, and they have had their own talks on How to Conduct a Meeting, The World's Fair, Coal Mining, and other topics. They have their own Bible and singing classes. The little we have been able to do for them only shows us how much we might do.

The subject of our new building continues to trouble us. On the 20th of June the cornerstone was laid by Mayor Alexander Gilbert, the first president of the Association. Thirty-four thousand eight hundred and sixty dollars and twenty-six cents have been expended, which includes seven thousand dollars expended on land which it became necessary to purchase in view of the extension of Watchung avenue. The building is enclosed so that it is not affected by the weather, and the electric wiring and heating apparatus is now being put into place. Rather than attempt to do what has resulted disastrously in other places, viz:—to carry a large mortgage—the building was boarded up when our funds were exhausted. Meetings of the committee have been held in the endeavor to devise ways and means for the continuance of the work, but the depressed condition of the business world has so far prevented our friends from contributing as we believe they desire to do and will do. We can only say that we propose to do every thing in our power to raise the money necessary to complete the building at the earliest possible day.

The need of an interdenominational meeting place for Christian workers has been shown again by those who have found our rooms a convenient place to meet. During the year we were glad to have the following make use of such accommodations as we have: Officers of the Children's Home, Relief Association, Auxiliary of the Salvation Army and officers of the Army from different parts of the State, Committees of the Y P. S. C. E., Employment Committee of Organized Charities, besides the Choral Society.

We have suffered severely during the year from lack of funds. We are not an expensive institution, we do not need very much money, but that little has been raised with difficulty. Our treasurer reports receipts of $2,586.75 and expenses of $2,471.85, and received for special purposes $467.86. We have, however, some unpaid bills and therefore have to close the year in debt. The people of Plainfield have always been interested in the welfare of the Association, and it is only because of the extraordinary condition of things that we have been allowed to suffer. We are confident that our good friends will not permit us to suffer too long. The work must go on. So long as we lead men to become better citizens, fathers, husbands, workmen and church members the people of Plainfield are going to support us.

Such is our work for the year. If you see in it anything worthy of your support join hands with those whose time and money have made it possible. If you see in it, as you undoubtedly will, some things to criticise, then come with us and help us to make them better. In any event will you not pray the Lord of the harvest that work for young men by young men may grow and prosper in this our favored city, and that we the laborers in this corner of His field may be privileged to gather a multitude of sheaves for the Kingdom of our God,

WILLIAM D. MURRAY,
President.

Free Music Enjoyed.

William E. MacClymont gave his eighth free organ recital, in the First Presbyterian Church last evening. It was an enjoyable affair throughout. He was assisted by Miss Katharine Opdycke, soprano, of Somerville. An audience that completely filled the church listened for over an hour to the excellent programme provided.

The selections by Miss Opdycke, "Among the Lilies" and "I Love Thee" gave those present an opportunity of hearing the soloist at her best. That Miss Opdycke has a pleasing voice, well cultivated and under control, was shown beyond a doubt last evening, and the audience appreciated her efforts by hearty applause. A more flattering reception could not have been given her, and when she appears before a Plainfield audience again, as she will Decoration Day, a larger assemblage of people will greet this talented singer.

Mr. MacClymont's work was up to its standard. The "Lost Chord", "Nazareth", "Festival March in C" and "Evening Star" were among the most enjoyable, and the applause was sufficient evidence of the admiration held for this popular organist.

The whole affair was a successful one in every respect.

Red Men's Fair.

Mrs. Fred Canfield was the winner of the beautiful prize cake at the Paugh Caugh Naugh Sinque fair last evening.

The commutation ticket contest at Red Men's fair promises to be the most successful, as it is certainly the most novel, feature of Red Men's fair in Central Hall this week. In a short time last evening J. H. Carney and W. S. Bullock sold 38 coupons to gentlemen present in the hall. Remember the contest is open to all whether a commuter or not, and that Paugh Caugh Naugh Tribe present the lucky gentleman (or lady) with a one-year commutation ticket to New York free.

Knights Go Visit.

Sir Knights Adams, Sebring, Kirkner, Keller, Mason, Brooks, Woodland, Corlell, Rugg, Odam, Coddington and Collier, of Trinity Commandery, paid the Knights of St. John's Commandery of Elizabeth a fraternal visit last evening, and witnessed the working of the Temple degree upon eight candidates. Eminent Commander Adams of Trinity, and Grand Junior Warden Sebring of the Grand Commandery, assisted in the exemplication of the degree.

In Another Field.

While William Newcorn was on his South Jersey trip he met M. Goldman, formerly of the Leader store in this city, who is beginning business in Atlantic City. On the return trip Mr. Newcorn stopped in Camden and visited Great Chief of Records Daniel M. Stevens.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Miss Rolman, a missionary from Japan, will address the Christian Endeavor Society in the First Baptist Church this evening at 8. Miss Rolman has the reputation of being an interesting speaker. The society extends a cordial invitation to all to be present at the meeting.

The Great Prudential.

In The Press today will be found an interesting statement from the New Jersey State Commissioner of Banking and Insurance, as the condition of the Prudential Insurance Company of America, which has many patrons in this county.

By this report it is shown that this great insurance company which is not yet twenty years old has now nearly two million policy holders, and has, in the last three years, nearly doubled its assets, which now amount to over two millions of dollars, and has a reserve fund of over $800,000.

The company is now located in its magnificent new building in Newark, and special mention is made by the State examiners and experts as to the perfect system and arrangement of doing business by the company.

The examination of the affairs of the company also shows that in nearly every case the insurance has been paid to the beneficiaries immediately after the death of the insured, generally within three days.

The real estate and mortages of the company are reported by the experts as fully secured and carefully recorded and and executed. A careful reading of this report will prove interesting and valuable to all policy holders and those who should be.

Tracing a Robbery.

Someone entered Alexander Findley's bar room last week and stole a lot of clothing, liquor and cigars, and the robbery was not discovered until a day or two later. The police since then have quietly investigating the matter. Ex-policeman Frank Fine found some empty bottles near the old oil-cloth works, which proved to have come from Findley's, and it is thought that the thieves can be found from the clue secured.

Good Time in Central.

Central Lodge, No. 48, A. O. U. W., had an extensive good-of-the-order programme after the routine business was transacted last night. The members participating included Past Master Workmen Salmon C. Baker, Charles Randolph and William A. Westphal, Guide James T. Veglard and Recorder N. C. Mague.

DID N'T KNOW THE LAW.

Only Continued the Practice He Had Been Accustomed to in New York State.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—The statement in last night's paper that I had been arrested for the illegal sale of liquor in justice to me deserves an explanation. I have a United States license for the sale of liquor, and thought this was sufficient for a druggist in this State, for with 24 years experience in the State of New York my right to sell had never been questioned. The small bottle of liquor sold to the complainant was understood to be for medicinal purposes, and the unpleasant situation in which I am placed is a source of great mortification to myself and to my friends, and to correct any impression that I had intentionally violated the law I ask the favor of publication of this letter.

Police Make a Second Arrest for Illegal Sale of Liquor.

A second druggist was in the City Court this morning as a result of Chief Grant's endeavors to stop the illegal sale of liquor in every place in town.

This time it was Druggist H. L. Freeman who pleaded guilty to selling liquor to Charles Wilson, the same complaining witness, April 8. He was put under $100 bail to appear for sentence tomorrow morning.

A STRANGE CASE.

How an Enemy was Foiled.

The following graphic statement will be read with intense interest: "I cannot describe the numb, creepy sensation that existed in my arms, hands and legs. I had to rub and beat those parts until they were sore, to overcome in a measure the dead feeling that had taken possession of them. In addition, I had a strange weakness in my back and around my waist, together with an indescribable 'gone' feeling in my stomach. Physicians said it was creeping paralysis, from which, according to their universal conclusion, there is no relief. Once it fastens upon a person, they say, it continues its insidious progress until it reaches a vital point and the sufferer dies. Such was my prospect. I had been doctoring a year and a half steadily, but with no particular benefit, when I saw an advertisement of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, procured a bottle and began using it. Marvelous as it may seem, but a few days had passed before every bit of that creepy feeling had left me, and there has not been even the slightest indication of its return. I now feel as well as I ever did, and have gained ten pounds in weight, though I had run down from 170 to 137. Four others have used Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine on my recommendation, and it has been as satisfactory in their cases as in mine."—James Kane, La Rue, O.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is free from opiates or dangerous drugs.

REPORT OF AN EXAMINATION OF

The Prudential Insurance Co. of America,

By The Hon. Geo. S. Duryee,

Commissioner of Banking and Insurance for New Jersey.

On the second day of February last the Prudential Insurance Company voluntarily requested the Hon. George S. Duryee, Commissioner of Banking and Insurance for the State of New Jersey, to examine the affairs of the Company.

In compliance with that request the Commissioner, aided by his deputy, the Hon. Thos. K. Johnston, promptly entered upon the work.

The Commissioner appointed as assistant examiners, David Parks Fackler, an eminent actuary, of New York City; W. F. Van Camp, of Trenton, and ex-Judge Howard W. Hayes, and Edward H. Duryee, of Newark, and these gentlemen were assisted by an ample corps of subordinate examiners and clerks.

The examination by the Commissioner occupied a period of about six weeks of consecutive work. Every book, voucher and document of whatsoever kind concerning the Prudential Company's business from its foundation down to the day of the examination, were open to the inspection and scrutiny of the Commissioner and his assistants.

The Company's manner of transacting its vast business and its methods of dealing with, and treatment of, its immense body of policy-holders, numbering at that time nearly two millions, were freely opened to the most searching inquiry. After a very comprehensive examination, the Commissioner reported to the Company as follows:

TRENTON.

GEORGE S. DURYEE, Commissioner.
THOMAS K. JOHNSTON, Deputy Commissioner.

MR. JOHN F. DRYDEN, President of the Prudential Insurance Company of America:

My Dear Sir:—I beg leave herewith to enclose you a copy of the report of the examination and the schedules thereunto annexed of the condition of the Prudential Insurance Company, which will explain itself. In sending you this report I desire to say that it had been my purpose to have made an examination of the Company at a previous date, but I refrained from doing so until you were thoroughly settled in your new office building.

Officially and, I may add, personally, it gives me great pleasure to find that the condition of the Company as reported is entirely verified by the examination made by this Department. I have made this examination in a very thorough manner by the officers of the Department and have also employed especially Mr. Fackler, and those whom I regard as fully competent real estate lawyers to pass on the many questions involved in an examination of this character, and of a company of the magnitude of your own.

I must congratulate you on your success and would also thank you for all the courtesies you have shown me and my examiners in effecting the difficult labor I have been called upon to perform.

Yours very truly,
G. S. DURYEE, Commissioner.

Enclosure.

Report of DAVID PARKS FACKLER and W. F. VAN CAMP. (Copy.)

HON. GEORGE S. DURYEE, Commissioner of Banking and Insurance, Trenton, N. J.:

Sir:—On February 5 you did me the honor to request that I examine the Prudential Insurance Company of America, located at Newark, N. J., in conjunction with Mr. VanCamp, of your department, and we would now report as follows:

The Company devoted two rooms to the exclusive use of the examiners and cheerfully afforded every facility that was requested. The work was pushed with all reasonable expedition with a considerable number of able assistants (from five to fifteen having been engaged in the work), so that we are now able to state as follows:

The object of the examination being to verify the Company's annual report for the date of December 31, 1893, the items of that report are referred to in the same order as therein mentioned.

The ledger assets reported as on hand at the beginning of the year 1893, were found correct by comparison with the Company's books.

INCOME. The premium income was verified in the usual manner, and as regards the Industrial Branch, was also confirmed by a direct calculation of the amount of premium that should have been received on the insurance reported as in force. All other items of income were examined in the usual manner and found correct as per appended copy of the Company's report.

DISBURSEMENTS. All items under this head were carefully verified from the vouchers as far as desirable.

ASSETS. The cost value of the real estate was satisfactorily verified from the original papers and vouchers presented. The stated amount of the loans on bond and mortgage was found to be in accordance with the books and the mortgage papers. The papers showing the company's title to its real estate and those connected with the mortgage loans were carefully examined and found in due form. In which connection please refer to the report of the able real estate lawyers employed on this matter.

Items (4) and (5) Loans and Premium Notes secured by the Company's policies were examined both as to the adequacy of the security and the amount of the loans, and found all right. The cost value of the stocks and bonds was verified from the books and the reported market values were specially examined and found correct by Mr. Van Camp, who also investigated the amount of cash on hand and in bank and reported all correct.

During the erection ot the Company's office building in Newark many items of expenditure were charged to the cost of the building, which would seem more properly to belong to the account of "furniture, fixtures, machinery and safes." Some of these items were afterwards transferred to the proper account, but several were omitted or overlooked at the time, and after considering all the circumstances it would seem proper to transfer $20,000 from the cost of the Company's office building to furniture account. On communicating these views to the President he stated that he would have every such item on which there could be any possible difference of opinion taken out of the real estate account on the Company's books.

No formal appraisal of the other real estate held by the Company, or of that mortgaged to it, has yet been made; all of the New Jersey properties are known to the real estate lawyers whose report is appended, and these gentlemen state that the premises are all worth more than the stated cost, or than the amount loaned upon them. Owing to the financial depression during the last twelve months, there is an unusual proportion of interest overdue, but if we substract from these assets every mortgage on which interest is unpaid and also every piece of real estate taken under foreclosure, there will still be left over $9,900,000 of assets that are beyond question and far in excess of all liabilities.

LIABILITIES. The reserve liability has been carefully computed from the Company's report of insurance in force on December 31, 1893, and the report has been directly verified by extensive comparisons with the Company's registers and also by a calculation regarding the premium, as before stated in connection with "Income." The liability for unpaid death claims is remarkably small, for the practice of the Company is to pay on the very day that complete proofs are received, which inspection of the books shows to be generally within three days after the death.

Companies which close their books and make up their reports on January 2 will necessarily omit some items of undeveloped liability due to cases in which death occurred prior to January 1, but claim was not presented until after that date. From an examination of the death claims presented to the Company up to March 1, 1894, it appeared that the actual amount of liability, which was latent at the date of the report, was about $35,000, an amount entirely insignificant in comparison with the special extra reserve of $858,950 voluntarily held by the Company beyond all known liabilities.

The details of the finding of the examination are shown in the appended statement.

The judicial character of an examination under State authority may not permit many commendatory expressions, but it does not seem just or proper to close this report without stating the satisfaction felt by the examiners at the neatness and correctness of the books and completeness of the system by which the Company records all the details of its vast business with nearly two millions of policy holders.

The first examination of the Prudential Inrurance Company, made under the New Jersey laws was in August, 1879, when it had hardly begun its career and was only about one-sixtieth of its present size. In the last three years it has more than doubled its assets, and is now dispensing its benefactions widely over the Union. In nearly every case the sums us thpaid immediately after death are all that the bereaved families have wherewith to meet the privations that follow the loss of their bread-winners, or the expenses always connected with sickness and death. Life policies have done good, not only after death by protecting those left behind, but they have often been the means of preserving the lives of those insured, enabling them when sick to obtain board and medical aid from their neighbors, who only needed) to be guaranteed against their death. Respectfully submitted,

DAVID PARKS FACKLER, Consulting Actuary and Examiner.
March 15, 1894. W. F. VAN CAMP, Examiner.

EX-JUDGE HOWARD W. HAYES and EDWARD H. DURYEE, state:

"We have examined in detail the bonds and mortgages and the titles to the real estate of The Prudential Insurance Company of America." * * * *

"The instruments were in all cases properly drawn, executed and acknowledged, and the mortgages were all recorded or registered in the proper offices. The mortgages or trust deeds all contained proper terms to vest the Company with a title in fee subject only to the defeasance clause to the mortgagee. * * * "The real estate belonging to the Company is held by it by an indefeasible title in fee simple, as shown by the deeds and abstracts of title which we examined. The value placed on each property as appears by the annexed schedule is in each case its actual cost.

STATE OF NEW JERSEY,
(Copy) DEPARTMENT OF BANKING AND INSURANCE,
Trenton, March 29, 1894.

I, GEORGE S. DURYEE, Commissioner of Banking and Insurance of the State of New Jersey, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a true copy of the report of examination of the condition and affairs of The Prudential Insurance Company of America, of Newark, New Jersey, as of December 31, 1893, and of the schedules, etc., accompanying the same, as taken from and compared with the originals now remaining on file in my office.

G. S. DURYEE, Commissioner of Banking and Insurance.

(Seal of the State of New Jersey, Department of Banking and Insurance.)

Accompanying the foregoing certificates were voluminous schedules, showing the Company's assets and liabilities, as reported to the Department of Banking and Insurance on December 31, 1893.

Rainforth's Strange Case.

By WILL LISENBEE.

[Copyright, 1894, by American Press Association.]

With a violent start I leaped from my chair and glanced quickly about me. The scene had vanished, and the room was in total darkness, save where a dim ray of moonlight stole through the high window in the ruin wall. What had happened? Had I really been dreaming, or had I in some mysterious way been permitted to witness an actual scene that had transpired at that very moment in some distant part of the city? Had I suddenly been endowed with the subtle power of second sight, or by what inexplicable freak of the occult had I been able to discern what had appeared before my vision? Surely it could have been no dream! Yet, as my sober second thought came to me, I gave that as the only explanation.

At this point I was aroused from my bewildering reflections by the cheery voice of Ralph Redburn, who had just returned from a stroll in the Villa Borghese gardens and had almost stumbled over me in the darkness.

When a light had been made, I related to him the strange circumstance of the vision I had beheld, but he only smiled and said:

"It's only a dream, my boy. This old ruin is having a bad effect on your constitution. You need something to brace you up."

Nearly a week later, while returning from a drive across the campagna, I came upon the ruins of an old temple which looked so picturesque in its desolate, decayed grandeur, that I resolved to make a sketch of it. It stood near the outskirts of the city and was flanked on one side by a deep ravine. On the other and eastern side, just at the summit of a gentle swell, gleamed the white walls of a picturesque villa, its vine wreathed columns and wide sweeping porches looking cool and inviting in the warm glow of the Italian sun.

The next day I returned to the ruin, where I spent the day sketching the picturesque pile. I had given the driver of the conveyance in which I had come instructions to return for me at sunset, but owing to my limited knowledge of Italian and his utter ignorance of English he doubtless misunderstood me, for he failed to put in an appearance. Tired with my day's work, I threw myself upon the ground, my back resting against a broken marble column, to wait the driver's return. Thus reclining, I fell asleep and straightway was visited by one of the most strange and vivid dreams of my life. Even now as it comes back to my mind I can hardly realize that it was only a dream. The dream did not begin as dreams usually do—vague and fanciful—seeming unreal and absurd to the waking mind, but it appeared that I had barely closed my eyes when, moved by some strange impulse, I arose from my reclining position. But what seemed most strange was it appeared as if I could see myself still reclining against the column where I had fallen asleep. Yet this excited no wonder in my second self.

Turning from the spot, I began wandering through the ruins. On, on I wandered, now amid gloomy corridors, where bats and owls flew past on rapid wings; now in some spacious hall where the moonbeams, creeping through innumerable crevices in the crumbling walls, interlaced the rock strewn floor with braidings of silvery white. On, on, with only one aim and one desire, and that was to find the one I loved. It seemed as if I had known her all my life and loved her with such intense passion that every moment I was separated from her caused me the keenest anguish.

Whither she had gone I did not know. I only knew that I must find her, and with anxious heart I wandered from room to room in the great ruin, my mind in a wild tumult of hope and fear.

Suddenly I came to a high wall, it seemed, and looking upward I beheld an open window high above my head, and something seemed to tell me that beyond the window I would find her for whom I searched. Like one half crazed I leaped up the wall, clinging to small projections that scarcely afforded sufficient footing for a cat, yet with desperate energy I drew myself up to the window sill and looked within the rooms. There upon a couch, fast asleep, lay the one I loved. A moonbeam coming through the window touched her face, and then I seemed to know that the one I had sought and loved so long was she whom I had seen at the church of Trinita del Monte.

With a cry of joy I tried to draw myself up to the opening, but something seemed to weigh heavily upon me, preventing my ascent. I called loudly to her within the room, but she did not awake. Again and again I called to her, beseeching her to come to me, but she only moved uneasily upon her pillow as if her sleep had been disturbed by my cry. Then I felt my hold upon the wall slowly giving way, and with an agonized cry upon my lips I fell back and down, down into the darkness, and with this I awoke.

I sprang to my feet, startled and bewildered at the vividness of the dream. I drew out my watch and glanced at it by the moonlight. It was 12 o'clock! Was it possible that I had slept so long? I must find some conveyance at once and return to the city.

The night had grown chill, and I shivered as I picked up my sketchbook and walked from the gloomy shadows of the ruin. How vivid my dream had been! Was it a dream? It hardly seemed possible. As I reflected over the strange incident it all came to me like a flash.

I knew then that I was madly in love with the strange woman I had seen at the Trinita del Monte church. It had all been revealed to me in my dream, and it seemed to me that I must find her now at any cost. I would never give over the search. Every aim and every ambition of my life should be centered in an object—to find her and to tell her of my love.

Ungovernable and intoxicating pulsings of passion fired my soul to a degree never before dreamed of as I strode across the level court that lay east of the ruin. I was just turning a corner of the broken wall when I heard the rustle of a garment and a light step near me. Then there was a gleam of white draperies as the form of a woman glided into view.

I stood stock still with astonishment. Was it a ghost of the ruins? The strange apparition, the place and the hour all conspired to thrill me with a momentary feeling of superstition and awe. Slowly and almost noiselessly the figure approached. I stood still, speechless and breathless. The matchless grace of form and movement told me that this was a beautiful woman even before I saw her face. A light shawl of creamy whiteness was wrapped about her form. Her head was bare, her dark hair fell in a disheveled mass about her shoulders, and her loose, flowing garments looked strangely and intensely white in the silvery brightness of the moon.

As she drew near the moonlight fell full upon her face, showing her features as distinctly almost as if it had been day. A startled cry almost rose to my lips, but died away. Was I still dreaming? Were my senses leaving me, or what in the name of heaven did it mean? The face of the strange apparition was that of the one I had seen in my dream—the same that had filled me with amazement at its loveliness at the church of Trinita del Monte.

I stood there as if petrified, powerless to move, my whole being weighted down by an inexplicable and subtle fascination. No, it could not be real. I was still dreaming. I should soon awake to the sharp disappointment of the reality. The thoughts forced themselves upon my mind, causing me to feel the keenest anguish.

The white draped figure of the woman passed so close to me that I could have touched her with my hand, and every feature had been plainly revealed. Her eyes, large and lustrous, were staring as if at vacancy, and every movement was as if she were utterly oblivious to her surroundings. Scarcely had I noticed these facts when the truth came to me like a flash, breaking the spell that had fallen over me. She was a somnambulist! The thought quickly grew into a conviction.

I turned quickly and followed her, a wild tumult of passion pulsing through my being. It was no dream then. I had found her at last! Was it fate that had directed her steps to that place, or had my spirit called her thither while I thought I had only been dreaming? Heaven only knows. Yet till my dying day I shall never cease to believe that it was my spirit that called her to the ruin that night.

Like one entranced, I followed her, keeping close behind. She crossed the open court. Then through a broken archway she glided like a spirit. Then, turning, she was about to make her way along the very verge of a deep pitfall when with a cry of horror I sprang forward and caught her by the arm. I had heard that those who walk in sleep are never harmed by walking in perilous places, yet the thought that she was in danger made me forget everything else for a moment.

As my hand touched her arm she stopped abruptly. Then I saw that she had awakened. For a moment there was an astonished, bewildered look in her eyes. Then she uttered a low cry of terror, and turning quickly fled across the open court. The next instant I saw her stagger, then reel downward and fall in a heap upon the rock strewn ground.

Leaping forward, I soon reached her side and was bending over her prostrate form. She lay limp and lifeless, her head resting against a sharp stone, against which it had struck as she fell. As I lifted her head I saw a stain of blood upon her temple. Had the blow killed her? My God! The very thought drove me to the verge of insanity. Hardly knowing what I did, I lifted her from the ground and deposited her upon a little strip of grass that grew near where she had fallen. Then removing my coat I placed it beneath her head. Still she lay motionless, as if death had already claimed her. What must I do? Where could I go for help? I glanced about me, but the nearest sign of human habitation was the villa upon the slope an eighth of a mile away. Perhaps I might find some one there who could assist me, yet I feared to leave her alone for a single moment.

As I again turned my attention to her I saw with a thrill of joy that life was not extinct. She uttered a faint moan, and there was a slight fluttering of the lips. It was only a swoon, after all, and she would soon recover. The thought gave me more joy than I had ever before experienced. I bent down and began to examine the wound upon her temple. To my infinite relief, I found that it was not serious, yet it might have rendered her unconscious. But I now believed that her swoon had been caused more by terror than by the blow she had received.

I sat there by her side chafing her hands while I watched the life slowly coming back to her. The shawl she had worn had slipped from her shoulders, and now for the first time I discovered that she was clad in only her nightdress. This left no doubt in my mind that she was a somnambulist.

Now that I had discovered that she was not seriously hurt a great joy came to me, and it seemed as if I could have sat there forever, holding her hand in mine, forgetting all else save that I was with the one I loved. The very touch of her hand thrilled me with a strange ecstasy. A wild tumult of passion surged through my soul. Mad with the intoxication of her presence, the torturing fear that I should soon be separated from her roused in me for one brief moment the selfish hope that consciousness might not return to her just yet. It was a wild, cruel hope which I crushed back with a feeling of bitter self reproach.

CHAPTER IV.

I shall never forget the moments that I sat there holding the hand of the unconscious woman while the tide of life slowly flowed back into her veins. The place and the hour, the solemn ruins towering above us, grim and spectral, the weird moonlight giving a ghastly pallor to every object, all served to lend an aspect of unspeakable grandeur and wild desolation to the scene, yet I was oblivious to everything save the unconscious form before me.

She lay limp and pallid in the damp grass, one hand resting in the soft folds of exquisite lace upon her breast, her clinging garments showing a form so perfect, so matchless that it might have served as a model for even Phidias. One hand I held in mine and chafed it while I watched the color come faintly into her cheeks. Then her eyes opened, but there was that in their depths that indicated that she was not yet conscious. For only a moment she stared vacantly at space. Then her eyes closed again, and she appeared to relapse into a kind of stupor.

I now woke to the realization that something must be done for her at once. It would not do to remain idle when every moment might be precious as life. Again I glanced about the place, but the nearest habitation to be seen was the villa on the hill. To this I was determined to carry her, for I could never bear to leave her there alone while I went for assistance.

I lifted her tenderly in my arms and bore her swiftly up the slope, my heart beating in a wild tumult of conflicting emotions. How I reached the place I never knew. Even now it all seems like a dream. On reaching the villa I called loudly to the inmates, at the same time beating upon the door like one bereft of reason.

I heard a rustling within. Then there came a voice from the window overhead.

"Who is there?" The voice was English and a woman's. I thanked heaven for that.

"Here is some one in distress," I replied. "It is a lady. She is seriously hurt, I fear. For heaven's sake come as quickly as you can!"

I heard surprised voices within, then hurrying footsteps, and then after what seemed to me an age of delay the door was thrown open, and a middle aged woman appeared.

I still held the senseless burden in my arms, and the woman uttered a cry of horror as she saw me.

"This lady is hurt and needs your help," I said hastily. "She is doubtless a sleepwalker. She was down at the old ruin. She slipped and fell upon the rocks"——

"My God, it is Miss Grace!" The woman uttered the exclamation as she came forward, and then she threw her arms about the unconscious form I supported. "My poor, poor darling! Oh, tell me—is she killed?" And her voice died in a choking sob.

"Only stunned," I replied. "Please show me where I shall take her, and a physician must be brought."

"Thank heaven she is not killed," cried the woman. Then, turning, she led the way through a dark hall and into a wide, airy room, lit only by the moonbeams that streamed brightly through a high open window. At one end of the room was a wide, curiously fashioned couch, and upon this I deposited my burden.

The woman hastily lighted a lamp, and as she came forward to the couch I said:

"Some water and a little spirits, if you have any in the house."

She disappeared to execute the order, calling loudly to some other inmates of the house as she did so. In a short time she returned with a pitcher of water and some brandy, and kneeling beside the couch she bathed the unconscious woman's head and forced some of the spirits between her lips.

There was a hasty step in the hall, and the next instant a girl of some 16 years of age entered, a frightened look upon her face.

"Your mistress is hurt badly," said the woman beside the couch. "Call Beppo and send him for the doctor!"

The girl uttered a sobbing cry and ran to the hall door.

"Beppo! Beppo!" she called in a frightened voice.

In a few moments an Italian lad of about 16 appeared at the door.

"Go for Dr. Barcago at once! Your mistress is very ill!" she said.

With a bow the youth disappeared to execute the order.

"Thank heaven she is recovering!" came from the woman beside the couch. I turned to the girl.

"I shall remain till after the doctor arrives," I said. "I should like to know the extent of her injuries before I return to the city." I strolled out upon the porch, leaving the two to care for the patient. I felt bewildered and dizzy, but the cool night air revived me.

It seemed like an age till the doctor arrived, but when he at last came he found the patient fully restored to consciousness. He remained a half hour, and when he came out said:

"She is asleep now and resting quietly. She is not seriously hurt and will recover in a few days."

The woman who had admitted me to the house came out as the doctor departed.

"We are very grateful to you," she said. "How fortunate that you brought her here! This is her home. Poor darling! She has been walking in her sleep again. It always happens when she is in great trouble."

She was in great trouble then? The words troubled me deeply.

"I am happy to have been of service to her," I said. "I shall take the liberty to call and inquire after her tomorrow." I handed her my card as I spoke.

"Miss Dangerfield would be glad to thank you for your kindness in person," she said.

Then I took my departure and walked the entire distance to my lodgings, happier than I had ever been before in my life.

On the following evening I called at the villa. Miss Dangerfield was almost entirely recovered, the servant informed me. She was in the drawing room and would see me.

There was a strange fluttering of my heart as I was ushered into her presence. I shall never forget the picture she made as my eyes encountered her. The curtains were closely drawn save at the eastern window, and a mellow twilight pervaded the room. She sat half reclining in an easy chair, her pale olive cheek, touched with the faintest coloring, resting against the crimson cushion. A velvet wrapper of the palest gold enveloped her form with its rich folds, while the loose flowing sleeves half disclosed her arms of ivory whiteness.

She arose as I entered and held out her hand to welcome me. The touch of her hand thrilled me with a strange delight.

"I want to thank you, Mr. Rainforth, for your kindness last night," she said in a low, melodious voice as she resumed her seat. "It was an unfortunate circumstance—you were very kind"—

She must have noticed the appealing look in my eyes, for she stopped abruptly, and for a moment a faint crimson tinged her cheeks.

"I—I hope you won't mention it," I faltered, hardly knowing what I said. "I hope you are recovered."

"Almost," she replied. "I trust I shall be as well as ever in a few days." And then the topic was changed.

What I said and did during the few minutes that I remained I can never tell. The magnetism of her presence made me forgetful of everything save that when I went away I had received permission to call again.

I shall not give in detail all the incidents that followed. Suffice it to say that I soon became a frequent visitor to the Villa del Bargacco—such was the name of the villa in which Miss Dangerfield resided—and I think I must have been the happiest man in all Rome. Miss Dangerfield, as I soon learned, had lost her father only a week previous to my meeting with her at the ruin. Isaac Dangerfield—such was her father's name—was a wealthy New York broker, who for several years had, owing to ill health, been compelled to live abroad. A year before my arrival in Rome he had come there with his daughter Grace and three servants and hired the Villa del Bargacco, intending to remain there for two or three years at least.

One evening he had been found dead in the drawing room. Heart disease—his old malady—the doctors said, had caused his death. There was, however, a small bruise upon his left temple, but as this could not have caused death it was supposed to be the result of striking his head against a piece of furniture as he fell.

As the story was told to me it brought vividly to my mind the strange dream, or vision, that had visited me in the studio at that very time. Had it really transpired as I had seen it? Had some one entered the room and struck Isaac Dangerfield as had appeared in my dream? Had there been murder done? If so, who was the murderer? These thoughts and many others came to my mind as I reflected over the incident.

Having no living relative now, Miss Dangerfield cared little where she made her home. Her old and trusted servants were with her, and she had decided to spend a few months at the Villa del Bargacco, then return to New York.

As the days went by a great happiness came into my life. She whom I worshiped with my whole soul loved me—she had promised to be my wife! It seemed that the very heavens had been opened to me as the sweet words of confession came from her lips. How can I ever describe the happiness that was mine in the days that followed?

Shall I ever be able to fathom the mystery that surrounds the events that followed? Heaven only knows. But God grant that I may, and that the shadow may be lifted from her life. More than once she had told me of the black shadow that lay over her past life. She had made a solemn promise to her father to never reveal the secret to any one except the one she should call her husband. But what did I care for the past? Was it not enough that she was going to be mine—that deep in my soul I knew she could be guilty of no wrong?

She was alone in the world and had yielded to my earnest pleadings for a speedy marriage. And just one week before the time set for the happy event something occurred which changed the whole course of my life.

I was strolling in the vicinity of the Villa Borghere gardens. It was evening, and the yellow stars had just begun to twinkle through the purple dusk. Suddenly I became aware that I was being followed. I caught a glimpse of the figure of a man stealing after me—the same figure, I thought, that had once dogged my footsteps as I was returning from the Villa del Bargacco. I turned quickly about to confront the man, but he slunk away and disappeared among the trees.

A half hour later as I was returning to my lodging some one suddenly leaped upon me from behind and struck me a blow with a knife. Though sorely wounded, I turned and grappled with the would be assassin, but seeing an officer approaching he slipped from my clutches and made his escape. Only a common robber, the officer said. The wound I received kept me confined to my room for two days, and then I went to the Villa del Bargacco. The house was closed. She whom I loved was gone—gone without a word to me—no one knew whither. She had taken her servants with her—all save the Italian lad, Beppo, and he could tell me nothing.

The blow fell on me with crushing force. If I had been suddenly condemned to death, I could not have experienced a more hopeless despair. For days I went about as one in a dream, hardly caring whether I lived or died.

All that I could learn was that she had left of her own free will, taking her servants with her. She had not thought it proper to enlighten me, yet I was resolved to see her again—to hear from her own lips the sentence of my banishment.

By the aid of detectives I managed to trace her to Nice, then to Geneva and finally to Paris, where all trace was lost. For two years I searched for her, but in vain. Then I came to New York. There I learned that the former residence of Isaac Dangerfield in that city had been leased for a number of years, but that he had owned a country seat at Mayburg. I next came here, but learned that the place had never been occupied by its owner. I decided to remain in Mayburg for some time, hoping that she for whom I had vainly searched so long might come to the place to make it her home.

On the evening of Sept. 10 I received a cipher dispatch from a New York detective, whom I had employed, stating that Miss Grace Dangerfield had come to Mayburg and would take up her abode at Darkwood Hall.

That very evening I visited the hall and met Miss Dangerfield face to face.

I shall never forget the look of speechless agony upon her face as I stood before her. She became as white as death and clutched the back of a chair for support. I held out my hand to her, but she drew back with a low, agonized cry.

I stood looking at her like one turned to stone.

"Grace, Grace, in the name of God, what does this mean?" I cried when I could find my speech. "Why did you leave me without one word? Why do you shrink from me now?

My whole being shook with emotion as I spoke, and the ungovernable pulsing of passion within me fired my soul with frenzy.

Her white face, with its lines of suffering, her quick, gasping breath and clinched hands told me plainly of the agony within. There was a moment of deathly silence, and then she spoke.

"I will tell you," she said, her voice sinking almost to a whisper. "I fled from you at Rome because—because I had received you—because I was then and am still the wife of another!"

Then, like one who reels under a heavy load, she staggered from the room, leaving me alone.

Just how I made my way from the house I never knew. She was another's wife!

Like one who has heard his death sentence, I made my way across the lawn to the gate. Then, turning, I walked through the park toward Mayburg. During the remainder of the night I never closed my eyes in sleep. The next morning I learned that a murder had been committed near Darkwood Hall. Later I was arrested, accused of committing the crime. Of the man who was murdered or the one who murdered him I know nothing. What evidence is to be brought against me I do not know. Shall I be made to suffer for another's crime? Despair has made me indifferent to life, yet something tells me that I shall yet be the means of clearing up the mystery that surrounds the dark affair.

Here ended abruptly the manuscript Gerald Rainforth had given me.

WHAT AILS YOU?

Do you feel dull, languid, low-spirited, fullness or bloating after eating, tongue coated, bitter or bad taste in mouth, irregular appetite, frequent headaches, "floating specks" before eyes, nervous prostration and drowsiness after meals?

If you have any considerable number of these symptoms, you are suffering from Torpid Liver, associated with Dyspepsia, or Indigestion. The more complicated your disease the greater the number of symptoms. No matter what stage it has reached, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will subdue it.

MRS. MOTT.

MRS. MARY MOTT, of Roven Rock, Pleasants Co., W. Va., writes: "Before using your Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, everything I ate would ferment in my stomach, and my tongue was so terribly coated, I thought nothing would remove it. Since taking the 'Golden Medical Discovery,' I can eat a good meal, and enjoy it."

A REMARKABLE CURE

MIDDLEBUSH, Somerset Co., N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For the past forty years I have been afflicted with bleeding piles. I suffered constant pain in the lower part of my body, but when I had an operation of the bowels the pain was perfectly terrible, and was most always attended with the loss of a large quantity of blood. My condition was complicated with prolapse of the rectum, which at first only made its appearance when I had a movement of the bowels, but at length the parts became so weakened that the protrusion took place while walking or stooping, or after the slightest exertion, and sometimes even while I was at rest. Whenever this happened it gave rise to the most agonizing pain, and felt as though something was pulling the life right out of me. In fact only those similarly situated can imagine the suffering and distress which I had to endure from day to day, and which made my life a terrible burden. Hearing of Dr. Lighthill's wonderful success in the cure of difficult chronic diseases, I placed myself under his care, and now I am proud and happy to say that, marvelous as it may seem, he effected a complete and radical cure in my case in every respect, and he performed this cure without any painful operation or preventing me from work. Since this terrible disease has been removed by Dr. Lighthill's skill I feel new life, and for the first time in forty years I feel once more what it is to be without daily pain, discomfort and distress. I am not a wealthy man, but no amount of money would tempt me to be put back in my former condition.

I make this public statement, not only from a deep and everlasting sense of gratitude to Dr. Lighthill, but also as a simple Christian duty to let the afflicted know where they can find a physician whose skill cannot be surpassed, and in whom implicit confidence can be placed.

To the Residents of Plainfield, N. J.

Mr. H. Vroom, whose statement appears above, is a brother-in-law of mine. I personally know of his case and his suffering and also know the happy fact that to the surprise of himself and his friends, Dr. Lighthill effected a radical and permanent cure. His statement is true in every respect and does not say half enough in praise of Dr. Lighthill. Anyone who wishes this statement verified is at liberty to come and see me personally.

POOR TIP TORTURED

Bungling Work Killing the Big Elephant.

It Took All Day to End the Beast's Life With Poison—In Great Agony for Hours—Broke His Chains and Martingale—Men on Hand With Guns Ready for an Emergency.

NEW YORK, May 12.—The killing of Tip, the biggest elephant in captivity, at Central park, yesterday, although conducted under the supervision of officers of the S. P. C. A., was a bungling job and there is no doubt that the poor pachyderm suffered greatly from a few minutes after the poison was administered, at 6 o'clock in the morning, until he died, at 4:20 in the afternoon. Three ounces of cyanide of potassium was concealed in a carrot and given to the elephant. He began to eat it, but suddenly spit out the greater part of it. All subsequent efforts to get him to take tempting food failed, until late in the afternoon.

Such a botched piece of work has never been accomplished by any set of men who have professed to have the slightest skill in killing wild animals or to save an animal from unnecessary cruelty and suffering. From 6 a. m. until 4 p. m. the great king of the forest went shuddering from one convulsion into another under the influence of the cyanide. The first dose of the poison was not sufficent to put a quick and painless end to his life.

The seeming incapacity of the men in charge of the work to perform the duty assigned to them without unnecessary cruelty appears to be fully demonstrated by the time it took to kill the poor beast.

No reason which is at all convincing was assigned by any of them why the elephant was not shot with a rifle bullet and instantly killed, as has been the fate of thousands of elephants in India and Africa.

Here are the details of his death as those interested gave them to the public:

At 2 o'clock in the afternoon Dr. Allen, one of the experts, said he believed that what little poison Tip got into his system in the morning was taking effect.

"His trunk is partially paralyzed. He is breathing heavily, which goes to show that the poison has acted on his heart."

Some of the experts went so far as to say that Tip was dying by inches at that hour.

Capt. Collins in charge of a squad of park policemen, kept the crowd back. No one was allowed within 200 yards of the elephant house. In the earlier hours of the day the crowd was allowed within 50 yards of the house.

Matters at 3:15 o'clock in the afternoon seemed to be reaching a climax. At that hour 15 capsules of cyanide of potassium were given to Tip in a dish of bran. The great beast went into convulsions and thrashed about at a tremendous rate.

In his wild struggles he broke the chains which confined him, and snapped his martingale. The attendants seemed to be panic-stricken. Tip was loose in his pen and their lives were in danger.

Two men were immediately sent for guns with which to shoot Tip if it became necessary. It was feared that he might break out of his pen.

Such was the condition of affairs at 4 o'clock. The later dose of poison combined with the preceding had not killed the elephant. It only tortured him. It was announced later that the second dose of poison was two ounces. It was five minutes afterwards that violent convulsions seized him and he burst his chain and martingale. He died at 4:19:12 o'clock.

It was just 12 minutes from the time that Tip ate the last morsel that he was pronounced dead.

Five minutes before he died he "weaved" violently. He writhed as much as a monster of his size could writhe with pain. He revealed a strength such as he had never before—a rage compared with which his wildest outbursts had been but trifles. In his paroxysm he whirled about the limits of his cage, reared his great body against the heavy timbers and charged upon them with his blunted tusks. He raised his trunk high into the air and trumpeted in his agony. From his mouth big drops of blood spouted and then, gathering himself with all his might, he made one dash toward the rear of his pen and fell dead. It was a violent scene and greatly frightened the keepers.

In his agony Tip must have bitten his tongue, said Mr. Wallace, and that accounted for the blood.

Tip, according to the early arrangements, was to have died at 6 a. m., and a large crowd had assembled even at that early hour to see the famous old beast executed. A squad of park policemen took up post around the house where Tip was confined and stood in readiness to keep off the crowd of curious persons who had begun to gather. Then the preparations began.

In the meantime the official witnesses of the event had arrived and entered the house.

At 6:40 o'clock the doors of the building were opened and the representatives of the press, of whom there were a large number, passed in. Inside was Tip, restless and spiteful. The huge beast stood swinging ceaselessly to and fro, gazing curiously through his wicked little eyes at the crowd jostling close around his cage. The knowing old brute seemed to realize that something unusual was about to happen.

As the time passed he grew more and more restless, and occasionally would throw his great trunk viciously out through the bars in his endeavor to hit some one.

By 6:45 all was in readiness, and then Mr. Straus announced that Tip would likely blow out some of the poison, and if he did some of the cyanide would strike the crowd, which would mean death if it got into the system, and ordered that the house be cleared.

Accordingly everyone was ordered out and none left inside but the doctors, keepers and four men from a firearms company, who were to kill the animal if the poison failed.

After a few moments consultation between the doctoes the poisoned carrot was given to Tip as already stated.

Coke Production.

CONNELLSVILLE, Pa., May 12.—Coke production dropped 32,000 tons last week, as compared with the week previous, and shipments were less by 2,300 car loads. The Illinois Steel company got the bulk of these shipments. The demand for coke has increased in proportion to the decrease in production and output.

THE DAY IN CONGRESS.

Senate Devotes Most of the Time to Tariff—Matters in the House.

WASHINGTON, May 12.—With the exception of the first hour, the whole of the day's session of the senate was spent on the tariff bill. There were a couple of short speeches made by Senators Stewart, (pop. Nev.) and Dolph (rep., Ore.) on an entirely different subject—the subject of bimetalism; but all the rest of the discussion had a direct bearing on the items in the chemical schedule of the bill and on the amendments offered to them. There was an occasional interchange of somewhat bitter personalities, but, on the whole, the discussion was of a practical character. The net result of the day's work was a progress of four lines, and changes in rates of articles of little interest.

Senator Mills, in fulfillment of his pledge the other day, voted (generally alone) against every one of the amendments. The proposition for daily meetings at 10 a. m., has been withdrawn, and the senate will continue to meet at 11, taking up the tariff at noon.

House of Representatives.

A vigorous arraignment of republican administration of the navy yards by Cummings (dem., N. Y.), including a reference to employment of an extra force at the Portsmouth yard, for the benefit of ex-Speaker Reed and the sarcastic rejoinder of Reed, were the principal features of the debate on the naval appropriation bill, which occupied all of the day's session of the house. Two pages of the bill were read for amendments. The house then took a recess until 8 o'clock for the consideration of private pension bills.

Will Accept Outerbridge's Challenge

NEW YORK, May 12.—President Nelson McIntyre of the Greenwich Wheelmen has received a telegram from Fred Titus of the Jersey Wheelmen, who is now in Springfield, Mass., stating that he had decided to accept the challenge of W. Outerbridge, the champion cyclist of Bermuda, for a match race. Titus agrees to race the foreigner one mile, the race to be decided at the Greenwich Wheelmen's race at Manhattan field on June 23.

Confirmed By the Senate.

WASHINGTON, May 12.—The senate has confirmed the following nominations:

Seneca Haselton, of Vermont, minister to Venezuela.

Postmasters—Connecticut—L. R. Carter, New Hartford.

New York—Elijah Griswold, Riverhead.

New Jersey—J. M. Hetfield, Plainfield; J. P. Flynn, Salem.

Bad Weather Delays Evictions.

GREENSBURG, Pa., May 12.—Sheriff McCann and Deputy Gay went to Whitney and Lippincott yesterday to evict 16 families from the companies' houses. After setting out one family the weather was so threatening that the work was postponed until Monday, when others, making 31 in all, will be thrown out of the houses owned by the Hostetter company.

Rewarded Paper Contract.

WASHINGTON, May 12.—Secretary Carlisle has awarded the contract for furnishing $60,000 worth of distinctive paper for treasury use in printing bank notes and checks, to Crane & Co., of Dalton, Mass., the present contractors, at the same figures as last year. There were no bids but that of Crane & Co.

To Become a U. V. L. Member.

COLUMBUS, O., May 12.—When ex-President Harrison visits this city on Memorial day he will be initiated into the Union Veteran Legion by local encampment No. 8. The ceremony will probably take place in the office of Governor McKinley.

Treasury Gold Loss.

WASHINGTON, May 12.—Since the last bond issue in February, the treasury has sustained a net loss of nearly $20,000,000.

Four Coxeyites Drowned.

SANDERS' MEN HAPPY

Although They Are Prisoners of Uncle Sam.

They Are in Kansas and the State Officials Are in Sympathy With Them, and in the End May Come Out All Right—Efforts to Get Their Case Away From Federal Courts.

TOPEKA, Kan., May 12.—United States Marshal Neely's special train bearing the Cripple Creek legion of the Coxey industrial army, as the band under command of Gen. Sanders styles itself, arrived in Topeka over the Missouri Pacific road last evening. The train was backed into the freight yard where it remained, the men being locked in the cars, the doors of which were guarded by deputy marshals armed with Winchesters.

The commonwealers were a very happy crowd and seemed more like a party of excursionists than prisoners in charge of government officers.

The coaches were crowded to their extreme capacity and nearly 50 men were left behind at Scott City, being unable to crowd themselves into the cars before reaching Topeka.

Marshal Neely decided that the best place to take his prisoners was Leavenworth, where there is a government reservation and where soldiers are available for service as guards. He accordingly telegraphed a recommendation to Attorney General Olney asking for instructions and it was owing to the delay in the answer that the prisoners were kept in confinement in the cars.

A short time after the arrival of the train a bevy of populist attorneys approached the private car in which Gen. Sanders was quartered and proffered him their services to defend him and his men in the courts. He thanked them for their kindness but did not accept their offer.

In an interview with the United Press correspondent General Sanders said:

"We started for Washington and we are going there. We appreciate the kindness of the government in assisting us on our journey thus far. They have been very kind to us. We left Cripple Creek a week ago with seven companies and Pueblo Monday night with eight companies, having enlisted an additional company there."

Judge C. G. Foster, of the United States district court, before whom the commonwealers will probably be tried, said of the the movement:

"The stealing of a train and bringing stolen property into the state alone do not constitute any cause of action in a Federal court. It belongs to the state courts. In order to have the case come within the jurisdiction of the federal courts the men must have interfered with the United State mails, or violated the interstate commerce law, or some other act of congress."

At 5 o'clock Marshal Neely, receiving no reply from Attorney General Olney, ordered the men released from the cars, and they went into camp in the railroad yards. He then ordered supplies of groceries and meat, and obtained from the state sufficient tents to shelter the army.

A telegram was received from District Attorney Perry saying that he could see no reason why he should be taken to Leavenworth, and the marshal inferred from that that the attorney general had referred his message to Perry. The district attorney will arrive in Topeka to-day, when the arrangements for the preliminary hearing will be completed.

It is evident that if the commonwealers once get out of the clutches of the federal authorities they will be all right as the state officials seem more inclined to assist than to molest them.

COXEY MOVES HIS ARMY.

The Men Will Be Camped in Maryland, Just Outside the District.

WASHINGTON, May 12.—Notwithstanding the positive assertion of "General" Coxey that his wealers would remain in Washington until congress took action on his "reform" measures, he came to the conclusion that the authorities, fortified by the laws of the district, were making it too warm for him and this morning camp was broken and with Brown in command the first commonweal army to enter the capital left the city.

The decision to get out of the district was reached by the general of the army when he found that his followers could not become dependant upon the local city government, but might be punished by terms in the workhouse. The terrors of the workhouse were more than the commonwealers had calculated upon. They were willing to be fed in jail, if it came to that, but working disconcerted the whole army, officers as well as privates.

Over a week ago Attorney J. H. Rogers had offered Coxey the use for an indefinite term of a large tract of land at the Spa spring, but Coxey did not consider it worth examining, as it was outside of the district, and he had no idea of abandoning his frequently reiterated declaration that he would stay in Washington all summer or until congress acceded to his demands. When the alternative of workhouse or evacuation of Washington was definitely presented, however, he concluded to accept Mr. Rogers' offer. Coxey drove six miles out to the spring yesterday and expressed himself delighted with the location and it is to this spot that the army is headed today.

Kelly's Men Enjoying Their Trip.

HOWELL, Ia., May 15.—The flatboats carrying Kelly's Californula industrial army passed this point last night on their way down the river. The night was pleasant and the men are thoroughly enjoying the trip. The glee club boat follows the flag ship of Gen. Kelly and their songs could be heard far up and down the river. Mingled with the songs were the cries of the men to each other and the words of command passed from boat to boat. The army camped at Amsterdam, about eight miles from here.

REVIEW OF BUSINESS

Warm Weather Stimulating Seasonable Lines.

Farm Work Also Active, but the Renewed Tariff Uncertainty Prolongs the Period of Buying for Actual Needs Only—Coal Strike Increasing the Number of Shut Downs.

NEW YORK, May 12.—Prolonged warm weather has stimulated farm work as well as sales in various seasonable lines of merchandise, says Bradstreet in the weekly review of the business situation of the country, but renewed tariff uncertainty tends to prolong the period during which merchants will continue to buy for actual needs only, evidences of which fact have appeared. The coal miners' strike has been extended in the far west and in portions of Maryland and the Virginias, and this has been followed by an increase in the number of industrial shutdowns due to increasing scarcity of fuel. Not far from 175,000 men are reported idle in the coal trade alone, and with those idle or on strike in other lines the total out of work is not less than 225,000. Destruction of property has been a feature of the coal strike in Pennsylvania and Alabama. The Pennsylvania and Baltimore & Ohio railroads are reported confiscating coal in transit. It is suggested to ship Duluth's excess stocks of coal to Chicago to relieve the fuel famine. Scarcity of Bessemer pig has caused a sharp advance, and billets, as well, are higher. But increased demand is based on prospective scarcity due to lack of fuel.

Orders Ahead for Several Months.

Western producers report firmness of soft steel and mills supplied with orders for several months. Shapes and plates are firmer, but in the face of this foundry irons in instances are weaker in price. A potent influence favoring higher quotations for pig iron based on the coal and coke strike, is of about one-third and a prospect for an extension of restricted production.

Even an unexpectedly bullish crop report by the agricultural department failed to stimulate wheat prices, in the face of excessive Argentine and Russian shipments, increased supplies in and afloat for Europe, and heavy stocks in the United States. Exports of wheat, both coasts United States and Canada, continue in fair volume.

There were 198 business failures reported in the United States during the week. Last week the total was 179, a year ago it was 219, two years ago 184, and three years ago 186. The New York securities market is exceedingly dull, the uncertainty of the business situation checking investment and speculation.

Oversupplies of money and easy rates check selling, and the professional traders who make all the activity put out short lines and depress prices, only to cover their contracts and create rallies. The effect of the new tariff bill has been confined to industrial stocks, sugar in particular fluctuating considerably. Bonds are inactive, and prices have been shaded.

Trade in Mercantile Lines.

Among larger eastern cities those which do not report a moderate or unchanged volume of trade report less favorable features. Providence announces orders for worsteds have fallen away sharply, and the outlook is less encouraging, while Philadelphia reports prospects in textile manufacturing lines are unfavorable and prices unsatisfactory. Buyers in Baltimore take for needs only, although merchants are discounting May bills better than expected. In eastern markets demand for wool is quiet and sales small, but broken stocks tend to steady quotations. Only a moderar volume of business in dry goods is reported, merchants purchasing only for actual needs. Cotton mills have surplus stocks which threaten prices, and a reduction of cost of production is probable.

General trade remains dull, as does business in manufacturing lines at Buffalo. Cleveland, Detroit, Cincinnati, Louisville, Milwaukee, Minneapolis and Omaha, except that at the last named more activity is reported in dry goods and hardware. Favorable crop prospects and activity in agricultural lines have checked trading by country merchants.

WOMEN VS. BRECKINRIDGE.

The Fair Sex of Lexington Trying to Defeat His Nomination.

LEXINGTON, Ky., May 12.—The women of this city intend to demonstrate their protest against the renomination of Col. Breckinridge by arranging for a big reception in honor of William C. Owens, the principal opponent of the colonel, when he comes here to address the electors, some day next week.

Eight boxes in the opera house will be filled with representative women of the Blue Grass region, who seldom take any part in politics.

A large delegation of the same sex will occupy the main part of the house. A petition is being numerously signed by the women of this city, who pledge themselves to attend the meeting.

Already the feminine opponents of Col. Breckinridge are boycotting the merchants who support his candidacy and others are dismissing their family physicians for the same reason.

Fitz's Army at Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, May 12.—The New England industrial delegation, 53 strong, under command of Capt. M. D. Fitzgerald, are quartered at the labor lyceum in this city, where they will remain until Monday when the march to Washington will be resumed. In the meantime Capt. Fitzgerald will address meetings nightly, and incidentally "pass around the hat."

The Banquet Expected to Be One of the Most Brilliant Affairs of Its Kind Given in England in Years—Efforts to Make the Affair a Thoroughly Representative One.

LONDON, May 12.—A meeting of the committee on the banquet to the officers of the United States cruiser Chicago was held last evening with Gen. Lord Roberts in the chair. After some discussion the members decided to hold the banquet in St. James hall on May 24, Queen Victoria's birthday.

They made out a partial list of invited guests, among whom will be Ambassador Bayard, several members of his staff, Consul General Patrick Collins, American consuls from the larger provincial cities, the lord mayor and two sheriffs of London.

A number of conspicuous persons have volunteered their services to the committee. Among them are the Duke of York, Prince Henry of Battenberg, Prince Louis of Battenberg and numerous members of parliament, besides the best of the army and navy.

The committee accepted the offer of all, including civilians, with a view of making the demonstration thoroughly representative and thus enhancing the compliment to the American navy and people.

Women will be admitted to the gallery of the hall during the banquet.

The music will be played by the band of the royal engineers.

All the arrangements indicate that the banquet will be one of the most brilliant affairs of its kind given here in many years.

HOMES IN CONFUSION.

Moving and House-Cleaning Days Are Upon Us--Comfortless Men and Cross, Tired Out, Nervous Women.

Van Tromp, with a broom at his mast-head, sailed up and down the Thames in defiance.

Brooms and dust rags are now putting households everywhere into confusion.

The traditional time for moving and house cleaning is upon us. Innumerable cases of weakened nerves, exhausted strength and debility date from these day feverish exertion, fret and cold rooms.

Every good housewife, however, feels bound to risk health and strength in this annual struggle with dirt and dust.

But as a preparation of great bodily and mental strain, hosts of careful women build up their strength with Paine's celery compound, the great nerve and brain strengthener and restorer. Physicians prescribe it for dyspepsia, kidney trouble, sick headaches and all forms of nervous weakness, because it makes people well when other remedies can do no good.

Men and women who have the tired languid feeling that indicates depleted blood and a feeble condition of the nervous system, need Paine's celery compound the remarkable discovery of Prof. Edward E. Phelps, M. D., LL. D., of Dartmouth medical school, the one great spring medicine prescribed by physicians of every school.

Sleep is the necessary condition of the system to restore its lost powers and retain its vigor. Paine's celery compound quickly repairs the wasted, worn-out nervous tissues, calms and equalizes nervous action and brings refreshing sleep that makes recovery easy.

There is such a thing as too closely watching for signs of ill health, but, on the other hand, there is a wise attention to signs of weakness and breaking down. Painful sensations and sudden weakness are nature's evident hints. Constipation, with flatulency and nausea in the early morning, suggests serious trouble; the dull, wearing ache at side and back should make one pause to think.

Bright's disease and disorders of the heart and liver may be positively and permanently cured by taking Paine's celery compound as soon as neuralgia, weakness, rheumatism, lack of appetite and low spirits show the beginnings of disease of some of these important organs.

Ships That Pass In The Night

You may read it as a Serial

IN THIS PAPER

Watch for It.

Beatrice Harraden puts a world of philosophy into her stories. There 's a powerful sermon in the thoughts and ambitions her tales inspire. A foretaste of the matchless story that made her famous is given in "A Bird of Passage" in The Press today. The first instalment of her wonderful "Ships That Pass in the Night" will appear in The Press next Tuesday. That is a story which powerfully stirs the heart. It starts the tears, it works a wondrous good. No one can read it and resist its pathos—its lessons. It is an inspiration, a gift from the gods.

Six full-width, full-length pages are necessitated again today, in order to maintain due proportion of reading matter to ads. Not that ads are n't to be considered reading matter—indeed, some of the best news is to be found in the display type which puts such a pressure on the columns. Daily Press ads are for the people, as well as the advertisers, to profit by. In keeping posted on what the advertisers offer, you pave the way for securing some mighty good things. An ad is business news, the reading of which is just as necessary as are the chronicles of happenings, to the man who would keep well informed up to date.

Has your life gloomy days when pessimism chills your soul? Let the sunshine of Bernardine's patient loveliness shine into your heart and cheer it even as it lighted the last days of poor Retfold, even as her influence transformed the Disagreeable Man, even as her memory comforted his solitude, waiting for the end. We all are "ships that pass in the night", and Beatrice Harraden's story of human experience, human longing, human disappointment, and divine forbearance and waiting, may fit the personal life of everyone of us. The telling of the tale begins next Tuesday, in The Daily Press.

PLAINFIELD'S PARADISE.

Just a Little Way Over the Brook, on an Elevation Overlooking the Whole Town and Country.

The superior advantages of living in Plainfield are an old story, but people are just finding out that the special opportunity in Plainfield now is that delightful new section, Watchung Park, whose merits are eloquently set forth in Page 3 of The Press today. In Summer, when man elsewhere swelters, coolest breezes blow from the mountains across the Park, and life is a delight. In Winter, the residents find themselves housed in the most snug and substantial manner, effectually defying the wintry blasts.

Watchung Park is altogether lovely. It is the perfection of suburbanism. The yards are spacious, the dwellings equipped with every improvement; the streets are macadamized, the sidewalks paved; electric cars are at hand; gas, electricity, water, flow as wanted; it is a restricted neighborhood. What more could one want?

If you want to live in luxury, move to Watchung Park.

The beauty of it is, you get so many extras for the same money you are paying elsewhere for far less.

MERCY TEMPERS JUSTICE

SENTENCE SUSPENDED ON OFFENDING DRUGGISTS.

Judge Coddington Feels that the Sales of Liquor Were the Result of Human Kindness Aroused by False Pretenses—They Thought They Were Helping the Sick, Instead of Swallowing an Informer's Bait.

Sentence was suspended by City Judge William A. Coddington this morning on Horsley Barker and H. L. Freeman, the druggists who pleaded guilty to having sold liquor in violation of ordinance.

Barker's counsel was Clarence L. Murphy. Letters testifying to the druggist's good character were given to Judge Coddington, the writers being Benjamin R. Weston, Joseph B. Blatt, James B. Platt, James R. Hall, T. Logan Murphy, William Jenner, Samuel Boss, E. M. Laing, Alexander Titsworth, A. T. Gallup, F. M. Hullet, S. C. Peck, James E. Turrill and Barnes Brothers. Barker's explanation was that he had a government license and had been accustomed to sell liquor under it for medicinal purposes, but without presciption, in Brooklyn, and had supposed he could do the same in Plainfield. In both cases, April 8 and April 22, in which he had sold to Charles Wilson, the complaining witness had explained that the liquor was for an (imaginary) sick wife and the druggist had thought from his appeal that the case was one of urgent necessity. In suspending sentence the Judge said that he believed that Barker had not deliberately and knowingly violated the law. The informer had shown his motive by going twice, probably hoping to receive half of a double fine. Barker's sympathies had been strongly appealed to, and the druggist could not be criticised for believing him.

In Freeman's case there was but one charge. The circumstances were much the same, Wilson having gone to the store at night and begged for liquor for a sick wife and claimed that he could n't afford to pay a physician for a prescription. Judge Coddington then re-referred to both cases in suspending sentence on Freeman. He was disposed to look upon the informer from a very critical standpoint, and considered him more guilty than the seller. The sales of liquor in question were evidently made in a charitable spirit. The storekeeper who would not have sold to the man, evidently honest, would be little less than brutal.

Wilson had gone about lying and trying to get the two into trouble. He had left the stores where the principal business was done and gone to the West End where his statements would seem more plausible. It might have been better for Freeman, who knew the law, to have refused to take money from the man. Under the circumstances and because Freeman had never been arrested before, he suspended sentence. After he had finished, Judge Coddington said that he had no criticism to make on the action of the police in the matter. They had caught two men who had pleaded guilty to the chargee the police had made and in so doing had done their duty well. He referred to the attacks of another paper upon the force and said that no capital for such could be made out of his suspending sentence in these cases brought up by the police.

Fire Limits Plainly Shown.

Among other important features, City Engineer Dunham's new map of the city and borough will show the new fire limits as described in an ordinance now pending before the Common Council. By this ordinance the limits will be considerably extended and the lines will be drawn 150 feet beyond the streets in order to obviate the possibility of permitting the construction of a row of frame houses on one side of a street and requiring property owners on the opposite side to build brick houses.

FOR THE relief and cure of a cold in the head there is more potency in Ely's Cream Balm than in anything else it is possible to prescribe. This preparation has for years past been making a brilliant success as a remedy for cold in the head, catarrh and hay fever. Used in the initial stages of these complaints Cream Balm prevents any serious development of the symptoms, while almost numberless cases are on record of radical cures of chronic catarrh and hay fever after all other treatments have proved of no avail.

The Spring House Cleaning Wisely urged by the BOARD OF HEALTH is not complete without a proper use of DISINFECTANTS. But, in choosing these, do not be misled into paying fancy prices for "patent" specialties. Common lime is better than any of them for damp cellars and stables. For vaults, drains, cess pools, the best and cheapest disinfectant is COPPERAS, supplied by us by the pound or barrel at low rates. But for use in the house, in the plumbing, in kitchen sinks, in closets, for purifying the air of sick rooms, deodorizing offensive discharges—in short, for all purposes of a household disinfectant, nothing can excel the powerful solution of chlorides made and sold by us for 15 years under the name of REYNOLDS'S ODORLESS DISINFECTANT. Quart bottles 25c. To be diluted for use according to directions on label.

A NURSE FOR THE POOR.

NOBLE CHARITY OF EARNEST PLAINFIELD WOMEN.

In Addition to Their Free Bed in Muhlenberg, They Will Provide Someone Trained for the Work to Administer to the Suffering.

The Spring meeting of the Plainfield City Union of Kings' Daughters held in the parlors of the Crescent Avenue Church yesterday afternoon proved pleasant and profitable. It was opened with the singing of a hymn, after which the chairman, Mrs. Mead, read the eleventh chapter of Ecclesiastes and prayed for a blessing on the meeting.

A report of the Fall meeting was given by the secretary, Mrs. Foster, followed with a very gratifying report of the recording secretary, also a report of the treasurer, showing a small balance on hand in the general fund and $32 in the hospital fund.

An amendment that the officers of the Union should not be eligible to the same office for more than two consecutive years was proposed and accepted. The nominating committee next presented the name of those selected for officers for the ensuing year, the Union voting by ballot, resulting in the election of the following:

Chairman—Mrs. Mead, Vice Chairman—Mrs. Haviland, Recording Secretary—Mrs. Pollock, Corresponding Secretary—Mrs. Schuyler.

Treasurer—Miss Green.

Miss Bond, vice-president of the International Order of Kings' Daughters and Sons, held the closest attention of all in a short talk to the circles, inspiring them with renewed zeal in the work. She urged all to do more individual devotion and likened the circles to myriad upon myriad of stars forming the Milky Way, each star performing its own part and so making and keeping a perfect equipoise; so each King's Daughter should do what she can to make a perfect adjustment of God's most perfect plan.

Miss Bond also told of the vast amount of good to be done to the poor of our city, educationally, physically and spiritually, by the adoption of the idea suggested by the Board of Managers, that of hiring a city nurse, who would co-operate with the Citizens Organized Charity Aid, and relieve suffering. Action was taken later, the above suggestion passed, and the King's Daughters are to support a nurse, as proposed.

Miss Tweedy, of Milwaukee, gave valuable information of the work done by a city nurse in her own city.

After the business routine, general sociability prevailed. Tea was served and all were given an opportunity of meeting Miss Bond.

The following report gives a detailed record of the work:

The work accomplished by the City Union of the Kings' Daughters for the past year is certainly encouraging. An advance has been made in co-operation with the different circles, and very full reports have been forwarded from each circle to the general secretary showing what families have been helped and generally the aid given. The support of the free bed in Muhlenberg Hospital has been continued, and although not always used by Kings Daughters, has not been idle. There are at present thirteen bands, belonging to the Union, with about 251 members. Some thirty-seven families have received help. The money raised this year in all the circles, estimating the value of the numerous boxes given here and elsewhere amounts to over $900.

It All Depends.

It all depends, says White of Plainfield, on knowing just where, when and how to buy goods, and a visit to his store will prove that he is right on the dry goods question, as his store is in that condition so happily described by Charles Lamb. When riding in the stage a fellow poked his face in, enquiring, "Are you all full inside?" Lamb answered, "I don't know about the other fellow, but I am"—and so is White's store just full of new, fresh goods bought at prices that insure their quick sale.

"Elijah".

This noble work of Mendelssohn will be rendered by the Plainfield Choral Society next Tuesday evening in Music Hall.

The first performance of "Elijah" was in Birmingham, England, August 18, 1846. The first performance in London was April 16, 1847, conducted by the composer himself, in the presence of Queen Victoria and Prince Albert.

Mendelssohn died in the Autumn of that year at the age of only 38.

This is one of the most dramatic of all the oratorios, and contains at the same time the grandest choruses and most beautiful gems for solo voices.

"Thanks be to God", "Blessed are the Men that Fear Him", "The Fire Descends From Heaven", "Baal, We Cry to Thee", "Be Not Afraid", "He Watches Over Israel" will be remembered by all who are familiar with the work. Other solos are "O, Rest in the Lord" "If with all your Hearts", "Lord God of Abraham".

The soloists for Tuesday evening are Monteith, soprano, Mrs. Alves, contralto, Mr. Rieger, tenor, Mr. Bushnell, basso.

A WOMAN'S BACK.

THE MAINSPRING OF HER LIFE.

(SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.)

Few people realize this.

What can she do, where can she go, so long as that dreadful backache saps both strength and ambition?

She cannot walk or stand, her duties are heavy burdens, and she is utterly miserable.

The cause is some derangement of the uterus or womb. Backache is the sure symptom.

For years Sarah Holstein, who lives at 7 Perry Street, in Lowell, Mass., suffered with falling of the womb. The best doctors failed to relieve her, and as a last resort she purchased six bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Now she is a well woman.

The dreadful pain in her back stopped after taking the second bottle. She wishes she had taken it sooner, and saved both money and years of suffering.

This Vegetable Compound is the one unfailing remedy for such troubles. A woman discovered it and gave it to woman.

THE STRIKE WILL GO ON.

If No Agreement is Reached at Cleveland, Says President McBride.

COLUMBUS, O., May 12.—President John McBride of the United Mine workers returned to-day from Chicago, where he went to confer with Illinois and western operators before their local convention to arrange for representation in the Cleveland joint convention.

To a press correspondent he admitted that he believed the operators in several districts—he mentioned the Indiana block and Pennsylvania river districts—would not be represented in the Cleveland convention, still he hoped that the representation would be sufficiently general to accomplish a settlement of the strike.

"One thing is certain," said he, "if no agreement is reached at the Cleveland convention, the strike will go on. Let no one think that that will break it. The men could be held out two months or longer if necessary to win the strike. The delegates from the miners are coming instructed to vote against any compromise."

NEW YORK, May 12.—Actor J. K. Emmet has been sued for an absolute divorce by his wife Daisy Way Emmet. The case is pending in the supreme court of this county. Another feature of their troubles came before Surrogate Fitzgerald upon motion made in behalf of the actor to open the default taken against him upon the return of the citations granted at the instance of his wife, for a compulsory settlement of his accounts as executor of the estate of his father and for the payment of his legacy under the will of her father-in-law.

Would Virtually Tax Deposits.

HARTFORD, Conn., May 12.—It has been decided by savings bank men here that the income tax feature of the Wilson tariff bill now before congress, will levy a tax of two per cent. on the net incomes of savings banks. This would be virtually a tax on deposits. A committee of bankers have gone to Washington to oppose the income feature of the bill.

THE MURDER PROBLEM.

NO SAFETY IN THIS COUNTRY OUTSIDE OF THE LAW.

Causes and Remedy of the Evil, Pointed Out by a Plainfield Divine—Justice Ought to Be More Swift and More Sure—The Free Use of the Press a Mighty Safeguard.

The following excellent paper on "The Murder Problem in the United States" was read by Rev. Cornelius Schenck before the Ministers Association at their last session. Its publication in The Daily Press has been urged because of its valuable facts and suggestions, and The Press gladly gives it space:

It is conceded that there is no safety in this country outside of the law; that there is no security for any right except it is obtained under the law; that we must look alone to it for the safety and security of home, fireside, wife and children. It is the protecting aegis thrown over everything we hold most dear and most sacred.

The welfare of society re quires that capital punishment, for capital crimes, should be inflicted, not by the stroke of private revenge, but by the arm of the authorized magistrate, and through the medium of judicial sentence. The death penalty for wilful murder, as society now exists, is a necessity.

Do murderers in the United States pay the penalty of death for the crimes committed? A superficial observer of the facts might reply—Yes, as a rule. But a careful examination will show that punishment is the exception.

FACTS.

Ex-President Andrew White of Cornell University in an address at Chautauqua opened with this startling sentence: "Reliable statistics and testimony prove that, among all nations of the Christian world, in the United States the highest crimes are frequently committed and least punished. The records of the press, the testimony of citizens in all parts of the country, the declarations of Judges, the researches of experts, and above all, the statistics of the last census, perfectly establish this as a fact." The number of criminals has for years steadily grown beyond the increase in population, and the number of deaths by murder in the United States is now more than double the average in the most criminal countries of Europe.

For example, in the year 1889 there were committed in the United States murders that were discovered, 3,568; in 1890 there were committed 4,290 known murders, an increase of 7.2, or about 20 percent over those of 1889. In 1891 the number of known murders was 5,908, over one-half as many more as were committed in 1889. The total number of murders known to have been committed in 1892 was 6,791, an increase of 793 over the year 1891, being an increase of a fraction over 11 per cent. During these four years there has been an aggregate of 20,557 murders. When we consider that the undiscovered murders in the four years named will make up at least one-fourth as many more as those which are known, it is safe to say that 25,000 human beings have been murdered in the United States in four years.

There are other star tling facts, and they show almost a failure to enforce the law in cases where these high crimes have been committed. For the 4,290 murders in 1890 there were executed by the law 102 persons, and there were lynched by mobs in that year 127 persons, more persons punished by mob violencethan by the juries and courts.

In 1891 there were for the 5,906 murders committed tried by the law and executed 123 persons, while there were lynched by mobs 195. In 1890 25 more persons were lynched than were punished by verdicts of juries, and in 1891 72 more persons were lynched than were punished by law. In 1892 for the 6,791 murders committed 107 persons were tried by the law and executed, while 236 were lynched by mobs, 129 more persons were lynched by mobs than were executed under the law. The figures for these years are amply sufficient to show that the increase of crime is out of all proportion to the increase of population, and that the punishment for this high crime, while crime is constantly increasing, is constantly decreasing. This is truly a remarkable exhibition of facts and figures and would seem to indicate that there is a failure of duty somewhere. This startling picture of blood and crime is one that may well alarm every lover of peace and security, and may well prompt the student of society to make earnest inquiry as to the cause and remedy for this state of things.

THE CAUSE AND REMEDY.

I. To begin with the less obvious, we mention first the criminal education of children. This is accomplished, in part, by a class of illustrated papers and novels, and by posters for sensational plays at theatres, in which heroism is associated with the killing of offenders, even though they be guilty of but small peccadilloes. Children are thus taught to resent imaginary insults or slight offences by killing the offender.

Again, dens of vice in towns and cities, and association of young offenders with old criminals in jail, are potent educational factors.

The cure is apparent. Repressive laws should be carefully made and vigorously executed, to avert in every way possible the education of youthful minds to crime by books, papers and posters—that which makes crime easy should be outlawed.

All places known to contribute to crime in our cities should be dealt with sharply and decisively, the sunlight of publicity should be let in and these nests, brooding-places of crime, should be broken up. Our jails, prisons and penitentiaries should be so constructed as to separate and segregate young criminals from old, and thus prevent such places from becoming high schools of crime.

II. Another reason that may be assigned for this state of things is what may be termed "the oscillatory laws of human progress"—the swinging of the pendulum from the extreme of severity in the last century to the extreme of lenity in this.

Down to the last quarter of the last century there prevailed in the civilized countries, and especially in Europe, the greatest severity in the detection and punishment of crime. There were torture and capital punishment. Capital punishment for nearly everything, including anything above the theft of five shillings. As a result juries, as a rule, constantly violated the rules, and officials frequently violated the law. So this great severity more and more defeated itself, and the result was that the pendulum did not stop in the middle of its course but swung to the extreme of clemency. Hence the prevalence and growth of a false philanthropy, and false scientific theories, which make crime a misfortune or disease and criminals invalids.

We believe there are signs which indicate that there is a tendency to return from the radical of leniency to the mean between the two extremes. Juster views of severity as an organism are obtaining and a corrected public opinion is forming which holds that the individual and not society is the criminal and that the penalty for crime is punitive and not reformatory mercy.

III. Another cause may be found in the sickly, disgusting sentimentality which exists in favor of the man who has reddened his hands with human blood, so that those who possess it waste all their sympathy on the criminal and have none for his innocent victim. Such people seem to pretend to think that the enforcement of all law is but the exercise of a tyranny which works oppression, when it seeks only to protect the innocent from the designs of the wicked and vicious. The spectacle of a lot of men and women running to the cells of condemned murderers with cigarettes and flowers and confections is nauseating. A hero is made of the criminal; he is presented in the light of a martyr, and frantic appeals are made to save him from the gallows. It was recently announced in the papers of the city of New York that a meeting was to be held in Cooper Union to express the opinion of those who had no special knowledge and no legal responsibility about the matter that a certain person, who had been duly tried and convicted, was innocent, and that everybody who had acquired such special knowledge and was clothed with such legal responsibility was wrong in declaring him guilty. It was proposed to settle at a mass-meeting, by sentiment, what had already been settled in the courts, by evidence. Such mass-meeting would plainly have been a violation of public propriety. Both the condemned man and his counsel saw the impropriety and abandoned the project. The guilt or innocence of an individual is not to be determined by public clamor, prejudice or sentiment. Accord the person charged with crime every privilege, give him every right which is his under the law. Let him say why sentence should not be pronounced upon him—that is his right! Let appeal be made to the Governor—that is his privilege! But whatever is done, let it be done decently and in order, legally and not extra-legally.

IV. Another cause for this state of things is the weakness of jurors and juries. When a man charged with murder is brought before them, every expedient to work upon their feelings is thought legitimate. The murdered man is virtually forgotten, and the "poor criminal" is the object of pity. Instead of a desire to see strict justice done there is evident a wish to discover some reason which will justify an acquittal. Said Judge Martine, recently, in a case of wife murder: "Crimes of this sort are growing more and more numerous daily, and in my judgment, blame must be placed on juries who go outside for evidence, who travel outside to find excuses for crime. The jury box has become a nursery for crime."

Frequently jurors are morally weak and yield, it is said, to certain powerful considerations.

To this may be added the prevalence and presence of perjury which so often defeats justice in the courts. An eminent United States District Judge in a charge to a Grand Jury used these words: "There is scarcely a case tried where perjury does not with more or less force exert its baneful power and cause its pernicious influence to be felt."

V. Another cause of the increase in high crime is the careless and culpable exercise of the pardoning power by Governors of different States. One Governor, during a term of office only recently expired, defied justice and decency in the pardon of 801 prisoners, and one of his last acts was to pardon eighteen men, several of whom had committed wilful and brutal murder. When the power of pardon is vested in the Chief Executive of a State, he should be held strictly accountable for the exercise of it by the people whose servant he is. It is indeed a question whether it would not be far better than the present system to have our highest court in each State sit from time to time as a Court of Pardons to receive statements regarding any changed or mitigating circumstances in any given case in open court, and pass upon them in formal decisions.

VI. Undoubtedly a principal cause of the prevalence of high crimes is the laxity of Courts and the delay in meting out punishment. Murders increase because the punishment is uncertain. If in every case punishment is certainly visited upon the one who wickedly takes human life, you have confronting the man of crime that which deters him. He hesitates before he takes a human life if he knows that his own life, or his own liberty for life, will alone pay the penalty. If arrest, trial, and conviction of murder would follow in every case, crime would unquestionably decrease; mob violence would, in a measure, disappear. Mob violence springs into existence because the people lose confidence in the courts and juries and in the power of the law to afford protection.

As to the proper remedy for this state of things we may note, in addition to those incidentally given in the course of the paper, such reform of criminal jurisprudence and such legislation as shall make justice more swift and sure in the interests of society instead of in the interests of the criminal; the passage of such laws as shall repress crime; more elementary instruction in morals in all our schools, from the lowest to the highest; the creation and development of a better public sentiment by the free use of the press by thinking men; and more vigorous preaching in all our pulpits of righteousness—that righteousness which exalteth nations.

Trade Temple Team Makes a Brilliant Score, Vanquishing the Lyceum.

The score made by the Board of Trade team on the C. Y. M. L. alleys last night, 1589, was next to the highest ever made in that club-house, 1600, made by the Jersey City Y. M. C. L. A. The Lyceums scored 1434.

Thomas Carty was expected to be the high man of the night. He had scored 219 at practice last night, and 196 Wednesday night, and had averaged 187 in three games. So Carty entered the game in high spirits last night, but could n't get above 164.

EPWORTH ELECTION.

Enjoyable Combination of Business and Pleasure.

The Epworth League of the Methodist Church held its yearly election of officers in Vincent Chapel last evening, and performed the routine business. Before the lecture took place reports of the work of the society were given by Mr. Bittenhouse, Miss Campbell, Miss Trenham, Mr. Crone and Mr. Smith. The election resulted as follows, Miss Cornwell and Miss French acting as tellers:

President—James R. Joy.
First Vice-president—Robert Davis.
Second Vice-president—Miss Smalley.
Third Vice-president—David Dunavan.
Fourth Vice-president—Clifford McGee.
Secretary—Miss Angreman.
Treasurer—Miss Cornwell.

A proposition was made to the League asking them to assume the responsibility of publishing The Visitor during the coming year. After some discussion a motion to lay the matter on the table was passed.

Afterwards refreshments were served and Raymond McGee played a cornet solo and an encore and Miss French gave a humorous recitation. This recitation differed from most of its kind in that instead of the reciter supplying the necessary gestures to complete the whole effect, this amusing as well as important part of the recitation was performed by Miss Trenham who was concealed behind Miss French and who so manipulated her hands that in effect they looked as if they belonged to her who was speaking.

MOULDING MEN.

ADMIRABLE SYSTEM OF EDUCATION FOR THE WORKING CLASS.

This Feature of Y. M. C. A. Achievement One of the Most Commendable and Best Appreciated of Its Enterprises—What Has Been Done in a Year to Help Aspiring Mechanics.

Stephen Cahoone, Chairman of the Educational Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association, has presented a most excellent report of the department for the past year, and it is now first published:

The classes for young men began in October, 1893, and with one or two exceptions, completed their work for the season May 1. During the year instruction has been given in the following branches: Mechanical drawing, book-keeping, shorthand, arithmetic, trigonometry, plane geometry, applied mechanics, voice culture; and in addition to the above there have been two classes for foreign speaking young men, principally Scandinavians. Ninety-two different persons have received instruction in these various classes, and the total enrollment has been 120, quite a number having been connected with more than one class. The average attendance for the seven months during which regular sessions were held, has been fifty-nine, and the average age of those in attendance, twenty years. Two of our scholars were residents of Dunellen, one of Westfield; while last year we had a pupil from Fanwood, and another from Somerville.

The following gentlemen acted as instructors, some filling vacancies, and others serving for a portion of the term: Frank B. Cockburn, E. H. Bonnell, G. J. Briggs, A. B. Clemens, J. V. A. Craighead, E. A. Embury, E. H. Ladd, Jr., H. C. Munger, Walter S. Timmis, George B. Wean and John C. Whiting. Wm. Jessop and George E. Fuller have acted as assistants during the latter part of the term. With but one exception these teachers have given their services gratuitously, and have faithfully performed their respective duties, often at considerable self-sacrifice, and at personal inconvenience. Not only the scholars, but this whole community owes them a large debt of gratitude for all their faithful labors in this work.

In some respects this has been a trying season in our educational department, as many of our students are workers in the various machine shops of our city, and the prevailing business depression has been the means of causing quite a number to leave town in order to obtain work elsewhere, so that the attendance at the classes has been irregular, and the work has suffered somewhat on this account. In general, however, the results have been satisfactory, those who could attend have been faithful and painstaking, and excellent work has been done, even if the numbers at times have been smaller than usual. Our department was represented at the State Convention held in Montclair in February, by exhibits of work from the classes in book-keeping, mechanical drawing, applied mechanics and shorthand, and it will be of interest to note, in this connection, that out of a total of 43 associations in New Jersey we stand first both in the number of our classes and also in the average attendance at the same, although there are other associations in the State much larger than ours.

There have been practical results of great value to the young men, from the instruction which they have received through this department of our association work. The following are some of the instances in which those who have been one or more years in these classes have been able to obtain positions that they could not have secured without the knowledge gained in this way. One young man obtained an important position in one of our largest stores; another a place as clerk in a large New York bank, at a good salary. Another received a situation in a law office in New York, and is now receiving instruction in law, and also a salary. Several others have secured places as stenographers and type writers, some with professional men in Plainfield, one with a large mercantile house in New York, and still another obtained employment with the Jersey Central Railroad Company. One young man who for some time was a member of the singing class is now the organist in one of our Plainfield churches, and intends to take up music as profession. Valuable service has been rendered the association in typewriting by graduates of the shorthand class, and a former member of that class is now its instructor. In addition to all this, there is a large number who have received substantial benefits from these classes, but to whom nothing has come in the way of advancement or increased wages, so that we cannot record any direct and visible results, but there is no question that these results will appear in due time. In one class there are nine men in machine shops, and many of our scholars are apprentices who cannot be expected to receive increased wages at present, but who without doubt will realize in coming years substantial advantages in their line of work, from what they have been taught in our classes.

Quite a number of our students have attended Gospel meetings, and three members of our classes who had professed conversion have united with the church during the past year. It is in this direction that we hope for results that in most cases will not be recorded nor embodied in statistics The ultimate purpose of all association work, is the conversion and spiritual growth of young men; and from the many indirect Christian influences which come to the scholars through various channels, may we not hope that in a large number of instances, this aim and purpose will be fully realized in their lives, and although they may remove from our midst, and pass beyond the reach of our active influence, yet the good they have here received will abide with them in all places, and throughout all their lives.

The educational work as now carried on can be enlarged, and its efficiency greatly increased in the future, through improved facilities, and under more favorable conditions. The establishment of machine shops and factories in our city has brought into Plainfield a large number of young men who need just the educational help that they receive through our classes, and it is probable that this class of our population will increase as new industries are established within our borders. The want of proper room has hampered our educational work, but we hope that this obstacle will soon be removed, and that we shall be able to enlarge the scope of our work, and also increase its efficiency. We aim in this department to afford educational advantages to young men, who could not otherwise obtain them, thereby fitting them to perform their work more intelligently, to receive larger wages, and more responsible positions, to become more efficient clerks and artisans, and better citizens. We also seek to surround them with such influences as may lead them ultimately into a true Christian manhood, the crown of all successful life and effort.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

The Christian Endeavor Society of the Park Avenue Baptist Church gave a stereopticon lecture last evening for the benefit of foreign missions, a work in which the society is especially interested. The lecture-room of the church was filled and quite a sum was realized for the cause. J. Hervey Doane and Harry Coward presented nearly 60 interesting photographic views of Afries with the apparatus of the Camera Club. Miss Florence Hawkins read an explanatory lecture. The entertainment ended with singing by the society.

TABLEAUX PHANTASMA.

Further Detail of the Muhlenberg Hospital Benefit.

Pretty women arranged in costumes of simple yet striking beauty will present to Plainfield society May 24 and 25 an entertainment in Music Hall that is by far the most novel and startling of any ever given for a local charity. The Auxiliary Board of Muhlenberg Hospital never present any entertainment to the local public that does not bear the stamp of assured success. They are women of taste and business ability, and know that charity, successful charity, gives something to the giver. Subscriptions of single dollars are easily obtained from the philanthropic if the philanthropist is generously treated in return. These far-sighted women will be particularly generous to their friends on the dates named, when they present for the first time in this locality a phantasma of tableaux of wonderful beauty and bewildering nature. John W. Sherman, the Jersey City manager of these tableaux and Mrs. Sherman met the most prominent of Plainfield's cultured women at the home of Mrs. M. E. Edgerton, Thursday afternoon, and allotted to them the parts each is to perform in the approaching event. Just who will assume the roles, mythological, classical, military, scriptural, allegorical, historical and comical, in the entertainment, The Press is not at liberty now to disclose. Suffice it to say for the present that the young society bud who is not concerned in the forthcoming production is not in step with current local events.

The executive ability of those in charge of the affair is assured in mention of the following committees:

Advertising and Printing — Mrs. Samuel Huntington, chairman, Mrs. Randall, Mrs. Frederick Andrews, Mrs. Lapsley, Miss Mary Tweedy, Miss Lizzie Cock.

Music—Mrs. Walter E. Stewart, Mrs. D. W. Pond.

General Arrangement—Mrs. Howard Fleming and Mrs. William E. Lowe.

Enthusiasts Try New Alleys.

Frank Linke's new Dillingham alleys in the addition to his place on Somerset street were used for the first time last night. The building is not finished, but the alleys, the implements, and the electric lights, were there; and quite a number of Mr. Linke's friends tried their hands.

No very high scores were made, as no one was accustomed to the new apparatus. The alleys were considered very satisfactory, however, and will prove a source of attraction for the new proprietor, E. Kipp, of Raritan, who will take possession next week. The opening takes place Monday evening.

Shiloh's cure is sold on a guarantee. It cures incipient consumption; it is the best cough cure only 1c a dose; 25c, 50c, $1. Sold by A. D. Mallinson, 208 North ave., opp. station.

Karl's Clover Root, the great blood purifier, gives freshness and clearness to the complexion and cures constipation; 25c, 50c, $1. Sold by A. D. Mallinson, 208 North ave., opp. station.

Mrs. T. S. Hawkins, Chattanooga, Tenn., says: "Shiloh's Vitalizer saved my life; I consider it the best remedy for a debilitated system I ever used. For dyspepsia, liver or kidney trouble, 10c. Sold by A. D. Mallinson, 208 North avenue, opp. railroad station."

HIGH SCHOOL CHRONICLES.

The Lyceum met yesterday afternoon and a debate took place on the question "Resolved, that the Capitol of the United States should be moved farther west". The affirmative won, under the pressure of argument brought by Llewellyn Bull, Walter Reynolds, and Elwood Sebring. The negative was ably defended by C. C. Gallup, Morton Pierson, and Herbert Richardson.

The Kappa Delta Phi also met yesterday, and debated "Is the ballot a right or a privilege?" Privilege won, by decision of President Fernald. Right was argued by H. C. Wells and J. C. Whiting, and Privilege by C. L. Riley and Norman Probasco.

The Linnæan Society goes on an outing Monday. Some of the members will take up the study of entomology.

A WONDERFUL CASE.

Mrs. Thomas Stockton, of Lafayette, McKean Co., Pa., has cause for Rejoicing—Physicians in and Out of Hospitals Experimented and Operated Upon Her Without the Least Benefit—Her Acknowledgment of the Great Good She Derived from a Simple Remedy—The Medical Profession Now Using the Same Means in Other Cases With Wonderful Results.

LAFAYETTE, Mc Kean Co., Pa.—The great interest shown in the recovery from disease of Mrs. Thomas Stockton of this place, bids fair to attain national importance. Every person living within miles of Lafayette well knows of the suffering she has borne for years past, and that she should seem now to have recovered as to be about again, is looked upon as almost miraculous. A statement of Mrs. Stockton's case would interest so many that your correspondent has obtained full particulars.

The first symptom in the development of my disease," said Mrs. Stockton, "was in my growing very large. I consulted Dr. Ward of Mt. Alton, and he said that I had dropsy of the bowels; I kept growing worse and it seemed to me I suffered everything but death. Dr. Ward advised me to go to the Bradford, Penn., Hospital, which I did and he operated upon me there, assisted by Dr. Nicholas and Dr. Adams. I had been out of the hospital but a short while, when blood poisoning set in and my husband called in a physician from Mt. Jewett, who attended me for three weeks and then told me he could do no more for me and gave me up to die. My good husband then took me to Smethport to consult Dr. Fowler, who treated me for a time, but as I had already gone through one awful experience of that kind, I refused to again. After arriving back home, I made up my mind to try Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, as I had heard of it doing others so much good, so my husband went to Thompson & Wood's drug store in Bradford and purchased a bottle and it certainly was a Godsend to me. From the very first it seemed to help me, the pain I had endured constantly began to leave me, my appetite improved, and it was not long before I was around the house doing considerable work. In short, had it not been for Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, I believe I should have been in my grave to-day. I hope every one suffering from disease, especially women, will try this valuable medicine. I know of many here who are using Favorite Remedy since it helped me so much, and in every case it has proved its great value."

In speaking with one of our physicians about Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, he said:

"In the discovery of Favorite Remedy, Dr. Kennedy produced the only true antidote for uric acid as a blood purifier and kidney tonic it has no equal." Favorite Remedy for a time was supplied to patients only through physicians, but the demand became so great Dr. Kennedy was obliged to place it on sale with all dealers in medicine. It is a never failing specific in disease of the stomach, liver, kidneys, blood. If your is the disordered liver to a healthy condition, corrects the worst cases of habitual constipation, it is a certain cure for the diseases and weaknesses peculiar to women. It cures scrofula, salt rheum and erysipelas. For nervousness, loss of sleep, or that worn out feeling, it has no equal. In cases of the kidneys, dropsy, gravel, bright's disease, diabetes and kindred troubles it has cured where all other treatments have failed. Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is sold by all dealers in medicine at $1.a bottle, or six bottles for $5, which brings a treatment within the reach of all.

A BIRD OF PASSAGE.

By BEATRICE HARRADEN.

It was about 4 in the afternoon when a young girl came into the salon of the little hotel at C., in Switzerland, and drew her chair up to the fire.

"You are soaked through," said an elderly lady, who was herself trying to get roasted. "You ought to lose no time in changing your clothes."

"I have not anything to change," said the young girl, laughing. "Oh, I shall soon be dry!"

"Have you lost all your luggage?" asked the lady sympathetically.

"No," said the young girl; "I had none to lose," and she smiled a little mischievously, as though she knew by instinct that her companion's sympathy would at once degenerate into suspicion.

"I don't mean to say I have not a knapsack," she added considerately. "I have walked a long distance—in fact, from Z."

"And where did you leave your companions?" asked the lady, with a touch of forgiveness in her voice.

"I am without companions, just as I am without luggage," laughed the girl.

And then she opened the piano and struck a few notes. There was something caressing in the way in which she touched the keys. Whoever she was, she knew how to make sweet music—sad music, too, full of that undefinable longing, like the holding out of one's arms to one's friends in the hopeless distance.

The lady bending over the fire looked up at the little girl and forgot that she had brought neither friends nor luggage with her. She hesitated for one moment, and then she took the childish face between her hands and kissed it.

"Thank you, dear, for your music," she said gently.

"The piano is terribly out of tune," said the little girl suddenly, and she ran out of the room and came back carrying her knapsack.

"What are you going to do?" asked her companion.

"I am going to tune the piano," the little girl said, and she took a tuning hammer out of her knapsack and began her work in real earnest. She evidently knew what she was about and pegged away at the notes as though her whole life depended on the result.

The lady by the fire was lost in amazement. Who could she be? Without luggage and without friends and with a tuning hammer!

Meanwhile one of the gentlemen had strolled into the salon; but, hearing the sound of tuning and being in secret possession of nerves, he fled, saying, "The tuner, by Jove!"

A few minutes afterward Miss Blake, whose nerves were no secret possession, hastened into the salon and in her usual imperious fashion demanded instant silence.

"I have just done," said the little girl. "The piano was so terribly out of tune I could not resist the temptation."

Miss Blake, who never listened to what any one said, took it for granted that the little girl was the tuner for whom M. le Proprietaire had promised to send, and having bestowed on her a condescending nod passed out into the garden, where she told some of the visitors that the piano had been tuned at last, and that the tuner was a young woman of rather eccentric appearance.

"Really, it is quite abominable how women thrust themselves into every profession," she remarked in her masculine voice. "It is so unfeminine, so unseemly."

There was nothing of the feminine about Miss Blake. Her horsecloth dress, her waistcoat and high collar and her billycock hat were of the masculine genus. Even her nerves could not be called feminine, since we learn from two or three doctors—taken off their guard—that nerves are neither feminine nor masculine, but common.

"I should like to see this tuner," said one of the tennis players, leaning against a tree.

"Here she comes," said Miss Blake as the little girl was seen sauntering into the garden.

The men put up their eyeglasses and saw a little lady with a childish face and soft brown hair, of strictly feminine appearance and bearing. The goat came toward her and began nibbling at her frock. She seemed to understand the manner of goats and played with him to his heart's content. One of the tennis players, Oswald Everard by name, strolled down to the bank where she was having her frolic.

"Good afternoon," he said, raising his cap. "I hope the goat is not worrying you. Poor little fellow! This is his last day of play. He is to be killed tomorrow for table d'hote."

"What a shame!" she said. "Fancy to be killed, and then grumbled at!"

"That is precisely what we do here," he said, laughing. "We grumble at everything we eat. And I own to being one of the grumpiest, though the lady in the horsecloth dress yonder follows close upon my heels."

"She was the lady who was annoyed at me because I tuned the piano," the little girl said. "Still it had to be done. It was plainly my duty. I seemed to have come for that purpose."

"It has been confoundedly annoying having it out of tune," he said. "I've had to give up singing altogether. But what a strange profession you have chosen. Very unusual, isn't it?"

"Why, surely not," she answered, amused. "It seems to me that every other woman has taken to it. The wonder to me is that any one ever scores a success. Nowadays, however, no one could amass a huge fortune out of it."

"No one, indeed!" replied Oswald Everard, laughing. "What on earth made you take to it?"

"It took to me," she said simply. "It wrapped me around with enthusiasm. I could think of nothing else. I vowed that I would rise to the top of my profession. I worked day and night. But it means incessant toil for years if one wants to make any headway."

"Good gracious! I thought it was merely a matter of a few months," he said, smiling at the little girl.

"A few months!" she repeated scornfully. "You are speaking the language of an amateur. No, one has to work faithfully year after year to grasp the possibilities and pass on to greater possibilities. You imagine what it must feel like to touch the notes and know that you are keeping the listeners spellbound; that you are taking them into a fairyland of sound, where pretty personality is lost in vague longing and regret."

"I confess I had not thought of it in that way," he said humbly. "I have only regarded it as a necessary, everyday evil and, to be quite honest with you, I fail to see how it can inspire enthusiasm. I wish I could see," he added, looking up at the engaging little figure before him.

"Never mind," she said, laughing at his distress, "I forgive you. And, after all, you are not the only person who looks upon it as a necessary evil. My poor old guardian abominated it. He made many sacrifices to come and listen to me. He knew I liked to see his kind old face, and that the presence of a real friend inspired me with confidence."

"I should not have thought it was nervous work," he said.

"Try it and see," she answered. "But surely you spoke of singing. Are you not nervous when you sing?"

"Sometimes," he replied rather stiffly. "But that is slightly different." He was very proud of his singing and made a great fuss about it. "Your profession, as I remarked before, is an unavoidable nuisance. When I think what I have suffered from the gentlemen of your profession, I only wonder that I have any brains left. But I am uncourteous."

"No, no," she said. "Let me hear about your sufferings."

"Whenever I have specially wanted to be quiet," he said, and then he glanced at her childish little face, and he hesitated. "It seems so rude of me," he added. He was the soul of courtesy, although he was an amateur tenor singer.

"Please tell me," the little girl said in her winning way.

"Well," he said, gathering himself together, "it is the one subject on which I can be eloquent. Ever since I can remember, I have been worried and tortured by those rascals. I have tried in every way to escape from them, but there is a cruel fate working against me. Yes, I believe that all the tuners in the universe are in league against me and have marked me out for their special prey."

"All the what?" asked the little girl, with a jerk in her voice.

"All the tuners, of course," he replied rather snappishly. "I know that we cannot do without them. But, good heavens, they have no tact, no consideration, no mercy! Whenever I've wanted to write or read quietly, that fatal knock has come to the door, and I've known by instinct that all chance of peace was over. Whenever I've been giving a luncheon party, the tuner has arrived, with his abominable black bag and his abominable card, which has to be signed at once. On one occasion I was just proposing to a girl in her father's library, when the tuner struck up in the drawing room. I left off suddenly and fled from the house. But there is no escape from these fiends. I believe they are swarming about in the air like so many bacteria. And how in the name of goodness you should deliberately choose to be one of them and should be so enthusiastic over your work puzzles me beyond all words. Don't say that you carry a black bag, and present cards which have been filled up at the most inconvenient time. Don't!"

He stopped suddenly, for the little girl was convulsed with laughter. She laughed until the tears rolled down her cheeks, and then she dried her eyes and laughed again.

"Excuse me," she said; "I can't help myself; it's so funny."

"It may be funny to you," he said, laughing in spite of himself, "but it is not funny to me."

"Of course it isn't," she replied, making a desperate effort to be serious. "Well, tell me something more about these tuners."

"Not another word," he said gallantly. "I am ashamed of myself as it is. Come to the end of the garden, and let me show you the fine view down the valley."

She had conquered her fit of merriment, but her face wore a settled look of mischief, and she was evidently the possessor of some secret joke. She seemed in capital health and spirits and had so much to say that was bright and interesting that Oswald Everard found himself becoming reconciled to the whole race of tuners. He was amazed to learn that she had walked all the way from Z., and quite alone too.

Oh, I don't think anything of that," she said. "I had a splendid time, and I caught four rare butterflies. I would not have missed those for anything. As for the going about by myself, that is a second nature. Besides I do not belong to any one. That has its advantages, and I suppose its disadvantages, but at present I have only discovered the advantages. The disadvantages will discover themselves."

"I believe you are what the novels call an advanced young woman," he said. "Perhaps you give lectures on woman's suffrage or something of that sort."

"I have very often mounted the platform," she answered. "In fact, I am never so happy as when addressing an immense audience. A most unfeminine thing to do, isn't it? What would the lady yonder in the horsecloth dress and billycock hat say? Don't you think you ought to go and help her to drive away the goat? She looks so frightened. She interests me deeply. I wonder whether she has written an essay on the feminine in woman. I should like to read it; it would do me so much good."

"You are at least a true woman," he said, laughing, "for I see you can be spiteful. The tuning has not driven that away."

"Ah, I had forgotten about the tuning," she answered brightly, "but now you remind me I have been seized by a great idea."

"Won't you tell it to me?" he asked.

"No," she answered; "I keep my great ideas for myself and work them out in secret. And this one is particularly amusing. What fun I shall have!"

"But why keep the fun to yourself?" he said. "We all want to be amused here. We all want to be stirred up. A little fun would be a charity."

"Very well, since you wish it, you shall be stirred up," she answered, "but you must give me time to work out my great idea. I do not hurry about things, not even about my professional duties, for I have a strong feeling that it is vulgar to be always amassing riches. As I have neither a husband nor a brother to support, I have chosen less wealth and more leisure to enjoy all the lovelinessof life. So, you see, I take my time about everything. And tomorrow I shall catch butterflies at my leisure and lie among the dear old pines and work at my great idea."

"I shall catch butterflies," said her companion. "And I, too, shall lie among the dear old pines."

"Just as you please," she said, and at that moment the table d'hote bell rang.

The little girl hastened to the bureau and spoke rapidly in German to the cashier.

"Ach, fraulein!" he said. "You are not really serious?"

"Yes, I am," she said. "I don't want them to know my name. It will only worry me. Say I am the young lady who tuned the piano."

She had scarcely given these directions and mounted to her room when Oswald Everard, who was unusually interested in his mysterious companion, came to the bureau and asked for the name of the little lady.

"Es ist das fraulein welches das piano gestimmt hat," answered the man, returning with unusual quickness to his account book.

No one spoke to the little girl at table d'hote, but for all that she enjoyed her dinner and gave her serious attention to all the courses. Being thus solely occupied, she had not much leisure to bestow on the conversation of the other guests. Nor was it specially original. It treated of the shortcomings of the chef, the tastelessness of the soup, the toughness of the beef and all the many failings which go to complete a mountain hotel dinner. But suddenly, so it seemed to the girl, this time honored talk passed into another phase. She heard the word music mentioned, and she became at once interested to learn what these people had to say on a subject which was dearer to her than any other.

"For my own part," said a stern looking old man, "I have no words to describe what a gracious comfort music has been to me all my life. It is the noblest language which man understands and speaks, and I sometimes think that those who know it, or know something of it, are able at rare moments to find an answer to life's perplexing problems."

The little girl looked up from her plate. Robert Browning's words rose to her lips, but she did not give them utterance:

God has a few of us whom he whispers in the ear.
The rest may reason, and welcome; 'tis we musicians know.

"I have lived through a long life," said another elderly man, "and have therefore had my share of trouble, but the grief of being obliged to give up music was the grief which held me the longest, or which perhaps has never left me. I still crave for the gracious pleasure of touching once more the strings of a violoncello and hearing the dear, tender voice singing and throbbing and answering even to such poor skill as mine. I still yearn to take my part in concerted music and be one of those privileged to play Beethoven's string quartets. But that will have to be in another incarnation, I think."

He glanced at his shrunken arm, and then, as though ashamed of this allusion to his own personal infirmity, he added hastily:

"But when the first pang of such a pain is over there remains the comfort of being a listener. At first one does not think it a comfort, but as time goes on there is no resisting its magic influence. And Lowell said rightly that one of God's greatest charities is music.' "

"I did not know you were musical, Mr. Keith," said an English lady. "You have never before spoken of music."

"Perhaps not, madam," he answered. "One does not often speak of what one cares for most of all. But when I am in London I rarely miss hearing our best players."

At this point others joined in, and the various merits of eminent pianists were warmly discussed.

"What a wonderful name that little English lady has made for herself!" said the major, who was considered an authority on all subjects. "I would go anywhere to hear Miss Thyra Flowerdew. We all ought to be very proud of her. She has taken even the German musical world by storm, and they say her recitals at Paris have been brilliantly successful. I myself have heard her at New York, Leipsic, London, Berlin and even Chicago."

The little girl stirred uneasily in her chair.

"I don't think Miss Flowerdew has ever been to Chicago," she said.

There was a dead silence. The admirer of Miss Thyra Flowerdew looked much annoyed and twiddled his watch chain. He had meant to say Philadelphia, but he did not think it necessary to own to his mistake.

"What impertinence!" said one of the ladies to Miss Blake. "What can she know about it? Is she not the young person who tuned the piano?"

"Perhaps she tunes Miss Thyra Flowerdew's piano!" suggested Miss Blake in a loud whisper.

"You are right, madam," said the little girl quietly. "I have often tuned Miss Flowerdew's piano."

There was another embarrassing silence, and then a lovely old lady whom every one reverenced came to the rescue.

"I think her playing is simply superb," she said. "Nothing that I ever hear satisfies me so entirely. She has all the tenderness of an angel's touch."

"Listening to her," said the major, who had now recovered from his annoyance at being interrupted, "one becomes unconscious of her presence, for she is the music itself. And that is rare. It is but seldom nowadays that we are allowed to forget the personality of the player. And yet her personality is an unusual one. Having once seen her it would not be easy to forget her. I should recognize her anywhere."

As he spoke he glanced at the little tuner and could not help admiring her dignified composure under circumstances which might have been distressing to any one, and when she rose with the others he followed her and said stiffly:

"I regret that I was the indirect cause of putting you in an awkward position."

"It is really of no consequence," she said brightly. If you think I was impertinent, I ask your forgiveness. I did not mean to be officious. The words were spoken before I was aware of them."

She passed into the salon, where she found a quiet corner for herself and read some of the newspapers. No one took the slightest notice of her, not a word was spoken to her, but when she relieved the company of her presence her impertinence was commented on.

"I am sorry that she heard what I said," remarked Miss Blake. "But she did not seem to mind. These young women who go out into the world lose the edge of their sensitiveness and femininity. I have always observed that."

"How much they are spared then!" answered some one.

Meanwhile the little girl slept soundly. She had merry dreams and finally woke up laughing. She hurried over her breakfast and then stood ready to go for a butterfly hunt. She looked thoroughly happy and evidently had found and was holding tightly the key to life's enjoyment.

Oswald Everard was waiting on the balcony, and he reminded her that he intended to go with her.

"Come along then," she answered. "We must not lose a moment."

They caught butterflies, they picked flowers, they ran, they lingered by the wayside, they sang, they climbed, and he marveled at her easy speed. Nothing seemed to tire her, and everything seemed to delight her—the flowers, the birds, the clouds, the grasses and the fragrance of the pine woods.

"Is it not good to live?" she cried. "Is it not splendid to take in this scented air? Draw in as many long breaths as you can. Isn't it good? Don't you feel now as though you were ready to move mountains? I do. What a dear old nurse Nature is! How she pets us and gives us the best of her treasures!"

Her happiness invaded Oswald Everard's soul, and he felt like a schoolboy once more, rejoicing in a fine day and his liberty, with nothing to spoil the freshness of the air and nothing to threaten the freedom of the moment.

"Is it not good to live?" he cried. "Yes, indeed it is, if we know how to enjoy."

They had come upon some haymakers, and the little girl hastened up to help them. There she was in the midst of them, laughing and talking to the women and helping them to pile up the hay on the shoulders of a broad backed man, who then conveyed his burden to a pear shaped stack. Oswald Everard watched his companion for a moment, and then, quite forgetting his dignity as an amateur tenor singer, he, too, lent his aid and did not leave off until his companion sank exhausted on the ground.

"Oh," she laughed, "what delightful work for a very short time! Come along; let us go into that brown chalet yonder and ask for some milk. I am simply parched with thirst. Thank you, but I prefer to carry my own flowers."

"What an independent little lady you are," he said.

"It is quite necessary in our profession, I can assure you," she said, with a tone of mischief in her voice. "That reminds me that my profession is evidently not looked upon with any favor by the visitors of the hotel. I am heartbroken to think that I have not won the esteem of that lady in the billycock hat. What will she say to you for coming out with me? And what will she say of me for allowing you to come? I wonder whether she will say, 'How unfeminine!' I wish I could hear her!"

"I don't suppose you care," he said. "You seem to be a wild little bird."

"I don't care what a person of that description says," replied his companion.

"What on earth made you contradict the major at dinner last night?" he asked. "I was not at the table, but some one told me of the incident, and I felt very sorry about it. What could you know of Miss Thyra Flowerdew?"

"Well, considering that she is in my profession, of course I knew something about her," said the little girl.

"Confound it all!" he said rather rudely. "Surely there is some difference between the bellows blower and the organist."

"Absolutely none," she answered—"merely a variation of the original theme."

As she spoke she knocked at the door of the chalet and asked the old dame to give them some milk. They sat in the stube, and the little girl looked about and admired the spinning wheel, and the quaint chairs, and the queer old jugs, and the pictures on the wall.

"Ah, but you shall see the other room," the old peasant woman said, and she led them into a small apartment which was evidently intended for a study. It bore evidences of unusual taste and care, and one could see that some loving hand had been trying to make it a real sanctum of refinement. There was even a small piano. A carved bookrack was fastened to the wall.

The old dame did not speak at first. She gave her guests time to recover from the astonishment which she felt they must be experiencing. Then she pointed proudly to the piano.

"I bought that for my daughters," she said, with a strange mixture of sadness and triumph. "I wanted to keep them at home with me, and I saved and saved and got enough money to buy the piano. They had always wanted to have one, and I thought they would then stay with me. They liked music and books, and I knew they would be glad to have a room of their own, where they might read and play and study, and so I gave them this corner."

"Well, mother," asked the little girl, "and where are they this afternoon?"

"Ah," she answered sadly, "they did not care to stay. But it was natural enough, and I was foolish to grieve. Besides they come to see me"——

"And then they play to you?" asked the girl gently.

"They say the piano is out of tune," the old dame said. "I don't know. Perhaps you can tell."

The little girl sat down to the piano and struck a few chords.

"Yes," she said, "it is badly out of tune. Give me the tuning hammer. I am sorry," she added, smiling at Oswald Everard, "but I cannot neglect my duty. Don't wait for me."

"I will wait for you," he said sullenly, and he went into the balcony and smoked his pipe and tried to possess his soul in patience.

When she had faithfully done her work, she played a few simple melodies, such as she knew the old woman would love and understand, and she turned away when she saw that the listener's eyes were moist.

"Play once again," the old woman whispered. "I am dreaming of beautiful things."

So the little tuner touched the keys again with all the tenderness of an angel.

"Tell your daughters," she said as she rose to say goodby, "that the piano is now in good tune. Then they will play to you the next time they come."

"I shall always remember you, mademoiselle," the old woman said, and almost unconsciously she took the childish face and kissed it.

Oswald Everard was waiting for his companion in the hayfield, and when she apologized to him for this little professional intermezzo, as she called it, he recovered from his sulkiness and readjusted his nerves, which the noise of the tuning had somewhat disturbed.

"It was very good of you to tune the old dame's piano," he said, looking at her with renewed interest.

"Some one had to do it, of course," she answered brightly, "and I am glad the chance fell to me. What a comfort it is to think that the next time those daughters come to see her they will play to her and make her very happy—poor old dear."

"You puzzle me greatly," he said. "I cannot for the life of me think what made you choose your calling. You must have many gifts—any one who talks with you must see that at once, and you play quite nicely too."

"I am sorry that my profession sticks in your throat," she answered. "Do be thankful that I am nothing worse than a tuner, for I might be something worse—a snob, for instance."

And, so speaking, she dashed after a butterfly and left him to recover from her words. He was conscious of having deserved a reproof, and when at last he overtook her he said as much and asked for her kind indulgence.

"I forgive you," she said, laughing. "You and I are not looking at things from the same point of view, but we have had a splendid morning together, and I have enjoyed every minute of it. And tomorrow I go on my way."

"And tomorrow you go," he repeated. "Can it not be the day after tomorrow?"

"I am a bird of passage," she said, shaking her head. "You must not seek to detain me. I have taken my rest, and off I go to other climes."

They had arrived at the hotel, and Oswald Everard saw no more of his companion until the evening, when she came down rather late for table d'hote. She hurried over her dinner and went into the salon. She closed the door and sat down to the piano and lingered there without touching the keys. Once or twice she raised her hands, and then she let them rest on the notes, and half unconsciously they began to move and make sweet music, and then they drifted into Schumann's "Abendlied," and then the little girl played some of his "Kinderscenen," and some of his "Fantasie Stucke," and some of his songs.

Her touch and feeling were exquisite, and her phrasing betrayed the true musician. The strains of music reached the dining room, and one by one the guests came creeping in, moved by the music and anxious to see the musician.

The little girl did not look up. She was in a Schumann mood that evening, and only the players of Schumann know what enthralling possession he takes of their very spirit. All the passion and pathos and wildness and longing had found an inspired interpreter, and those who listened to her were held by the magic which was her own secret, and which had won for her such honor as comes only to the few. She understood Schumann's music and was at her best with him.

At last she arrived at the "Carneval," and those who heard her declared afterward that they had never listened to a more magnificent rendering. The tenderness was so restrained; the vigor was so refined. When the last notes of that spirited "Marche des Davidsbundler Contre les Philistins" had died away, she glanced at Oswald Everard, who was standing near her, almost dazed.

"And now my favorite piece of all," she said, and she at once began the "Second Novellette," the finest of the eight, but seldom played in public.

What can one say of the wild rush of the leading theme and the pathetic longing of the intermezzo?

The murmuring dying notes
That fall as soft as snow on the sea;

And—

The passionate strain that, deeply going,
Refines the bosom it trembles through.

The little girl ceased playing. There was not a sound to be heard. The magic was still holding her listeners. When at last they had freed themselves with a sigh, they pressed forward to greet her.

"There is only one person who can play like that," cried the major, with sudden inspiration—"she is Miss Thyra Flowerdew."

The little girl smiled.

"That is my name," she said simply, and she slipped out of the room.

The next morning at an early hour the bird of passage took her flight onward, but she was not destined to go off unobserved. Oswald Everard saw the little figure swinging along the road, and he overtook her.

"You little wild bird!" he said, "and so this was your great idea, to have your fun out of us all and then play to us and make us feel I don't know how—and then to go."

"I hope I have proved to you that the bellows blower and the organist are sometimes identical," she answered.

But he shook his head.

"Little wild bird," he said, "you have given me a great idea, and I will tell you what it is—to tame you. So goodby for the present."

"Goodby," she said. "But wild birds are not so easily tamed."

Then she waved her hand over her head and went on her way singing.

THE END.

A PUBLIC BENEFACTOR.

THEY ALL SAY THE SAME.

Don't Hesitate, but Call and Be Convinced That Every Statement We Make Is True.

To those who do not already know that there is established in Newark, at 105 Halsey street, a physician who stands in the foremost rank of his profession, who is indorsed by the leading colleges of the country and who can prove by witnesses right here in Newark (not by one, but by hundreds) that he has succeeded in curing cases that have been utterly given up by other physicians, and good ones, too. To those who do not these facts we state that any person, rich or poor, old or young, is welcome here and receive examination and advice free of charge.

Thousands praise the day they came to us for treatment. There is no guess work, no experimenting, no painful operation. No matter how difficult the case, no matter how much of the physician's time it may consume, the diagnosis will not only be thorough, it will be absolutely free. There is no taint of quackery or deception; no claim or statement is made that is not borne out by facts and living witnesses.

Mrs. Abby A. Ray, late of 86 Grove street, East Orange, who now lives at 400 Ellmore street, Escanaba, Mich., writes, under date of January 12: "The medicine arrived this morning and I am so glad it came. I am almost out, and it has helped me so much and I am so much pleased with its wonderful effort on my broken down system that I would like to testify to your great success in my case. I am feeling as well now, in fact better, than I had ever hoped to again."

This is one of many letters that we receive daily. We have the originals at our office and if you wish you may see them. Another thing: We never publish or reveal a patient's name unless they so desire.

DR. STARKWEATHER.

There is not a penny to pay for the fullest medical advice. Dr. Starkweather is a graduate of the Berkshire Medical College, Massachusetts, and of the Medico-Chirurgical College of Philadelphia; endorsed also by the College of Physicians and Surgeons and Bellevue Medical College of New York. We invite all sufferers from whatever cause to call at our office, No. 105 Halsey street, Newark, where Dr. Starkweather is in attendance daily to give examination and advice entirely free of charge. It matters not what the disease, or how many years you have suffered, in spite of means adopted in your behalf, a visit to this office and the privileges of the same will cost you nothing, and may be the means of saving your life. We prepare all our medicines and prescribe the remedies indicated. This plan enables the patient to receive directly from us such remedies as will produce the results promised.

Our office is open daily from 10 a. m. to 9 p. m. Sundays 4 to 6 p. m.

Those living at a distance can consult the Doctor by letter.

BROOKLYN'S BIG FIRE

Dr. Talmage's Tabernacle Completely Destroyed.

Hotel Regent in Ruins, and the Summerfield M. E. Church Was Badly Damaged—Entire Fire Department Called Out—No Fatal Results—Loss Over $1,000,000.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., May 14.—For the third time in the history of the Brooklyn Tabernacle it has been destroyed by fire. Shortly after 12 o'clock yesterday, while Dr. Talmage was shaking hands with a few of his congregation, a small boy rushed into the church and informed the sexton that he had seen smoke coming out of the windows on the Waverly avenue side of the church. The sexton immediately rushed into the motor room in the basement and made a thorough examination, but could find no indication of fire. He then went up stairs and informed Dr. Talmage. An examination of the church was made and the fire located in the back of the organ.

In the meantime Mr. Reed, who was in the Summerfield M. E., church, directly opposite, had seen the smoke and had sent in an alarm of fire. So quick was the work of the flames that before Dr. Talmage and his friends had reached the outer gate of the church the whole interior of the edifice was in flames. By the time the firemen arrived the flames were bursting from all the church windows. Two extra alarms, and finally a special call was sent in, bringing all of the engines in Brooklyn and Williamsburg to the fire.

The flames spread with lightning rapidity and the sparks flew in all directions. The greatest excitement prevailed.

All the people living in the Hotel Regent, adjoining, were just getting ready for their dinner when the fire was discovered. They fled from their apartments, leaving everything behind them. It was none too soon, as the flames shortly afterward communicated to the hotel. All the hallboys and servants were brought together and formed into a fire brigade. After a hard fight they succeeded in extinguishing the flames. The fire raged furiously, however, and although the servants were kept at work at the hose on all the floors, the flames again communicated to the hotel. This time it was on the seventh floor, in the air-shaft.

The men were unable to cope with it and pretty soon the floors of the hotel were in flames. The fire got fiercer and fiercer each moment, and at last the men had to forsake their posts and seek safety in the street. The firemen could do nothing in regard to the hotel other than keep the flames from spreading to the adjoining houses. The hose was short and could not reach to the top of the building. Neither did they have a water tower. Both buildings burned fiercely until nearly 4 o'clock, when they were gotten under control. All of the firemen were kept busy putting out small fires which occurred in the houses near by and in the vicinity of four blocks of the church and hotel. The Summerfield M. E. church also caught fire and before the fire could be extinguished a loss of $35,000 was sustained. The people living in the Hotel Regent lost all of their effects.

No one was injured, although three women were taken down the fire escapes from the third, fifth and sixth floors, respectively. One of the women rescued was Mrs. Mary A. Loomis, of Savannah, Ga.

In the meantime the firemen were working like beavers, but despite their efforts the flames spread quickly and adjoining houses caught fire, five on Greene avenue sustaining damage all the way from $1,000 to $15,000. While the firemen were at work on the houses on Greene avenue flames were seen coming from the roofs of four houses on Washington avenue. They were extinguished, after having damaged each house to the extent of $1,500. Two houses and a stable on Waverly avenue were also damaged to the extent of from $2,000 to $5,000 each.

The tabernacle and Hotel Regent were completely gutted. Nothing remains but the walls. At 5 o'clock portions of the rear wall of the tabernacle fell. The total loss is estimated at a little over a million dollars. The loss on the Hotel Regent, including the building, paintings and the guests' household goods will amount to $600,000. The loss on the tabernacle is about $400,000, and the adjoining buildings are reported to be damaged to the extent of $50,000. It is said that the hotel was insured for $500,000.

There were 100 guests and ninety-three servants in the hotel when the fire was discovered, and that there were no fatalities is something remarkable.

The tabernacle was dedicated on April 26, 1891. It was a brick structure with brown stone trimmings and of Romanesque architecture. It was 100 by 120 feet and had a seating capacity of 5,500. The school room was large enough to hold 1,500 persons. The building was put up at a cost of $400,000, including an organ which cost $30,000.

The first fire which affected Dr. Talmage occurred in December, 1872, at 10:20 o'clock in the morning. The church was then situated at Sackett and Schermerhorn streets. Another church was built on the same site and on Oct. 9, 1889, was burned down at 2 o'clock in the morning. The congregation then moved uptown to Greene and Clinton avenues where fire, for the third time, overtook Dr. Talmage and burned his church down. On Wednesday last Dr. Talmage celebrated his twenty-fifth anniversary as pastor of the tabernacle. It is said that two firemen were injured during the fire.

Perhaps the loss which will grieve Dr. Talmage the most is that of the memorial stones which he brought from the east and which were set in the wall at the right of the organ, encased in steric relief work. They were four in number. The top block was from Mount Calvary and bore the word "Sacrifice," the stone below from Mount Sinai, bearing on it "The Law." The bottom stone is from Mars Hill and bears the inscription "Gospel." The front stone was unmarked.

"A more unique collection never was gathered from one place," Dr. Talmage says of them.

Rev. Dr. Talmage when seen last evening by a reporter said:

"Thank God! God's mercy overtowers the disaster. It was all so sudden that I cannot explain it. Had the fire occurred a half hour sooner there would have been a terrible loss of life.

"The church was crowded at the morning's service. Fully 6,000 people were there. A stampede would have occurred and many would have been crushed to death or suffocated."

"If the fire had occurred an hour later when the Sabbath school would be in session there would likely be hundreds of bereft homes in Brooklyn.

"Personally, I'm not a bit disheartened. I never have found fault in God. I think I feel the same now as I always did."

Mr. Talmage said the fire was undoubtedly caused by electricity. "I believe it caused our fire three years ago," he continued, "and I am positive it caused this one."

When asked if the fire would change his plans for his trip around the world he replied that it would. He had arranged to start to-morrow for Philadelphia, Washington and San Francisco, leaving the latter city on May 31 for Honolulu. "The latter part of the programme," said Mr. Talmage, "will be carried out, but I shall stay in Brooklyn for several days."

HONORING CHILDS.

Philadelphia Printers Pay Loving Tribute to His Memory.

PHILADELPHIA, May 14.—The union printers of Philadelphia yesterday afternoon held a memorial service in the Chestnut Opera house in memory of George W. Childs. A representative audience drawn from every walk in life crowded the building and testified by their presence that the memory of Mr. Childs was dear to all Philadelphians. After an overture by the theater orchestra the opening address of the service was made by George Chance, president of Typographical union No. 2. He paid a feeling tribute in behalf of the printers to the worth as a man of Mr. Childs. Prayer was offered by the Rev. Dr. W. N. McVicar, and he followed with a short address, speaking of the rare combination of superiority of intellect and sympathy of character which marked Mr. Childs. The principal address of the service was made by Col. A. K. McClure, editor of the Times. Col. McClure's address was a panegyric upon Mr. Child's life, character and worth. Jacob Glaser, of the Typographical union, and several others also spoke. A number of volunteer singers sang a number of solos.

Important Decisions Expected To-day

WASHINGTON, May 14.—A session of the supreme court of the United States will be held to-day, after a recess of two weeks, for the purpose of announcing decisions and entertaining motions. There are now under consideration by the court about 80 cases, many of them of unusual interest and importance, and decisions are expected to-day in a large number of these. Among those on which the judgment of the court is anticipated are the railroad tax cases appealed from the Indiana supreme court involving the validity of the tax law of that state. The liability of F. W. Vanderbilt to pay import duties on his Scotch yacht "Conqueror" may also be determined to-day. Another session of the supreme court will be held prior to final adjournment for the term, the date of which will be announced to-day.

First Section of Cable Laid.

HAZEL HILL, N. S., May 14.—The Faraday finished laying the first section of the Commercial Cable company's new cable Sunday morning at 4 o'clock, having paid out 510 knots since landing the shore end Wednesday evening last. The work has been accomplished without the slightest hitch. The cable is in perfect condition and Siemen's Brothers & Co., may be congratulated on the brilliant piece of work. The Faraday is now on her way to London, where she expects to arrive about 26th instant. She will promptly on arrival re-fit and commence to take into tanks the deep-sea section, consisting of about 15,000 miles of cable.

NEW CHINESE TRICKS.

Two Thousand Fraudulent Registration Certificates in New York.

NEW YORK, May 14.—The Times says there have come to the notice of the authorities of the United States treasury the most gross and glaring frauds in Chinese registration under the Geary law. It is believed from evidence in the possession of the authorities that there have been issued in this city alone several hundred, perhaps a couple of thousand, fraudulent certificates. It is alleged that smugglers of Chinese are selling registration certificates to Chinese who are now waiting in Canada and in Havana to get into the United States. Large numbers of registration certificates, it is claimed, are being sent to China to secure entrance into the United States of Chinese who have never been here before. The frauds are perpetrated by Chinese who register, and it is alleged that some of them have registered from twice to a score of times. Professional witnesses have been found who have identified as many as 400 Chinese as having, to their personal knowledge, lived at least two years in this country. These witnesses have admitted under oath that they have been making a good thing out of their swearing for Chinese applying for certificates and that they have received from fifty cents to $5 in each case.

NEW JERSEY NEWS.

The Lambertville Abduction.

LAMBERTVILLE, N. J., May 14.—The city is still excited over the bold attempt made Saturday night to abduct Miss Mary Stuhl, the pretty 16-year old daughter of Jacob Stuhl of this city. While she was walking along Main street with an escort a buggy stopped in front of them and two men jumped out. One of them took hold of the girl and attempted to get her into the wagon, while the other fellow flourished a razor at her escort and threatened to kill him if he offered any resistance. The girls' cries for help were heard by the police, who arrived in time to capture the would-be abductors and they were landed in the city jail.

Death of George W. Brown.

TRENTON, N. J., May 14.—Dr. George W. Brown, secretary of the state medical board, and whose home is at Long Branch, is dead of consumption at the Trenton house, where he had been a guest since Jan. 22 last. He came here to avoid the rigor of winter at the seaside. Dr. Brown was a son of ex-Mayor Brown, of Long Branch.

Dr. Frank Chandler Dead.

ASBURY PARK, May 14.—Rev. Dr. Frank Chandler, aged 63 years, is dead at the Presbyterian parsonage. He was one of the best known clergymen in the state and was moderator of the state synod and presbytery at Monmouth for thirty years.

Fish Wardens Killed.

WOODBURY, N. J., May 14.—Fish Wardens Charles Featherer and John Adams were shot near Bridgeport this morning while trying to capture fishermen who were violating the Sunday fishing law.

SISTERS OF THE CHURCH.

Protestant Episcopal Extension Introduced in America.

NEW YORK, May 14.—Announcement has just been made that Mrs. Sylvanus Reed, who has for more than a quarter of a century presided over the Reed school for girls, has placed her school in the hands of a scholastic order, "The Sisters of the Church," which is part of the Protestant Episcopal Extention association of England. This will be the first branch of the Protestant Episcopal Extension association, which has its headquarters in London, to be established in America, but the acquisition of the Reed school by the association is intended to be but the forerunner of the establishment of branches throughout the United States and Canada.

The objects of the Church Extension association are to provide and promote religious and secular education. The work of the association has hitherto been chiefly to elevate the character of the parochial schools of England, but the aristocracy and higher classes prevailed upon the Sisters to organize high class schools for the daughters of gentlemen, which shall give a liberal education, while training them in the faith of England.

In carrying out their object in New York, the Sisters are continuing on their own lines the original purpose of the school which they have taken. The association was incorporated in London in 1890, under the presidency of Earl Nelson and the vice-presidency of the earl of Essex. The scholastic order of the Sisters of the Church, of which the Church Extension association was the outcome, was inaugurated in England twenty years ago by a young woman of high family and immense wealth. It then grew and operated along the lines of the classes for working girls, instituted in New York by Miss Dodge and Bishop Potter's daughter. The community of earnest workers increased largely, and its operations became so extensive that it was decided to form the Church Extension society. The establishment of the auxiliary in the United States has been under consideration for some time.

Honduras Outrages.

WASHINGTON, May 14.—Secretary Gresham has directed Pierce M. H. Young, United States minister to Honduras, to investigate charges of atrocity made by Mrs. Emma G. Reuton, of New York. If Mr. Young finds that the allegations are correct he is to demand the punishment of the guilty parties. Mrs. Reuton arrived in New York from Bluefields, Nicaragua, on May 8, with her niece, Ella Miller Reuton, aged 8 years. In her complaint she says that her husband had taken up a claim in Honduras seven years ago. He was a stock raiser and cocoanut and orange planter. The Brewers' Lagoon Wood and Produce company purchased the property next to the Reuton place, and last March, according to Mrs. Reuton, outrages committed by employes of this company began with the wounding of Charles Johnson, an American who was visiting her husband and herself. She charges that her husband was murdered in cold blood and she and her niece sent to Nicaragua under guard, suffering terrible privations all the way. She also says that she and her husband were robbed.

Randall in Trouble.

ELKHART, Ind., May 14.—Randall, the commander of the Chicago contingent of the Commonweal army, will be sent to jail again. This time the offence will be making unlawful speeches. He defied the authorities in the main street here. When the dusty and fatigued men walked into town there were varied expressions on the part of the citizens. Farmer Comstock, who tried to defend the men and the movement, was hurried off to jail. Before the army came inside the city limits Mayor Beardsley exacted a promise that the army should move at sunrise Monday and that no one should try to make a speech. The soldiers are camped again in J. M. Studebakers' grounds. The men have determined to test the right of the municipalities to keep them confined.

Sheehan Out of Politics.

BUFFALO, May 14.—Lieutenant Governor Sheehan was shown the despatch from Albany stating that he intended retiring from politics and asked if it was true. Mr. Sheehan admitted that the despatch was correct.

$100 Reward, $100.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the one positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio.

EPWORTH ANNIVERSARY.

Appropriate Observance in the Mother Church Where the League Was Born.

The Epworth League of the First Methodist Episcopal Church celebrated its fifth anniversary last evening before an interested audience that filled the church.

The exercises opened with singing after which a Psalm was read responsively, George M. Rittenhouse, chairman of the Devotional Committee leading. Miss Ward sang the solo, "Lead Kindly Light". After prayer a collection was taken, several of the young women of the League passing the plates, while another solo was sung by Miss Ward.

President James R. Joy gave a condensed report of the work accomplished by the different committees in the past year. The report was encouraging and showed that the society had a membership of nearly 150, of whom nearly 30 had been received during the year. The devotional committee has charge of the regular prayer-meeting which was held every Sunday evening. At these meetings much interest has been shown by the members and several have been converted.

The department of mercy and help was organized last year and since has made nearly 100 calls, visiting the sick and distributing delicacies. Through the efforts of this committee a large amount of food was distributed Thanksgiving Day and needy families were helped. The committee has also assisted the sewing class of Monroe Avenue Chapel.

The Junior League, a branch of the Epworth League and conducted by the pastor, Dr. Charles B. Barnes, was reported by Mr. Joy to be in a flourishing condition. This younger organization has a membership of about 100 and holds its meetings Friday afternoons.

In the course of his remarks Mr. Joy spoke of the Epworth League Convention recently held here and said that all those who had enjoyed Plainfield hospitality then were unanimous in praising their hosts for the way in which they had been received.

Mrs. Douglas then sang a solo and the speaker of the evening, Dr. Payne of New York, was introduced. He made a stirring address, speaking on the church of the future and the relation the young people would bear to it.

In the church of the future, said Dr. Payne, the young people will form a large and important part. The pastor will find in them willing assistants for every department of church work. The church will strive to interest and hold the young men who are so apt to drift from it for she sees in them one great source of power.

The church of the future will be more progressive, will grapple with the unsolved problems which vex humanity. In the Epworth League is seen one of the most promising agencies which are to produce the men and women who will be foremost in the fight.

Dr. Payne congratulated the society on being Chapter No. 1 of that great body of chapters which number over 13,000 and which has a membership of 750,000.

The meeting was concluded with the benediction which was pronounced by Dr. Payne.

In Monroe Avenue Chapel the anniversary was observed by an address by Dr. Doherty.

Base-Ball.

The Arlingtons won their second game of the season Saturday afternoon, when they went to Bound Brook and defeated the team of that place by the score of 38 to 7. The Arlingtons played all around their opponents, defeating them with ease, and knocking four pitchers out of the box. The Arlingtons hit the ball with telling effect, making 29 hits for a total of 49 bases, while the Bound Brooks had to be content with seven hits for a total of 12 bases.

The Arlingtons played a very fast game of ball, while their opponents seemed dazed. The Arlingtons made two of the neatest double plays seen on a diamond, and they brought forth considerable applause from the spectators, who numbered about 300.

The noteworthy features of the game were the fine pitching and batting of Kenno, the catching of C. Sutphen, and the playing of the rest of the Arlington team.

A game of base-ball was played at New Providence yesterday afternoon between the New Providence and the Scotch Plains teams. The game was very interesting, the score being tie in the seventh inning. The Scotch Plains could not get on to some of the curves that J. Lyons was pitching, and were defeated by the score of 10 to 8.

A Card to the Public.

At the present time when so much disease is prevalent among cattle, it is well to exercise the greatest care and use only the purest milk. Such milk is produced at the Del Marvia Farms located at Belle Meade, N. J., sold at and delivered by morning route from their depot, 327 Watchung avenue. Our herd of full bred Jerseys are second to none in the Sate. The cattle are examined monthly by a veterinarian, and every care is taken to supply the purest milk that can be produced. No expense is spared. Having just completed our new creamery we are prepared to make the finest quality butter and furnish direct from creamery to consumer. We use the aerating process in the care of milk, and all the most improved machinery in the manufacture of butter. With an expert butter maker to make the butter, we claim to furnish the finest grade of butter ever sold in Plainfield.

Death of Henry Morley.

Prof. Henry Morley, LL D., the well-known writer and teacher, died today at Carisbrooke, Isle of Wight.

FOR THE relief and cure of a cold in the head there is more potency in Ely's Cream Balm than in anything else it is possible to prescribe. This preparation has for years past been making a brilliant success as a remedy for cold in the head, catarrh and hay fever. Used in the initial stages of these complaints Cream Balm prevents any serious development of the symptoms, while almost numberless cases are on record of radical cures of chronic catarrh and hay fever after all other treatments have proved of no avail.

The Spring House Cleaning Wisely urged by the BOARD OF HEALTH is not complete without a proper use of DISINFECTANTS. But, in choosing these, do not be misled into paying fancy prices for "patent" specialties. Common lime is better than any of them for damp cellars and stables. For vaults, drains, cess-pools, the best and cheapest disinfectant is COPPERAS, supplied by us by the pound or barrel at low rates. But for use in the house, in the plumbing, in kitchen sinks, in closets, for purifying the air of sick rooms, deodorizing offensive discharges—in short, for all purposes of a household disinfectant, nothing can excel the powerful solution of chlorides made and sold by us for 15 years under the name of REYNOLDS'S ODORLESS DISINFECTANT. Quart bottles 25c. To be diluted for use according to directions on label.

Plainfield Talent Abroad.

[From The Madison Eagle.]

To say that the complimentary piano recital given under the direction of Miss Alice O. Smith, assisted by her pupils from Plainfield, N. J., and Herbert K. Saxe, vocalist, of this place, on Wednesday evening in Association Hall, was enjoyed, is a mild term to use in expressing the appreciation of the audience. The hall was more than filled with an audience composed almost entirely of our best people, and this fact alone more than compensates Miss Smith for the labor and expense involved in arranging and preparing for the recital. There were composers of well-known merit, besides a number of teachers of music, in the audience, and they expressed themselves as being highly pleased with the performance and the remarkable talent of the ladies. Miss Smith taught these pupils from the commencement of their studies, and their work of Wednesday evening certainly reflects credit upon her efficiency as an instructor.

Herbert K. Saxe was at his best and sang "The Dream of My Heart" in a manner which drew forth round after round of applause. He was obliged to respond to the encore.

The music selected by Miss Smith upon this occasion, was of a character to test the ability of the pupils to the utmost, especially in the "Overture from the Opera of Martha" and "Liszt Faust Waltze", arranged by Gounod. The expression, touch and time were features admired and commented upon quite generally. Miss Kittie Quinn was highly complimented for her perfect rendition of the "Rhapsodie Hongroise", No 2 by Liszt. In fact one professor stated that he had heard it played frequently, but that Miss Quinn brought out all the features of the composition with a clearer conception of the composer's views than any performer he had ever heard.

Our newspaper brethren of Plainfield should feel proud of such a reception as was given to Misses Alice and Kittie Quinn, Mamie O'Reilly and Lizzie Firstbrook, and also from the fact that they reside in that beautiful city.

Miss Smith was the recipient of a handsome bouquet of roses and a large floral horseshoe, which bore evidence of an artist's hand. H. H. Francis, the florist, made the piece.

Seventh Street Tea.

Mrs. Joseph W. Sandford of 530 West Seventh street gave a most enjoyable tea Saturday afternoon from 4 to 7.

The decorations were principally lilacs, which were arranged about the room with much effect.

Those assisting Mrs. Sandford in receiving were Mrs. A. A. Drake, Westfield; Mrs. H. S Brewster and Mrs. Froment, New York.

At the table in the dining room were Mrs B A Hegeman, Jr, Mrs William L Saunders, Mrs J T Scott and Mrs W J Boome. They were assisted by the Misses Gussie and Mamie Murray, Kathryn Stewart, Mary and Emily Sandford, and Mrs Metcalf of New York.

The house was thronged with Plainfield society people.

A Wonderful Transformation.

Over where the Crescents used to win great victories, the land has been developed into a most beautiful section of homes. Broad, macadamized streets have been laid out, and houses of most modern style and equipment erected.

A. D. Thompson saw the possibilities of the section, and he has made Watchung Park the choicest residence spot in town.

Everything that is desirable for suburban living, is provided there, and everything that can be said in praise of a place can truthfully be stated of Watchung Park.

Everybody who has investigated is in love with Watchung Park.

So will you be.

FETTERING THE MARSHAL.

Singular Attempt to Limit His Liberty.

The latest restriction placed on the Chief Marshal of the borough is one that Chief Pangborn will have a difficult job complying with. After the last meeting of the Council at which the Marshal was appointed, Chairman Lounsbury of the Licenses and Marshals Committee, informed him thereafter he would not be allowed to leave the borough under any circumstances. Mr. Lounsbury voted against Chief Pangborn's re-appointment.

The marshal is not obeying the order. The post office is outside of the borough and he has continued to go there although Mr. Lounsbury said he could make other arrangements. Then Borough Magistrate Crosley and Borough Counsel Reed do business in the city and by his orders Chief Pangborn should not approach them.

Other borough business which the marshal alone can transact must be done in the city, and the impracticable side of the rule is apparent. The council will probably take some action at the next meeting, but meantime Chief Pangborn will continue as usual.

The Baptist Home.

The Baptist Home for the Aged will have its third annual meeting tomorrow afternoon at 3, in the Roseville Baptist Church, corner Warren street and Gould avenue, Newark. A reception (at which luncheon will be served) will be held from 11 a. m. to 2 p. m., at the Home, in its new quarters, 285 Roseville avenue. Many Baptists from this city are expected to attend the anniversary.

To Change the Plan of Creation.

Little Cornelius Schenck, Jr., was bothered from going to sleep by the chirping of insects, a few nights ago. Finally he said: "I wish Dod would make everysing butterflies—'cause dey do n't bovver me. But those crickets, dey do n't do nuffin but stay out all night and keep 'spectable folks awake."

A REMARKABLE CURE

MIDDLEBUSH, Somerset Co., N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For the past forty years I have been afflicted with bleeding piles. I suffered constant pain in the lower part of my body, but when I had an operation of the bowels the pain was perfectly terrible, and was most always attended with the loss of a large quantity of blood. My condition was complicated with prolapse of the rectum, which at first only made its appearance when I had a movement of the bowels, but at length the parts became so weakened that the protrusion took place while walking or stooping, or after the slightest exertion, and sometimes even while I was at rest. Whenever this happened it gave rise to the most agonizing pain, and felt as though something was pulling the life right out of me. In fact only those similarly situated can imagine the suffering and distress which I had to endure from day to day, and which made my life a terrible burden. Hearing of Dr. Lighthill's wonderful success in the cure of difficult chronic diseases, I placed myself under his care, and now I am proud and happy to say that, marvelous as it may seem, he effected a complete and radical cure in my case in every respect, and he performed this cure without any painful operation or preventing me from work. Since this terrible disease has been removed by Dr. Lighthill's skill I feel new life, and for the first time in forty years I feel once more what it is to be without daily pain, discomfort and distress. I am not a wealthy man, but no amount of money would tempt me to be put back in my former condition.

I make this public statement, not only from a deep and everlasting sense of gratitude to Dr. Lighthill, but also as a simple Christian duty to let the afflicted know where they can find a physician whose skill cannot be surpassed, and in whom implicit confidence can be placed.

H. VROOM.

A LOCAL ENDORSEMENT.

No. 188 Somerset st., Plainfield, N. J.

To the Residents of Plainfield, N. J.

Mr. H. Vroom, whose statement appears above, is a brother-in-law of mine. I personally know of his case and his suffering and also know the happy fact that to the surprise of himself and his friends, Dr. Lighthill effected a radical and permanent cure. His statement is true in every respect and does not say half enough in praise of Dr. Lighthill. Anyone who wishes this statement verified is at liberty to come and see me personally.

JOHN C. KINNEY.

Talk on Arabia.

Rev. Frank Scudder of Asbury Park, Secretary of the Arabian Missionary Field, delivered an address on the growth and needs of the peninsula of Arabia, in the Trinity Reformed Church yesterday morning to a good-sized congregation. A comprehensive map of that country, prepared by Mr. Scudder, served to make his address more interesting and instructive.

Doesn't Like Long Sermons.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—We listened yesterday to a Plainfield clergyman who preached a sermon over an hour long, and for the sake of a suffering audience, we desire to enter a protest. As an illustration of its effect we might say that we noticed one lady who became nervous, and manifested it by the tapping of her foot on the floor, etc. We saw a gentleman who leaned on the head of his cane the picture of despair while another seemed to be trying to fall asleep. Others looked tired out, and longing to escape, but on and on went the preacher, and there was nothing to do but endure, or faint, and be carried out. This minister is a good man and one whom we greatly respect, but he is seriously marring his usefulness by his long discourses, as are some others in our city. Did they know how often people say, when urged to attend church, "He preaches such long sermons that I get all tired out", we they would confine themselves to a half hour, instead of keeping on for 40 or 50 minutes. This is a day for energetic action, push and drive, and men will not willingly sit and endure long homilies, as in former times. They want something to the point, and they want it condensed and delivered in an earnest manner. When a nail is well driven in a board it should be let alone, for continual pounding thereafter may split the board, and make it a useless thing. When people attend a concert or ordinary entertainment, they have an intermission or can relieve themselves by conversation or moving, but in a church they cannot change position or converse, and hence an hour's sermon is often a physical strain, and sometimes a great mental strain also. No man in this country can preach an hour's sermon without wearying his audience. A word to the wise is sufficient.

SUFFERER.

—McIndoe is playing left field for the Worcester team of the New England League, and is hitting the ball hard. Manager John Driven writes that he is more than pleased with him.

TO BE A BOROUGH.

That Is, If Satisfactory Boundaries Can Be Decided on.

A meeting of the residents in the vicinity of Fanwood station was called to meet at the club-house Saturday evening last for a general discussion relative to establishing a borough in Fanwood Township. Over fifty gentlemen responded to the call, and a free and full discussion was had.

E. C. Kieb presided, and George C. Miller was secretary. The only exciting incident was that caused by a slight though sharp debate between Sheriff Kyte and Captain Tuzo relative to benefits and improvements which the Sheriff claimed had been and the Captain stated had not been granted to the residents of Tyrrel road.

As a result of the meeting a committee of five on boundaries of the proposed borough and plan and scope in general was appointed by the Chair, the committee consisting of the following: Charles K. Moore, Benjamin Urner, Geo. C. Miller, A. D. Beecken and Wm. Stanbury. The meeting adjourned to reassemble May 26

—The regular monthly meeting of the Boys Mission Band will be held in the parlors of the Crescent Avenue Church Tuesday, May 15, at 4. Ice cream will be served

A VETERAN'S VERDICT.

The War is Over. A Well-known Soldier, Correspondent and Journalist Makes a Disclosure.

Indiana contributed her thousands of brave soldiers to the war, and no state bears a better record in that respect than it does. In literature it is rapidly acquiring an enviable place. In war and literature Solomon Yewell, well known as a writer as "Sol," has won an honorable position. During the late war he was a member of Co. M, 2d. N. Y. Cavalry and of the 13th Indiana Infantry Volunteers. Regarding an important circumstance he writes as follows:

"Several of us old veterans here are using Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, Heart Cure and Nerve and Liver Pills, all of them giving splendid satisfaction. In fact, we have never used remedies that compare with them. Of the Pills we must say they are the best combination of the qualities required in a preparation of their nature we have ever known. We have none but words of praise for them. They are the outgrowth of a new principle in medicine, and tone up the system wonderfully. We say to all, try these remedies."—Solomon Yewell, Marion, Ind., Dec. 5, 1892.

These remedies are sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles $5, express prepaid. They positively contain neither opiates nor dangerous drugs.

Maintaining Good Health.

A meeting of the Board of Health of Fanwood was held immediately after the citizens meeting, Saturday evening, Geo. C. Miller occupying the chair.

The residents were invited to state grievances in relation to violation of sanitary laws and asked to assist the board in suppressing nuisances. The cess-pool question and the final disposition of sewerage were ably discussed by Sheriff Kyte, Dr. Westcott, Mr. McKown, Wright Babcock and Mr. Urner.

At the unanimous request of all unofficially attending, the board appointed Wright Babcock inspector for the township, and that gentleman in a neat speech of acceptation assured the board that no favor would be shown and all nuisances would be speedily abated.

The meeting then disbanded with cheers for Babcock.

Good Friday Holiday.

(From The Summit Record.)

Senator Voorhees's bill making Good Friday a legal holiday is in line with public sentiment and will be cordially endorsed by the Christian people of the entire United States. The only religious feast at present recognized by law is the anniversary of the birth of the Saviour and it is high time our statutes provided for an observance of the anniversary of His death.

To Be Called St. Paul's.

At the convention of the Episcopal Diocese of New Jersey, held last week in Mount Holly, the petition of the new Episcopal parish in Westfield was presented and its formation was approved. The new church will be known as St. Paul's Episcopal Church.

WEST END NOTES.

The Young Men's League of Hope Chapel will hold their regular meeting tonight.

The West Ends were defeated in a game of ball Saturday by the Cuban Giants. The score was 26 to 30.

The Young Men's League will go to Rahway Wednesday night to bowl a match game with the Young Men's Christian Association.

Car No. 5 is off duty today, and the new car is taking its place.

Frank Rickert is on the sick list.

Thomas Muir has been presented with a new wheel by his brother.

The Fordville fishers will go on an expedition early tomorrow morning.

WEST ENDER.

Church of Our Saviour.

The beautiful little chapel was well filled yesterday, both at early service and at 11. The May weather and the leafy trees may have been some inducement. All told, 68 people received the Holy Sacrament, including the confirmation class numbering thirteen—their first Communion. The condition of the chapel fully justifies these remarks of The Living Churchman of May 5:

"When the large hotel at Netherwood, near Plainfield, was erected a few years ago, a chapel was added, which was intended to be 'non-sectarian'. This did not work satisfactorily, and the services were discontinued. A number of gentlemen living near secured it for an Episcopal Church, and it is now in a prosperous condition. At a recent visitation, a class of 13 was confirmed by the Bishop."

Free Stereopticon Lecture.

Next Thursday evening in the Trinity Reformed Church, under the auspices of the Ladies Christian Work Society of the church, Mrs. E. B. Scudder will deliver a lecture entitled "Two travelers through the west", which will be illustrated by stereopticon views, including several of the great White City. No admission fee will be charged, but an offering will be welcomed at the close of the lecture.

Crane a Coming Champion.

At the recent Columbia College Spring games in Williamsbridge, S. Clinton Crane, '96 Law, of this city, took second place in the two-mile bicycle race, in the good time of 5 25 3-5. He was beaten by only one-fifth of a second for first place. This time breaks the Columbia College record of 6 01 3-5, the Inter-Collegiate record of 5 41 2-5, held by Glenny of Yale, and is only four seconds from the new Collegiate record made last week by Coates, U. of Pa.

Got John's Blood Up.

(The Local Correspondent to The Summit Record.)

The long continued fight over the Plainfield Post-Office resulted in a victory on Tuesday for Congressman Dunn who secured the appointment of John M. Hetfield to the place. Mr. Dunn says that he was originally moved to recommend Mr. Hetfield's appointment, by the belief that under all the circumstances his appointment would prove the most expedient that originally he had no personal interest in the case except the desire to serve the people of Plainfield most satisfactorily, but that after endorsing Mr. Hetfield, he learned that a combination had been made in Plainfield to make the fight against Hetfield, a personal issue against him, and thereupon he determined to carry the fight forward to success and he never swerved from this purpose until victory was achieved. Mr. Dunn called this morning on Public Printer Benedict to request the appointment of Horace C F. Drake, of Elizabeth, as Assistant Foreman of the Document Room of the Government Printing office.

—The second People's Services on the Prodigal Son, in Trinity Reformed Church last evening, was well attended, and an earnest, practical sermon was delivered by Pastor Schenck.

A PUBLIC BENEFACTOR.

THEY ALL SAY THE SAME.

Don't Hesitate, but Call and Be Convinced That Every Statement We Make Is True.

To those who do not already know that there is established in Newark, at 105 Halsey street, a physician who stands in the foremost rank of his profession, who is indorsed by the leading colleges of the country and who can prove by witnesses right here in Newark (not by one, but by hundreds) that he has succeeded in curing cases that have been utterly given up by other physicians, and good ones too. To those who do not these facts we state that any person, rich or poor, old or young, is welcome here and receive examination and advice free of charge.

Thousands praise the day they came to us for treatment. There is no guess work, no experimenting, no painful operation. No matter how difficult the case, no matter how much of the physician's time it may consume, the diagnosis will not only be thorough, it will be absolutely free. There is no taint of quackery or deception; no claim or statement is made that is not borne out by facts and living witnesses.

Mrs. Abby A. Ray, late of 86 Grove street, East Orange, who now lives at 400 Ellmore street, Escanaba, Mich., writes, under date of January 12: "The medicine arrived this morning and I am so glad it came. I am almost out, and it has helped me so much and I am so much pleased with its wonderful effort on my broken down system that I would like to testify to your great success in my case. I am feeling as well now, in fact better, than I had ever hoped to again."

This is one of many letters that we receive daily. We have the originals at our office and if you wish you may see them. Another thing: We never publish or reveal a patient's name unless they so desire.

DR. STARKWEATHER.

There is not a penny to pay for the fullest medical advice. Dr. Starkweather is a graduate of the Berkshire Medical College, Massachusetts, and of the Medico-Chirurgical College of Philadelphia; endorsed also by the College of Physicians and Surgeons and Bellevue Medical College of New York. We invite all sufferers from whatever cause to call at our office, No. 105 Halsey street, Newark, where Dr. Starkweather is in attendance daily to give examination and advice entirely free of charge. It matters not what the disease, or how many years you have suffered, in spite of means adopted in your behalf, a visit to this office and the privileges of the same will cost you nothing, and may be the means of saving your life. We prepare all our medicines and prescribe the remedies indicated. This plan enables the patient to receive directly from us such remedies as will produce the results promised.

Our office is open daily from 10 a. m. to 9 p. m. Sundays 4 to 6 p. m.

Those living at a distance can consult the Doctor by letter.

A REMARKABLE CURE

MIDDLEBUSH, Somerset Co., N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For the past forty years I have been afflicted with bleeding piles. I suffered constant pain in the lower part of my body, but when I had an operation of the bowels the pain was perfectly terrible, and was most always attended with the loss of a large quantity of blood. My condition was complicated with prolapse of the rectum, which at first only made its appearance when I had a movement of the bowels, but at length the parts became so weakened that the protrusion took place while walking or stooping, or after the slightest exertion, and sometimes even while I was at rest. Whenever this happened it gave rise to the most agonizing pain, and felt as though something was pulling the life right out of me. In fact only those similarly situated can imagine the suffering and distress which I had to endure from day to day, and which made my life a terrible burden. Hearing of Dr. Lighthill's wonderful success in the cure of difficult chronic diseases, I placed myself under his care, and now I am proud and happy to say that, marvelous as it may seem, he effected a complete and radical cure in my case in every respect, and he performed this cure without any painful operation or preventing me from work. Since this terrible disease has been removed by Dr. Lighthill's skill I feel new life, and for the first time in forty years I feel once more what it is to be without daily pain, discomfort and distress. I am not a wealthy man, but no amount of money would tempt me to be put back in my former condition.

I make this public statement, not only from a deep and everlasting sense of gratitude to Dr. Lighthill, but also as a simple Christian duty to let the afflicted know where they can find a physician whose skill cannot be surpassed, and in whom implicit confidence can be placed.

H. VROOM.

A LOCAL ENDORSEMENT.

No. 188 Somerset st., Plainfield, N. J.

To the Residents of Plainfield, N. J.

Mr. H. Vroom, whose statement appears above, is a brother-in-law of mine. I personally know of his case and his suffering and also know the happy fact that to the surprise of himself and his friends, Dr. Lighthill effected a radical and permanent cure. His statement is true in every respect and does not say half enough in praise of Dr. Lighthill. Anyone who wishes this statement verified is at liberty to come and see me personally.

JOHN C. KINNEY.

Dr. Lighthill

WILL LIKELY RECOVER

Miss Rupp Able to Tell the Story of Her Assault.

Her Supposed Lover Did Not Commit the Deed for Robbery, as She Had Already Given Him All Her Money—The Second Shot Fired After She Had Fallen to the Ground.

JERSEY CITY, May 15.—Kate Rupp, the young woman who was found shot at Snake Hill yesterday, is still quite low. The doctors in charge believe that she has a chance to recovery. There is no danger from the wound in her neck.

The name of the man who shot her is Bertholz Olenburgh.

Miss Rupp says she made the acquaintance of Berholtz at his cousin's funeral. He was a tailor and worked in Rome, N. Y., in which town she lived. After they became engaged she gave him $200 out of $300 she had saved. He said he did not want to be married in Rome, and she agreed to come to New York.

They left Rome at 10:40 o'clock Saturday night and arrived in New York at 7 o'clock Sunday morning. Thence they came directly to this city, where they had breakfast.

Berholtz then took her to a house—the street she does not remember—where they engaged rooms. They afterwards went out, as she supposed, to be married.

Berholtz lured her out upon the road to Snake Hill by telling her he knew a family out there.

Here comes in a singular incident. Miss Rupp says that she and Berholtz stopped at a road house kept by a Mrs. Moore. There they had coffee and eggs, and there she left her new sack, her parasol and satchel. There is a road house kept by a Mrs. Moore who answers the description given by the girl, but the road house mistress denies that any man and woman had coffee and eggs at her house Sunday or that anyone left a parasol, satchel and sack at her house. The house is a well known resort of Hudson county politicians.

Miss Rupp further says that after leaving the road house Berholtz led her into the woods, where he told her he had changed his mind about being married, and wanted his picture back. She refused to give it to him.

He did not attempt to rob her, as at first reported, because when she left Rome, she gave him all the money she had left, $90, and her gold watch.

After talking awhile, Berholtz drew a revolver, and told her how easily he could shoot her in such a lonely spot, and no one ever know it. He put the pistol to her breast, but then walked away.

When about four feet from her, he turned and fired a shot in the air. He waited a little after that. She was too frightened to make an outcry.

He then fired at her, the bullet striking her in the breast. She fell over. He then approached her and took his picture from her bosom. He next walked away a short distance, and again shot her, this time in the neck, the wound rendering her unconscious. That was at 5 o'clock Sunday afternoon, and she knew nothing more until she awoke in the hospital.

She says that Berholtz made no attempt to assault her, and never, during their friendship, which began last February, did he ever offer her the slightest indignity.

SCHOOL FOR BOY THIEVES.

New York Police Get Information of Genuine Fagan Work.

NEW YORK, May 15.—Within 24 hours Central office detectives it is expected will make a big haul of boy thieves, and will probably also land their Fagan who taught them the art. This will be a sequel to the arrest of two boys on a charge of picking pockets in Central Park yesterday. The boys were Mendez Mendelovitz, 13 years old, and Bernard Ragofsky, 15 years old.

When arraigned in the Yorkville police court, Justice Voorhis brought out the startling disclosure that the boys had been taught the art of stealing and were sent out daily to pick pockets. Their Fagan, according to Mendelovitz, was a Hebrew named Abe Solomon. The "Artful Dodger" is represented by Philip Cretzky, who is said to be a graduate of Solomon's school of thieves.

Mendelovitz said that after they are initiated by Solomon, Cretzky takes the pupils out on the streets and in the parks and gives them object lessons in stealing pocketbooks and handkerchiefs.

"How long have you been engaged picking pockets?" asked the judge.

"For six months," was the reply.

Mendelovitz said he served a regular apprenticeship with a number of other boys, and that none were allowed to pick pockets without passing an examination as to their proficiency.

He said that for the first year they are expected to turn in all they steel as payment for learning the art. On an average he would turn in about $3 per day. On Sunday three weeks ago, he said a few of Solomon's pupils "worked" Central Park and turned in $150 that night.

Fatal Runaway Accident.

BRATTLEBORO, Vt., May 15.—A fatal runaway accident occurred on South Main street yesterday afternoon. A party of five women, the Misses Blood, Miss Burt, Miss Wardell and Miss McNealy, connected with Moody's school at Northfield, were thrown from a carriage while going down a steep hill. The youngest Miss Blood struck an iron grating and was instantly killed, while the others were taken up mangled and bleeding. One of the injured will probably die. The cause of the runaway was the breaking of the horse's neck yoke.

Fighting Breckinridge.

LEXINGTON, Ky., May 15.—At a densely packed mass meeting of prominent citizens of the city and county in the Lexington Opera house yesterday afternoon resolutions protesting against the renomination of Col. Breckinridge for congress were unanimously adopted.

To Have His Right Arm Amputated.

WASHINGTON, May 15.—Maj. J. W. Powell, ex-director of the Geological Survey, is now at Johns Hopkins University hospital, Baltimore, Md., where he expects to have his right arm amputated. The operation is expected to be performed at once.

COMPULSORY EDUCATION.

ALBNY, N. Y., May 15.—Senator Pound's compulsory education bill which was signed by the governor, was prepared by the council of school superintendents of this state, and has the approval of the state department of public instruction, the school commissioners, boards of education, trustees and other school officers throughout the state. It also has the approval of labor organizations and of factory inspectors. The bill is drawn so as to meet the views of those who manage private and parochial schools. The bill provides that children between 8 and 12 years shall attend a public, private, or parochial school, or be instructed at home during the whole school year. Children between twelve and fourteen years must attend school when not lawfully and regularly employed. Children not in proper mental or physical condition are exempted. Persons responsible for children, who fail to comply with the law, are subject to fine. Persons employing children unlawfully are also subject to a fine.

Attendance officers are provided for the execution of the law in cities and union free school districts. Truants are to be arrested and turned over to their parents or teachers. Incorrigible truants are to be brought before a magistrate, and truant schools are provided for, where needed.

The state superintendent of public instruction will have general oversight of execution and enforcement of the law, which goes into effect January 1, next. An assistant to be appointed by the state superintendent to travel about the state and ascertain how far the act is being carried into effect will receive a salary of $2,500.

PULLMAN AND HIS TOWN.

Is the Car King a Tyrant or a Philanthropist?

CHICAGO, May 15.—A serious question in connection with the Pullman strike is whether Mr. Pullman will allow the strikers to occupy his houses without paying rent. Assistant Manager Parend of the works has expressed himself freely on this question, and says that he is confident that the men must either pay their rent or be put out. "If this step is taken," said Mr. Parend, "the men will say that Mr. Pullman is a tyrant, but what ought they to expect? They gave him no notice of going on strike. He had not the slightest intention of shutting down the works. He was willing to keep the men at work at a loss to the company, and he was willing to let their rents accumulate; so what mercy ought they to expect from him? He did all he possibly could for them, as he had a personal feeling in the matter. In order to keep the men at work he partly closed down the shops at Detroit and St. Louis, and the repair work which was done there was all brought to Pullman. He built up the town, and naturally wants to keep up its reputation."

Church Without Creed or Doctrine.

CHICAGO, May 15.—Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones, pastor of All Souls Unitarian church, Oakwood boulevard and Langley avenue, announced to his congregation that he was going to break away from denominational bonds and organize a church of free thought, without creed or doctrine. He said that $7,000 had been subscribed by the American Unitarian association for All Souls church on condition that the church should be identified with the Unitarian movement of America. Should his people choose to lay aside that word as a denominationel badge, it would be necessary to, first discharge the debt of honor. As a result of this statement $3,600 was put into the collection box. It is the intention of Mr. Jones to build a new church to cost $200,000.

Trusts and the Tariff.

NEW YORK, May 15.—The Press prints a full page article, under Washington date, which, it claims, is "a full history of the compromise tariff bill introduced in the senate last Monday, and a full and true account of the democratic surrender to the great trusts." The article states that the sugar trust not only paid $500,000 for the legislation it wants, but also guaranteed United States senators who speculated a rise of 30 points in Wall street on sugar trust stock. It is alleged that midnight conferences were held between senators and sugar trust officers within a stone's throw of the white house. It is also alleged that the oil, lead and whisky trusts were cared for in the same way.

McKane Again Baffled.

WASHINGTON, May 15.—John Y. McKane, the Gavesend, L. I., politican, now in Sing Sing under sentence of the New York courts, has been baffled in his efforts to secure release on a writ of habeas corpus. Justice Harlan, in the supreme court of the United States, announced the unanimously decision of that court affirming the judgment of Judge Lacombe, in refusing to issue a writ against Warden Durston, of Sing Sing.

Pennsylvania Red Men.

BETHLEHEM, Pa., May 15.—The great chief and 400 delegates to the state council Improved Order of Red Men are here for a four days' session.

Bismarck's Sciatica Worse.

HAMBURG, May 15.—Prince Bismarck's sciatica has grown worse and his walks in the park have been stopped by order of Dr. Schweninger.

REPUBLICANS CAUCUS

Midnight Tariff Talk at Senator Sherman's House.

Strong Belief in the Minds of the Minority That the Bill Can Be Defeated—A Debate of Six Weeks or Two Months Will Kill the Measure, in Their Opinion.

WASHINGTON, May 15.—The republican members of the senate held a four hours' caucus at the residence of Senator Sherman last night. Although no vote was taken on the question of party policy on the tariff bill, when the caucus adjourned at midnight there was a strong feeling among those who attended it that the bill could be defeated.

Almost every senator present—and there was a full representation—had something to say, the majority endorsing the policy that has been pursued by Senators Allison, Aldrich, Hale and Chandler.

Reasonable debate will be insisted upon, it being the impression that a debate of six weeks or two months will kill the bill.

Special attention will be called to the trusts, that republicans say have been cared for, and an effort will be made to show that the bill will create a large surplus, thus making the duty on sugar and the income on the income tax unnecessary. The minority will insist upon the present bounty on domestic sugar with free sugar admitted from abroad. They believe, by the aid of some democratic votes, they can put this provision in the bill.

DOINGS IN CONGRESS.

Seventh Week of the Tariff Struggle in the Senate.

WASHINGTON, May 15.—The seventh week of the tariff bill in the senate began with the usual quantity of discussion over the various items which were reached, but its quality was not nearly up to the daily average of that of the past two weeks. The republican senators were not so active in harrassing the foe, and the democrats avoided debate, though not so carefully as previously. There were seven items considered and disposed of. The result was the fixing of rates of duties as follows:

On alcoholic perfumery $2 per gallon and 50 per cent. ad valorem.

On alumnia, alum, alum cake, etc., 4-10 cent per pound.

On carbonate of amonia 20 per cent ad valorem; on muriate of amonia 10 per cent. and on sulphate of amonia 20 per cent.

On blacking of all kinds, and on bone-char suitable for use in decolorizing sugar, 20 per cent. ad valorem.

On crude borax, or borate of soda, or borate of lime, one cent per pound, and on refined borax two cents per pound.

On refined camphor 10 per cent. ad valorem.

On chalk 20 per cent. ad valorem.

House

Almost the entire time of the house was devoted to the consideration of district business. In the morning hour the bill of Mr. Dalzell authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Monongahela river from Homestead to Pittsburg was passed, and the resignation of Mr. Compton, of Maryland, to take effect at once, was received.

VOTE TO EXPEL BRECKINRIDGE.

Action of the Board of Managers of the Chicago Union League Club.

CHICAGO, May 15.—The board of managers of the Union League club voted to expel Col. Breckinridge from the roll of honorary membership of the club. There were eight members present at the meeting and no member voted against dropping the Kentucky politician from the honorary roll.

Col. Breckinridge will be at once notified of the action of the club and if he wishes to enter a defense he will be allowed thirty days in which to do so. The directors say he will have a fair and candid hearing if he feels disposed to make a defense.

Some members of the conservative element took the ground that final action should not be taken until the political fate of Col. Breckinridge was taken.

Getting Ready to Burn Hard Coal

POTTSVILLE, Pa., May 15.—In consequence of bituminous strike orders have been given here to firemen on the Philadelphia & Erie and the Pennsylvania Schuylkill Valley railroads, in many instances, to prepare their fireboxes in anticipation of burning anthracite coal to raise steam for the locomotives in their charge. The reason assigned for this order is that the supply of bituminous coal is running short, only about a day's supply being on hand at Nescopeck, Pottsville, Reading and Shawmount.

New York Dry Goods Market.

NEW YORK, May 15.—The dry goods market has entered upon a new week without noticeable change in either character of demand, tone or price. There is a fair business again reported in seasonable fancies in cotton dress fabrics, and in woolen and worsted dress goods in fancy lines, but otherwise a dull business is recorded throughout.

Vetoed by Gov. Flower.

ALBANY, May 15.—Gov. Flower has vetoed Senator Person's bill repealing the provision of the law passed last year which gives the state superintendent of public works authority to allow corporations to operate electrical conductors along the lines of the state canals for the propulsion of canal boats.

Elgin Butter Market.

ELGIN, Ill., May 15.—The butter market opened this week stronger at an advance in prices. Twenty-eight thousand pounds was sold at 17 cents and 15,000 pounds at 17 1-4 cents.

NO MORE CHURCH DEBTS

Talmage Believes His Pastoral Work is Done.

If There is to Be a New Tabernacle $280,000 Must Be in Bank in Real Dollars Before a Spade is Thrust in the Ground—This Condition Settles it, He Believes.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., May 15.—An evening paper says in reference to the fire which destroyed Dr. Talmage's tabernacle and much adjacent property Sunday:

"I regard my pastoral work as done." That is Dr. T. DeWitt Talmage's view of it.

"The condition that $280,000 shall be in bank in real dollars before a spade is thrust in the ground is in black and white. That tests the question, and, in my opinion, settles it. I shall never shoulder a debt and its consequences again."

These and many other words were spoken by the minister last night during an interview.

The trustees' meeting was over and they bore away a resolution to "rebuild on condition that $280,000 was raised in cash in advance of beginning any work." Evidence was first demanded by the doctor that there was money enough to pay every remaining creditor. There was.

The doctor's speech was neither short nor without meat. He said that the damnation of another debt he would never go through again. He had been lashed, stigmatized and stabbed enough. He would build no more unpaid for churches. He would allow and face no more debts. He was through.

Dr. Talmage's view of the resolution was this:

"I regard my pastoral work as done. Fire has consumed our resources, yet supplied the means to discharge our debts. They must all be discharged, and then $280,000 must actually be raised before I put my hand to another enterprise. Preaching the gospel and battling with church debts comprise one labor too many. The first labor I'll never tire of. The second I'll never resume, never, never. Understand me, I'll always preach. However, if the $280,000 can not be raised, I'm through with pastoral work."

"Do you think they'll raise the money?" the doctor was asked. "Humanly speaking, no. They, however, are confident."

Dr. Talmage started on his trip last evening. Regarding this he said:

"My route will be from San Francisco to Honolulu on the last day of May. I shall go south by rail, speaking in Columbus and in Jackson en route, where they have wanted me for twenty years. I shall preach and lecture around the world."

At a meeting of the board of trustees a committee was selected to find a place of worship. It is probable that either the 13th regiment armory building or the Clermont avenue rink will be selected. It is thought that after all debts are paid up that a balance of $30,000 will remain in the treasury.

4,000 MEN QUIT WORK.

PITTSBURG, Pa., May 15.—The 4,000 employes of the National Tube works at McKeesport went out on strike last night for a 20 per cent. advance in wages.

The works shut down during the month of January on account of lack of orders. The mill again resumed operations on Feb. 1, the men accepting a reduction in wages of 20 per cent., with the promise that when things brightened up the old wages would be restored.

The strike was wholly unexpected by the firm.

The men claim the works have orders ahead sufficient to run nine months, and they want the old rate of wages restored. If the strike continues it will force three iron mills in this city that furnish material to the tube works to close down, throwing 4,000 more men out of work, the strike thus affecting 8,000 men.

HOGAN GETS SIX MONTHS.

Others of the Montana Coxeyites Also Given Sentences to Jail.

HELENA, May 15.—The Montana contingent of Coxey's army are the first commonwealers in the country to be punished by court for stealing a train. In the United States court yesterday Judge Knowles sentenced Hogan to jail for six months. The engineers and firemen, forty captains and lieutenants got two months each. Their is no appeal in their cases.

Will Probably Release Sanders' Men.

LEAVENWORTH, Kas., May 15.—"Camp Sanders" is a very serene place considering the fact that 341 members of a Coxey contingent are there under guard of United States deputy marshals. The chances are that Gen. Sanders and his men can not be held on the charge of train stealing or obstructing the mails and that in a few days the army will go to Kansas City by rail or water and on toward Washington.

Good Offer to Galvin's Men.

SHARON, Pa., May 15.—George Washabaugh, a wealthy farmer of this place, has sent word to the authorities at West Newton to tell Galvin and his commonwealers to encamp on his 200 acre farm there for any length of time they please and to use the product from it. Washabaugh is also endeavoring to organize a commonweal army.

Another Train Captured.

GREEN RIVER, Wyo., May 15.—The Coxeyites overpowered the United States marshal of Idaho, at Montpelier yesterday afternoon, and captured a Union Pacific train on which they started east. The marshal of Wyoming asked for the troops at Fort Russell to stop the army and they are now on a special coming from Cheyenne.

Fitz's Army at Chester.

CHESTER, Pa., May 15.—Fitzgerald's followers of the New England division of the industrial army, 49 strong, were quartered last night in Star hall. Four of the army have secured employment and the rest will foot it to Wilmington to-day.

Coxey for Congress.

CANTON, O., May 15.—The populists of the Eighteenth Ohio district will meet in Massillon to morrow and nominate Jacob S. Coxey, the commonweal leader, for congress. This is Gov. McKinley's old district.

Local Weather Forecast.

Increasing cloudiness; probable showers; warmer.

THEIR NAVIES COMPARED.

Now That Brazil and Portugal May Go to War.

WASHINGTON, May 15.—Senor Mendonca, the Brazilian minister, has received nothing from his government regarding the suspension of diplomatic relations between Brazil and Portugal other than the bare announcement that the Portuguese minister at Rio Janeiro and the personnel of the legation had been given their passports and the Brazilian legation at Lisbon ordered to withdraw.

Minister Mendonca says the strained relations are the outcome of the action of Portugal in giving asylum to da Gama and the other insurgent officers and the refusal to surrender them to Brazil.

This falling out between Brazil and its parent country may again mark an interesting episode in South American history.

In point of natural wealth, credit and effective fighting resources Brazil now out classes the mother country. She had 17 war vessels available for war service at the beginning of the revolution, but several of these were badly injured, and the best of them, the Aquidaban, was sunk recently. Brazil has a total of 78 war vessels and 15 torpedo boats, according to the last annual report of Secretary Herbert of the navy. Two gun vessels, one protected cruiser and vessel designated "miscellaneous" are building; 16 vessels, consisting of four battleships, six protected cruisers, and six torpedo vessels (not torpedo boats) have been authorized. Forty-one vessels are unfit for active service. The 17 vessels available for war service consist of two battleships (including the Aquidaban, which has been raised and is being repaired), three armored coast defense vessels, two protected cruisers, five unarmored cruisers, one torpedo vessel (not a torpedo boat) and four miscellaneous.

Portugal has a total of 67 naval vessels, of which 53 are available for war service, but included in the last number there are no protected cruisers and no battleships, the types of vessels best suited for foreign war. She has one armored coast defense vessel, six unarmored cruisers, thirty gun vessels and sixteen vessels classed as miscellaneous on a war footing. Six vessels are building and none besides these has been authorized. They consist of four armored cruisers and two gun vessels. Eight vessels classed as miscellaneous are unfit for effective service. Portugal's torpedo boats number four, and five others are being built.

THE DONALD M'KAY CLAIM.

Judgment for $123,628 Just Rendered in Favor of the Executor.

WASHINGTON, May 15.—Judgment has just been rendered by the United States Court of Claims for $123,628 in favor of Edward P. Bliss, executor of Donald McKay, for additional cost of extras, enhanced cost of labor and material and clerk hire, etc., during a prolonged period in the construction of the monitor Nauset in the civil war.

Donald McKay built a number of vessels for the United States at his ship yard near Boston between 1861-65, and through nonpayment of money claimed to be due him from the government his executor became a claiment before congress.

During his first administration Mr. Cleveland vetoed a bill for the relief of the McKay estate and Nathaniel McKay, Donald's son, worked for Mr. Cleveland's defeat on this account during the campaign of 1888. He went to Europe and took a number of photographs of male and female laborers at work in the fields and in mines and distributed copies of them throughout the United States as an argument against free trade.

FIVE HUNDRED LIVES IN DANGER

The Great Aurora Mine, Near Ironwood, Mich., on Fire.

IRONWOOD, Mich., May 15.—The great Aurora mine is on fire. Just how much damage has been done can not be told as yet. The lives of 500 men are in danger, and the whole community is in great excitement.

The Anrora mine is one of the best known mines on the Gogebic range. It has been in operation right along and is one of the very few mines that did not shut down on account of hard times.

MRS. LEASE MUCH WORSE.

Her Limbs Badly Swollen and She Suffers Great Pain.

OLATHE, Kas., May 15.—Mrs. Lease, who has been ill at the Deaf and Dumb institution in this city since last Thursday, is reported much worse. Her illness has grown into a severe attack of inflammatory rheumatism. Her limbs are badly swollen and at times suffers shegreat pain.

Through Great Fields of Ice.

PHILADELPHIA, May 15.—Incoming vessels still continue to report having passed through tht great ice field off the Newfoundland coast. The Dutch steamer La Hesbaye in port reports that on May 9 passed several large icebergs about 300 feet long and 150 to 200 feet high. On the same afternoon she passed through a great field of ice extending froin Cape Race southeast as far as could be seen. Seven large bergs were in the field.

New York Central's Coal Supply.

NEW YORK, May 15.—Third Vice President Webb of the New York Central railroad said to-day that the company has enough coal on hand to supply the demand for 30 days. He says there is no truth in the report that the company has ordered coal from Wales, but he added that if coal comes here "people are likely to buy it."

Jerry Simpson's Condition.

WASHINGTON, May 15.—Representative Jerry Simpson is a trifle better. It was hoped he would be strong enough to be removed to the Virginia White Sulphur springs the latter part of the week. It is not thought now that the program can be carried out for some time.

For Retaliatory Duties.

WASHINGTON, May 15.—In the senate Mr. Davis (rep., Minn.) gave notice of an aspendment to the tariff bill providing for retaliatory duties against such countries as impose discriminating or prohibitory duties on American grain, grain products or other agricultural products.

Ex-Gov. Hunt Dead.

WASHINGTON, May 15.—Ex-Gov. A. C. Hunt, of Colorado, is dead of paralysis at his residence in Tennallytown, near this city. He was 65 years of age.

War on Cigarettes.

BOSTON, May 15.—The house substituted for an adverse committee report a bill prohibiting the manufacture and sale of cigarettes or cigarette tobacco.

THE DAILY PRESS.

A. L. FORCE, - - Publisher and Proprietor.
WALTER IRVING CLARKE, - Managing Editor.

CIRCULATION EXCEEDS THAT OF ALL OTHER PLAINFIELD DAILIES COMBINED.

First of all, the news.

Republican papers don't like the politics of The Press. Naturally.

There may be other and greater things in store for Foster Voorhees, but until they come he'll accept that judgeship.

The "Ships That Pass in the Night" begin their voyage today. Every reader of The Press is an interested passenger from this moment.

EARLY INTELLIGENCE.

—Thirty danced in the Country Club Casino last night.

—Barnum & Bailey circus shows in Elizabeth tonight.

—Take a trolley car to Watchung Park and you'll camp there forever.

—Charles Zimmer, Sr., will open a cigar store at 223 East Front street.

—Somerset Council, J. O. U. A. M., will initiate three candidates this evening.

—George Thatcher's great company plays "Africa" in Newark all this week.

—A social will be held in the parlors of the First Presbyterian Church Thursday evening.

—Dr. Lighthill of Crescent avenue is continually curing difficult cases of long standing.

—John P. Emmons today made an excavation for the foundation of John H. McVey's new boiler.

—The first degree was worked on one candidate in Queen City Lodge, No. 226, I. O. O. F., last evening.

—Doane & Edsall are in the Babcock Building, and the shoe-wanting crowd flocks there in consequence.

—A. W. Demarest will soon reopen the Park avenue grocery store formerly conducted by his father. Success to him!

—The strawberry festival under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. will be held Thursday and Friday evenings of this week.

—All those interested in the camp of Sons of Veterans are invited to be present this evening at the meeting to be held. In Winfield Scott Post rooms.

—Who eats all the bananas? Here's Lusardi of North avenue, getting in 150 bunches in addition to the big cargo of a short time ago. He leads in the fruit trade, because of the rare quality of his goods.

—The Royal Arcanum last night initiated six new members and received one by letter. Two new applications and one card member were received. It was the largest meeting in some time and important matters were disposed of. The lodge now numbers 179. Two-hundred is the number that hustler P. C. Emmons, the Regent of the lodge, is after, and he will get it, as he has the best of assistant officers.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

J. B. Dumont has been re-elected a Governor of the Stock Exchange.

Miss Jeanette Simpson of Craig place is visiting friends in Washingtonville.

Mrs. Minnie Morse, nee Bird, of Westfield, is dangerously ill at her home.

Presman Thomas Lynch of The Press has been entertaining his mother from Brooklyn.

E. W. Canse of New Brunswick, a successful traveling salesman, covered Plainfield today.

Mme. E. Fursch-Madi is among the artists to appear at F. M. Hulett's concert Tuesday, May 22.

Miss Lizzie Buckman of Brooklyn is visiting her brother, Wm. M. Buckman, of The Press composing room.

Rev. Herbert K. Randolph and wife have returned from attending the funeral of Mrs. Randolph's brother in Pottsville, Pa.

Mrs. Schneilendreusaler of East Front street, who has been ill at her home with rheumatism, has so far recovered as to be out.

Miss Mildred Potter, formerly of the borough and now of Philadelphia, is the guest of Miss Woltmann of West Seventh street.

The families of J. H. Powlison of Somerset street and Frank Bailey of Duer street spent a pleasant day picnicing on Johnston's Drive today.

The Misses Lunger of East Front street gave an informal tea at their home last evening. A very enjoyable time was spent in playing games and music.

Mrs. A. L. Titsworth returned Monday evening from the Jackson Sanatorium, Dansville, N. Y. She spent eight months there, and is greatly benefited. She and her husband justly regard it one of the finest institutions of the kind in the country.

Henry Bogert and family, who have been living on Crescent avenue since May 1, have rented the residence of Miss Edith Allen, corner of Putnam avenue and Webster place, for the remainder of the season. They will take possession Thursday.

Commander Shields, G. A. R Department New Jersey, has appointed 41 aides-de-camp among whom are Past Commander Joseph L. Hammill, of Ulrich Dalgreen Post, No. 25, of Elizabeth, and Past Commander Elmore D. Moffett, of Major Anderson Post, No. 109, of Plainfield.

Local Cattle Healthy.

The Borough Health Inspector reported to the North Plainfield Board of Health last night that he had thoroughly examined all local cattle and had found no tuberculosis. One cow had had the disease and had been killed. It was owned by a private family, and its milk had not been used.

The State Board of Health will be asked to send the Dairy Commissioner to make an examination to corroborate the local Board in its claim that there is no cause for alarm, in spite of the sensational inventions of another paper seeking to kill the local milk and meat trade.

Renew Their Freshness.

Your old clothes will be good as new, if you give them in charge of G. O. Keller of 317 West Front street. He has a superior method of cleansing and dyeing garments, and his charges as published in The Press yesterday are reasonable. He guarantees satisfaction, and he works quick.

Setting Back the Poles.

The trolley poles on West Front street, between Central and Madison avenues, are being set back a few inches, so as to be in line with the curb, which was changed some time ago.

All Boys, Go.

The boys society of the Y. M. C. A. will meet this evening, to give talks on various topics of special interest to boys.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

The sixth anniversary of the Warren Mission Christian Endeavor Society will take place Thursday evening at 8.

Shiloh's cure is sold on a guarantee. It cures incipient consumption; it is the best cough cure only 1c a dose; 25c, 50c, $1. Sold by A. D. Mallinson, 208 North ave., opp. station.

Mrs. T. S. Hawkins, Chattanooga, Tenn., says: "Shiloh's Vitalizer saved my life; I consider it the best remedy for a debilitated system I ever used. For dyspepsia, liver or kidney trouble, 75c. Sold by A. D. Mallinson, 208 North avenue, opp. railroad station.

KILLED BY A FALL DOWN STAIRS.

Sudden Death of Veteran Jacob Seader of the Borough.

Jacob Seader, an old veteran of the borough, was accidentally killed at 11:30 this morning.

He complained of being ill early in the day, and later, while in the Arlington Hotel on Somerset street, was taken with a dizzy spell. He was assisted to his home next door and was left for a moment in his room on the second floor. His wife, busy in the kitchen, heard him go into the hall and start down the stairs and called to him. The old and infirm man evidently got a third of the way down in safety and then fell.

He must have turned a somersault, judging from the position in which he was found dead and the marks of his shoes on the front door. Dr. Joseph F. Berg examined the body. Although there was a bruise on the top of the head, death had been caused by dislocation of the neck.

Mr. Seader was 76 years old. He lived in Warrenville for 30 years, until five years ago, when he came to the borough. His children are Peter, Adam, Michael, Henry, Josephine, wife of Marshal Wilson, and Annie, wife of John Wilson of Liberty Corner.

Decedent had been pensioned for four years. He belonged to Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., and the Post will conduct the funeral services.

MISS BURT SERIOUSLY HURT.

Her Parents Summoned from Plainfield to Brattleboro.

Miss Clara M. Burt, daughter of Wm. C. Burt of 912 West Seventh street, is the Miss Burt mentioned in the Brattleboro despatch on Page 1, as having been injured in a runaway accident. Her parents left for Brattleboro last night. Despatches received this afternoon state that Miss Burt is still alive, but in a very dangerous condition.

BASE-BALL CHATTER.

The Plainfield kranks flock to the Polo grounds these days and root loud for New York, except when Baltimore or Philadelphia is against them, and then they are loyal to their old favorites, Keeler, Bonner and Turner.

Sporting Life says: "Infielder Bonner is showing great improvement in his work. Like many minor league men, it had taken him a little while to realize that he is in fast company, and that he must hustle accordingly."

Leo Smith is playing third base for the Troy Club of the Eastern League, and is getting in a couple of base hits in every game—something unusual for him, as he never laid claim to being a heavy hitter.

The editor of Sporting Life remarks: "Manager Irwin's idea in securing Goeckle is to pair Boyle with Clements to do the catching, thus leaving Cross permanently at third base. That purpose could have been achieved even better and more advantageously by placing Delahanty at first base and Turner in the outfield. This would have added to the team's batting and fielding strength, avoided experimenting and also saved additional expense. The objection that Delahanty may not be able to play first base is trivial. He has the height and reach, and with these prime requisites should be able to master the few difficulties this position presents with very little practice. Surely an experienced, general player like Delahanty should be able to play the position as satisfactorily as an untried and inexperienced, even if able, amateur. With Delahanty at first base, Turner, who is too valuable a man to rust on the bench, could be utilized in every game." The Goeckle here referred to is the crack first baseman of the University of Pennsylvania, but he declares he will not play professionally, and so there is a likelihood of Sporting Life's suggestion being carried out, and Turner will in that case play steadily.

The Scotch Plains team will play baseball with a nine from Berkley Heights, Wednesday morning, May 30, in Scotch Plains. In the afternoon the Plains team will go to Murray Hill to play a game there.

TREASON, MY LORDS!

And Prohibition Pearsall Alone Can Tell You of It.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—We are very glad to be circumstantially informed by "Westfield" through the Plainfield Press that private Morgan of Revolutionary history was not a traitor although tradition says he was one. We never could understand how a Morgan could be a traitor; treason does not run in the Morgan blood. We are very glad to be corrected.

So Editor Pearsall, in his issue of May 12! But how can that great man longer refuse to print this "tradition" of which he alone is aware? Exclusive information of a treason which eventuated 113 years ago ought to swell any man's breast with importance, especially when it is an item of our Revolutionary history which has escaped our historians, our learned societies and our patriotic associations, organized for no other purpose than to collect and conserve Revolutionary data. In what did this treason consist? Was it overt or only premeditated? Was it successful or a fiasco? Who detected it and brought it to naught? Give us the complete story, Union County, the whole people, all history, will stand attention while Editor Pearsall breaks his long silence and unburies at last these long unrecorded facts. WESTFIELD.

CYCLING COMMENT.

The completion of the track and grandstand of the Crescent Wheelmen will be celebrated by a public jubilee, in which a beautiful flag will be flung to the breeze. It will be a gala day, and the festivities will be free to all. This will be in advance of the great race meet.

Secretary Teel is getting such an avalanche of mail from cyclers all over the country concerning the coming race meet that the salary of Postmaster Hetfield is likely to be increased because of the enormous growth of business.

The boys are putting their Columbias in shape for the great race meet.

The Columbia Cycle Club will run to Plainfield June 10.

The Union County Roadsters have decided to build a new club house to cost $15,000, and also to lay out a covered lap track, to be used for their racing men during the Winter months.

The Crescent Wheelmen Governors met last night and leased the grounds as follows: Decoration Day afternoon, to West End Athlectic Association, for base-ball. June 9, to High School Athletic Association, for athletic sports. June 16 and and July 4, to West End Athletic Association, for base-ball.

The cycling clubs of Union County met in Elizabeth last night and the Crescent Wheelmen secured the great Siltonstall Trophy race as an extra drawing card for the great race-meet on the new Plainfield track, winning the event away from Waverly against much opposition. Three men from each club enter this contest.

They'll Rask.

An elegant and amusing affair will be the grand masquerade entertainment of the Colored Y. M. C. A., May 30

Let's All Go.

Ocean Grove will begin its quarter-century anniversary Sunday, July 1.

FOR THE relief and cure of a cold in the head there is more potency in Ely's Cream Balm than in anything else it is possible to prescribe. This preparation has for years past been making a brilliant success as a remedy for cold in the head, catarrh and hay fever. Used in the initial stages of these complaints Cream Balm prevents any serious development of the symptoms, while almost numberless cases are on record of radical cures of chronic catarrh and hay fever after all other treatments have proved of no avail.

OBITUARY.

Mrs. James Moore.

Mrs Catharine Maurice Moore, wife of Col James Moore, died suddenly at her home, 125 Madison avenue, Elizabeth, at 4 Sunday morning, the seventy-seventh anniversary of her birth. Mrs. Moore had a slight attack of apoplexy some time ago, and did not fully recover, but her condition was not such as to give her family special alarm; and it was a great shock to the household when, a short time before her death, her labored breathing attracted attention. Messengers were despatched for the physician of the family and her relatives in Elizabeth; but she had passed away before their arrival.

Mrs. Moore was for many years conspicuous in this city for her charitable works. She was a prominent member of Christ Church and active in the various societies connected with it. She was for a long time connected with the management of the Home for Aged Women. In the woman's work in aid of the Elizabeth Hospital Mrs Moore rendered valuable service, and when Mrs. Blake's munificent gift of the Memorial for Women was made she was one of the first of the ladies to associate herself with Mrs. Blake in the formation of the Cribside, and was the First Vice-president of the association at the time of her death. During the dedicatory services Mrs Moore was unable to be in attendance, and was represented by her daughter, Mrs. Willis, who assisted Mrs Blake in the reception of the visitors.

Mrs. Moore leaves four sons and five daughters. The sons are Thomas and James H. Moore of Elizabeth, John R. Moore, residing in Brooklyn, and Charles K. Moore at Fanwood. The daughters are Miss Anna Moore, Mrs Susan W. Lewis, residing at Newport, R I; Mrs. Blanchard Foegate, Plainfield; Mrs Charles J. Willis and Mrs. John F Odiorne of Elizabeth.

Fanwood.

A large and interested congregation filled the beautiful Church of All Saints Sunday morning. Rector True announced that the Bishop of the Diocese would mak his annual visitation to the the parish next Sunday morning, Trinity Sunday, at the usual hour 10:45. The congregation were suddened by the intelligence that our genial justice, Charles K. Moore, had sustained the loss of his estimable mother who died suddenly at Elizabeth, on Sunday morning. Extensive preparations are being made by the Ladies Aid Society for their bazar of the holidays to be held on Thursday and Friday of this week. Stages will run between the depot and the hall to meet all the evening trains to and from Plainfield and Westfield, on both days, to accomodate those friends of the parish who may desire to attend the bazar. It is earnestly hoped that the effort of the Ladies Society to increase the working funds of the church will be crowned with large success.

Senator Adrain Leads to Victory.

The Hinchcliffe bill to take the publication of the laws away from the newspapers was killed today in the Senate.

Senator Adrain vigorously opposed the measure, and made a manly and masterful speech for the press of the State. Senator Winton also spoke ag inst the bill. Only four others could then be mustered for it.

Bedlam Let Loose.

The first rehearsal of "Bedlam Let Loose", the one-act comedy to be given by Miantonomoh Tribe May 23, was held in Red Men's Hall last night. William A Westphal, stage manager, assigned the roles and exhibited the costumes. A final and full dress rehearsal is announced for next Monday evening.

It cures Colds, Coughs, Sore Throat, Croup, Influenza, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis and Asthma. A certain cure for Consumption in first stages, and a sure relief in advanced stages. Use at once. You will see the excellent effect after taking the first dose. Sold by dealers everywhere. Large bottles 50 cents and $1.00.

The Spring House Cleaning Wisely urged by the BOARD OF HEALTH is not complete without a proper use of DISINFECTANTS. But, in choosing these, do not be misled into paying fancy prices for "patent" specialties. Common lime is better than any of them for damp cellars and stables. For vaults, drains, cess pools, the best and cheapest disinfectant is COPPERAS, supplied by us by the pound or barrel at low rates. But for use in the house, in the plumbing, in kitchen sinks, in closets, for purifying the air of sick rooms, deodorizing offensive discharges—in short, for all purposes of a household disinfectant, nothing can excel the powerful solution of chlorides made and sold by us for 15 years under the name of REYNOLDS'S ODORLESS DISINFECTANT. Quart bottles 25c. To be diluted for use according to directions on label.

Still Alarm.

The Truck and the Chief's wagon went out last evening in answer to a still alarm.

The firemen easily extinguished flames in a chimney in the house of Thomas J Hughes, 358 East Second street. The occupants of the house had been working a short time, but could do but little without ladders with which to reach the roof.

Can't Foot the Red Men.

Dancing was an extra attraction at the Red Men's fair last night. Each dancer was marked by a bit of red baby-ribbon, and a number of young men got bits of similar material and tried to save money, but the color did n't match the official badge, and the scheme was detected.

NOTICE.

Notice is hereby given that a meeting of the stockholders of the Music Hall Association of Plainfield will be held in the parlors of Stillman Music Hall on West Front street in the city of Plainfield New Jersey, on Monday, the 18th day of June, eighteen hundred and ninety-four, at 2 o'clock p m., to take action upon the following resolution of the Board of Directors of said Association, which said resolution was adopted by unanimous vote of the Directors at their meeting held May 14 1894

Resolved, That in the judgment of this Board it is advisable and most for the benefit of the Music Hall Association of Plainfield tha the same should be forthwith dissolved, and to that end it is ordered that a meeting of the stockholders be held on Monday, the eighteenth day of June, eighteen hundred and ninety-four, at 2 o'clock p m, in the parlors of Stillman Music Hall, Plainfield, New Jersey, to take action upon this resolution; and further that the secretary forthwith give notice of said meeting and of the adoption of this resolution, with a notice of its adoption, in The Daily Press, a newspaper published in Plainfield, New Jersey, for at least four weeks once a week, successively, and by mailing a written or printed copy of the same to each and every stockholder of this Association in the United States"

WOMAN SUFFRAGE MUST COME.

Dr. Lewis Pleads for the Day When Mentality, and Not Sex Shall Enfranchise Voters.

Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis addressed the Y's in their rooms this afternoon on the subject of Woman Suffrage. It was the first time in Plainfield that he had ever publicly expressed his opinion of the movement. The ideas he advanced were, in short, as follows:

The abstract right to vote belongs to women as well as to men; but the ideal arrangement would be to give it to men and women of judgment and character, and to refuse it to those of low intelligence and morals. Education is a convenient political measure of intelligence. Not sex, but fitness, should govern the granting of suffrage.

Voting is equally a right and a duty. To give such a valuable franchise to males alone and that without regard to qualifications simply, is n't decent government. The country is in great danger as the result. It is a question whether any improvement would be brought about at the present time by the adding of the woman's vote. It might be well to try it.

In the development of government, power has been gained by strength and force alone. The monarchy was evolved, and it took centuries for people to become educated up to even giving suffrage to men, and the right is denied to millions now. It may be feared that the country would swamp sooner with the vote of the women, but the better class of the female voters will join the reformers among the men and strengthen both divisions.

From regarding simply the question of brute force man's ideas have grown until now the broader opinion is that ability to vote should be considered. There are hundreds in Plainfield who know nothing concerning the laws that govern them and the underlying principles, men ignorant and men from the old world filled with a hatred of all government. The line should be drawn between the men and women who are well informed and moral and their opposites.

This stand is being recognized in a way. Laws have been made barring out the convict and the illiterate, but practical reform on the same platform from which these rules arose has not begun. Woman suffrage must come, as will a revision of existing rules on a basis of education and character.

PERILS OF STAGE LIFE.

Property-Man Mattox Just Misses a Plunge to Death from Music Hall Roof.

When Stage Manager W. R. Mattox went into Music Hall and saw a quantity of plaster on the floor in the centre of the middle aisle, he was surprised; and when he looked up and beheld a pair of human legs dangling through a hole in the ceiling and kicking vigorously about, he was alarmed.

It was a long trip for him to climb up into the dark air-chamber overhead the auditorium, and when he got there he found his son Harry Mattox, property-man of the theatre, ready to drop from exhaustion.

And to drop was death, for the fall would carry him through the huge central chandelier to the floor.

Harry had been groping his way over the beams when he slipped, and his legs shot through the plastering. He threw out his arms instinctively, and clutched the two beams between which he had fallen, thus saving himself from the terrible plunge at that dizzy height.

He shouted for help, but none came, and his grip was fast failing when his father rescued him.

POTTERS WIN AT THE OPENING.

Alex. Muir Sets the Pace for Bowlers on the Manhattan Alleys.

Frank Linke opened his new Manhattan alleys last night. They adjoin the Somerset street wine room which he has sold to Jacob Hipp of Raritan. The game was between the Potters and the Scotts, and interested a large crowd. Alex. Muir, of Potters, was high man with the score of 203. He made three strikes on the wind-up.

The score:

| POTTERS. | | SCOTTS. | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Babcock | 156 | Suthpen | 101 |
| Shirley | 118 | Biddle | 130 |
| Mattox | 99 | Pope | 119 |

Where to Satisfy Your Inner Wants.

Man's first question is "Where can I eat?" and in Plainfield he finds that question satisfactorily answered in McVey's restaurant, the fine newly equipped establishment on North avenue.

McVey's enjoys not only a local but a State and metropolitan popularity. This is proved by the way that sojourners from the trains and wheelmen from the roads all centre on McVey's as their house of refreshment.

Everything is clean and wholesome in McVey's. The dishes one wishes are quickly placed before him, in most excellent service. The surroundings add to the pleasure of a meal. The restaurant is handsomely decorated and furnished, and the tables are arranged and dressed most pleasingly.

Mr. McVey, the hustling and popular proprietor, is constantly adding improvements, keeping up with the times. He now plans to put in a boiler, engine and dynamo, to furnish his own electric light and power. He will equip the large dining room with electric fans to keep the atmosphere always fresh and cool.

McVey's is the restaurant of Plainfield.

Good Time and Good Cause.

The columns of The Press recorded the great triumph of "The Grey Mare", and many who failed to attend regretted their loss. Now all these can go, besides the many others who are eager to witness a repetition, for the performance is to be repeated in the Casino Thursday evening, May 17. The Boys Club is the beneficiary.

PREPARING FOR COMMENCEMENT.

Committees Appointed to Award Prizes, and an Orator Chosen.

The Board of Education met last night. There were present members Finch, Lovell, Jenkins, and later, Dr. Probasco. Mr. Finch was made Chairman because of the unavoidable absence of the president.

After the bills were passed upon Collector Johnson reported $852 95 taxes collected in April. A request from O. B. Leonard, Secretary of the Board of Health, that city water be used in the schools, was referred to the Committee on Buildings. To the same committee with power was referred the petition of the High School Lyceum Association for the erection of a shed in the school yard for the storage of bicycles in rainy weather. The committee was also authorized to buy desks for a new class-room in the Irving School.

The Superintendent of Schools was authorized to purchased a $60 typewriter for use in his room. It was decided to arrange with the Mayor for the appointment of a special policeman to be paid only for services rendered as truant officer.

Dr. Probasco was appointed a committee on engaging Music Hall for commencement the evening of June 21, E. L. Finch on music, Dr. Jenkins on police, Superintendent Maxson on programmes and tickets, Clerk Clark on ushers and ribboning hall.

The following were appointed to serve in awarding prizes:

Mathematics—W. M. Stillman.
English Composition—Mason W. Tyler, Charles J. Fisk, Dr. W. H. Murray.
Penmanship—Thomas C. Pollock, Dr. A. H. Lewis, Frank W. Runyon.
Rev. Dr. Wayland, of Philadelphia, will make the address to the graduates.

PLAINFIELD CHRISTIANS AT WORK.

Even to Far-Off China This Society Has Extended Its Helping Hand.

The thirteenth annual reports of the Ladies Christian Work Society, read in Trinity Church Sunday, are a gratifying record of accomplishments. This society is a most admirable auxiliary to the church, and its achievements are eminently worthy of this public record:

SECRETARY'S REPORT.

Another milestone passed, another year gone by, and the Ladies Christian Work Society meets on its thirteenth anniversary. Our regular work has been carried on as usual. Immediately on the election of officers last May, a meeting of the Executive Board was called, and the following committees appointed: Missionary, Sewing, Poor, Visiting, and Sinking Fund.

The Missionary Committee has collected during the year $9620, which has been equally divided between the two Boards. A special contribution of $45 was made, as a Columbian offering, to school work in China, also a special offering of $5 to the Columbian Church.

Last Fall, a box valued at $162 07, of which the King's Daughters gave $17.52 and to which the Junior Endeavor society also contributed, was sent to a western missionary. The ladies felt amply repaid on receiving the letter of warmest thanks sent the society by this missionary's family.

Our Poor Committee has had more calls on it than usual this year, but we are thankful to say that no one who could be reached has been allowed to want. Five dinners were sent out at Thanksgiving. Provisions valued at $30 were sent in at Christmas, and most judiciously distributed by this committee.

The Visiting Committee has called on the strangers who have come among us, and tried to make them feel at home with us. Many sick have been visited, and in all ways this committee has worked most faithfully.

The Sinking Fund Committee has realized, from the teas given during the Winter, the sum of $187.14.

The sewing meetings have been regularly held, and besides being enjoyable social occasions, have been occasions of good and profit, as in working for others we feel that we receive the greater blessing ourselves.

Last October, Miss Mary O. Duryee, Secretary of the Woman's Board of Foreign Missions for China, gave a talk in the lecture-room of the church on school work in China. This talk was very interesting and instructive, giving the society an insight into this branch of the work not before possessed.

Our average attendance during the year has been 25. We have an enrollment of 52 active and four honorary members. Three have withdrawn and four new ones been added. One dear sister has been called from us by death. We feel that of each committee and each member it can be said "Well done". All have worked together cheerfully and harmoniously, showing that it was for the Master, and they but humble instruments in His hands.

God grant that as the years go on this society may also go on, growing to greater proportions and working more good each year.

Respectfully submitted,
Mrs. D. D. NEWELL,
Secretary.

Stayed from Church to Do His Washing.

The reason why a prominent business man was missed from church Sunday is because while his wife was putting on her gloves he rested on the porch in a chair whose Spring coat of paint was still fresh.

Keep Off the Grass.

Governor Werts has approved a new statute which provides a penalty of $100 for trespassing upon any field where there is displayed a "No Trespassing" sign or where it is forbidden.

Getting Ready for Water.

Several residents on Elmwood place are having water pipes laid from their houses to the curb. This is done so that when the water is put in the street everything will be all ready to connect.

THE WEST END COFFERS.

Opportunity to Enjoy Life and Help Defend Somerville's Assaults.

It used to be that the name West End aroused scorn and hatred in Plainfield, because it meant Somerville's base-ball team, but now Plainfield has a West End nine of its own, and that nine is going to strive to uphold Plainfield's honors on the diamond against Somerville this year. The Plainfield West Ends want funds, and for their benefit a base-ball entertainment is to be given in Reform Hall, May 22.

The programme includes a sketch "How to square accounts with your laundress", in which the cast will be:

|---|---|
| Whittington Widgetts | Walter Mague |
| Barney Twill | W. Nicholson |
| Jacob Brown | Alex Muir |
| Mary White | David Thompson |
| Mlle. Cheri Bounce | James Penny |
| Postman and waiter | Walter Higgins |

Another sketch will be "Fun in a Gymnasium", the characters being:

| | |
|---|---|
| Prof. Stillboy | David Thompson |
| Lord Fitzpoodle | John Thompson |
| Lord Fitznoodle | Joseph Miles |
| Ben | James Penny |

"The dentist's clerk; or, pulling teeth by steam" is to be rendered as follows:

| | |
|---|---|
| Dr. Pull | Wm. Leland |
| Julius | David Thompson |
| Katy | James Penny |
| Bobby Brown | Albert McComas |
| Charles Henry Pumpkin | Walter Mague |
| Pat O'Gallagher | Wm. Nicholson |
| Hans Von Schneuffer | Harry Turner |

The musical portion of the programme consists of solos by Harry Turner, Fred Bowden, Wm. Nicholson, and quartette songs by Wm. Tallamy, Bert Tallamy, W. Leland and Harry Yaeger, and selections by the Higham Bros. Edward Wolf will give Irish and Dutch impersonations.

NEWS OF NEAR NEIGHBORS.

Dunellen and New Market.

A very pleasant evening was spent at the Park Hotel last Friday night, when the Misses Maier entertained a number of their friends. Music and dancing were indulged in until midnight, when a collation was served.

Miss Mabel Burniston is visiting Mrs. Wm. J. Hamilton in Hackensack.

Invitations are out for the marriage ceremony of Miss Fannie Humpston of Dunellen to Charles Frederick Hodge of Somerville, to take place Tuesday afternoon, May 22, at 3, at the home of the bride, 321 West Front street.

The operation performed on the face of Miss Lena Maier was a decided success, and the sore is rapidly healing.

Miss Kate Conley of Glen Gardner has been spending a few days at the Park Hotel with Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Conley.

The New Market Episcopal Church will have a strawberry festival and entertainment tomorrow evening.

Friendship Cornet Band of New Market will give a concert in Cranford tomorrow night.

Miss Irene Day of New Market has purchased a handsome new wheel.

Much Music by Methodists.

The programme for the Dunellen M. E. Sunday-school entertainment Thursday night is as follows:

PART I.

Chorus—Old Folks at Home..Stephen C. Foster
Vocal quartette—O Hush Thee My Baby,
Mr. and Mrs. Kinsie, Mr. Barnes, Mrs. Nelson
Piano solo—Don Giovanni,
Mrs. Rae E. Phillips

Miss Mary D. Winner
Banjo solo—High School Cadets,
George Jenkins
(with guitar accompaniment by H. Bacher.)
Flute, violin and piano trio—Holiday Sounds,
Misses Fisher, Nelson and Phillips

PART II.

Piano solo—Fifth Nocturne,
Miss Rae E. Phillips
Basso solo—Better than Love's Song,
Mr. Barnes
Banjo solo—March from Wang,
George Jenkins
(guitar accompaniment by H. Bacher.)
Recitation.....Mrs. Harry Terry
Soprano solo—Il Bacio...Miss Mary D. Winner
Vocal duet.....Mr. and Mrs. Kinsie.

You Read It in The Daily Press Alone.

It is seldom that a novel by a new author scores an instantaneous and unqualified success, but that is the case with Beatrice Harraden's "Ships That Pass in the Night". It aroused an immediate sensation in the literary world, and is now the talk of both continents. "Ships That Pass in the Night" is a character study of singular strength and power. It interests the reader at once and sets him to thinking. Therein lies the potency of Beatrice Harraden's philosophy.

Died from Diphtheria.

The two-and-a-half-year-old child of John Hensey, of 746 East Second street, died yesterday morning from diphtheria. It was dead when Dr. O. L. Jenkins reached the house.

Mr. Hensey's two other small children are ill with the same disease. The symptoms were not easily distinguishable from those of measles. Quarantine has been declared on the house. The body was buried at 9 this morning in the First Presbyterian Cemetery.

Sale of a Handsome Residence.

Villa Sans Souci, the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Lisignolo at East Front street and Netherwood avenue, was sold under Chancery execution, in the City Hotel today. The property was bought by Mrs. Thomas Chaytor, of New York, for $11 500, about $1 500 above the amount of the mortgage held by the purchaser.

Mr. and Mrs. Lissignolo have already made plans to go to Brooklyn, and will soon remove there.

Irish-Italian Imbroglio.

Two laborers fought on the new bicycle track this morning at 9. One was Irish, the other Italian. The quarrel began from the desire of each to have a certain load of dirt dumped in a particular place, convenient for himself.

Each scored a knockdown and one of them lost a shirt-sleeve. Matters looked serious, but finally the row ceased and work was commenced again.

Looking for Her Daughter.

A woman from Somerville was in Plainfield yesterday looking for her daughter, who has been living with a family here. When she called at the house she was told that she could not see her. The woman started in search of a policeman to assist her in an attempt to secure her child.

Crippled His Wheel.

Wm. J. Stephenson went to the opening of Frank Linke's alleys last night and locked his bicycle when he left it in the gutter. When he came out shortly afterward the lamp was gone. His progress through the city was somewhat slow in consequence.

IT POPS.

JOHN CAN RIDE FREE.

He Got the the Prize Commutation Ticket, and Others Were Lucky With Him.

After an extra evening of success, Paugh-Caugh-Naugh-Sinque's fair in Central Hall has closed. The profits will probably reach $600.

The hall was crowded last night, and dancing did not stop until 3 this morning. A number of articles were raffled off. John Mortimer, with ticket 357, won the yearly commutatation ticket to New York, for which 117 chances had been sold at $1. Other prize-winners were:

Mrs. J. T. Odam, large Japanese vase; Mrs. V. W. Nash, silk dress pattern; Mrs Clarence Leland, antique-oak table; Henry Windham, whalebone whip; Miss Minnie Smith, ring; Mrs. J. A. Blatz, cushion; Steven Schleif, whip.

All of the sub-committees whose names have been published, have worked well; the women have been interested; the members of the young tribe have upheld its reputation; and the public has taken kindly to the Red Men. Of course the General Committee was the busiest of all, and of its members none worked harder than Wm. S. Bullock.

NOT MUCH NEED NOW.

Charity Council Postpones Regular Meetings Till Fall.

A regular meeting of the council of the Citizens Organized Aid Association was held in the parlors of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian Church last night.

The usual reports of the officers and of the committees were made. The treasurer reported a balance of $201, all the bills having been paid.

The work of the Association was reviewed and several individual cases were discussed. It was agreed that the organization had done a very useful work, and while the improvement in the condition of the poor was such that there was far less pressure on the charity organizations, it was wise to be ready to resume active work in the Fall.

Accordingly, it was decided to retain the present office in the Taylor Building and to continue the routine work of the society during the Summer. The council will not meet, however, except at the call of the officers. Meanwhile the Executive Committee will manage affairs.

Young Ladies to Usher.

The stereopticon lecture of Mrs. E. B Horton in Trinity Reformed Church Thursday evening will be illustrated by lantern views thrown on the canvas by Messrs. J. Hervey Doane and Harry Coward, members of the Camera Club. No admission fee will be charged to this interesting lecture, but an offering will be acceptable at the close of the lecture. The young ladies will usher. The entertainment is given under the auspices of the Christian Work Society of the church

A Tribute to Plainfield Amateurs.

Eugene Rose, the leader of the Lyceum Theatre orchestra that was heard at "The Grey Mare" two weeks ago, was one of the most enthusiastic of the spectators in cooing "behind" after the third act he exclaimed "Call that amateur acting! I've seen many a first night at the Lyceum that was not half as smooth!"

To Sell Music Hall.

The stockholders of Music Hall last night re-elected the old board of officers and set June 18 as the date for winding up the affairs of the association, as published in the advertising columns of The Press today.

A Stranger Uppressed.

A newcomer from New York city tried to manage the crowd in Central Hall last night and incidentally started a row with a Plainfield acquaintance. The quiet of the evening was not long disturbed.

Student Taylor of Plainfield.

ITHACA, N. Y., May 15.—A press representative interviewed Messrs. Tompkins & Lacey, attorneys for Sophomore Taylor, as to whether they would take any further action to keep Taylor out of jail now that the general term has sustained Judge Forbes' conviction of him for contempt of court. Mr. Tompkins said: "Taylor has been rusticating at Buffalo, and we have telegraphed him to return to Ithaca. As to whether he will go back to jail or not, I cannot say. We are endeavoring to get a stay until we can take the case to the court of appeals. If we cannot get the stay of course he will be returned to jail, as he is under $2,000 bonds to serve the balance of his term. He was sentenced for 30 days and had already served 15 days when released by Judge Walter Lloyd Smith's order. This would leave 15 days more for him to serve." The grand jury will meet next Thursday to further investigate the citizens case. It is believed the decision in the Taylor case will have an important bearing on their action.

MRS. IDA CASLER.

Her Advice to Over-Ambitious Women.

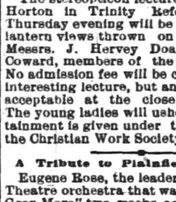
[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

Mrs. Ida Casler, of 126 Olive Street, Syracuse, N.Y., believes that there is no amount of money large enough to equal a good, sound, healthy constitution.



Here is a history of her case:—

She was so ill with falling of the womb and leucorrhœa that she could not stand. She was attended by several doctors without benefit, and was completely discouraged.

One evening she heard what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had done for other women, and decided to try it, together with Mrs. Pinkham's Sanative Wash, and it is well she did, for she says:—

"I am now well and strong. I am not troubled with either trouble, and all owing to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"If more women would use the Compound there would be less suffering in the world. Many women bring on their troubles by over-work. Remember good healt', will outbid riches every time."

CHAPTER I.
A NEWCOMER.

"Yes, indeed," remarked one of the guests at the English table, "yes, indeed, we start life thinking that we shall build a great cathedral, a crowning glory to architecture, and we end by contriving a mud hut."

"I am glad you think so well of human nature," said the Disagreeable Man, suddenly looking up from the newspaper which he always read during mealtime. "I should be more inclined to say that we end by being content to dig a hole and get into it, like the earthmen."

A silence followed these words. The English community at that end of the table was struck with astonishment at hearing the Disagreeable Man speak. The few sentences he had spoken during the last four years at Petershof were on record. This was decidedly the longest of them all.

"He is going to speak again," whispered beautiful Mrs. Reffold to her neighbor. The Disagreeable Man once more looked up from his newspaper.

"Please pass me the Yorkshire relish," he said in his rough way to a girl sitting next to him.

The spell was broken, and the conversation started afresh. But the girl who had passed the Yorkshire relish sat silent and listless, her food untouched and her wine untasted. She was small and thin. Her face looked haggard. She was a newcomer and had indeed arrived at Petershof only two hours before the table d'hote bell rang. But there did not seem to be any nervous shrinking in her manner nor any shyness at having to face the 250 guests of the Kurhaus. She seemed rather to be unaware of their presence, or if aware of certainly indifferent to the scrutiny under which she was being placed. She was recalled to reality by the voice of the Disagreeable Man. She did not hear what he said, but she mechanically stretched out her hand and passed him the mustard pot.

"Is that what you asked for?" she said half dreamily, "or was it the water bottle?"

"You are rather deaf, I should think," said the Disagreeable Man placidly. "I only remarked that it was a pity you were not eating your dinner. Perhaps the scrutiny of the 250 guests in this civilized place is a vexation to you."

"I did not know they were scrutinizing," she answered, "and even if they are what does it matter to me? I am sure I am quite too tired to care."

"Why have you come here?" asked the Disagreeable Man suddenly.

"Probably for the same reason as yourself," she said—"to get better or well."

"You won't get better," he answered cruelly. "I know your type well. You burn yourselves out quickly. And, my God, how I envy you!"

"So you have pronounced my doom," she said, looking at him intently. Then she laughed. But there was no merriment in the laughter.

"Listen," she said as she bent nearer to him. "Because you are hopeless it does not follow that you should try to make others hopeless too. You have drunk deep of the cup of poison. I can see that. To hand the cup on to others is the part of a coward."

She walked past the English table and the Polish table, and so out of the Kurhaus dining hall.

CHAPTER II.
CONTAINS A FEW DETAILS.

In an old secondhand bookshop in London an old man sat reading Gibbon's "History of Rome." He did not put down his book when the postman brought him a letter. He just glanced indifferently at the letter and impatiently at the postman. Zerviah Holme did not like to be interrupted when he was reading Gibbon, and as he was always reading Gibbon an interruption was always regarded by him as an insult.

About two hours afterward he opened the letter and learned that his niece, Bernardine, had arrived safely in Petershof, and that she intended to get better and come home strong. He tore up the letter and instinctively turned to the photograph on the mantelpiece. It was the picture of a face young and yet old, sad and yet with possibilities of merriment, thin and drawn and almost wrinkled and with piercing eyes which, even in the dull lifelessness of the photograph, seemed to be burning themselves away. Not a pleasing nor a good face, yet intensely pathetic because of its undisguised harassment.

Zerviah looked at it for a moment.

"She has never been much to either of us," he said to himself. "And yet when Malvina was alive I used to think that she was hard on Bernardine. I believe I said so once or twice. But Malvina had her own way of looking at things. Well, that is over now."

He then, with characteristic speed, dismissed all thoughts which did not relate to Roman history, and the remembrance of Malvina, his wife, and Bernardine, his niece, took up an accustomed position in the background of his mind.

Bernardine had suffered a cheerless childhood in which dolls and toys took no leading part. She had no affection to bestow on any doll, nor any woolly lamb, nor apparently on any human person, unless perhaps there was the possibility of a friendly inclination toward Uncle Zerviah, who would not have understood the value of any deeper feeling and did not therefore call the child cold hearted and unresponsive, as he might well have done.

This she certainly was, judged by the standard of other children, but then no softening influences had been at work during her tenderest years. Aunt Malvina knew as much about sympathy as she did about the properties of an ellipse, and even the fairies had failed to win little Bernardine. At first they tried with loving patience what they might do for her. They came out of their books and danced and sang to her and whispered sweet stories to her at twilight, the fairies' own time. But she would have none of them for all their gentle persuasion. So they gave up trying to please her and left her, as they had found her, loveless. What can be said of a childhood which even the fairies have failed to touch with the warm glow of affection?

Such a little restless spirit striving to express itself now in this direction, now in that, yet always actuated by the same constant force, the desire for work, Bernardine seemed to have no special wish to be useful to others. She seemed just to have a natural tendency to work even as others have a natural tendency to play. She was always in earnest. Life for little Bernardine meant something serious.

Then the years went by. She grew up and filled her life with many interests and ambitions. She was at least a worker if nothing else. She had always been a diligent scholar, and now she took her place as an able teacher. She was self reliant and perhaps somewhat conceited. But at least Bernardine the young woman had learned something which Bernardine the young child had not been able to learn—she learned how to smile. It took her about six and twenty years to learn. Still some people take longer than that. In fact, many never learn. This is a brief summary of Bernardine Holme's past.

Then one day when she was in the full swing of her many engrossing occupations—teaching, writing articles for newspapers, attending socialistic meetings and taking part in political discussions—she was essentially a "modern product," this Bernardine—one day she fell ill. She lingered in London for some time, and then she went to Petershof.

CHAPTER III.
MRS. REFFOLD LEARNS HER LESSON.

Petershof was a winter resort for consumptive patients, though indeed many people who simply needed the change of a bracing climate went there to spend a few months and came away wonderfully better for the mountain air. This is what Bernardine Holme hoped to do. She was broken down in every way, but it was thought that a prolonged stay in Petershof might help her back to a reasonable amount of health, or at least prevent her from slipping into further decline. She had come alone because she had no relations except that old uncle and no money to pay any friend who might have been willing to come with her. But she probably cared very little, and the morning after her arrival she strolled out by herself, investigating the place where she was about to spend six months. She was dragging herself along when she met the Disagreeable Man. She stopped him. He was not accustomed to be stopped by any one, and he looked rather astonished.

"You were not very cheering last night," she said to him.

"I believe I am not generally considered to be lively," he answered as he knocked the snow off his boot.

"Still, I am sorry I spoke to you as I did," she went on frankly. "It was foolish of me to mind what you said."

He made no reference to his own remark and was passing on his way again when he turned back and walked with her.

"I have been here nearly seven years," he said, and there was a ring of sadness in his voice as he spoke, which he immediately corrected. "If you want to know anything about the place, I can tell you. If you are able to walk, I can show you some lovely spots, where you will not be bothered with people. I can take you to a snow fairyland. If you are sad and disappointed, you will find shining comfort there. It is not all sadness in Petershof. In the silent snow forests, if you dig the snow away, you will find the tiny buds nestling in their white nursery. If the sun does not dazzle your eyes, you may always see the great mountains piercing the sky. These wonders have been a happiness to me. You are not too ill but that they may be a happiness to you also."

"Nothing can be much of a happiness to me," she said half to herself, and her lips quivered. "I have had to give up so much—all my work, all my ambitions."

"You are not the only one who has had to do that," he said sharply. "Why make a fuss? Things arrange themselves, and eventually we adjust ourselves to the new arrangement. A great deal of caring and grieving, phase one; still more caring and grieving, phase two; less caring and grieving, phase three; no further feeling whatsoever, phase four. Mercifully I am at phase four. You are at phase one. Make a quick journey over the stages."

He turned and left her, and she strolled along, thinking of his words, wondering how long it would take her to arrive at his indifference. She had always looked upon indifference as paralysis of the soul, and paralysis meant death—nay, was worse than death. And here was this man who had obviously suffered both mentally and physically telling her that the only sensible course was to learn not to care. How could she learn not to care? All her life long she had studied and worked and cultivated herself in every direction in the hope of being able to take a high place in literature, or, in any case, to do something in life distinctly better than what other people did. When everything was coming near to her grasp, when there seemed a fair chance of realizing her ambitions, she had suddenly fallen ill, broken up so entirely in every way that those who knew her when she was well could scarcely recognize her now that she was ill. The doctors spoke of an overstrained nervous system—the pestilence of these modern days. They spoke of rest, change of work and scene, bracing air. She might regain her vitality. She might not. Those who had played themselves out must pay the penalty.

She was thinking of her whole history, pitying herself profoundly, coming to the conclusion, after true human fashion, that she was the worst used person on earth, and that no one but herself knew what disappointed ambitions were—she was thinking of all this and looking profoundly miserable and martyrlike when some one called her by her name. She looked round and saw one of the English ladies belonging to the Kurhaus. Bernardine had noticed her the previous night. She seemed in capital spirits and had three or four admirers waiting on her very words. She was a tall, handsome woman, dressed in a superb fur trimmed cloak, a woman of splendid bearing and address. Bernardine looked a contemptible little piece of humanity beside her. Some such impression conveyed itself to the two men who were walking with Mrs. Reffold. They looked at the one woman and then at the other and smiled at each other, as men do smile on such occasions.

"I am going to speak to this little thing," Mrs. Reffold had said to her two companions before they came near Bernardine. "I must find out who she is and where she comes from. And, fancy, she has come quite alone. I have inquired. How hopelessly out of fashion she dresses, and what a hat!"

"I should not take the trouble to speak to her," said one of the men. "She may fasten herself onto you. You know what a bore that is."

"Oh, I can easily snub any one if I wish," replied Mrs. Reffold disdainfully.

So she hastened up to Bernardine and held out her well gloved hand.

"I had not a chance of speaking to you last night, Miss Holme," she said. "You retired so early. I hope you have rested after your journey. You seemed quite worn out."

"Thank you," said Bernardine, looking admiringly at the beautiful woman and envying her, just as all plain women envy their handsome sisters.

"You are not alone, I suppose!" continued Mrs. Reffold.

"Yes, quite alone," answered Bernardine.

"But you are evidently acquainted with Mr. Allitsen, your neighbor at table," said Mrs. Reffold. "So you will not feel quite lonely here. It is a great advantage to have a friend at a place like this."

"I never saw him before last night," said Bernardine.

"Is it possible?" said Mrs. Reffold in her pleasantest voice. "Then you have made a triumph of the Disagreeable Man. He very rarely deigns to talk with any of us. He does not even appear to see us. He sits quietly and reads. It would be interesting to hear what his conversation is like. I should be quite amused to know what you did talk about."

"I dare say you would," said Bernardine quietly.

Then Mrs. Reffold, wishing to screen her inquisitiveness, plunged into a description of Petershof life, speaking enthusiastically about everything except the scenery, which she did not mention. After a time she ventured to begin once more taking soundings. But somehow or other those bright eyes of Bernardine, which looked at her so searchingly, made her a little nervous and perhaps a little indiscreet.

"Your father will miss you," she said tentatively.

"I should think probably not," answered Bernardine. "One is not easily missed, you know." There was a twinkle in Bernardine's eye as she added, "He is probably occupied with other things."

"What is your father?" asked Mrs. Reffold in her most coaxing tones.

"I don't know what he is now," answered Bernardine placidly. "But he was a genius. He is dead."

Mrs. Reffold gave a slight start, for she began to feel that this insignificant little person was making fun of her. This would never do and before witnesses too. So she gathered together her best resources and said:

"Dear me, how very unfortunate! A genius too! Death is indeed cruel. And here one sees so much of it that unless one learns to steel one's heart one becomes melancholy. Ah, it is indeed sad to see all this suffering!" (Mrs. Reffold herself had quite succeeded in steeling her heart against her own invalid husband.) She then gave an account of several bad cases of consumption, not forgetting to mention two instances of suicide which had lately taken place in Petershof.

"One gentleman was a Russian," she said. "Fancy coming all the way from Russia to this little out of the world place! But people come from the uttermost ends of the earth, though of course there are many Londoners here. I suppose you are from London?"

"I am not living in London now," said Bernardine cautiously.

"But you know it without doubt," continued Mrs. Reffold. "There are several Kensington people here. You may meet some friends—indeed in our hotel there are two or three families from Lexham Gardens."

Bernardine smiled a little viciously, looked first at Mrs. Reffold's two companions with an amused sort of indulgence and then at the lady herself.

She paused a moment and then said:

"Have you asked all the questions you wish to ask? And if so, may I ask one of you? Where does one get the best tea?"

Mrs. Reffold gave an inward gasp, but pointed gracefully to a small confectionery shop on the other side of the road. Mrs. Reffold did everything gracefully.

Bernardine thanked her, crossed the road and passed into the shop.

"Now I have taught her a lesson not to interfere with me," said Bernardine to herself. "How beautiful she is!"

Mrs. Reffold and her two companions went silently on their way. At last the silence was broken.

"Well, I'm blessed!" said the taller of the two, lighting a cigar.

"So am I," said the other, lighting his cigar too.

"Those are precisely my own feelings," remarked Mrs. Reffold.

But she had learned her lesson.

SALT-RHEUM; FLESH CRACKED OPEN AND BLED!

Miss LUTIE CLARK, River Falls, Pierce County, Wisconsin, writes:

"It gives me pleasure to express my faith in the virtue of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Having suffered for three years from salt-rheum, and after having been unsuccessfully treated by a good physician, I began the use of the 'Discovery.' The humor was in my hands. I was obliged to keep a covering on them for months at a time, changing and covering morning and night. The stinging, burning and itching sensation would be so intense that at times it seemed as if I would go crazy. When I bent the fingers, the flesh would crack open and bleed. It is impossible for me to describe the intense pain and suffering which I endured night and day. After taking six bottles of the "Discovery" I was entirely cured.

THEY ALL SAY THE SAME.

Don't Hesitate, but Call and Be Convinced That Every Statement We Make is True.

To those who do not already know that there is established in Newark, at 105 Halsey street, a physician who stands in the foremost rank of his profession, who is indorsed by the leading colleges of the country and who can prove by witnesses right here in Newark (not by one, but by hundreds) that he has succeeded in curing cases that have been utterly given up by other physicians, and good ones, too. To those who do not these facts we state that any person, rich or poor, old or young, is welcome here and receive examination and advice free of charge.

Thousands praise the day they came to us for treatment. There is no guess work, no experimenting, no painful operation. No matter how difficult the case, no matter how much of the physician's time it may consume, the diagnosis will not only be thorough, it will be absolutely free. There is no taint of quackery or deception; no claim or statement is made that is not borne out by facts and living witnesses.

Mrs. Abby A. Ray, late of 86 Grove street, East Orange, who now lives at 400 Ellmore street, Escanaba, Mich., writes, under date of January 12: "The medicine arrived this morning and I am so glad it came. I am almost out, and it has helped me so much and I am so much pleased with its wonderful effort on my broken down system that I would like to testify to your great success in my case. I am feeling as well now, in fact better, than I had ever hoped to again."

This is one of many letters that we receive daily. We have the originals at our office and if you wish you may see them. Another thing: We never publish or reveal a patient's name unless they so desire.

A REMARKABLE CURE

MIDDLEBUSH, Somerset Co., N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For the past forty years I have been afflicted with bleeding piles. I suffered constant pain in the lower part of my body, but when I had an operation of the bowels the pain was perfectly terrible, and was most always attended with the loss of a large quantity of blood. My condition was complicated with prolapse of the rectum, which at first only made its appearance when I had a movement of the bowels, but at length the parts became so weakened that the protrusion took place while walking or stooping, or after the slightest exertion, and sometimes even while I was at rest. Whenever this happened it gave rise to the most agonizing pain, and felt as though something was pulling the life right out of me. In fact only those similarly situated can imagine the suffering and distress which I had to endure from day to day, and which made my life a terrible burden. Hearing of Dr. Lighthill's wonderful success in the cure of difficult chronic diseases, I placed myself under his care, and now I am proud and happy to say that, marvelous as it may seem, he effected a complete and radical cure in my case in every respect, and he performed this cure without any painful operation or preventing me from work. Since this terrible disease has been removed by Dr. Lighthill's skill I feel new life, and for the first time in forty years I feel once more what it is to be without daily pain, discomfort and distress. I am not a wealthy man, but no amount of money would tempt me to be put back in my former condition.

I make this public statement, not only from a deep and everlasting sense of gratitude to Dr. Lighthill, but also as a simple Christian duty to let the afflicted know where they can find a physician whose skill cannot be surpassed, and in whom implicit confidence can be placed.

H. VROOM.

A LOCAL ENDORSEMENT.

No. 188 Somerset st., Plainfield, N. J.

To the Residents of Plainfield, N. J.

Mr. H. Vroom, whose statement appears above, is a brother-in-law of mine. I personally know of his case and his suffering and also know the happy fact that to the surprise of himself and his friends, Dr. Lighthill effected a radical and permanent cure. His statement is true in every respect and does not say half enough in praise of Dr. Lighthill. Anyone who wishes this statement verified is at liberty to come and see me personally.

JOHN C. KINNEY.

BOSTON'S GREAT FIRE

About Twelve Acres of Territory Burned Over.

Financial Loss Not So Great as on Two Previous Occasions, But the Disaster Far More Appalling—All the Baseball Property, a Large School House Engine House, 164 Frame and 13 Brick Buildings in Ruins and 1,000 Families Rendered Homeless—The Fire Caused By Mischief and Carelessness and Gets Beyond Control Through Stupidity.

BOSTON, May 16.—Some small Roxbury boys set themselves up as rivals to Mrs. O'Leary's cow on the Boston baseball grounds yesterday afternoon and a result the city was visited by the biggest fire since Thanksgiving Day 1892, and a conflagration covering a greater area than any since the memorable one of 1872. While the financial loss is not a circumstance to that of either of the above mentioned fires, yet in less than three hours some twelve acres of territory were burned over. The baseball grand stand and bleachers, a large school house, and engine house, 164 wooden buildings and 13 brick buildings were burned and some 1,000 families rendered homeless. The loss is conservatively estimated at from $300,000 to $500,000, although one authority puts it at $1,000,000.

Indications are that the fire was caused by carelessness and mischief and became beyond control through stupidity.

There could not have been a better place to begin a blaze. The seats in the centre field had been torn down since last season and the only 25 cent seats left were those occupying a triangular position in the extreme right field. When these seats were completed there were left a great many shavings and loose pieces of wood. As it had not rained for some days, this spot furnished excellent ammunition for a fire.

The boys set the fire and getting scared ran away, and thus the flames got a good start.

An officer was told about the blaze and tried to pull away some boards, but those gave the flame the start it needed to make a conflagration. Then it took a long time to ring in the alarm and to turn on the water, so that it seemed all of 20 minutes between the first appearance of smoke and applying the first stream of water.

The second series of games between the Bostons and Baltimores had begun, before 5,500 spectators. But two and a half innings had been played and the Baltimores were to take their turn at the bat in the last part of the third inning, when the contest was interrupted by flames, which could be seen rising from the right-fied bleachers.

The occupants of the bleachers feeling the warmth under them jumped from their seats in wild amazement and tried to extinguish the flames by tearing the rubbish and scattering it as best they could, but the blaze refused to be extinguished and gathered headway with a persistency which surprised them, and in a few moments was exciting more interest than the national game.

After five or ten minutes of unavailing work someone suggested calling the fire department.

The first alarm was rung in at 4:17 P. M. This was followed by a second, third and a fourth at 4:45.

The department was slow in getting to work, and before anyone seemed to realize the danger the flames were beyond control. In fact, it was at first considered a joke.

The spectators began to get impatient that such a little flame should stop play, and impatiently cried: "Play ball, play ball."

With the rapidity of a prairie fire the flames rushed along.

The ball players ran out toward the scene, but it was not long before they were forced back. The flames had gained terrific headway and the spectacle, though awful, was most beautiful.

After having thoroughly found its way into the 25 cent seats the flames attacked the house outside the grounds on the east side and crawled along the fence. All this time there was nothing done to protect the fine grand stand. Not a line of hose was seen, not a drop of water to avert the threatened danger. Everybody was indignant that nothing was done to protect the splendid structure.

The heat was so intense that the spectators who had been driven into the left field corner began to make their way out of the grounds through a hole in the center field fence. Those who managed to get a view outside of the fence saw a magnificent sight as the massive towers tottered and fell.

Fifteen minutes after the fire was discovered the houses in the rear of the ball grounds were attacked, and within an hour the whole fence on the right-field side, all the seats on the bleachers, the grand stand and the ticket office, with all wooden structures contiguous, had been destroyed. The fire had also burned through to Tremont street and then proceeding southerly had taken all the wooden dwellings on Burke, Coventry and Berlin streets within its grasp.

Having practically consumed everything on the right hand side of Tremont street it leaped across to the other side of that thoroughfare and then proceeded with a swoop in the direction of Roxbury crossing. The northerly boundary of the fire was Benton street and its lateral boundaries were Cabot street on one side and the Providence railroad beyond the ball grounds on the other.

At 6 o'clock it had reached as far as Walpole and Stirling streets, and was burning as if not a drop of water had been put on it. The district was full of wooden houses and the indications then were that but few of those this side of Ruggles street would be left standing.

The sparks from the fire were flying all over the northly part of Roxbury, setting fire in many different localities adding to the terror and confusion which had been already engineered by the blaze from the central fire. At least fifty houses in the immediate vicinity of Walpole and Tremont streets had blazing roofs. The occupants climbed from the skylights with buckets of water to the roofs, but no sooner had they subdued a fire on one part than they discovered one in some other locality, and finally seeing that their efforts were fruitless they gave up and left their home to the fate of the oncoming flames.

When the houses on Berlin street back of the ball grounds began to go before the flames the scenes here beggared description. Children were crying for their mothers and mothers wailing for their offspring, and it was greatly feared that some of the young ones were lost in the flames.

A number of women fell on the street from sheer exhaustion and had to be carried into the various houses in the vicinity and physicians summoned. The streets were full of carts carrying off furniture and confusion reigned supreme.

The work of the department was complicated by the fact that half a dozen fire alarms were rung in from different parts of the city while the ball grounds fire was raging.

Before 6 o'clock help had been summoned from all cities and towns within a radius of 10 miles of Boston and at 6:15 the first out-of-town apparatus arrived.

Soon afterwards control of the fire was secured and the call was rescinded.

A few minutes past 6 o'clock a woman was seen coming from a house on Cabot street with her clothes all on fire. She made a frantic rush from the street toward the ropes when patrolmen caught her in their arms, rolled her in the street and thereby saved her life.

A number of persons were more or less injured while the fire raged and there were numerous narrow escapes. Several firemen were removed to hospitals suffering from injuries more or less severe.

At a special meeting of the board of aldermen, called by the mayor, it was voted to request the trustees of the Johnstown flood fund to expend, through the overseers of the poor, the balance remaining in their hands for the relief of the sufferers by the conflagration.

Naturally questions was rife as to where the Bostons will go for the present. The only ball ground accessible is that on Congress street occupied by the Players' League and Association clubs in 1890 and 1891. The grounds need retouching, but the grand stand is in fairly good condition. The game will be played there to-day.

BLOOD IN HIS WAKE

A Crazy Albany Man Runs Amuck With Knives.

Embraces and Kisses His Old Mother and Stabs Her to the Heart—Several Other Persons Slashed—His Sister's Kindness Probably Prevented His Early Capture.

ALBANY, N. Y., May 16.—Eugene Brady, a maniac, killed his mother, aged 65 years, yesterday afternoon in a fit of violence and attempted to kill four other persons. With three knives in his hands he ran wildly about the streets, cutting right and left, assaulting every one he met. Before the police overpowered him he had cut his sister-in-law, Mrs. James Brady, Alfred J. V. Werner, Mrs. John Kelley and Patrick Rice. Mrs. Kelley's wounds are serious, but it is not thought they will prove fatal. The wounds of the others are not so serious.

The Brady family lives on Vine street. Yesterday afternoon Eugene Brady began quarreling with his mother and sisters for no apparent reason, and they soon determined that he was not in his right mind, as Brady's father has been insane and was released from an asylum but a short time ago.

The daughter, Jennie, went to a near by lumber yard and asked that some of the employes be sent to the house to quiet her brother.

The proprietor and two employes repaired to the house and found Brady in the kitchen on the ground floor, yelling at those around him, and threatening to kill them. When the men entered the house Brady ran up stairs and jumped from a second story window. The men ran outside and picked him up. He was unconscious and it was thought that he was seriously injured. The men carried him in the house and placed him on a lounge and bathed his head.

He revived in a few minutes, and before he could be stopped jumped up and grabbed a common case-knife, a can-opener and carving knife. He then ran out of the house and began a wild and terrible chase through the neighborhood.

He carried the case-knife and can-opener in one hand and the carving knife in the other.

He went along for several blocks, the people fleeing from him, and he made several attempts to cut those who were not quick enough in getting out of his way.

His mother and sister had followed him, and at the corner of Vine and Green streets a man tried to strike Brady. The sister held his hand and cried: "Don't stike him," preventing him from doing so.

But for her act the murder might have been prevented.

The mother now came running up and caught hold of her son's arm.

The infuriated man now became calm and dropped all but the carving knife.

The two then walked back to the house, and when they reached the yard in which his home was Brady threw his arms about his mother's neck and kissed her. He then plunged the long knife into her breast, striking her to the heart, and she died in a few minutes. His sister-in-law was standing near, and he slashed her, the knife catching her on the right arm.

At least 200 people saw the murder.

Brady then started on another wild chase for a number of blocks. He was followed by a dozen men who wanted to capture him, but when he turned upon them they fled.

A. J. V. Werner, who tried to stop him, received a bad knife wound on the arm.

On Gansevoort street, Patrick Rice was painting the stoop of a house. As he was bending over Brady came upon him and plunged the knife into his right hip. The wound is not serious.

The murderer continued on and his next victim was Mrs. John Kelley, who ran into her house as Brady approached. The latter followed and plunged the knife into her back twice as she was running up the stairs. Her wounds are not fatal.

As Brady emerged from the Kelley residence, Robert Schneider threw a cobblestone at him which struck him on the head and staggered him for a moment but he soon recovered and continued on.

His pursuers were closing in on him now when the police patrol wagon came along. Patrolman Clinch was the nearest to Brady and catching hold of him as he stumbled, struck him with his fist. After some clinching, Brady dropped the knife and was thrown to the ground. It took four men to get him in the patrol wagon. He was taken to the jail and locked up.

He was a horrible sight, being covered with blood and his clothes being torn from his back. He is about 35 years old.

Mr. Wilson Back in the House.

WASHINGTON, May 16.—While Mr. Black (dem., Ga.) was speaking on the naval appropriation bill in the house, at 12:30 o'clock, the door leading from the house lobby on the democratic side opened and Chairman Wilson of the ways and means committee entered the chamber. He came in quietly and appeared anxious to avoid attracting attention, but his presence was discovered, and instantly a wave of applause broke over the democratic side and half a dozen members sprang to their feet to give him welcome, and for a time the proceedings were suspended. He is looking well and has apparently regained his health.

To Be Tried Without Delay.

CHEYENNE, Wyo., May 16.—Eight deputy United States marshals have arrived in this city with 19 of the commonwealers arrested yesterday at Cokeville. Among the number was Gen. Sheffler who is charged with being the commander. He denied this and said he was only traveling with the men. Judge Riner, of the United States court, stated that he would try the men for contempt of court without any preliminary steps.

Tuberculosis Attacks Valuable Cattle

BURLINGTON, N. J., May 16.—Bovine tuberculosis has wrought great havoc with the herd of Jersey cows of Chas. S. Taylor. Until the development of the disease the herd was the finest in the state and numbered about 125 head. Two physicians are now going through the herd and as a result 17 of the animals have been slaughtered so far.

Foreign Loan Association Barred Out

ALBANY, May 16.—Gov. Flower has signed Senator Parson's bill debarring all foreign loan and building associations not now doing business in this state from operating in this state.

IGNORANCE IN THE NAVY.

How a Stupid Officer Seriously Injured the Monterey.

WASHINGTON, May 16.—Among the serious charges that Secretary Herbert is investigating on the coast defence ship Monterey at San Francisco is one relating to the virtual ruining of the hydraulic turrets which contain the big 12-inch rifles of that ship's battery. It is understood that on the recent sea cruise of the ship during the practice firing of the guns, it was thought by the officer in charge that the hydraulic mechanism for taking up the recoil needed modification. This apparatus consists of a perforated plunger working in a heavy cylinder through which water is forced. The machinists of the ship were ordered to take out the plungers and reduce their diameter "between a quarter and a half inch." This sweeping instruction was followed, a quarter of an inch being removed, and the plungers were replaced. When the guns were fired again the water naturally rushed past the plungers with very little resistance, and every pipe and joint connected with the apparatus burst, flooding the turrets and necessitating repairs which will consume several weeks. It was considered remarkable that the turret and gun mounting was not totally demolished by the recoil of the monster weapon. Ordnance officers in Washington declare that the apparatus was probably all right at the outset and not more than one-thirty-second of an inch should have been removed in any event.

TROUBLE AVERTED.

No Danger of a Renewal of the Great Northern Strike.

ST. PAUL, Minn., May 16.—The Great Northern trouble which threatened to lead to another strike all along the line was settled without the intervention of the executive committee of the American Railway union which was scheduled to meet here. The trouble consisted of a difference between the men and President Hill over the construction of some of the terms of the decision of the board of arbitration which settled the great strike a few days ago. Being called upon for an interpretation of its decision, the arbitrators announced a construction which practically gives the men all they contend for. It is that all the men who were out shall be taken back into the company's employ; that the men under arrest shall be kept at work until proven guilty of having destroyed property of the company and that no new men shall be employed by the company so long as there are old employes to take the places. Furthermore, Engineer Best, over whose discharge the difficulty arose, is to be taken back. As President Hill it is believed cannot consistently refuse to abide by the decision of the arbitrators to whom he referred the matter, it seems certain that the entire trouble is now at an end.

Lillian's Last Disappointment.

NEW YORK, May 16.—The Herald announces, on the authority of Miss Lillian Russell, the actress, that her marriage to Signor Perugini, her leading man, has proved a failure, and that they are now living apart. There has been an estrangement, it is said, almost since their wedding day, some four months ago, owing to incompatibility of temperament, and a number of quarrels have occurred. Last week the company was playing in Philadelphia, and a falling-out of more than usual violence took place, which resulted in the separation. Miss Russell is now living at their home in this city, while Perugini has taken apartments at a hotel. They are still playing together nightly in Brooklyn, but are not on speaking terms off the stage. It is said Miss Russell will begin divorce proceedings soon.

Emphatic Denials.

NEW YORK, May 16.—Ex-Secretary William C. Whitney was asked if there was any foundation for the story that the sugar trust made a contribution of $500,000 to the democratic national campaign fund in 1892. "There is no truth in the story," said Whitney. "Neither from the sugar trust nor from any individual representing or acting for the sugar trust did the national democratic committee or the democratic campaign fund receive any contribution whatever—not one cent." H. O. Havemeyer when called upon for a statement regarding the story, dismissed the subject emphatically. "It is a pure fabrication from beginning to end," he said.

To Rebuild the Tabernacle.

NEW YORK, May 16.—The trustees of the Brooklyn tabernacle decided to rebuild, at a meeting held in the office of Leonard Moody, president of the board, at No. 16 Court street, Brooklyn. Russell Sage, who has a mortgage of $125,000 on the old building, will make another loan to the trustees, and the remainder of the $280,000 necessary to erect a new church will be raised by popular subscription. The new building will stand on the old site at Greene, Clinton and Waverly avenues, and the trustees propose to use in its construction portions of the walls of the ruined structure which are still intact.

Carnot To Set an Example.

PARIS, May 16.—The Matin prints an interview with an intimate friend of President Carnot, whose name for obvious reasons is not given, in which the gentleman interviewed is quoted as saying that he is authorized to state that M. Carnot will positively not seek re-election. The president, the gentleman says, regards it as his duty to set an example of avoiding undignified intrigue for a renewal of power.

Grasshoppers in Canada.

BARRIE, Ont., May 16.—A grasshopper plague is threatened in this section, much in excess of that of last year when the damage to crops was enormous. Eggs were deposited in the ground last fall and are now hatching millions upon millions of young hoppers about the size of black flies, being turned out by the plough, especially in sandy soil.

Consider Arc Lights Dangerous.

HARTFORD, Conn., May 16.—The Hartford Board of Fire Underwriters has voted that, from and after June 1, 1894, in all establishments where arc lights are used an additional rate of 50 cents on every thousand dollars shall be collected on all new and existing policies for the non-use of spark arresters satisfactory to the board.

Miss Willard Rides a Wheel.

LONDON, May 16.—Miss Frances Willard, president of the Women's Christian Temperance union in the United States, is the guest of Lady Somerset at her country house. Miss Willard practices bicycling daily, and has become greatly benefited physically thereby.

Cebron Awarded the Race.

DENVER, May 16.—In the race between Uncle Jack and Cebron at Overland for $5,000 a side the race was awarded to Cebron, Uncle Jack not running. A row over the stakes caused the trouble.

FOSTER AHEAD $70,000

Owner of the Winner of the Brooklyn Handicap.

He Carries Off This Snug Sum in Winnings and Stake—The Great Race a Grand Success—Weather Superb and Fully 40,000 People in Attendance.

NEW YORK, May 16.—Fred Foster, the owner of Dr. Rice, the winner of the Brooklyn Handicap of 1894, at Gravesend, is a happy man to-day, for the achievement of his plucky little horse yesterday afternoon has enriched him to the tune of something near $70,000. Foster backed the horse heavily on the winter books and his winnings aggregate $50,000; then he will receive $18,000 of the $25,000 stakes.

A number of persons backed the horse on Snedeker's book. When they went to cash in they found an empty box. Snedeker had decamped. The saddest individual of the lot was a man who held a ticket which read "$3,500 to $500, Dr. Rice." Snedeker made a future book on the race and owes several thousand dollars.

Outside of the arrest of President Dwyer and other officers of the racing association, at the instance of disgruntled pool-room men in an effort to "get even" and enforce the lottery law, the event was all that could be expected.

Over 40,000 persons saw the race. It was an ideal day for the race. The track was in perfect condition and there was every prospect of the record of 2:07 flat, made by Dry Monopole, getting lowered. The enclosure was uncomfortable crowded. All the transportation facilities were overtaxed and the work of getting to and from the track was an arduous task

The betting ring was so crowded that it was as much as a person's life was worth to attempt to make a wager. It needed the services of a rusher from a football team to place a bet.

It was a typical American crowd because it was so thoroughly good natured.

The big event, the fourth race on the card, was scheduled to take place at 4 o'clock but it was nearly 5:48 when the flag fell.

The start looked to be a fair one for all but Lowlander. Martin, however, did not think it was a start, and Clifford was left standing still. Thompson also began to pull up Sport just as they got the flag. McDermott made no effort to join the field with Lowlander. He simply cantered back to the paddock. Clifford and Sport went after the others but gave up the unequal struggle very soon. Copyright was the pace maker to the first turn. He set a clinking pace. Bergen made an effort to draw away from his field as they neared the far turn but failed signally to do so. Henry of Navarre, who had been his nearest attendant all the way, moved up to him. The instant he was collared Copyright was beaten. Henry of Navarre piloted the field into the home stretch. Dr. Rice and Sir Walter who had been in easy positions and well up, as if with one accord, closed on Henry of Navarre as soon as they were headed for home. A ding-dong finish then began. Taral rode Dr. Rice with the strength and energy that have made him famous. He urged him to the utmost limit of endurance. The game fellow responded to whip and spur to the last gasp, and finally won a superb race by a scant length. Time, 2:07 1-4. Henry of Navarre struggled gamely to the last. He lasted long enough to beat Sir Walter half a length for place. Sir Walter was really not up to a bruising race. The pace and distance told on him.

It is said that over sixty warrants have been issued and wholesale arrests will follow. It is the ultimate intention of De Lacey and his cohorts to seize the race horses as gambling paraphernalia. The race track people make light of the affair and say that it will all end in smoke. They insist that so long as the Ives pool bill's conditions are complied with no law is violated.

Thomson Will Contest.

NEW YORK, May 16.—A preliminary hearing was given before the probate clerk in the matter of the contest over the will of Anna D. Thomson, who died at her country place at Plainfield, N. J., on March 15 last, leaving an estate valued at about $600,000. By her will she gives her fortune to her three sons and two daughters, disinheriting her son James. The latter contests the will on the ground of insanity on the part of his mother and undue influence.

CLOSE OF THE CHORAL.

The Final Concert the Best of the Season.

The closing concert of the Choral Society's series of the present season was given in Music Hall last evening. It was a notable event in local musical circles. Not only was the concert a well rounded performance in every particular, but the plane of concert music in this city was raised materially. No other concert given heretofore by the Choral Society equals in the enjoyment it bestowed that of last evening. That demonstrated the fact that this city has a large number of people of musical inclinations who are gradually being mobilized in such a manner that the talents of each and all are being utilized for public enjoyment as well as for private pleasure. The Plainfield Choral Society certainly has added much to its reputation and to its usefulness by the work of the present season. That in years to come it will carry on the work of musical education is a foregone conclusion. E. J. Fitzhugh should be, doubtless is, proud of his pupils.

Last night's presentation of Mendelssohn's masterpiece, "Elijah", was listened to by an opera house crowded with the representative people of the city. The society chorus was assisted by the New York Philharmonic Club orchestra, Miss Ziporah Monteith, soprano, Mrs. Carl Alves, contralto, and Messrs. J. H. McKinley, tenor, and Ericson Bushnell, basso. Mr. McKinley was a substitute for William H. Rieger, the death of whose father prevented him from appearing.

To anyone not disposed to be hypercritical the oratorio was presented in a very satisfactory manner. The chorus singing was in every way excellent, and at times was superb. The improvement in the basso parts was particularly noticeable. Mr. Fitzhugh held the chorus under complete control during the entire oratorio, and there were, therefore, no weak passages, no falterings. His interpretations of the music were as correct artistically as his discipline was thoroughly professional, and with willing and talented pupils the success attained was scarcely surprising.

The grandest air taken by the tenor in this oratorio, that beginning "If with all your hearts ye truly seek me, ye shall surely find me", is, as sung by Mr. Rieger, inspiring beyond measure, and when it was learned that the celebrated tenor would not be present, there was general disappointment expressed. Mr. McKinley sang the air with the greatest of expression and sweetness, and Mr. Riegel's absence was less deplored than was anticipated. Mr. McKinley was very favorably received, thereafter.

The honors of the evening lay between Miss Monteith and Mr. Bushnell. The soprano's voice is of a high quality, and she displayed its advantages in a charming manner.

In taking the words spoken by Elijah, Mr. Bushnell had allotted to him much of the solo singing in the oratorio, and never for a moment did the enjoyment lax during the display of his matchless voice. He was encored heartily several times, the appreciation being particularly marked after the air: "It is enough, O Lord; Now take away my life."

In the double quartette beginning "He shall give His angels charge", the soloists were assisted by Mrs. Asa Collier, Miss Julia Ketcham, Lewis Bond and D. E. Titsworth.

It undoubtedly will interest many Plainfielders to know who the men are who have been so successful in conducting the affairs of the Society during the present concert season. They and the offices they hold are as follows:

President—Charles W. McCutchen.
Vice-president—Daniel E. Davis.
Secretary—Nelson Runyon.
Treasurer—George T. Rogers.
Librarian—Nelson Y. Hull.
Accompanist—Miss Jessie M. Utter.
Directors—R. J. Shaw, Mr. Titsworth.
Music Committee—Daniel E. Davis, David E. Titsworth, George T. Rogers.

FOREST FIRE IN NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, May 16—Jones's Woods, an old-time landmark, was swept away early this morning by a fire that was blown wildly across the two square blocks it covered. It was a forest fire within the city, and it spread so rapidly and so far that it took in and destroyed not only all the buildings belonging to the Empire City Coliseum, which occupied the park, but also all the houses, stables, sheds and yards on the two blocks that bounded the woods on the north and south, at the same time burning to the water's edge the docks along the East River. Fifty horses were burned.

FOR THE relief and cure of a cold in the head there is more potency in Ely's Cream Balm than in anything else it is possible to prescribe. This preparation has for years past been making a brilliant success as a remedy for cold in the head, catarrh and hay fever. Used in the initial stages of these complaints Cream Balm prevents any serious development of the symptoms, while almost numberless cases are on record of radical cures of chronic catarrh and hay fever after all other treatments have proved of no avail.

GEORGE RICKERT DANGEROUSLY HURT.

Thrown from a Wagon, He Receives Injuries Which are Likely to Prove Fatal.

George Rickert, expressman, received terrible injuries in a runaway accident shortly after 9 this morning.

He was loading slate for Jacob Cose from a car on the East Fourth street switch near Richmond street into the wagon owned by his brother, Frank Rickert. As he stood on the front of the wagon the shade above the seat fell forward and frightened the horses. The team started to run. Rickert was thrown to the ground, and both wheels on one side went over him. He was carried to his home, 705 West Front street. The horses ran on along Fourth street until one was thrown and both were stopped.

Dr. O. L. Jenkins was called and found that Rickert's right collar bone, two ribs on the left side and perhaps three on the right were broken. He was badly injured internally, the lungs being severely congested. Inflammation had set in.

Dr. W. H. Murray was called in consultation at noon. They could give but little hope for his recovery.

Rickert had his leg broken under engine No. 1 in the Fall of 1885. He was going to an evening fire and fell from the engine at the corner of West Second street and Central avenue. He escaped the wheels but was struck by the fire-box.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

Mrs. Stockbridge of Philadelphia is visiting Mrs. D. H. Green of Park avenue.

A. Saltzman was elected a vice-president of the State Exempt Firemen in annual session in Rahway today.

Andrew Schlick of New York moved with his family to Plainfield Monday. He will reside on West Third street, in one of his own houses.

Undertaker Casey, Union County delegate to the Omaha Convention of the Ancient Order of Hiberians, returned yesterday afternoon after a pleasant trip which included also short stays in Chicago and Niagara Falls.

Miss Addie Parker Jackson, a graduate of the Emerson College of Oratory, Boston, Mass., will give a recital at the Casino on Thursday evening, May 31. The announcing of her assisting artists will be made later.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard B. Grinnell, who have been spending the Winter in Colorado Springs, are expected in New York, May 20. After a few days in the city, they will leave for their cottage at Sunapee Lake, New Hampshire, where they will spend the Summer.

CYCLING COMMENT.

The Bloomfield Cycling Association will run to Plainfield June 9.

Arrangements have been completed for the annual Newark-Philadelphia century run June 9. The start will be made from the Continental Hotel at 4 a. m. Plainfield will be reached at 7 a. m. A two-hours rest will be taken in Trenton. Each rider will receive a bunch of numbered tickets, one of which he will be obliged to give to each checker along the route.

Young Ladies to Usher.

The stereopticon lecture of Mrs. E. B. Horton in Trinity Reformed Church tomorrow evening will be illustrated by lantern views thrown on the canvas by Messrs. J. Hervey Doane and Harry Coward, members of the Camera Club. No admission fee will be charged to this interesting lecture, but an offering will be acceptable at the close of the lecture. The young ladies will usher. The entertainment is given under the auspices of the Christian Work Society of the church.

Who Shall Be Pastor?

The German Reformed Church is still undecided in the choice of a successor to the pastor, Rev. Frederick Koechli, whose resignation will take effect shortly. A few more ministers will probably be invited here to preach and then of them those who have made good impressions on the church authorities will be given other trials until one is selected.

POTENT PRINTERS' INK.

How It May Be Used to Materially Assist In Booming the Town.

The Irishman's motto, "Whiniver ye see a head, hit it!" should be the motto of every town that is ambitions to grow in size and importance. One very effective booming club that should be ready for use the instant the head of a new industry appears is what may be termed a town boom book, describing in detail all the natural and artificial advantages possessed by the town, its schools, churches, prosperous enterprises and prominent citizens.

Such a book, finely illustrated and printed in artistic style, may be issued at a comparatively trifling expense, and the inquiring manufacturer who sees it will be at once impressed with the enterprise of the town's citizens, and if the arguments in the book are prepared as they should be and are backed with telling facts the book will be a great aid in persuading the manufacturer to locate.

One excellent feature of such a book is a carefully prepared map of the town, showing its natural advantages, its importance as a railroad center and shipping point, and indicating the various raw materials that may be found near it.

The advantages of the town as a place of residence should also be dwelt upon, and every improvement, waterworks, electric light, street cars, paved streets and schools—if the town possesses them—should be exploited. The book should also contain good pictures of the finest school buildings, churches, public structures, business blocks, manufactories and prominent citizens. These pictures many of the citizens, actuated by public spirit and a knowledge of the value of advertising, will be glad to furnish themselves if they are given an opportunity.

Such a book can be made a typographical work of art by one of the local printing houses, and in every instance will be like bread cast upon the waters, so far as its effect upon the prosperity of the town is concerned.

Go by the book on Beecham's Pills.

The Spring House Cleaning Wisely urged by the BOARD OF HEALTH is not complete without a proper use of DISINFECTANTS. But, in choosing these, do not be misled into paying fancy prices for "patent" specialties. Common lime is better than any of them for damp cellars and stables. For vaults, drains, cess-pools, the best and cheapest disinfectant is COPPERAS, supplied by us by the pound or barrel at low rates. But for use in the house, in the plumbing, in kitchen sinks, in closets, for purifying the air of sick rooms, deodorizing offensive discharges—in short, for all purposes of a household disinfectant, nothing can excel the powerful solution of chlorides made and sold by us for 15 years under the name of REYNOLDS'S ODORLESS DISINFECTANT. Quart bottles 25c. To be diluted for use according to directions on label.

ALTENBERGER ARRESTED.

Caught on a Train at Utica and Confesses His Crime.

UTICA, N. Y., May 16.—Bernhardt Altenberger, the would-be murderer who left Katie Rupp for dead in the woods at Snake Hill, N. J., was arrested on the Chicago limited train here shortly before midnight. He confessed that he committed the assault, but could not tell why. Altenberger was caught by ex-Jailor Jay Capron, of Rome, who boarded the train at Albany and recognized him by the description printed in the newspapers. When the train reached Utica Mr. Capron called an officer and the arrest followed.

Coughlin Will Sell Rum.

CHICAGO, May 16.—Dan Coughlin, recently acquitted of conspiracy to murder Dr. Cronin, has bought a saloon, paying $15,000 for it. The ex-detective declared that he would never take a drink, not even behind his own bar. It is said a west side coal dealer is Coughlin's backer. Andy Foy, whose wife was one of the leading witnesses against Coughlin in his second trial, will be Coughlin's bartender. Foy and his wife have made up and are living together again, Coughlin being the peacemaker.

Pennsylvania Red Men.

BETHLEHEM, Pa., May 16.—The great council of Pennsylvania Improved Order of Red Men are in annual session here. Three hundred of the 341 tribes in the state are represented. During the year the receipts amounted to $261,053.15; expended for relief, $114,927.84; funeral benefits, $35,721.23; amount invested, $476,002.19. Net loss of membership during the year was 904. The present membership in the state is 31,224.

Sailed With Inferior Coal.

NEW YORK, May 16.—The coal strike is beginning to tell on the shipping business. The steamer Christian Johnson, a Norwegian fruiter, which sailed for the West Indies yesterday, was forced to return to quarantine on account of the bad quality of the coal supplied under contract. The coal dealer will have to foot all the cost of unloading and loading the coal, and for the ship's loss of time as well. The case will prove a great loss to the contractor who coaled her.

WEST END NOTES.

The Young Men's League will go to Rahway tonight.

The Grant avenue newsboy is kept out of school by a boil.

Davis & Stevens have enclosed their lot by a new wire fence.

Grant avenue has been macadamized and is now one of the best streets in town.

Another new house is being put up on Rocap Hill, and a street is being cut back to the woods.

H. H. Hoffman of West Front street has been laid up for two weeks with throat trouble.

The wife of Robert Gothiel who arrived here last Fall from Germany, is to sail back Saturday.

The Pond Machine Tool Company is very kind to neighbors. Its men water the street every morning.

The fire hydrant at Second street and Grant avenue is out of order. The street sprinkler could not receive any water from it.

The old Park avenue oyster store of H. VanName has been removed to the corner of Fourth street and Plainfield avenue.

Alex Finnigan, while trying to get into a moving milk wagon Saturday morning, slipped and fell under the wheel, but was not hurt severely.

The Young People's League will give an entertainment in Reform Hall Tuesday evening, May 22, for the benefit of the West End Base-Ball Association.

Harry Page, an employe of the Plainfield Street Railway Company, while wading in the brook, Saturday afternoon, cut his foot, and is not able to work. Rich Higgins has taken his place.

A cat with fits was chased up a telephone pole last night back of M. Watson's store on Grant avenue, by a dog. Much praise is given to E. Shattle, who climbed the pole, took it down, and cared for it.

WEST ENDER.

Water Wanted.

Upper Somerset street is dusty. George Kirch and A. I. Smalley are trying to induce the residents to have it sprinkled. A paper is being circulated by which two-thirds of those interested have already agreed to pay P. M. French for sprinkling. The section to be reclaimed extends from the bridge below Coddington avenue to Jackson avenue, where the watering cart now stops its work.

Canine Paralysis.

The valuable collie dog owned by Thomas McCann, of Emily street, is still in the same condition as when he was found by his owner a week ago, paralyzed so that he cannot move any part of his body except his head. There are two suppositions as to how the dog was stricken, that he was struck, or that he was given poison, either an overdose or not enough.

The Grey Mare.

The Boys Club have spared no expense in their efforts to make tomorrow night's performance of "The Grey Mare" in the Casino as good in every respect as it was two weeks ago. There will be the same orchestra, the same setting. No one who missed the first performance should fail to see this truly admirable play.

Strawberries and Cream.

Thursday and Friday, June 7 and 8, are the days selected by the Whatsoever Circle of King's Daughters of Trinity Reformed Church for holding their annual strawberry festival. This year it will be held in the parlors of the church. Reserve one of the two evenings for this very worthy cause.

Take Back the Hammock Thou Borrowed.

Druggist H. L. Freeman says he knows the man who stole a hammock from his front stoop last evening, and promises not to have him arrested if it is returned by tomorrow night.

REACHES ALL THE PEOPLE.

The Modern Newspaper a Part of Every Home.

Senator Adrain, in his manly speech yesterday defeating the proposition to publish the laws in pamphlet and not in newspaper, claimed that not one-hundredth of the pamphlets would be opened. They were a relic of ancient history. But the newspaper was a part of the homes of our State, and was read each day and evening around the fireside. It was a great modern educator, and the laws being a part of these newspapers, entered into the education of the people. He would ever stand for the publishing of the laws in the broadest and greatest avenues.

Senator Winton said he owed it to the newspaper fraternity to speak against the bill. It seemed that this was a bill in the interests of junk dealers, as most of the pamphlets found their way to these dealers. He thought the publishing of the laws in newspapers was the best method yet devised to get the laws before the people.

FIRE ON A BRIDGE.

Early Morning Call From Box 23.

Firemen were called shortly after 3 this morning to put out a small fire on the Central Railroad bridge across Richmond street. The alarm was sent in from Box 23 by Special Policeman Vanderweg.

Three lines of hose were stretched, two from Fifth and Richmond streets, and one from the corner of Richmond street and North avenue. A length belonging to Gazelle Engine Company burst.

The flames were easily extinguished. Half a dozen ties under the north track on the west end of the bridge were well charred, but traffic was not hindered. The fire must have started from hot coals from a locomotive.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

The Christian Endeavor Society gave a pleasant social in the basement of the German Reformed Church, Craig place, last evening. It was well attended. The Misses Katie and Sadie Blimm and John Utzinger were in charge. Refreshments were enjoyed and the following programme was presented:

Organ Solo.....Miss Nettie Kreitling
Recitation.....Miss Annie Doeringer
Vocal Duet.....Albert and William Tallamy
Recitation.....Miss Nettie Kreitling
Dialect Stories.....Frank Splane

The Christian Endeavor Society of Warren Chapel met last evening. Because of the death of President Frank Seader's father, it had been proposed to postpone the celebration of the sixth anniversary, but the society decided last night to have the exercises tomorrow evening as arranged.

Too Poor to Celebrate.

In the Westfield Township Committee meeting, Mr. Conant offered a resolution, which he had already prepared, that bills contracted by the Centennial Committee to the amount of $500 be paid out of the township funds. The resolution was laid over until the next meeting in order to give taxpayers a chance to enter a protest against the appropriation if they so desire. The idea of appropriating public money for this celebration is unpopular in view of the present high taxrate.

Huber Arrested.

Mike Huber, who keeps a place on the county road in Garwood known as the Wheelman's Retreat, has been arrested and brought before Justice Collins on a charge of keeping a disorderly house, made by Deputy Sheriff Myers. Huber demanded a hearing, and gave bonds to appear before the court this afternoon at 2. Witnesses have been subpœnaed to appear in the matter.

Wants the Cape.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—If the gentleman with a black mustache driving on Johnston's drive Sunday afternoon who found a black cape, will leave the same at The Press office he will confer a great favor on THE OWNER.

Heathen Observance in Plainfield.

Heathen countries will be represented in costume, and refreshments served in native style, by the young women of the Presbyterian Mission Band in the parlors of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian Church, Thursday, May 31, from 4 to 10.

End of a Plainfield Corporation.

Governor Werts by public proclamation declares void the charter of The Times Printing and Publishing Company of Plainfield, New Jersey, because the State taxes of the institution have not been paid in two years.

Sued for $5.

Justice Mosher today issued a summons in the case of Curtis against Wolfe, returnable May 22. The case is on contract, and the suit is brought to recover a claim of $5.

THE CAREER OF LUCY STONE.

From Personal Knowledge, Mrs. Howe Tells Plainfield Admirers About the Famous Woman.

All Souls Church was well filled yesterday afternoon when Mrs. Julia Ward Howe lectured on the late Lucy Stone. The personal relations between the two women in their work for woman's advancement made the talk the more interesting.

Lucy Stone, said Mrs. Howe, was born nearly 76 years ago on a Massachusetts farm. Her mother was sorry the baby was a girl because the life of a woman was so hard. She knew not how much her daughter was destined to do to aid her sex.

When a child Lucy Stone noticed how hard her mother worked, and would ask about the condition of affairs that made her do so. Her mother explained that the Bible had ordered thus, but the little girl would not believe it and decided that some day she would learn Greek and Latin and Hebrew and see if the English translators had not made some mistake.

The work she had to do as a farmer's daughter made Lucy grow up a strong and robust girl. Her ideas on women's rights seemed to grow too. Once she went to a church meeting where a vote was taken. The girl raised her hand with the men. The minister ordered her vote disregarded, but she persisted in raising her hand on other questions.

Her father was a prosperous farmer and had sent his son to college so Lucy asked for the same privilege. Mr. Stone refused, and said that if she went she would have to pay her way. So the girl started to earn the money, among other ways being that of teaching at $2 a week and "boarding 'round". When she had raised money enough she went to Oberlin College, Ohio, the only college admitting women. Work did not cease here for as a student she helped pay expenses by doing housework at three cents an hour. She could not afford $1 a week board, and therefore, with a number of others, subsisted principally on bread and apple sauce. When graduating time came the Massachusetts girl declined to have her thesis read by anyone but herself, and as this would be too unconventional for the times it was not read at all.

Mrs. Howe first heard of Lucy Stone when the latter sent her a request for a poem for a woman's suffrage meeting. Mrs. Howe did n't believe in woman's rights then and showed her disapprobation by not answering the letter.

The war brought about a change in the affairs of women. They were brought out from seclusion by a common work, and when the war was ended they hesitated to go back. Then the ballot was given to the blacks and the women began to wonder if they should not have suffrage next.

At the request of Thomas Wentworth Higginson, Mrs. Howe allowed her name to be used in connection with the announcement of a woman's suffrage convention in Boston, and finally she decided to attend and investigate. Escorted from a back seat to the platform Mrs. Howe first met Mrs. Stone. She was delighted with all that was said and immediately joined the agitators. The two women, with Mrs. Mary E. Livermore, went together on a lecturing tour.

Mrs. Stone's relations with her husband, Henry Blackwell, were in accordance with her advanced idea that a woman's individuality should not be merged into her husband's. She never assumed Mr. Blackwell's name. The two worked together in the cause with which they were so much in sympathy. Their daughter, Miss Alice Stone Blackwell, is a most efficient writer and worker for woman's rights.

Mrs. Howe ended her lecture with arguments for woman's suffrage and for a revision of her civil rights.

GONE WITH THE HORSE.

A Stranger's Long Absence with a Plainfield Rig.

A man hired a horse and carriage from the Metropolitan Stables yesterday afternoon at 1. He wanted to use the rig for two or three hours. He has not returned yet.

The man was a stranger, about five feet high, and weighing perhaps 140 pounds. He wore a dark suit of clothes and a sandy moustache. The horse he took was a bay, 15½ hands high. The marks were a stripe of white on the nose, a spot above each eye, and two white feet. The value is about $200. The carriage was a black pony phæton, newly painted.

Mr. Dunster telephoned a description in every direction, and left for Philadelphia, Salem and Bridgeton this afternoon.

Swift Extension.

James E. Otis, Jr., late of Kingston, N. Y., and at present stopping in this city, has charge of the interior work of the large storage ice house for the Swift Beef Company, now in course of construction on East Third street. When this is completed it will be an object of interest to those unacquainted with the modus operandi of keeping and handling the enormous quantities of meat daily consumed by the people of Plainfield. The building, including the office and sale-room, will be a credit to the city.

Notwithstanding the duties devolved on Mr. Otis, in carrying out the work, he finds that he has time to make many warm personal friends who will be loth to past with him, although he hopes to somd day settle down when it is to be hoped some bright eyed Plainfield belle may be the inducement.

—Two more houses are soon to be erected on the Taylor-MacDonald Netherwood tract.

OBITUARY.

Chauncey Shaffer.

Chauncey Shaffer died at his home, 683 East One Hundred and Thirty-Fifth street, New York, at noon yesterday, at the age of seventy-five years. He had been an invalid for two years, and had been confined to his bed since January last. He was born in Binghampton, N. Y., and was graduated at Wesleyan University in 1840. He was admitted to the bar after leaving college, and went to Michigan, where he remained for five years. He returned to New York in 1845 and became famous as a criminal lawyer. He defended 34 murder cases, none of his clients being convicted of murder in the first degree. Mr. Shaffer was appointed with Judge Sedgwick to prosecute the celebrated Stevens poisoning case in 1868. He was attorney for the prosecution in the suit of Mme. Jumel against the City of New York for the recovery of vast property interests. She lost the case. W. Bourke Cockran attributes his oratorical success to the training he received under Mr. Shaffer. Ten years ago Mr. Shaffer formed a law partnership with his grandson, and since that time the firm has been Shaffer & Burt. In 1870 Mr. Shaffer ran for District attorney as an independent Democrat and was defeated by 200 votes. He leaves a wife and a daughter, Mrs. Wm. C. Burt of West Seventh street, Plainfield.

Mr. Schaffer came to Plainfield about ten years ago and resided on West Seventh street for several years. He was one of the organizers of the Reform Club and was one of its best workers while in Plainfield.

THE TABERNACLE FIRE.

Statement of a Boy Strengthens the Theory of Incendiarism.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., May 16.—The belief that the tabernacle fire of Sunday was the work of an incendiary is gaining ground rapidly among those who are investigating the matter.

A clew upon which the police are working was given them yesterday.

Richard Cogan, of Orange, N. J., accompanied by his son Merwin, occupied seats near the center of the second gallery of the tabernacle on Sunday morning, and before the services began Merwin says he saw a man descend the ladder at the rear of the keyboard. The boy called his father's attention to the man, but he was hidden from view before Mr. Cogan saw him.

Police Superintendent Campbell said in regard to the matter:

"I consider the Cogan story of sufficient importance to warrant an investigation. The Cogan clew is not the only one upon which our men are working. Of course, it is quite possible that defective insulation of the electric wires is responsible for the conflagration, but if it was the work of an incendiary we propose to run him down."

CERTAIN OF SEIZURE.

An American Skipper Who Refuses to Leave the Sealing Grounds.

VICTORIA, B. C., May 16.—One pelagic sealer which is certain of seizure and confiscation is the American schooner Helens, of Puget sound. News is just received that she was boarded on May 5 by officers of H. M. S. Hyacinthe and that forma notice of warning was served on her by the captain of the British warship.

The captain of the American vessel said he did not know the Britisher, and would not recognize him, nor his ship, flag, warning or orders in any shape or form. He refused to leave the sealing grounds, and did not even call in the small boats which were working around the Helens. The vessel is certain of seizure the next time a British warship speaks her or any American patrol runs across her.

Frightened the Mine Operators.

BELLEFONTE, Pa., May 16.—When the miners went out in the Snow Shoe district the operators went to work themselves, mining and shipping two and three cars a day to supply local trade. On Saturday the miners served notice on all such that as they valued their lives they had better stop. The operators held a consultation and concluded to heed the warning and to-day the Snow Shoe mines are entirely deserted. The coal supply is very low here. The water works on which the entire town is dependent have only enough coal to run about one week more.

No Pay for These Democrats.

TRENTON, N. J., May 16.—The republican senators held a caucus last evening and "sat down" on the scheme to pay the men employed as secretaries, doorkeepers, etc., of the democratic senate whose existence was so abruptly terminated by the supreme court. These men are asking for remuneration, but the caucus decided that if they get any it will have to come out of the pockets of the democratic senators.

Chess Match at Montreal.

MONTREAL, May 16.—Lasker won the 15th game of the chess match. Steinitz resigned on the 44th move.

Local Weather Forecast.

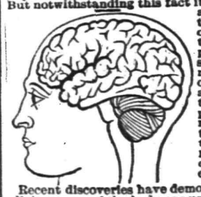
Increasing cloudiness; warmer; winds shifting to east.

MYSTERIES!

The Nervous System the Seat of Life and Mind. Recent Wonderful Discoveries.

No mystery has ever compared with that of human life. It has been the leading subject of professional research and study in all ages. But notwithstanding this fact it is not generally known that the seat of life is located in the upper part of the spinal cord, near the base of the brain, and so sensitive is this portion of the nervous system that even the prick of a needle will cause instant death.



Recent discoveries have demonstrated that all the organs of the body are under the control of the nerve centers, located in or near the base of the brain, and that when these are deranged the organs which they supply with nerve fluid are also deranged. When it is remembered that a serious injury to the spinal cord will cause paralysis of the body below the injured point, because the nerve force is prevented by the injury from reaching the paralyzed portion, it will be understood how the derangement of the nerve centers will cause the derangement of the various organs which they supply with nerve force

Two-thirds of diseases are then due to the imperfect action of the nerve centers at the base of the brain, not from a derangement primarily originating in the organ itself. The great mistake of physicians in treating these diseases is that they treat the organ rather than the nerve centers which are the cause of the trouble.

DR. FRANKLIN MILES, the celebrated specialist, has profoundly studied this subject for over 20 years, and has made many important discoveries in connection with it, chief among them being the facts contained in the above statement, and that the ordinary methods of treatment are wrong. All headache, dizziness, dullness, confusion, pressure, blues, mania, melancholy, insanity, epilepsy, St. Vitus dance, etc., are nervous diseases no matter how caused. The wonderful success of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is due to the fact that it is based on the foregoing principles.

DR. MILES' RESTORATIVE NERVINE is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by DR. MILES MEDICAL CO., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It contains neither opiates nor dangerous drugs.

CHAPTER IV.

CONCERNING WARLI AND MARIE.

Warli, the little hunchback postman, a cheery soul, came whistling up the Kirhaus stairs, carrying with him that precious parcel of registered letters which gave him the position of being the most important person in Petershof. He was a linguist, too, was Warli, and could speak broken English in a most fascinating way, agreeable to every one, but intelligible only to himself. Well, he came whistling up the stairs when he heard Marie's blithe voice humming her favorite spinning song.

"Ei, ei!" he said to himself. "Marie is in a good temper today. I will give her a call as I pass."

He arranged his neckerchief and smoothed his curls, and when he reached the end of the landing he paused outside a little glass door, and, all unobserved, watched Marie in her pantry cleaning the candlesticks and lamps.

Marie heard a knock, and looking up from her work saw Warli.

"Good day, Warli," she said, glancing hurriedly at a tiny broken mirror suspended on the wall. "I suppose you have a letter for me. How delightful!"

"Never mind about the letter just now," he said, waving his hand as though wishing to dismiss the subject. "How nice to hear you singing so sweetly, Marie! Dear me, in the old days at Grusch, how often I have heard that song of the spinning wheels! You have forgotten the old days, Marie, though you remember the song."

"Come me my letter, Warli, and go about your work," said Marie, pretending to be impatient. But all the same her eyes looked extremely friendly. There was something very winning about the hunchback's face.

"Ah, ah, Marie!" he said, shaking his curly head. "I know how it is with you. You only like people in fine binding. They have not always fine hearts."

"What nonsense you talk, Warli!" said Marie. "There, just hand me the oil can. You can fill this lamp for me. Not too full, you goose! And this one also—ah, you're letting the oil trickle down! Why, you're not fit for anything except carrying letters! Here, give me my letter."

"What pretty flowers!" said Warli. "Now, if there is one thing I do like, it is a flower. Can you spare me one, Marie? Put one in my buttonhole, do!"

"You are a nuisance this afternoon," said Marie, smiling and pinning a flower on Warli's blue coat. Just then a bell rang violently.

"Those Portuguese ladies will drive me quite mad," said Marie. "They always ring just when I am enjoying myself."

"When you are enjoying yourself!" said Warli triumphantly.

"Of course," returned Marie. "I always do enjoy cleaning the oil lamps; I always did!"

"Ah, I'd forgotten the oil lamps!" said Warli.

"And so had I," laughed Marie. "Na, na, there goes that bell again! Won't they be angry! Won't they scold at me! Here, Warli, give me my letter, and I'll be off."

"I never told you I had any letter for you," remarked Warli. "It was entirely your own idea. Good afternoon, Fraulein Marie."

The Portuguese ladies' bell rang again, still more passionately this time, but Marie did not seem to hear nor care. She wished to be revenged on that impudent postman. She went to the top of the stairs and called after Warli in her most coaxing tones:

"Do step down one moment. I want to show you something."

"I must deliver the registered letters," said Warli, with official haughtiness. "I have already wasted too much of my time."

"Won't you waste a few more minutes on me?" pleaded Marie pathetically. "It is not often I see you now."

Warli came down again, looking very happy.

"I want to show you such a beautiful photograph I've had taken," said Marie. "Ach, it is beautiful!"

"You must give one to me," said Warli eagerly.

"Oh, I can't do that," replied Marie as she opened the drawer and took out a small packet. "It was a present to me from the Polish gentleman himself. He saw me the other day here in the pantry. I was so tired, and I had fallen asleep, with my broom, just as you see me here. So he made a photograph of me. He admires me very much. Isn't it nice, and isn't the Polish gentleman clever, and isn't it nice to have so much attention paid to one? Oh, there's that horrid bell again! Good afternoon, Herr Warli. That is all I have to say to you, thank you."

Warli's feelings toward the Polish gentleman were not of the friendliest that day.

CHAPTER V.

THE DISAGREEABLE MAN.

Robert Allister told Bernardine that she was not likely to be on friendly terms with the English people in the Kurhaus.

"They will not care about you, and you will not care about the foreigners. So you will thus be thrown on your own resources, just as I was when I came."

"I cannot say that I have any resources," Bernardine answered. "I don't feel well enough to try to do any writing, or else it would be delightful to have the uninterrupted leisure."

So she had probably told him a little about her life and occupation, although it was not likely that she would have given him any serious confidences. Still people are often surprisingly frank about themselves, even those who pride themselves upon being the most reticent mortals in the world.

"But now, having the leisure," she continued, "I have not the brains."

"I never knew any writer who had," said the Disagreeable Man grimly.

"Perhaps your experience has been limited," she suggested.

"Why don't you read?" he said. "There is a good library here. It contains all the books we don't want to read."

"I am tired of reading," Bernardine said. "I seem to have been reading all my life. My uncle, with whom I live, keeps a secondhand bookshop, and ever since I can remember I have been surrounded by books. They have not done me much good, nor any one else either."

"No, probably not," he said. "But now that you have left off reading you will have a chance of learning something, if you live long enough. It is wonderful how much one does learn when one does not read. It is almost awful. If you don't care about reading now, why do you not occupy yourself with cheese mites?"

"I do not feel drawn toward cheese mites."

"Perhaps not at first, but all the same they form a subject which is very engaging. Or any branch of bacteriology?"

"Well, if you were to lend me a microscope, perhaps I might begin."

"I could not do that," he answered quickly. "I never lend my things."

"No, I did not suppose you would," she said. "I knew I was safe in making the suggestion."

"You are rather quick of perception in spite of all your book reading," he said. "Yes, you are quite right. I am selfish. I dislike lending my things, and I dislike spending my money except on myself. If you have the misfortune to linger on as I do, you will know that it is perfectly legitimate to be selfish in small things, if one has made the one great sacrifice."

"And what may that be?"

She asked so eagerly that he looked at her and then saw how worn and tired her face was, and the words which he was intending to speak died on his lips.

CONTINUED TOMORROW.

They need to be started right. The "Prescription" aids and promotes the proper functions, corrects the delicate weaknesses and derangements that might become chronic, establishes regularity and health, lessens pain.

They want a nourishing, supporting, strengthening tonic, such as an experienced physician has especially prepared for the female system, in the "Prescription."

In every "female complaint" and weakness, and in all nervous conditions, if it doesn't benefit or cure, the money will be returned.

Miss MAGGIE JACKSON, of Barbreck, St. Landry Parish, La., says: "I was lying sick for some time with female complaints, and all the medicine my friends gave me did me no good. Death was approaching; all my friends had given me up to die. I heard of your wonderful medicine, and I bought two bottles of it, and before I had taken the last, I got entirely well. I am still enjoying good health, and expect to praise your medicine every where I go."

DID YOU EVER

hear tell of a purchaser wanting to buy an imitation? Why do men who try to sell such articles speak of the act as "working them off?" Simply because people want the best, and it takes work and likewise deception to sell them the worst. This unpleasant experience may befall the housekeeper who determines to the new vegetable shortening. The healthfulness, flavor, and economy of this wonderful cooking product has won for it the widest popularity, which in turn has attracted the attention of business parasites who are "working off" imitations and counterfeits. ## A PUBLIC BENEFACTOR.

THEY ALL SAY THE SAME.

Don't Hesitate, but Call and Be Convinced That Every Statement We Make Is True.

To those who do not already know that there is established in Newark, at 105 Halsey street, a physician who stands in the foremost rank of his profession, who is indorsed by the leading colleges of the country and who can prove by witnesses right here in Newark (not by one, but by hundreds) that he has succeeded in curing cases that have been utterly given up by other physicians, and good ones too. To those who do not these facts we state that any person, rich or poor, old of young, is welcome here and receive examination and advice free of charge.

Thousands praise the day they came to us for treatment. There is no guess work, no experimenting, no painful operation. No matter how difficult the case, no matter how much of the physician's time it may consume, the diagnosis will not only be thorough, it will be absolutely free. There is no taint of quackery or deception; no claim or statement is made that is not borne out by facts and living witnesses.

Mrs. Abby A. Ray, late of 86 Grove street, East Orange, who now lives at 400 Ellmore street, Escanaba, Mich., writes, under date of January 12: "The medicine arrived this morning and I am so glad it came. I am almost out, and it has helped me so much and I am so much pleased with its wonderful effort on my broken down system that I would like to testify to your great success in my case. I am feeling as well now, in fact better, than if had ever hoped to again."

This is one of many letters that we receive daily. We have the originals at our office and if you wish you may see them. Another thing: We never publish or reveal a patient's name unless they so desire.

DR. STARKWEATHER.

There is not a penny to pay for the fullest medical advice. Dr. Starkweather is a graduate of the Berkshire Medical College, Massachusetts, and of the Medico-Chirurgical College of Philadelphia; endorsed also by the College of Physicians and Surgeons and Bellevue Medical College of New York. We invite all sufferers from whatever cause to call at our office, No. 105 Halsey street, Newark, where Dr. Starkweather is in attendance daily to give examination and advice entirely free of charge. It matters not what the disease, or how many years you have suffered, in spite of means adopted in your behalf, a visit to this office and the privileges of the same will cost you nothing, and may be the means of saving your life. We prepare all our medicines and prescribe the remedies indicated. This plan enables the patient to receive directly from us such remedies as will produce the results promised.

Our office is open daily from 10 a. m. to 9 p. m. Sundays 4 to 6 p. m.

Those living at a distance can consult the Doctor by letter.

A REMARKABLE CURE

MIDDLEBUSH, Somerset Co., N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For the past forty years I have been afflicted with bleeding piles. I suffered constant pain in the lower part of my body, but when I had an operation of the bowels the pain was perfectly terrible, and was most always attended with the loss of a large quantity of blood. My condition was complicated with prolapse of the rectum, which at first only made its appearance when I had a movement of the bowels, but at length the parts became so weakened that the protrusion took place while walking or stooping, or after the slightest exertion, and sometimes even while I was at rest. Whenever this happened it gave rise to the most agonizing pain, and felt as though something was pulling the life right out of me. In fact only those similarly situated can imagine the suffering and distress which I had to endure from day to day, and which made my life a terrible burden. Hearing of Dr. Lighthill's wonderful success in the cure of difficult chronic diseases, I placed myself under his care, and now I am proud and happy to say that, marvelous as it may seem, he effected a complete and radical cure in my case in every respect, and he performed this cure without any painful operation or preventing me from work. Since this terrible disease has been removed by Dr. Lighthill's skill I feel new life, and for the first time in forty years I feel once more what it is to be without daily pain, discomfort and distress. I am not a wealthy man, but no amount of money would tempt me to be put back in my former condition.

I make this public statement, not only from a deep and everlasting sense of gratitude to Dr. Lighthill, but also as a simple Christian duty to let the afflicted know where they can find a physician whose skill cannot be surpassed, and in whom implicit confidence can be placed.

H. VROOM.

A LOCAL ENDORSEMENT.

No. 188 Somerset st., Plainfield, N. J.

To the Residents of Plainfield, N. J.

Mr. H. Vroom, whose statement appears above, is a brother-in-law of mine. I personally know of his case and his suffering and also know the happy fact that to the surprise of himself and his friends, Dr. Lighthill effected a radical and permanent cure. His statement is true in every respect and does not say half enough in praise of Dr. Lighthill. Anyone who wishes this statement verified is at liberty to come and see me personally.

JOHN C. KINNEY.

Dr. Lighthill

HE IS A MURDERER NOW

Altenberger's Victim Dies of Her Wounds.

The Cowardly Assassin Makes a Full and Brazen Confession of His Atrocious Crime—Did This, However, at a Time He Believed His Victim Would Recover—Accepted Presents From Her and Took All Her Money and Never Gave Her Anything in Return—Never Intended to Marry Her—Killed the Girl to Get Rid of Her, Although He Admits She Never Did Him Any Harm.

JERSEY CITY, May 17.—Katie Rupp, the young woman who was shot at Snake Hill on Sunday evening by Bernhardt Altenberger, r took a turn for the worse yesterday afternoon, and died at 11:15 last night. The peritonitis which developed Tuesday became much more pronounced and no further efforts were made to remove the bullets.

She was told in the afternoon of Altenberger's arrest, but did not manifest any interest in the fact that he was in custody. The charge against Altenberger of assault with intent to kill, has been changed to murder.

A requisition will be issued for Altenberger to-day.

ALTENBERGER'S CONFESSION.

Believing His Victim Would Recover, He Tells the Story of His Crime.

UTICA, N. Y., May 17.—Altenberger made a confession to the district attorney at the police station here yesterday afternoon. After telling where he was born, his coming to America, etc., he said in substance:

"I got acquainted with Christina Vetter in Strasburg, Germany, on the railroad. I saw her in Elizabeth, N. J. I have been in love with her two months. I have some love letters from her. I did not expect to marry her.

"I got acquainted with Katie Rupp in Rome at the home of Mrs. Kraft in that city in February, 1894. I think I saw Katie Rupp almost a week after that. I came to Rome then to look for work; I got a job and worked until the 12th of this month. I first began to get money from Katie Rupp in February, when I was out of work. There was some talk between us about marrying. The first time I got $40 from her; I bought clothes with that money; I asked her for this money first.

"I may have borrowed from her all told at different times over $100; the money that I used to go down to Elizabeth to see Christina Vetter about Easter time I got of Katie Rupp. Four or five weeks ago Katie Rupp and I made arrangements to go away with the intention of getting married. I gave her that idea; I told her to leave Rome and come to Utica on a train leaving Rome and that I would meet her in Utica on a train that followed the same evening. I did not want people to know that I had left Rome with her.

"On the day we left I got $93 from her; she gave it to me between Albany and New York; I bought my ticket at Rome directly to New York; Katie bought a ticket from Rome to Utica; Katie got her trunk checked from Utica to New York; I told her to; we did not have a sleeper in going to New York. We did not stop in New York but went directly to Jersey City and went into a restaurant; I went with the proprietor of the restaurant and rented rooms for eight days. Nothing was paid for the rooms. Then we came back to another restaurant in Jersey City and had something to eat about 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

"We then went out towards the railroad. We walked on the track and we came to some bushes where there were some flowers and water on both sides of the track. There were parties in sight and we sat down there for two or three hours. Then we walked on a little further until we came to a bridge and got away from those parties who were fishing. We got away from the railroad and came to a stone quarry. Then we walked around and there was a house there that looked like a hospital. Kate had said she was tired.

"I wanted her to go in the hospital, when she said she was tired. I invited her to go upon the rocks and see the beautiful flowers, and she came along with me. We were up there a half hour.

"I told her that the Rome people would talk about me if I married a woman with red hair. Then I told her that I had thought it over, and as she was a Catholic and I a Protestant, it would not work.

"I had my revolver with me. After we had a little conversation I stepped back, pulled my revolver and shot her in the breast. I shot twice. After I shot first, she said: 'Oh, Bernard.' Then I shot again.

"Then I walked back a few feet from her and then I went back and took the watch she had on off of her. There was a little chain on it. She had my watch. After that I looked around and saw no one and ran away. She was lying down. I thought she was dead.

"I intended to kill her.

"I left her and went directly to Jersey City.

"I took the watch away from her because it was my watch, and I thought of it after I had shot her, because if it was found on her it would connect me with her.

"I bought the ring now shown me in Elizabeth on Monday with money I got of her. It cost $4. I bought the gold watch in New York. It cost $35. That small chain is Katie Rupp's and I took it off her person after I shot her. I broke it when I pulled it off her.

"I stayed Sunday night in Jersey City. I stayed Monday night in Elizabeth. I bought that revolver in Oneida in November. This straw hat Katie Rupp gave me a present of before we left Rome. She got it for me about ten or twelve days ago.

"I never gave her anything.

"I went to Elizabeth Monday forenoon and from there to New York. I stayed there until 4 o'clock Tuesday afternoon. I stayed in Elizabeth until half-past 2 Monday. I was there with an ice cream party. I am guilty of shooting Katie Rupp. She did not do anything to me and I shot her."

A Lucky He Didn't Reach Rome.

ROME, N. Y., May 17.—The news of Altenberger's capture was received with much satisfaction by the people of this city. A prominent German said that Altenberger was fortunate in not being able to get to Rome, for if found here he might have met with violence at the hands of the friends of Miss Rupp.

CONGRESS PLODDING ALONG.

Fourteen Hours in the Tariff Bill Disposed Of—House Work.

WASHINGTON, May 17.—The progress made on the tariff bill in the senate yesterday was not so satisfactory as that of the day before, but that was owing largely to the fact that nearly two hours' time was consumed in the delivery of a speech by Senator Gallinger, which he described as "an accurate historical analysis of American legislation on the subject, since the day when the pilgrims put their feet on Plymouth rock." He had only got to the Polk election in 1844 when he yielded the floor, with the purpose of continuing the subject hereafter.

Senator Dubois followed in a short speech in which he expressed his preference to have the bill passed promptly rather than have the tariff question left undecided, and declared that the highest and most stable prosperity would come only when protection was united with bi-metalism.

The result of the action was to dispose of fourteen items in the chemical schedule.

House of Representatives.

Ten pages of the agricultural appropriation bill disposed of in committee of the whole was the net result of nearly five hours session of the house. The feature of the proceedings was an attack upon the monthly crop bulletins issued by the department of agriculture by Representative Marsh, of Illinois. He denounced them as a fraud upon 30,000,000 of people of the United States, and said that they were issued only in the interests of speculators in farm products. He supplemented his speech with a motion to strike out the appropriation for the gathering of the information contained in these reports and their publication, but this failed of adoption. A large part of the afternoon was devoted to a discussion of the distribution of seeds by the department of agriculture, and after a vigorous fight, led by Pickler, of South Dakota; Ray, of New York, and Wilson, of Washington, an increase of $30,000 was made in the appropriation for this purpose over the amount recommended by the committee in the bill.

TROUBLE NOW FEARED.

Miners of Centerville and Crenshaw Again on the March.

RIDGEWAY, Pa., May 17.—The miners of Centerville are on the march again. This time they are reinforced by the Crenshaw miners. About 700 marched to St. Mary's headed by a brass band and accompanied by two wagon loads of provisions. A large mass meeting was held. Sheriff Elliott and fifty deputies armed with winchesters are guarding the works there.

The St. Mary's mines supply engines on the Philadelphia & Erie road. The employes did not go to work when the mob of visitors appeared, and as the latter have provisions on hand it is feared they will remain some time.

As the Italians in the crowd are hard to control it is doubtful if trouble can be averted.

A Fund Started in Paris for the Unlucky American Bicyclist.

PARIS, May 17.—The Debats says that the American bicycle rider Charles W. Ashinger, not having won a single one of the races in which he has engaged in Paris, and having no capital but his muscle, is in a condition bordering upon extreme poverty. On the strength of this announcement the professional bicyclists, bicycle makers, journalists and others started a fund for his benefit, and the subscriptions already amount to 500 francs.

Arrested for the Perdue Murder.

NEW LONDON, Conn., May 17.—Alexander Brady, a cook at the Hotel Winthrop, is under arrest on suspicion of being the man who shot and killed Frederick Perdue, a soldier of the garrison at Fort Trumbell, while the latter was walking with Lizzie Maloney, also employed at Hotel Winthrop. After the murder the girl was taken to the police station and detained there all night. She said that she did not know who the men were, but finally admitted that Brady was one of them. Brady is 30 years old, intelligent and a great reader. He denies any knowledge of the shooting and says he was at the Y. M. C. A. rooms when it occurred.

PAWTUCKET'S BIG FIRE

Property Valued at Half a Million Destroyed.

All of the Large Coal and Lumber Yards of the City Practically Swept Away—A Three-Masted Schooner Also Goes Up in Smoke—A Number of Dwellings Damaged.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., May 17.—The fire that started in Newell's coal yard, Pawtucket, just before 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon, destroyed over half a million dollars' worth of property and all of the large coal and lumber yards in Pawtucket were practically swept away. The property on either side of the river, from the Division street bridge on the north to the works of the Pawtucket Gas company on the west, and the Pawtucket Boat club on the east, was destroyed within a few hours.

The recent dry weather with the heat of the day produced conditions that made the timbers burn like tinder. Within a few minutes after the first spark started the work of destruction the immense coal shed presented a magnificent spectacle to the crowd that quickly gathered on the bridge. A strong northwest wind swept down the valley and carried sparks and burning embers from building to building.

The three-masted schooner L. F. Hopkins was moored at the dock on the water front of the Newell yard. This schooner was soon enveloped in flames and its hawsers burned away. The current swung the boat across the stream, making a bridge of fire to the east side of the river. With the wind sweeping in that direction the flames were carried to the premises of the Pawtucket city coal yard and very quickly were under great headway on the east side of the river.

A general alarm called the entire force and apparatus of the Pawtucket department and another alarm called the veteran association members.

Providence sent three steamers and Central Falls sent two hose companies and the Pacific steamer.

In less than half an hour the fire worked its way southward into the premises of Oliney and Payne Bros., coal and builders' materials, on the west side of the river.

On the other side of the river all the owners of the premises could do was to save horses and harness. The fire was in undisputed possession of the Pawtucket coal yard and the lumber yard of John T. Cottrell. The four big coal and lumber yards burned fiercely.

Lumber street on the west, is lined with tenement houses. The occupants of these dwellings were terrified with the prospect and took out their household goods in great haste. Fortunately but a few of the dwellings were reached by the flames.

Jersey Village Swept By Flames.

MOUNT HOLLY, N. J., May 17.—Fire yesterday at Pemberton, a village five miles from, here destroyed the Methodist church and parsonage, eight dwellings and one store, and had it not been for assistance sent from this city and Burlington the whole place would now be in ruins.

ARMOR PLATE INVESTIGATION.

The Testimony, It is Said, Would Make Interesting Reading.

PITTSBURG, May 17.—The armor plate investigation board, consisting of Capt. W. T. Samson, chief of the ordnance bureau of the United States navy; Lieut. A. A. Ackerman, United States navy, and Prof. T. R. Alger, met behind doors in Attorney J. K. Wallace's office yesterday. The session lasted several hours and was evidently a very interesting occasion, but the obtaining of any information as to the proceedings was entirely out of the possibilities. During this secret session three witnesses were examined.

The naval committee arrived from Washington, unannounced and unexpected save by Attorney Wallace, who was apprised by wire of their coming. The investigating board went directly from the attorney's office to Munhall (Homestead). They were accompanied by a half dozen gentlemen whose identity was not disclosed.

The board continued the investigation at Homestead. Capt. Samson said that none of the testimony will be made public until their affairs had been settled.

Attorney Wallace said: "The testimony offered would make very interesting reading," but he would not even intimate its nature.

Fierce Forest Fire.

PORT JERVIS, N. Y., May 17.—For three days a fierce fire has been burning in the mountains just across the Delaware river, in Pennsylvania, and between there and Milford, a summer resort. The fire has been helped by a furious wind and has burned over an area of about seven miles, destroying a large amount of timber and two or three farm houses. The atmosphere is thick with the smoke. The people who live in the woods are all out endeavoring to save their homes.

Postoffice Robbery.

MILTON, N. H., May 17.—The safe in the postoffice in Murray Bros.' store, at Milton mills, was blown open some time after midnight. The robbers secured about $400 in money and stamps. It is thought to be the work of the same gang which has been operating in New Hampshire and Maine for several months past, and has blown safes in twelve or fifteen postoffices.

An Old Ticket Agent Resigns.

HARTFORD, Conn., May 17.—Col. Levi Woodhouse, for about twenty-two years night ticket agent of the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad in this city, has resigned on account of ill health. Col. Woodhouse commanded the Fourth Regiment Connecticut volunteers when it was organized for the war. He is a veteran of the Mexican war.

WAR ON THE TURFMEN

More Arrests at the Gravesend Track.

De Lacy Evidently Determined in His Fight for Revenge—The Arrested Men Warned That the Next Time Are They Arrested Their Bail Will Be Considerably Increased.

NEW YORK, May 17.—The second day of the racing season at the Gravesend race track was one full of much excitement, owing to the stand Peter DeLacy has taken against the Brooklyn Jockey club. The fact that some of the horses could be legally seized as gambling paraphernalia, together with the rumor that DeLacy would probably so proceed, was fully realized by owners.

The sheriff did not take that step, however, though several deputy sheriffs were and in about the track.

In the betting ring the excitement ran high, due to the report that the bookmakers would be proceeded against by DeLacy. Their fears were well grounded, for at the finish of the sixth race Egan, in charge of the bookies, and three bookmakers were placed under arrest and taken before Judge Voorhees, who admitted them to bail in the sum of $1,000.

Sheriff Buttling and a squad of deputies appeared at the track at about half past 4 o'clock and immediately went to the judges' stand, where they informed Col. Simmons, Clarence McDowell and Victo Smith that they were under arrest for aiding and abetting a lottery, and a journey to the town hall must be taken.

Meantime one of the deputies had gone upstairs to the little enclosure over the judges' stand.

"John Hunter?" he said inquiringly.

"Yes," answered the chairman of the stewards.

"I have a warrant for your arrest," said the deputy, stepping forward and showing the document. Hunter turned slightly pale, but soon recovered his composure and said he was ready to go.

A warrant had also been issued for J. G. K. Lawrence, president of the Coney Island Jockey club.

Carriages were procured outside the track and the party proceeded to the town hall, where Justice Voorhees held each in $2,000 bail, and their bail bonds were signed by ex-Senator McCarthy. Justice Voorhees stated that if they were brought before him again he would hold them in bonds of $5,000.

President Philip Dwyer when informed of the arrests of the judges, said that the association would stand by the bookmakers and others who are in trouble, that eminent counsel would be employed, and that in all probability General Benjamin F. Tracy would direct the affairs of the turfmen.

OPERATORS IN NO HURRY

The Coal Strike Is Money in Their Pockets Now.

Some of Them Holding Large Stocks Yet Which They Are Now Beginning to Dispose of at Almost Fabulous Prices—Little Chance of a Settlement at Cleveland.

CLEVELAND, O., May 17.—One of the best posted men in regard to the state of affairs in the mining conference said to a United Press reporter this morning that it was his belief that the present meeting would fail to accomplish the work for which it was called. "There are too many conflicting interests," he said, "and too much self-interest at stake. Some of the operators hold large stocks of coal which they were beginning to dispose of at almost fabulous prices, and they are more than willing to see the strike continue until their coal piles are levelled. I look for a failure to agree at the present time, but if I were to fix a time when another conference will be held at which an adjustment can be made, I should say about the 1st of June."

After the adjournment of the joint convention the conference committee met and discussed the situation. In answer to the proposition of the operators for a scale of 65 cents for Pennsylvania and 58 cents for Ohio, President John McBryde presented the proposition of the miners, which was the scale of last year—79 cents for Pennsylvania and all other sections to be adjusted on that basis. This would make the Ohio rate 70 cents.

The conferees from the operators were not authorized to accept this proposition and the miners refused to hear the operators' rate. After several hours of fruitless discussion the committee adjourned to meet again to-day before the joint convention shall assemble.

Patrick McBryde informed the United Press reporter that incredible as it might seem it is a positive fact that the Pennsylvania river operators have between 20,000,000 and 30,000,000 bushels of coal in transit between Pittsburg and Cincinnati, or in barges tied up against the river bank.

"Do you think they will break their necks trying to get the mines opened before that coal is marketed with prices climbing skyward every day?" he asked. "It is not human nature that they should."

SATOLLI AT DANBURY.

The Distinguished Prelate Given His First Municipal Welcome.

DANBURY, Conn., May 17.—Papal legate Satolli arrived in this city at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon from Waterbury and for the first time in the history of the distinguished Catholic dignitary's travels in America he was given a municipal welcome. The mayor and other city officials were at the station and met him and divided the honors of receiving him with the priests of the local parish. The mayor shook hands with the prelate and addressed a few words of welcome, while the latter's eyes sparkled with pleasure at the meeting and he thanked the mayor for his courtesy. The party was conveyed to the rectory, where a reception was tendered by the children of the parochial schools.

At 6 o'clock the monsignor was dined at Francis F. Lasale's residence and at 8 o'clock, escorted by all the Catholic societies of the city, he was taken to the rectory, where a public reception was held. He will remain here till this afternoon, when he will go to Milford.

KILLED WHILE DRUNK.

Now Armstrong's Widow Recovers Damages from the Rumseller.

ALBANY, May 17.—A novel suit for damages has just been concluded in the circuit court. It was the case of Carrie Armstrong against Philip Strempel and Amelia Strempel, the amount of damages sought being $5,000. The jury brought in a verdict of $2,000.

The defendants' keep a saloon. One night in July, 1891, the husband of the plaintiff, James Armstrong, it was alleged, visited the defendants' place and drank freely of intoxicants, so much so that he was completely drunk when he left their place. On the following morning his mangled body was found alongside the tracks of the New York Central & Hudson River railroad. The widow brought suit, claiming that they were the indirect cause of the man's death. The case will be appealed.

Postmasters Confirmed.

WASHINGTON, May 17.—The senate has confirmed the following postmaster nominations:

New Hampshire—Albert N. Flinn, Nashua.

Massachusetts—John H. Clune, Springfield; James Lally, jr., Milford.

Pennsylvania—James Holland, Monongahela.

Commonwealers Save a Train.

TOLEDO, O., May 17.—The Sullivan section of Randall's army arrived here in box cars on the Lake Shore road. The men saved a train from being wrecked near Goshen, Ind., the other night, and say they have made friends with the railroad by so doing. They were provided quarters in the old stock yards across the river.

Tolland's Forest Fire Still Burning.

ROCKVILLE, Conn., May 17.—Tolland's forest fire, which started Sunday is still burning in the vicinity of Square Pond, having burned over nearly 1,000 acres. A big gang of men have fought the fire day and night. A number of houses and barns were saved only by setting back fires.

Gold Reserve Down to $87,000,000.

WASHINGTON, May 17.—The treasury department has advices that $2,5000,000 has been engaged at the New York sub-treasury for export to Europe. This reduces the gold reserve below $87,000,000.

Eleonora Duse Making a Hit.

LONDON, May 17.—Eleonora Duse played "Divorcons" at Daly's theatre last evening with great success. She has been commanded to appear before the queen at Windsor this evening.

Trying to Buy Coal Abroad.

LONDON, May 17.—In consequence of the coal strikes in the United States several Scotch coal owners have been asked to tender a number of ship loads of coal for New York.

HARD FOR YOUNG GIRLS.

Trying Preparation for Entrance Into Society—What Paine's Celery Compound Does.

To be graceful, entertaining, accomplished in music and French, easy talkers on topics of the day, yet up in ancient history—this and much more is what society expects of the young girls who "come out" at 18 or 19.

In the few years before 20 so great a change is wrought that we almost, as if by magic, see a woman, where but a time before was only a child.

If, during these critical years, constant mental exertion absorbs blood and nerve force, the system grows feeble and suffers from lack of nourishment.

The vital mistake of the thousands of girls who yearly break down in schools and colleges is just here: A vigorous, healthy body and brain must have an unlimited supply of pure, rich blood, fully capable of building up growing tissues and repairing the waste of hard worked nerves and brain and body.

This is just what Paine's celery compound is providing today for over-worked, anxious, "run down" people all over the United States and Canada.

If care be taken that no part of the body be poorly nourished, a great deal of hard work and study can be safely gone through. But when young girls are seen to grow thin, pale, spiritless and nervous there is plainly starvation of some of the important organs and a craving of the blood and nerves for better nutrition.

Paine's celery compound was first prepared by Prof. Edward E. Phelps, M. D., LL. D., of Dartmouth college, with the fullest knowledge of any medical man of his day of what tired, weak, nervous, women need to make them well and strong.

The happy effects of Paine's celery compound in all cases of debility, nervous weakness, and impoverished, impure blood are astonishing. It makes people well where everything else fails.

This remarkable remedy makes sickly, feeble women strong; does away completely with the languid feeling that come from underfed nerves and blood.

As a sure sign of its radical effect on the system for good, it is noticed that in a short time the eyes grow clearer and brighter, the cheeks ruddier, and the mind more active and hopeful.

Paine's celery compound cures dyspepsia, sick headaches, neuralgia, rheumatism and every symptom of impure blood, and permanently cures the most difficult diseases of the liver, kidneys and heart.

Thousands and thousands of men and women who have taken Paine's celery compound are today perfectly well and happy.

Utah May Soon Be Admitted.

WASHINGTON, May 17.—All but the final step has been taken in the admission of the territory of Utah as a state of the union. A favorable report on the bill will be made to the senate to-day by Senator Faulkner, chairman of the committee on territories. It is believed that the house will agree to the senate amendments and in that case the territory of Utah will be started on its way to statehood some time during this session of congress.

Fighting Breckinridge.

FRANKFORT, Ky., May 17.—An anti-Breckinridge meeting is to be held here shortly. Leading men of the city and county are at work perfecting arrangements to hold such meetings in every county in the district. It is understood they will not countenance anything which will allow them to partake or savor of politics, but will make them purely and distinctly anti-Breckinridge demonstrations.

Probably a Fifth Victim.

BOSTON, May 17.—Search for the bodies of the Harvard students drowned in the bay on Sunday night is going on systematically. There is a terrible possibility that a fifth life was lost, that of William S. Hockley, a member of the senior class, who has been missing since Sunday. Hockley's home is at Philadelphia. He is said to have accompanied the ill-fated party.

Rebel Victory in Brazil.

LONDON, May 17.—Advices from Rio de Janeiro say that the Brazilian government forces under command of Generals Juca and Tigre have been defeated in a battle with the insurgents near Iguazu, on the river of that name which divides the states of Sao Paulo and Rio Grande do Sul. The federals had 140 men killed in the engagement.

Teachers' Pension Bill Not Vetoed.

ALBANY, May 17.—The statement published in certain New York papers that Gov. Flower had vetoed the New York city teachers' pension fund bill is erroneous. The governor several weeks ago signed Senator Ahearns' bill providing for a New York city teachers' retirement fund.

Fourth Respite for Student Taylor.

ITHACA, N. Y., May 17.—Chief Justice Andrews, at Syracuse, has granted a stay of proceedings in the Sophomore Taylor case. This stay allows Taylor to remain out of jail pending the decision of the court of appeals. The court of appeals meets in June.

Bad Boy Peck for Governor.

MILWAUKEE, May 17.—George W. Peck, governor of Wisconsin, may succeed Thomas F. Oakes as one of the receivers of the Northern Pacific railroad company. This announcement will no doubt cause considerable surprise, but there is a movement on foot to bring the change about. The belief here is general that Receiver Oakes will be removed as a result of the examination into shady Northern Pacific deals now being conducted by Alfred L. Cary, the special master in chancery appointed by Judge Jenkins.

Forged Express Money Orders.

MOUNT VERNON, N. Y., May 17.—F. E. Thompson, the Adams express agent in this city, has received one of the numerous forged and counterfeit money orders uttered by persons yet unknown, on the Wells Fargo Express company. The order was tendered for payment from a well-known attorney of this place who had received it from Lawyer W. C. Foster, of St. Louis, to collect. The order altogether is a very clever piece of work and would deceive anyone but an expert.

Town Treasurer Skips Out.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., May 17.—D. B. Randall, town treasurer of Morris, four miles from Litchfield, in this state, has fled, leaving a deficit of more than $1,000 in the town treasury, and owing several thousand dollars besides. His father will make good the loss.

FOR THE relief and cure of a cold in the head there is more potency in Ely's Cream Balm than in anything else it is possible to prescribe. This preparation has for years past been making a brilliant success as a remedy for cold in the head, catarrh and hay fever. Used in the initial stages of these complaints Cream Balm prevents any serious development of the symptoms, while almost numberless cases are on record of radical cures of chronic catarrh and hay fever after all other treatments have proved of no avail.

HYMENEAL.

Grace—Randolph.

The interest of society centred last night in the marriage of one of Plainfield's favorite daughters, Miss Virginia F. Randolph, whose father, ex-Mayor Lewis V. F. Randolph, has been so largely identified with all the progressive movements of the town. The accomplished Miss Randolph is as popular among the young people as is Mr. Randolph among leading citizens, and it was truly a host of friends that gathered to give her wedding greetings.

The fortunate winner of this charming bride was Lee Ashley Grace of Orange, a talented young man whose successful achievements will find ready help in the personal traits of his gifted young wife. Miss Randolph's genius for painting, fostered by an education under the best masters Mr. Randolph could secure, has marked out for her a notable artistic career which will be a source of additional pride to the husband who last night so proudly received custody of her happy future.

The marriage took place at 7:30, in the First Baptist Church, which was well filled with witnessing friends. W. E. MacClymont sat at the organ, and the air was filled with the music of the beautiful wedding march from Lohengrin as the bridal party entered the church and took their places. The self-possession of all was marked, and the ceremony was performed with most becoming grace. The pretty bridal scene had for its setting a tasteful array of floral treasures, cleverly arranged by Miss Caroline Randolph and Mr. Hitch. Dogwood blossoms were in the background, their beautiful whiteness gleaming with much effect through the green branches of flourishing palms, whose broad and graceful leaves shaded the smilax, ferns and begonias grouped below. A border of pure lilies of the valley encircled this garden of bloom.

Robed in white satin and Honiton lace, and carrying white roses, the bride was a pleasing picture of fair young womanhood, her features beaming with smiling animation. Her ornaments were diamonds and pearls, the latter the gift of the groom. The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Caroline Randolph, maid of honor; and by Miss Helene Pupke of New York, Miss Grace Beake of Orange, and her sisters Miss Marion and Miss Josephine Randolph, bridemaids. The maid of honor wore white organdie over white silk, and carried a bouquet of roses of the same color. The bridemaids' costumes were of white India muslin with primrose yellow ribbon and roses to match. The gifts of the bride to the maid of honor and the bridemaids were pins of four-leaf-clover pattern, set with pearls. Pearl pins were given to the best man and ushers by the groom.

Rev. Stanley White of Orange, and Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes, pastor of the church, were the officiating clergymen. The best man was Allerton Hitch of Orange, and the ushers were Bryant Kneass of Orange, Percy Stewart of Plainfield, Walter Cluett of Troy, and Philip Kopper of New York.

With a superb dignity of manner the father surrendered his daughter as bride, and she who had entered the church as Miss Virginia Randolph left it as Mrs. Lee Ashley Grace. Her sunny nature evidenced itself, as she advanced down the aisle to the church door, by her gracious recognition of friends, who welcomed her smiling bows as a most pleasing incident of the wedding.

Proceeding to the beautiful home of Mr. and Mrs. Randolph, at East Front street and Farragut road, the bridal couple entered to the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march, exquisitely played by P. L. Conde, Clarence Eick and Fermin Ferrer, who were the musicians of the evening. A most cordial reception was given, and the famous hospitality of the Randolph home was exerted to the fullest extent. The reception was marked by a sociability not always enjoyed at wedding receptions. Although over 400 attended, the rooms were not at all crowded. The numerous gifts received were admired for their beauty and value. The house was prettily decorated with roses and lilies of the valley. Delicious refreshments were served.

Mr. and Mrs. Grace had the 10:10 Philadelphia train stopped, and boarded it for their wedding journey. A party of friends accompanied them to the station to say good-bye. Mr. and Mrs. Grace will return to Plainfield to spend the Summer, and will afterwards reside in New York, where Mr. Grace is in business as a linen importer.

The guests at the reception were principally from New York and Plainfield. They included a large number of the members of the Art Students League of New York, an organization of which the bride was corresponding secretary.

Among others were: Ex-Secretary of State John Bigelow, and Mr. and Mrs Geo. Wilson Smith of New York; Mayor and Mrs. Alexander Gilbert, Col. and Mrs. Mason W. Tyler, Rev. Dr. and Mrs. D. J. Yerkes and the Misses Yerkes, Rev. and Mrs. Stanley White and Miss White of Orange; Mr. and Mrs. John S Baldwin, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas E. F. Randolph and the Misses Randolph of New York; Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Broadway, Dr. Coles of Scotch Plains; Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Condit of Orange; Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Cahoone, Mr. and Mrs. James Clark, Mr. and Mrs. J. Galt Smith of New York; Mr and Mrs. Henry E. Daboll, Mr. and Mrs. John B. Dumont, Mr. and Mrs. A. Walter Haviland, Mr. and Mrs. B J. Shreve, Mr. and Mrs. Matthias Price and Miss Elizabeth Price, and Mr. and Mrs. Matthias Price, Jr., of Newark; Mr. and Mrs. Horace R. Ford of Mercer County; Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. Halloway, Mr. and Mrs. John Erskine, Dr. and Mrs. W. H. Murray, Dr. and Mrs. O. L. Jenkins, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Fleming, Mr. and Mrs. F.O. Herring, Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Ik. Huntsman, Miss Lisignolo, Mr. and Mrs. Jas. McGee, Mr. and Mrs. Henry A. McGee, Major W. D. W. Miller, David R. Morse, Miss Morse and Fred Morse of Brooklyn, Mr. and Mrs. James Middledith, Mr. and Mrs. William Wallace Howland, Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Opdyke, Mr. and Mrs. John F. Randolph of Brooklyn, Mrs. J. W. Bushmore, Mrs. Charles E. Rider and Miss Rider, Miss Scribner, Miss Newton, Mr. and Mrs. George H. Goddard, Mr. and Mrs. J. Evarts Tracy and the Misses Tracy, Mrs. Dexter Tiffany, the Misses Tweedy, Mr. and Mrs. Walter E. Stewart and Miss Stewart, Mr. and Mrs. Augustus D. Shepard, Mr. and Mrs. Theodore B. Wilcox of Newark, Mrs. E. L. Walz and Miss Walz, Miss Grace Vought of Newark, the Misses VanBoskerck, Mr. and Mrs. O. T. Waring, Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Waring, Mr. and Mrs. T. S. Waterman and Miss Waterman of Orange, Mr. and Mrs. St. J. McCutchen and Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Smith.

Higgins—Stout.

A very pretty wedding took place yesterday afternoon at 3, at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Stout, Centreville, Miss Mary B. Stout becoming the wife of Aaron M. Higgins of 184 Grove street, North Plainfield. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Wyckoff, pastor of the Reading Dutch Reformed Church.

A large number of friends and relatives attended, and all congratulated the young couple, wishing them a happy and prosperous journey through life. The gifts were numerous and costly.

Mr. and Mrs. Higgins will spend a week in Philadelphia and Washington, and on their return will keep house at 122 Liberty street.

Mr. Higgins is the youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Higgins and is in the employ of Electrician Phillips.

Vail—Slack.

Miss Matilda Slack of Raritan and David Vail of Plainfield were married last Saturday evening by Rev. Cornelius Schenck. The happy couple left the same evening on a tour. On their return they will reside in Plainfield.

The Spring House Cleaning Wisely urged by the BOARD OF HEALTH is not complete without a proper use of DISINFECTANTS. But, in choosing these, do not be misled into paying fancy prices for "patent" specialties. Common lime is better than any of them for damp cellars and stables. For vaults, drains, cess-pools, the best and cheapest disinfectant is COPPERAS, supplied by us by the pound or barrel at low rates. But for use in the house, in the plumbing, in kitchen sinks, in closets, for purifying the air of sick rooms, deodorizing offensive discharges—in short, for all purposes of a household disinfectant, nothing can excel the powerful solution of chlorides made and sold by us for 15 years under the name of REYNOLDS'S ODORLESS DISINFECTANT. North Plainfield Forced to Abandon the Proposed Improvement.

The North Plainfield Township Committee met last night in Spencer's Hall. Chairman R. M. Fountain, Clerk Horace J. Martin, W. C. Smith, and Elias Allen, were present. The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved, and several bills were presented and ordered paid.

In relation to the extension of Watchung avenue, an opinion was received from Corporation Counsel Charles A. Reed. It was read by the clerk, and was as follows:

The Township Committee of the Borough of North Plainfield:

GENTLEMEN:—Pursuant to your request for an opinion as to the legal method of terminating the proceedings for opening Peace street, and refunding such assessments as were paid, I would state as follows:

The proceedings having been instituted by joint action of Plainfield and North Plainfield, neither side should act finally without consulting the other. I requested the Corporation Counsel of Plainfield to bring the question to the attention of the Common Council. He did so and the matter is now under consideration. It is probable they will decide, if it is agreeable to you, to abandon further efforts under the special law. I am promised a decisive answer to that question in a short time.

In relation to refunding assessments. The proceedings in the Supreme Court resulted in setting aside the assessments only as to those who brought the suits. None of whom, I believe, had paid their assessments. As to all others, the assessments still remain in full force. The decision of the court makes it plain that if the others should now apply to have the assessments set aside as to them also, it would be done, but until it is done they cannot recover any money, nor could the committee legally refund it.

There are several decisions of the Court of Errors to that effect, notably those to be found in 10 Vr. 555, 12 Vr. 362, and 22 Vr. 164.

I believe that the court may be induced to make an order in the suits that were tried that will be broad enough to set aside the whole assessment, as to others as well as to those who brought the suits, and if so the trouble and expense of bringing other suits can be avoided, and after that has been done it will be lawful to refund the moneys which have been paid, and the whole matter will then be legally ended.

If it is the desire of the committee that such result shall be brought about I will endeavor to accomplish it. I beg to call attention to the fact that throughout these proceedings the committee did merely what the law compelled it to do. It did not institute the proceedings nor encourage them. It carefully followed the law, under the advice of counsel, and its proceedings were found by the court to be entirely and absolutely regular and correct. The same deliberation and care exercised in ending the proceedings will result in saving future litigation and expense, while any hasty or unconsidered action may result in serious complications. Very respectfully,

CHARLES A. REED,
Township Counsel.

Mr. Smith thought that the Plainfield Common Council should be consulted before anything was done in the matter. Mr. Fountain was of the same opinion.

A motion was finally made by Mr. Smith that the corporation counsel be instructed to abandon all proceedings, refund the assessment money, and bring to a close all action pertaining thereto. This was adopted.

A complaint was made to the committee of dumping on land near William Spencer's property, in the Valley, and it was decided to adopt some measure whereby this would be stopped.

The committee decided to meet again as soon as they received a report from the corporation counsel concerning his action on their instructions. The meeting then adjourned.

Remember June 1.

The time draws nigh (June 1) when VanEmburgh & Son will open to the public their new quarters in the Babcock Building. They are fitting up the store in finest style, and are laying in a stock of goods that will astonish buyers with their excellence of quality and lowness of price. Their store will be one of the best and busiest in the State. Its lighting facilities are of surpassing excellence. Remember June 1, VanEmburgh & Son.

The Press Was Right, as Usual.

The death certificate of the late Jacob Seader signed by Dr. Berg yesterday gives as the cause of death dislocation of the neck, as stated in The Daily Press of Tuesday.

THE SQUIRESES VICTIMIZED.

A Nice Young Man Substituted a Case Which He Brought to the Store for One Which Held a Prize.

Captain O'Connor, of the Church street station, notified Police Headquarters yesterday to send out a general alarm for a $400 gun which has been stolen from the sporting goods establishment of Henry C. Squires & Son, of Plainfield, at 20 Cortlandt street, New York city.

The story of the theft is this: Monday afternoon a dapper, well-dressed young man, entered the store and asked to be shown some guns.

He said he would like to see only the best manufactured.

"The price is no object"—said the young man, with a lordly air—"as I want to make a present to my brother."

After examining the most valuable guns in the different showcases, the customer went away, remarking that he would come back the next day and make a choice.

The clerk who waited on him Monday left the store for lunch at 2 Tuesday, and a few minutes later the dapper young man entered.

On this occasion he carried a leather gun case. He was very business like and in a great hurry. Two guns that he examined suited him very well. One was valued at $700 and was the most expensive piece in the store. The other was a gun manufactured by W. W. Greener, of Birmingham, England.

The customer was told that the price of the latter gun was $400.

The $700 piece was not in a case, while the Greener gun was in a solid leather case.

The case carried by the dapper young man was exactly similar.

Turning suddenly to the clerk, he said he thought he could be suited with a gun, and would come back later in the day.

He picked up the case containing the Greener gun and left the store.

SHOOTING FOR PRIZES.

Good Sport at the Climax Traps.

Twenty members of the Climax Gun Club faced the traps yesterday in their regular monthly competition for club prizes. The shooting was of a remarkably high order, some of the handicap men putting up some great scores. Apgar and C. Smith, who intended going to the big tournament at Knoxville, Tenn., will not be able to attend, as both have been quite sick and feel as though they would not be able to do themselves justice; the Climax Gun Club will be represented there by T. H. Keller.

In yesterday's shooting both Smith and Keller used the Rapid Climax Shell, which is the latest production of the United States Cartridge Company, and is pronounced by the expert shots the best shell that ever has been put on the market for use with nitro powders.

The scores:

Keller, 23; Brantingham, 23; Smith, 21; D. Terry, 21; A. Trust, 25; Manning, 27; Pierson, 21; Goodman, 23; Cramer, 27; Scott, 25; Van-Dyke, 27; J. Zeglio, 26; H. Campbell, 28; A. Smith, 13; Coddington, 26; J. Darby, 21; P. Jay, 17; W. Terry, 22; W. Squires, 21.

Receiver for Tonti.

The levying of an extra assessment of $525 by the Supreme Council of the Order of Tonti, which on Monday caused such surprise among the members of the Plainfield lodge, was quickly followed yesterday by an application for the appointment of a receiver for the order in Philadelphia.

The complainants allege that by next May the obligations of the order will foot up in the neighborhood of $7,500,000, while its assets will amount to not more than $2,000,000. It was for the purpose of making up this large deficiency, they claim, that the recent extra assessment of $525, styled a "debit assessment", was levied on the members.

Sick Benefits in Senate Lodge.

It is hoped that every member of Senate Lodge, No. 3504, Knights of Honor, will attend the meeting this evening, as a report is expected from the committee appointed to formulate a plan for sick benefits.

WELCOME, CRESCENTS!

Under That Banner May You Win Many Victories!

The West End Base-Ball Association held a meeting Monday night and decided to name their base-ball team the Crescents. They will endeavor to give Plainfield people a good game of amateur base-ball, the same as was given in days gone by when the Y. M. C. A. had charge of the team. The association has made arrangements with the Crescent Wheelmen to play on their new grounds, and will open the season Decoration Day in the afternoon with the strong amateur team of the Cranford Country Club, who last year played some strong teams and succeeded in defeating the West Ends of Somerville. Games have also been arranged between the West Ends of Somerville, Victor Athletic Club of New York, Roselle, Raritan, Flemington and several other good out of town clubs. The following will probably make up the team: Walker, Corey, Mague, Firstbrook, Cose, Babcock, Leland, Pearson and Symons; Young as extra. They expect to appear in their new uniforms Decoration Day, and will try to open the season with a victory.

HIGH SCHOOL CHRONICLES.

The Linnæan Society had an outing on the mountain Monday. One of the members photographed the others, and all the girls are anxious to see how they look surrounding the modest lone-star young man. The members found a puzzling variety of clover, with a long, heavy head, which they now seek to analyze. It is thought to be an Australian importation.

The Lyceum will have a random talk on miscellaneous subjects this afternoon Wilbur Cornwell and Lambert Fish will declaim.

The Kappa Delta Phi will hold a declamation and narration meeting this afternoon. Each member is to speak on some important event of his life.

The agonies of final exams have begun.

A meeting of the P. H. S. A. A. was held yesterday afternoon. Arrangements for the field day of June 9 were made. The games will be held at the bicycle track of the Crescent Wheelmen. It was decided to offer silver and bronze medals as first and second prizes. F. L. C. Martin, W. H. Rogers and H. C. Wells were elected a committee to arrange handicaps. The Committee of Arrangements was appointed as follows: Ralph Campbell, F. W. Goddard, H. C. Wells, F. W. Cornwell, C. C. Gallup, C. L. Biley, Arthur Crane. C. B. Morse was elected Clerk of the Course. The list of events as revised is as follows:

100 yard dash, open.
Running high jump, open.
Standing broad jump.
Putting the shot.
½ mile bicycle race (handicap) open.
¼ " " "
⅝ " " open.
2 " " (handicap) open.

The open events are open to students from schools in Plainfield and North Plainfield; the rest are open only to active members of the P. H. S. A. A. Entries for the various events will be received by members of the Committee of Arrangements.

NOTES OF THE RED MEN.

The committee have decided to furnish a free supper to those attending Miantonomoh's entertainment in Red Men's Hall May 23.

Under a dispensation John Mortimer received four degrees in Paugh-Caugh-Naugh-Sinque Tribe last night. Frank L. C. Martin was adopted. C. H. Rugg and Thomas J. Young were added to the committee to buy paraphernalia.

Twelve hunters have been notified to present themselves at the meeting of Miantonomoh Tribe tomorrow night to be raised to the rank of warriors. Action will be taken on the propositions received at the last meeting, and four applications are expected.

Iona Council met last night and formally changed the meeting night from the first and third Wednesdays of the month to the first and third Mondays. This arrangement will continue until October, to accommodate the Liederkranz which is to meet in Red Men's Hall Wednesday nights. It was decided to invite both of the local tribes of Red Men to headquarters the evening of June 4, when Nennemosha Council of Elizabeth will be entertained by Iona.

Plainfield's Young Militiamen.

The Third Regiment Cadet Corps had a drill under the direction of Captain George F. Edwards in front of the Crescent Avenue Church last evening. T. O. Doane, Jr., Horace Moore, and Frederick Pope, were new recruits in the awkward squad.

Arrangements have been completed for the trip to Bloomfield Memorial Day. About 30 will go from Plainfield. Captain Edwards will be the officer of the day.

Railroad Pays Damages.

William Lane, while carrying freight in the freight-house of the Central Railroad last March, fell through the floor and sprained his leg. He placed the matter in the hands of his attorney, W. S. Angleman, for adjustment. Through Mr. Angleman's efforts the railroad company agreed to pay the full amount of damages claimed, and today Mr. Lane received the company's check for the amount.

Manhattan Merriment.

The members of the Plainfield Liederkranz were entertained by Jacob Kipp, the new proprietor of the Manhattan Wine-room, last evening. In addition to their vocal practice, the guests had a bowling game between two picked teams and enjoyed a supper.

PYTHIAN SISTERS.

Plans Progressing to Organize a Temple in Plainfield.

An effort is being made to organize a Temple of Pythian Sisters in Plainfield. The second of a series of preliminary meetings to lay plans for its development was held last Friday, in the Knights' Hall. The results thus far are most satisfactory.

By the courtesy of the Editor of The Press, I am by request permitted to present to his readers a subject of general interest in a certain direction, viz: the object of the order of Pythian Sisters.

A glance at the situation will show at once the urgent need of such a society. A Knight in good standing is taken sick. His wages cease, but the benefits to which his allegiance to his order entitles him are forthcoming.

At such a time this help is incalculable, as the good wife can testify. With her loving and economic hand at the helm, expenses are kept down. The little ones are cared for and continue at school. Delicacies, bought for the sick man, are guarded for him. The others are provided with plain food. Watchers relieve the wife during the long night vigils. Thus, mercifully, the hard hand of fate is stayed. Suppose, on the other hand, the wife is prostrated with disease or death! Alas, when that loving hand is stricken, trouble indeed enters the household door. The money of the wage-earner is brought in just the same, but under the management of other hands what becomes of it? $5 does not go as far as did $1 before. Hirelings unscrupulous and dishonest waste, neglect and destroy. The poor wife must rise from her bed before she is able to administer to the wants of her family. In her weakness she must rise to economize, and in many instances her heroic effort costs her her life. How inestimably valuable would extra help be at such a time. It need not be dwelt upon. All can see. Wives, mothers, sisters, and daughters of knights, will you join? The dark hour may not be very far away, and should your own bank account preclude the possibility of your ever suffering for lack of care in sickness, will you not join in order to aid the cause of less fortunate sisterhood? Can the Golden Rule be exemplified in any way more potently?

And what words of praise can be said of the action of the Knights thus far in the cause! Courage, sisters, for this alone is sufficient cause to go on. From the first kind words of "God Speed You" from Judge Ulrich, down to the latest courteous acts of the trustees of the hall, all has been kindness and encouragement.

May the order of Pythian Sisters all over the land go bravely on in its mission of holy love until it beneficent influences shall be felt not alone by its own members, but within the ranks of the splendid order with which it is so closely allied!

A meeting will be held tomorrow at 2:30 p. m. in the Knights Hall on West Second street, near Park avenue. Wives, mothers, sisters and daughters of Knights are cordially invited to be present. The charter membership fee is $1. Knights may become honorary members for 50 cents.

Funeral of Jacob Seader.

The funeral services over the remains of Jacob Seader were held in the German Reformed Church this afternoon at 2:30, Rev. Frederick Koechli officiating. Thirty-five veterans of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., were among the attendants.

An Athletic Judge.

NEWBURGH, N. Y., May. 17.—Judge Charles F. Brown, of the supreme court, presiding judge of the general term now in session at Poughkeepsie, lives here. As he was returning to his home after his day's labors, the passage of his carriage was blocked by a crowd surrounding two men who were fighting in the street. The judge waited a little while for a policeman to come, but none came. Then he got out of his carriage, made his way through the crowd, seized the fighters each by the neck, and threw them to opposite sides of the street. The judge then re-entered his carriage and drove away without a word of comment. Police now came up and arrested the fighters, and they were fined by the recorder. The judge is a muscular man, though slender in build, and the fighters found his grips powerful one.

An Unprofitable Guest.

SIOUX FALLS, S. D., May 17.—Moth. Superior St. Anislaus and Sister Clem. of the convent here, have brought su. against Miss Florence Kilkelly of Best for $40,000 for slander. The defendant was entertained by the sisters when s. was here six weeks ago to write up t. divorce colony. It is alleged that she to offense because the sisters refused to im certain disclosures and left the convei She is also accused of saying that t sisters tried to poison her, and of writi letters to the effect that the sisters were the companions of disreputable women and that their convent was infested with vice.

"Look at those asses of people on toboggans," he said brusquely. "Could you manage to enjoy yourself in that way? That might do you good."

"Yes," she said, "but it would not be any pleasure to me."

She stopped to watch the toboggans flying down the road. And the Disagreeable Man went his own solitary way, a forlorn figure, with a face almost expressionless and a manner wholly impenetrable.

He had lived nearly seven years at Petershof, and like many others was obliged to continue staying there if he wished to continue staying on this planet. It was not probable that he had any wish to prolong his frail existence, but he did his duty to his mother by conserving his life, and this feeble flame of duty and affection was the only lingering bit of warmth in a heart frozen almost by ill health and disappointed ambitions. The moralists tell us that suffering ennobles, and that a right acceptation of hindrances goes toward forming a beautiful character. But this result must largely depend on the original character—certainly, in the case of Robert Allitsen, suffering had not ennobled his mind, nor disappointment sweetened his disposition. His title of Disagreeable Man had been fairly earned, and he hugged it to himself with a triumphant secret satisfaction. There were some people in Petershof who were inclined to believe certain absurd rumors about his alleged kindness. It was said that on more than one occasion he had nursed the suffering and the dying in sad Petershof, and with all the sorrowful tenderness worthy of a loving mother had helped them to take their leave of life. But these were only rumors, and there was nothing in Robert Allitsen's ordinary bearing to justify such talk. So the foolish people who, for the sake of making themselves peculiar, revived these unlikely fictions were speedily ridiculed and reduced to silence. And the Disagreeable Man remained the Disagreeable Man, with a clean record for unamiability.

He lived a life apart from others. Most of his time was occupied in photography, or in the use and study of the microscope, or in chemistry. His photographs were considered to be most beautiful. Not that he showed them specially to any one, but he generally sent a specimen of his work to The Monthly Photograph Portfolio, and hence it was that people learned to know his skill. He might be seen any fine day trudging along in company with his photographic apparatus and a desolate dog, who looked almost as cheerless as his chosen comrade. Neither one took any notice of the other. Allitsen was no more genial to the dog than he was to the Kurhaus guests. The dog was no more demonstrative to Robert Allitsen than he was to any one in Petershof.

Still they were "something" to each other—that unexplainable "something" which has to explain almost every kind of attachment.

He had no friends in Petershof and apparently had no friends anywhere. No one wrote to him except his old mother. The papers which were sent to him came from a stationer's.

He read all during mealtime. But now and again he spoke a few words with Bernardine Holme, whose place was next to him. It never occurred to him to say good morning, nor to give a greeting of any kind, nor to show a courtesy. One day during lunch, however, he did take the trouble to stoop and pick up Bernardine Holme's shawl, which had fallen for the third time to the ground.

"I never saw a female wear a shawl more carelessly than you," he said. "You don't seem to know anything about it."

His manner was always gruff. Every one complained of him. Every one always had complained of him. He had never been heard to laugh. Once or twice he had been seen to smile on occasions when people talk confidently of recovering their health. It was a beautiful smile, worthy of a better cause. It was a smile which made one pause to wonder what could have been the original disposition of the Disagreeable Man before ill health had cut him off from the affairs of active life. Was he happy or unhappy? It was not known. He gave no sign of either the one state or the other. He always looked very ill, but he did not seem to get worse. He had never been known to make the faintest allusion to his own health. He never "smoked" his thermometer in public, and this was the more remarkable in a hotel where people would even leave off a conversation and say: "Excuse me, sir or madam, I must now take my temperature. We will resume the topic in a few minutes."

He never lent any papers or books, and he never borrowed any.

He had a room at the top of the hotel, and he lived his life among his chemistry bottles, his scientific books, his microscope and his camera. He never sent in any of the hotel drawing rooms. There was nothing striking nor eccentric about his appearance. He was neither ugly nor good looking, neither tall nor short, neither fair nor dark. He was thin and frail and rather bent. But that might be the description of any one in Petershof. There was nothing pathetic about him, no suggestion even of poetry, which gives a reverence to suffering, whether mental or physical. As there was no expression on his face, so also there was no expression in his eyes, no distant longing, no faroff fixedness, nothing indeed to awaken sad sympathy.

The only positive thing about him was his rudeness. Was it natural or cultivated? No one in Petershof could say. He had always been as he was, and there was no reason to suppose that he would ever be different.

He was, in fact, like the glacier of which he had such a fine view from his room—like the glacier, an unchanging feature of the neighborhood.

No one loved it better than the Disagreeable Man did. He watched the sunlight on it, now pale golden, now fiery red. He loved the sky, the dull gray or the bright blue. He loved the snow forests, and the snow girt streams, and the ice cathedrals, and the great firs patient beneath their snow burden. He loved the frozen waterfalls and the costly diamonds in the snow. He knew, too, where the flowers nestled in their white nursery. He was indeed an authority on Alpine botany. The same tender hands which plucked the flowers in the springtime dissected them and laid them bare beneath the microscope. But he did not love them the less for that.

Were these pursuits a comfort to him? Did they help him to forget that there was a time when he, too, was burning with ambition to distinguish himself and be one of the marked men of the age?

Who could say?

CHAPTER VI.

THE TRAVELER AND THE TEMPLE OF KNOWLEDGE.

Countless ages ago a Traveler, much worn with journeying, climbed the last bit of rough road which led to the summit of a high mountain. There was a temple on that mountain, and the Traveler had vowed that he would reach it before death prevented him. He knew the journey was long and the road rough. He knew that the mountain was the most difficult of ascent of that mountain chain called The Ideals. But he had a strongly hoping heart and a sure foot. He lost all sense of time, but he never lost the feeling of hope.

"Even if I faint by the wayside," he said to himself, "and am not able to reach the summit, still it is something to be on the road which leads to the High Ideals."

That was how he comforted himself when he was weary. He never lost more hope than that, and surely that was little enough.

And now he had reached the temple.

He rang the bell, and an old white haired man opened the gate. He smiled sadly when he saw the Traveler.

"And yet another one," he murmured. "What does it all mean?"

The Traveler did not hear what he murmured.

"Old white haired man," he said, "tell me, and so I have come at last to the wonderful Temple of Knowledge. I have been journeying hither all my life. Ah, but it is hard work climbing up to The Ideals."

The old man touched the Traveler on the arm. "Listen," he said gently. "This is not the Temple of Knowledge. And The Ideals are not a chain of mountains. They are a stretch of plains, and the Temple of Knowledge is in their center. You have come the wrong road. Alas, poor Traveler!"

The light in the Traveler's eyes had faded. The hope in his heart died. And he became old and withered. He leaned heavily on his staff.

"Can one rest here?" he asked wearily.

"No."

"Is there a way down the other side of these mountains?"

"No."

"What are these mountains called?"

"They have no name."

"And the temple—how do you call the temple?"

"It has no name."

"Then I call it the Temple of Broken Hearts," said the Traveler.

And he turned and went. But the old white haired man followed him.

"Brother," he said, "you are not the first to come here, but you may be the last. Go back to the plains and tell the dwellers in the plains that the Temple of True Knowledge is in their very midst. Any one may enter it who chooses. The gates are not even closed. The temple has always been in the plains, in the very heart of life and work and daily effort. The philosopher may enter; the stonebreaker may enter. You must have passed it every day of your life—a plain, venerable building, unlike our glorious cathedrals."

"I have seen the children playing near it," said the Traveler. "When I was a child, I used to play there. Ah, if I had only known! Well, the past is the past."

He would have rested against a huge stone, but that the old white haired man prevented him.

"Do not rest," he said. "If you once rest there, you will not rise again. When you once rest, you will know how weary you are."

"I have no wish to go farther," said the Traveler. "My journey is done. It may have been in the wrong direction, but still it is done."

"Nay, do not linger here," urged the old man. "Retrace your steps. Though you are broken hearted yourself, you may save others from breaking their hearts. Those whom you meet on this road you can turn back. Those who are but starting in this direction you can bid pause and consider how mad it is to suppose that the Temple of True Knowledge should have been built on an isolated and dangerous mountain. Tell them that although God seems hard he is not as hard as all that. Tell them that The Ideals are not a mountain range, but their own plains, where their great cities are built, and where the corn grows, and where men and women are toiling, sometimes in sorrow and sometimes in joy."

"I will go," said the Traveler.

And he started.

But he had grown old and weary. And the journey was long, and the retracing of one's steps is more tiresome than the tracing of them. The ascent, with all the vigor and hope of life to help him, had been difficult enough. The descent, with no vigor and no hope to help him, was almost impossible.

So that it was not probable that the Traveler lived to reach the plains. But whether he reached them or not, still he had started.

And not many travelers do that.

Don't Hesitate, but Call and Be Convinced That Every Statement We Make Is True.

To those who do not already know that there is established in Newark, at 105 Halsey street, a physician who stands in the foremost rank of his profession, who is indorsed by the leading colleges of the country and who can prove by witnesses right here in Newark (not by one, but by hundreds) that he has succeded in curing cases that have been utterly given up by other physicians, and good ones too. To those who do not these facts we state that any person, rich or poor, old or young, is welcome here and receive examination and advice free of charge.

Thousands praise the day they came to us for treatment. There is no guess work, no experimenting, no painful operation. No matter how difficult the case, no matter how much of the physician's time it may consume, the diagnosis will not only be thorough, it will be absolutely free. There is no taint of quackery or deception; no claim or statement is made that is not borne out by facts and living witnesses.

Mrs. Abby A. Ray, late of 86 Grove street, East Orange, who now lives at 400 Ellmore street, Escanaba, Mich., writes, under date of January 12: "The medicine arrived this morning and I am so glad it came. I am almost out, and it has helped me so much and I am so much pleased with its wonderful effect on my broken down system that I would like to testify to your great success in my case. I am feeling as well now, in fact better, than I had ever hoped to again."

This is one of many letters that we receive daily. We have the originals at our office and if you wish you may see them. Another thing: We never publish or reveal a patient's name unless they so desire.

DR. STARKWEATHER.

There is not a penny to pay for the fullest medical advice. Dr. Starkweather is a graduate of the Berkshire Medical College, Massachusetts, and of the Medico-Chirurgical College of Philadelphia; endorsed also by the College of Physicians and Surgeons and Bellevue Medical College of New York. We invite all sufferers from whatever cause to call at our office, No. 105 Halsey street, Newark, where Dr. Starkweather is in attendance daily to give examination and advice entirely free of charge. It matters not what the disease, or how many years you have suffered, in spite of means adopted in your behalf, a visit to this office and the privileges of the same will cost you nothing, and may be the means of saving your life. We prepare all our medicines and prescribe the remedies indicated. This plan enables the patient to receive directly from us such remedies as will produce the results promised.

Our office is open daily from 10 a. m. to 9 p. m. Sundays 4 to 6 p. m.

Those living at a distance can consult the Doctor by letter.

A REMARKABLE CURE

MIDDLEBUSH, Somerset Co., N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For the past forty years I have been afflicted with bleeding piles. I suffered constant pain in the lower part of my body, but when I had an operation of the bowels the pain was perfectly terrible, and was most always attended with the loss of a large quantity of blood. My condition was complicated with prolapse of the rectum, which at first only made its appearance when I had a movement of the bowels, but at length the parts became so weakened that the protrusion took place while walking or stooping, or after the slightest exertion, and sometimes even while I was at rest. Whenever this happened it gave rise to the most agonizing pain, and felt as though something was pulling the life right out of me. In fact only those similarly situated can imagine the suffering and distress which I had to endure from day to day, and which made my life a terrible burden. Hearing of Dr. Lighthill's wonderful success in the cure of difficult chronic diseases, I placed myself under his care, and now I am proud and happy to say that, marvelous as it may seem, he effected a complete and radical cure in my case in every respect, and he performed this cure without any painful operation or preventing me from work. Since this terrible disease has been removed by Dr. Lighthill's skill I feel new life, and for the first time in forty years I feel once more what it is to be without daily pain, discomfort and distress. I am not a wealthy man, but no amount of money would tempt me to be put back in my former condition.

I make this public statement, not only from a deep and everlasting sense of gratitude to Dr. Lighthill, but also as a simple Christian duty to let the afflicted know where they can find a physician whose skill cannot be surpassed, and in whom implicit confidence can be placed.

H. VROOM.

A LOCAL ENDORSEMENT.

No. 188 Somerset st., Plainfield, N. J.

To the Residents of Plainfield, N. J.

Mr. H. Vroom, whose statement appears above, is a brother-in-law of mine. I personally know of his case and his suffering and also know the happy fact that to the surprise of himself and his friends, Dr. Lighthill effected a radical and permanent cure. His statement is true in every respect and does not say half enough in praise of Dr. Lighthill. Anyone who wishes this statement verified is at liberty to come and see me personally.

JOHN C. KINNEY.

NEW JERSEY NEWS.

RAILROAD CROSSING WAR.

A Short Battle at Woodbine and the Trouble Not Over Yet.

CAPE MAY, N. J., May 18.—A short battle took place at Woodbine crossing late yesterday afternoon where a west Jersey special arrived with a reinforcement of 150 men and began to tear out the crossing put in early yesterday morning by the South Jersey bosses while the former officials were napping. The gang was under Supervisors Stubbs, Chenowith, Nichols and Walton.

The Italians employed by the South Jersey road took to the woods when hostilities began. Shovels, picks and spades were freely used, but the South Jersey people were outnumbered. The crossing was taken out and spirited away. Vice President Bullitt was on the ground counseling moderation.

Supt. Lutz, of the South Jersey, four of his men and six of the West Jersey gang were more or less hurt, but none seriously.

Later in the day warrants were sworn out for the arrest of Supervisors Stubbs, Chenowith, Walton and Nichols.

Court was opened by Justices Holmes and Shoemaker in the South Jersey car at the crossing and the supervisors were held in custody on the charge of atrocious assault.

Another attempt will surely be made to replace the crossing.

Refused a Good Job.

TRENTON, N. J., 18.—Senator Voorhees has decided not to accept the position of circuit judge, for which he was named by Governor Werts several days ago; and he has asked the governor to make another nomination. The governor, it is therefore expected, will make a substitute nomination during the day. Senator Voorhees, said that he had come to the conclusion that he could not honorably accept the nomination. His constituents had made him a senator, and he considered it his duty to discharge the duties of that office. As the judgeship in question is worth $7,500 per year, the senator naturally regrets the circumstances which make it impossible for him to go on the bench.

Confirmed By Jersey Senate.

TRENTON, N. J., May 18.—The senate in executive session confirmed all the constitution appointments. Major E. J. Anderson, the nominee for state prison supervisor, was confirmed by a vote of 18 to 2. Senator Skirm (rep.) and Senator Drake (dem.) voted against him. The nominations of Wilson S. Jenkins for prosecuting attorney of Camden county and John Gaunt for lay judge of Camden county were rejected.

Prof. Halsted Married.

PASSAIC, N. J., May 18.—Prof. Byron D. Halsted, state botanist of New Jersey and a member of the faculty of Rutger's college, was married yesterday to Mrs. E. L. Maxim, a sister of his first wife.

WANE OF COXEY'S ARMY.

The Feeble Remnant Nearly Drowned Out in Their Washington Corral.

WASHINGTON, May 18.—The Coxey "army," so far as its Bladensburg contingent is concerned, has "no story to tell," except a story of drenching rains last night, which nearly drowned the feeble remnant left in "Camp George Washington" corral, and a heavy desertion list. As soon as authority to issue Police Judge Miller's commission to succeed himself can be received from President Cleveland, Coxey, Browne and Jones, the three leaders, will probably receive sentence of fine or imprisonment, or both, and that will end the Coxey movement here.

It is the purpose of the police authorities to arrest any other organized bodies coming into the district and to bring them before the police judge under the vagrant laws, which render them liable to a three months' commitment to the workhouse farm.

Heard Footsteps in the Organ Loft.

NEW YORK, May 18.—Organist Henry Eyre Browne, of the Talmage Tabernacle, testified before Commissioner Wursler in Brooklyn about last Sunday's fire. He said that during the concluding prayer of the service he heard the footsteps of a man carefully making his way out of the loft back of the organ. He was certain that this unknown person set fire to the organ and then secretly left the church by the by the cellar way at the back. Five or six minutes after he heard the footsteps the fire broke out. He was certain there was no reason for anyone's being in that part of the edifice at that time, and that the motor and electrical appliances about the organ were all in good condition.

THE SENATE WAKES UP

A Day of Much Interest in the Chamber.

Committee Named to Inquire Into the Bribery Charges—An Effort for a Continuous Session to Expedite Tariff Work Promptly Met By Filibustering By the Republicans.

WASHINGTON, May 18.—The recent newspaper publications as to the alleged attempt to bribe two senators to vote against the tariff bill and as to the sugar provisions in that bill, having been inserted in consideration of the gift of half a million dollars to the democratic campaign fund in 1892, were brought up in the senate yesterday and occupied its attention throughout the morning hour.

Mr. Hunton, (dem., Va.) one of the two senators whose vote it was sought to buy, expressed the hope that the matter would be investigated and probed to its depths, and Mr. Harris (dem., Tenn.) joined in the like request on behalf of the other senator interested—Kyle, (pop., S. D.) absent from Washington on committee business.

Senator Hansbrough (rep., N. D.) presented a letter from the reputed bribery agent, C. W. Buttz, also inviting the speediest investigation, and denouncing the whole story as a falsehood and slander. Hale (rep., Me.) expressed his belief that the stories were got up for the purpose of calling away attention from other points connected with the tariff bill and on the principle of the "stop thief" cry.

The resolution was finally agreed to, without a division, considerably widened in its scope from the one as originally offered by Senator Lodge on Tuesday. It provides for a committee of five senators to investigate the charges; to inquire whether any contributions have been made by the sugar trust to any political party for campaign or election purposes, or to secure or defeat legislation; and whether any senator has been speculating in sugar stocks during the pendancy of the tariff bill.

The committee was subsequently announced as Senators Gray, Lindsay, Lodge, Davis, and Allen.

Although the tariff bill was taken up as usual at noon it was not till 4 P. M. that any progress was made—the intervening time having been occupied by Senator Gallinger in the delivery of the second division of his speech, and of Senator Higgins in remarks favoring an increase of duty on ochre, sienna and umber earths.

There were fifteen items disposed of, from item 43 to item 57 inclusive, and "medicinal preparations" were reached, when the bill was laid aside for the day.

At the usual hour for adjournment, 6 p. m., the republican side of the senate was startled by a motion made by Senator Harris that, instead of adjourning till 11 a. m. to-day the senate take a recess until that hour—the object of the movement being to keep the tariff bill perpetually before the senate—to the exclusion of the morning business and of all other business. The motion was resisted on the republican side and was met with a resort to filibustering—the republicans declining to vote and leaving the senate without a quorum.

The sergeant-at-arms and his deputies were finally ordered to hunt up the absent senators and request them to put in appearance at once. For an hour no returns were received from them. All this time the two-score of senators who remained in the chamber whiled away the time as best they could.

At half-past 7 Senator Aldrich inquired languidly whether any report had been received from the sergeant-at-arms, and when he was informed that there had not been he remarked that it was certainly time to adjourn, and he made a motion to that effect. The motion was voted down—yeas, 11; nays, 29—and another indefinite period of waiting was entered on.

At 8:15 the report of the sergeant-at-arms was presented and read, stating that ten of the absent senators were not in the city; that the state of the health of Senator Morrill would not permit him to attend a night session, and that 19 of the senators whom he had called upon had promised to come at once.

Senator Harris moved that the sergeant-at-arms be directed to compel the attendance of absent senators, with the exception of Senators Morrill and Sherman, and that motion was agreed to.

A quorum was secured at 8:45. That fact, however, did not relieve the situation, for, on a motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call, there were only 33 senators voting—five republicans and 81 democrats.

The filibustering lasted until 10:30, when a truce was agreed upon and the motion for a recess withdrawn. Notice was given of a resolution for daily meeting of the senate at 10 a. m.; and then at 10:35 p. m., the senate adjourned.

House of Representatives.

Before proceeding to the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill the house passed a bill, upon motion of Representative Fithian, repealing section 9 of the act of 1890, governing the display of lights and signals upon vessels at sea with a view to prevent collisions. This was made necessary because of the failure of Great Britain to observe the agreement of the international marine conference of 1889 with respect to fishing vessels.

The agricultural appropriation bill was finally disposed of after having been slightly amended. The most important of these changes was an additional provision to punish the publishers of false weather reports or the unauthorized use of weather bureau signals. Provision was made for continuing the investigation into the cultivation of the ramie fibre, for which Secretary Morton had failed to make an estimate.

The most noticeable feature of the afternoon's debate was Representative Dingley's statement that the secretary of agriculture had fallen short by more than a

MARRIES AN AMERICAN GIRL.

The French Consul at Chicago Follows the Ambassador's Example.

CHICAGO, May 18.—M. Edmond Bruwaert, French consul general, and Miss Susan King, niece of Mrs. Gen. J. McGregor Adams, were married in this city last night, Rev. Floyd Tompkins, of St. James Episcopal church, pronouncing the words.

The French government exercises the right to veto proposed marriages of its representatives with a personanon grata to it and for this reason there has been much speculation regarding M. Bruwaert's marriage. The consul, however, explained matters to-day.

"This regulation of the French government has been in existence for centuries," he said. "France wishes its representative to avoid marriage objectionable either to the home government or to the government to which they are accredited. It would not like me to marry a servant, for instance. When the French minister was married in Philadelphia in March the government took occasion to remind its representative that the rule had not, as was the impression, become obsolete. A representative, like myself for instance, is appointed to the service for life, and his widow is entitled to a pension. The same is true of the French judiciary."

Death Will Release Him.

NEW YORK, May 18.—Death will probably defeat the decree of Chancellor McGill that ex-Governor Rodman M. Price of New Jersey, shall be committed to jail for contempt of court if he does not pay within five days $81,794 on a judgment secured against him by the Forest estate of California, many years ago. The aged ex-governor is now critically ill at his home in the Ramapo mountains, five miles from the village of Ramsay, in Bergen county. He has been in bed for nearly two months, and his attending physician is in daily expectation of death. The effects of an attack of grip a year ago and his advanced age have made him very feeble.

THEIR ENGAGEMENT OFF.

Miss Anna Gould and Mr. Harriman Not to Wed.

NEW YORK, May 18.—The United Press is reliably informed that the marriage engagement between Miss Anna Gould, daughter of the late Jay Gould, and Oliver Harriman has been broken off by mutual consent.

The reasons that have induced the young couple to cancel the engagement are so far unobtainable. It is understood, however, that they part with profound good will and respect for each other.

Miss Gould is in Paris, where she went some time ago, it is said, for the purpose of purchasing her bridal trousseau.

It is understood that she will join her brother George and family on their arrival in Europe and travel with them through France and Switzerland this summer and that all will return to America in the Atalanta in the fall.

Ithaca Chlorine Case.

ITHACA, N. Y., May 18.—Judge Forbes discharged the grand jury last night and adjourned court sine die, giving the district attorney an order carrying the celebrated chlorine case over to the next grand jury, which meets next October. Judge Forbes questioned the grand jury as to whether they had successfully cleared up the chlorine case. The jury said that they had not and that they were of the opinion that it would be a waste of time to try any further in the matter.

Wiman's Trial Set for May 28.

NEW YORK, May 18.—The trial of Erastus Wiman for forgery, at the instance of his partners in the R. G. Dun Mercantile agency, has been finally fixed for Monday, May 28. The coming trial promises to be of unusual interest, as the mercantile agency, while it is supposed to be the private property of R. G. Dun, really belongs to the public. Gen. Benjamin F. Tracy, who is the attorney for Mr. Wiman, still declares that his client is innocent of any crime, and says that the trial will result in Wiman's acquittal.

The Northwest Is in Luck.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 18.—Among the arrivals from Alaska yesterday was E. O. Sylvester, proprietor of the Alaska Herald at Sitka and the Journal at Juneau. He says that the northwestern part of the continent seems to be the only section not affected by hard times. Unusual prosperity exists there.

Chicago's Officers Dined.

LONDON, May 18.—Poultney Bigelow gave a dinner last night to the officers of the United States cruiser Chicago. Mark Twain made the speech of the evening. At the grand dinner next week the principal toast: "To the American navy and its officers," will be answered by Captain Mahan.

W. P. Smith Gets a Good Job.

WASHINGTON, May 18.—W. P. Smith, of Albany, N. Y., has been appointed foreman of the foundry of the government printing office. He was endorsed by Representative Tracey.

Another Veto By Gov Flower.

ALBANY, May 18.—Gov. Flower has vetoed Senator Rice's bill providing that the state factory inspector shall not have supervision over brick-yards.

ENDS IN A FAILURE

Nothing Accomplished at the Mine Conference.

The Operators and Delegates Depart for Their Homes, Leaving the Situation at the Mines in the Same Condition of Suspense as Before—Their Differences Irreconcilable.

CLEVELAND, O., May 18.—The great conference between the representatives of 200,000 striking miners and operators representing every coal mining district in the United States has ended in failure.

The two interests came together, presented their demands, discussed the condition of the mining trade in all its bearings, found their differences irreconcilable and will depart for their homes, leaving the situation at the mines, on which 20,000,000 of toilers are dependent for a fuel supply, in apparently the same condition of suspense that they were before the conference was called.

But that condition is in fact more apparent than real.

One of the most prominent operators in the Pittsburg district told the representative of the United Press that within a week the miners would be at work and they would receive practically the same scale of wages for which they have been contending in the conference that has just adjourned.

The afternoon joint session of the miners and operators was called to order at 3:30. The question before the convention was on a motion made by H. L. Chapman, of Columbus, that the proposition for a rate of 65 cents in the Pittsburg district be submitted to the conference committee. Mr. Chapman, one of the Pittsburg district operators made a speech in which he charged the miners with breaking the contract of a year ago. This brought forth a spirited reply from Secretary McBryde, in which he said:

Mr. Chapman says that he did not break the contract with the miners, and he did not. But he went to his miners with the statement that unless they agreed to accept a cut of five cents he would shut down his mines. They refused and he shut down the mines. If all the operators were like Mr. Chapman, I would at once advise the miners to go home.

President John McBride secured the floor and requested the operators to retire for an hour and leave the miners for a private consultation. The request was granted.

At 5:15 word was sent to the operators that the miners were ready to resume the conference. On re-assembling President McBride read the following resolutions as the result of the deliberation of the miners:

Whereas, In view of the fact that a large and preponderating proportion of the coal operators of the bituminous mines have either contemptuously or otherwise ignored the hand of peace and conciliation professed to them in the calling of this convention, and

Whereas, Being guided by the light of experience we believe that, in the absence of those operators any settlement based on compromise, would be utterly impracticable and would only add to and accentuate the miserable condition of our constituents; therefore be it

Resolved, That we deem it impossible to make any settlement here—with those operators who have met us, and, while appreciating the full extent of the effort made by the same, we ask their co-operation in bringing peaceable and persuasive pressure to bear upon the absent operators to agree to terms giving justice to our craftsmen.

Mr. McBryde said that under the circumstances he was opposed to the continuance of the conference, but wished to express to the operators present the sympathy of the miners in the harsh treatment imposed in the continued closing of the mines, and thanks for their kindness and courtesy, and hoped that at a future conference their numbers would be increased.

New Wheat Pest in France.

PARIS, May 18.—A new disease, a white microbe, has attacked the wheat crop in the departments of Vendee, Brittany and Anjou and is inflicting great damage upon the growing grain.

So English, You Know.

LONDON, May 18.—William K. Vanderbilt has rented Lord Lovat's deer forest at Breuden, Inverness, and will shortly visit that place with a hunting party.

AFFAIRS AT BLUEFIELDS

England and United States Working Together.

Clarence Returned on a British War Ship—His Arrival Causes Rejoicing, But the Americans Were Anxious That He Should Be Reinstated By the United States.

BLUEFIELDS, M. R., Nicaragua, May 12, via NEW ORLEANS, May 18, per steamship George W. Sealey—Much has happened here within the past 24 hours, and the community is consequently greatly excited, as well as being on the tip-toe of expectation for what is promised in the near future.

An account has already been printed of the unexpected visit of Robert Henry Clarence, the Mosquito chief, and his boast that he would soon be restored to his rights through the intervention of the British, and the assertion of British Consul Hatch that the treaty of Managua would be upheld by Great Britain at any cost. Not only has Clarence already realized his boast, but Aguella, the murderer of William Wilson, has escaped from the little jail at Rama.

Word reached here yesterday morning from the San Francisco, which was anchored off the bluffs, that Clarence would be brought back here to-day from Peal Lagoon on the British man-of-war and domiciled in Bluefields to stay or, in other words, that he would be reinstated in his rights as chief of the Mosquitos by the English.

This news created the wildest excitement here and much rejoicing. The Americans were particularly happy, though they regretted that for what they had been pleading so strenuously should be done by the British instead of by the American government.

At 3 o'clock in the afternoon the Magicienne arrived and immediately Capt. Clark came ashore with Clarence and a few of his natives, and he was domiciled at his old home in this city. The correspondent asked Capt. Watson the meaning of this, but all he would say in reply to the questions was, "You will be safe in saying he has come to stay."

He added that every one should understand that England and the United States were not working against each other, but as Minister Baker had put it, "The white people have combined to meet the advances of the Latin race."

Last night the San Francisco departed for Greytown to take Consul Braida to his post of duty, leaving this place without an American official representative, though it is expected Consul Seat will return shortly from the United States.

It is understood that American interests are temporarily in the care of British representatives. The New York has not arrived.

One event to ruffle the serenity was the reported escape of Aguella, the murderer of William Wilson, the American, at Rama, on Wednesday last.

Gov. Rueling, the new official at Rama, who supplanted Torres, immediately started on a hunt for him, but was unable to head him off. He is located in a dense jungle two miles from Rama, where it is almost impossible to get at him. From what can be learned the escape was planned and carried out by a number of Aguella's Spanish friends.

Lacayo has started a private enterprise which may cause some trouble yet. Some days ago he formed the Bluffs Trading company and under the guise af an alleged concession from Nicaragua, proposes to claim the exclusive right to trade on the Bluffs, which were bought by several Americans for $30,000 cash from the Mosquito Indians, and, of course, they protest against Lacayo's piracy.

Minister Baker is in possession of the facts and promised to see that interests of the Americans were protected before he left for Managua. The situation here as this writing is very complicated.

No Hope for This Woman.

DOVER, N. H., May 18.—William W. Brooks, of Hudson, Mass., came here last evening and claimed that his wife, Addie F. Brooks, had run away with John G. Guinney, of that place, taking his son with them. Marshal Fogerty soon located them at a house on Second street, where they were living as man and wife, the boy calling Guinney father. Both were arrested and taken to the station where Mrs. Brooks said she should continue to live with Guinney even if in state prison. The boy says his mother told him to call Guinney father, or she would lick the life out of him. The father took the boy and the arrested parties will be taken to Hudson.

Petition on Paper.

LAUREL, Neb., May 18.—The "Russian thistle" wing of the Coxey army, led by James Dunlarie, that was to start from here, has decided to send its petition on paper to congress, believing that there are less hardships in presenting it in that way. Dunlarie has turned his attention to market gardening, and will fight the Russian thistle single handed until congress does something.

DEATH AND VAST RUIN

Terrible Work of a Cyclone in Northwestern Ohio.

Ten Lives Known to Be Lost and Many Persons Injured—The Victims' Bodies Shockingly Mangled—Great Destruction of Property—Names of the Dead and Injured.

TOLEDO, O., May 18.—That section of Northern Ohio between Kunkle and Montpelier, two towns on the Detroit division of the Wabash railroad, was visited by a cyclone late yesterday afternoon. All modes of communication have been interrupted, but from the meagre reports which have straggled in it is already learned that ten persons met death, ten were injured and that much property was destroyed.

The Dead.

The names of the dead, as far as can be learned, are:

Edmund Schlesser, aged 64, buried against a tree and almost instantly killed.

Ellen Rigby, an elderly woman, had one limb torn from body.

Three small children, names unknown, instantly killed.

Daniel Barrett, body badly crushed and arm torn off.

Mrs. Daniel Barrett, horribly mangled, died within two hours.

Martha Daso, instantly killed.

George Oxinger, head crushed, body disemboweled.

The Injured.

The injured are: David Longley, scalp wound and leg fractured; will die.

Jason Miles, head crushed.

Mrs. H. B. Charles, extent of injuries unknown.

Charles Cole, internally injured, cannot live more than a few hours.

Mrs. Charles Cole, head crushed will die.

Jennie Creek, badly bruised, will recover.

Seven others, three of them women, are more or less badly hurt but their names cannot be ascertained.

The section devastated is about one quarter of a mile wide and six or seven miles in length.

Houses, barnes, fences, trees and obstructions of all kinds in the path of the storm were carried away and nothing was left to mark the spot where they stood except huge holes in the ground. The greatest damage was done about a mile from where the cyclone rose and passed on east.

The bodies of some of the victims were terribly mangled, having come in contact with flying lumber, trees, etc.

GET STRONG BEFORE SUMMER.

Hard to Gain Strength During Hot, Debilitating Weather-Most Favorable Results from Celery Compound in May.

Now or never get health and strength. The most obstinate indoor dwellers get a sniff of outdoor air in May.

No one altogether escapes the spring feeling in the blood. The most delicate and confirmed invalids now venture on short rides and walks. May is the blessed month for convalescents. "When May comes I'll get well," is the cry all through the winter. There are fewer obstacles to getting well in May, no cold winds to bring relapses and exhausting sickness, nor debilitating heat to rob one of their strength.

A sweeping glance over the land would show millions of weak, nervous, ailing men and women every day are growing stronger and getting rid of lingering diseases by using Paine's celery compound this month, when this remarkable blood and nerve remedy works best hand in hand with nature's purpose to give every animate thing new life, strength and happiness in spring.

Paine's celery compound hastens convalescence from all nervous and wasting diseases.

It feeds badly nourished nerves and takes away their irritability and pain. It purifies the blood and supplies rich material for new, healthy tissues all over the body. Prof Edward E Phelps, M. D., LL. D., of Dartmouth college discovered Paine's celery compound in the now famous laboratory of the college.

The world is full of busy, thankful men and women who owe their energy, health and very existence to Paine's celery compound. An immense burden of rheumatism, kidney trouble, salt rheum, eczema, disordered liver and blood diseases has been lifted from the world since Paine's celery compound came into it.

Your own physician will tell you how confidently physicians rely on Paine's celery compound as an invigorator and strengthener for body, nerves and brains. It makes people well.

Spring is busy with marvelous rapid changes in the tissues of the body. Now is the time to permanently cure nervous weaknesses, neuralgia, headache and dyspepsia by using Paine's celery compound to build up healthy tissues in place of the diseased parts.

Pure, rich blood sent through the deep parts of the heart, liver and kidneys, leaving in its passage material for rapid repair, and taking away in its stream the used-up, harmful elements, soon drives out weakness from these organs and restores their healthy functions.

Paine's celery compound makes new, abundant blood, regulates and feeds worn out nerves and builds up the strength of the body.

FOR THE relief and cure of a cold in the head there is more potency in Ely's Cream Balm than in anything else it is possible to prescribe. This preparation has for years past been making a brilliant success as a remedy for cold in the head, catarrh and hay fever. Used in the initial stages of these complaints Cream Balm prevents any serious development of the symptoms, while almost numberless cases are on record of radical cures of chronic catarrh and hay fever after all other treatments have proved of no avail.

$5,000 INSURANCE PAID.

Final Settlement of a Disputed Plainfield Accident Policy—City Judge Wm. A. Coddington Scores a Notable Victory Against Leading Corporation Lawyers of New York.

Check for $5,000 was today paid to the widow of William L. Force, from the United States Mutual Accident Association, in full settlement of her claim under the policy.

Mr. Force's death was the result of the kick of a horse, but the company disputed the claim. Suit was threatened, and the company employed three of the best corporation lawyers of New York to defend them. An order of reference was made to three New York lawyers, to sit as judges. The facts were presented, and the case was argued before them.

City Judge Wm. A. Coddington appeared for Mrs. Force before the referees, and his presentation of the legal points of the case was so convincing that the referees reported to the company that the claim was proper and just and ought to be paid. The company fought the case bitterly, but was forced to abide by the impartial decision, and thanks to Judge Coddington's perseverance and legal ability Mrs. Force now receives her due.

Mistletoe Merriment.

GOOD TIME IN DUNELLEN.

One of the Artists Kept Away by a Bicycle Accident.

The entertainment given by the Dunellen Methodist Sunday-school for the library, in the church last evening, was most satisfactory and successful in every respect.

About 200 people attended, and all thoroughly enjoyed themselves.

An excellent programme was rendered, which opened with a chorus, "Old Folks at Home". This was followed with a vocal duet, "Song of Spring", by Rev. and Mrs. Kinsey, which was a pleasing selection appreciated by all.

A soprano solo, "Oh Promise Me", by Miss Mary D. Winner, was heartily encored, and this talented singer responded most gratifyingly.

One of the best features of the programme consisted of the musical selections by George Jenkins, and H. Backer of Somerville. They fairly captivated the audience by their exceedingly fine playing. They were obliged to respond several times during the entertainment, and each time they were given a cordial greeting. A very pretty tenor solo by Mr. Kinsey entitled "When the Tide Comes In", was heartily received, and part first closed with a selection "Holiday Sounds", on flute, violin and piano, by the Misses Fisher, Emma Nelson and Mary Phillips. This number was very much enjoyed.

Messrs. Jenkins and Bacher opened part second with several pretty solos, which were followed with a bass solo, entitled "The Brave Sentinel", by William Holmes of Plainfield. Mr. Holmes pleased all by his excellent singing; his voice was at its best. As an encore he gave "The Slipper" with good effect.

A pleasing diversion was the recitation by Mrs. Harry Terry, entitled "Stowed Away". Mrs. Terry has excellent elocutionary powers, and was generously received. Another soprano solo by Miss Mary D. Winner brought forth the heartiest approbation, and she was obliged to respond with a favorite song.

The entertainment closed with a selection, "O Hush Thee My Baby", by Mr. and Mrs. Kinsey, Mrs. Nelson and William Holmes, which was excellently given.

B. T. Barnes of Plainfield expected to appear, but was detained, and William Holmes very acceptably filled his place. Miss Rae E. Phillips of Westfield, who was to render several piano solos, met with a painful accident Wednesday evening while riding a wheel. She collided with a horse and buggy and was thrown to the ground, the horse stepping on her arm; and those at the concert were very much disappointed in not being able to hear her.

The committee who arranged the entertainment were: Mr. Nelson, chairman; Miss Fisher, Miss Meda Walters, Arthur Vail and George Richardson.

Mrs. Nelson was the very efficient accompanist of the evening and added much to the success of the affair.

At the close several were invited to the parsonage by Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Kinsey, and they enjoyed the hospitality of host and hostess. Refreshments were served, and a social hour was spent.

Picnic on the Mountain.

Twenty-five children, accompanied by the head Sister of St. Mary's school and the head Sister of the parish house, spent yesterday afternoon on the mountain.

The picnic party was composed of members of the highest class in the school, and of the children's choir. They started at 1, stopping near the head of Somerset street. Rev. Father Smyth furnished refreshments, and the children sang and enjoyed themselves in various ways.

Some Overfed, Others Neglected.

Plainfield Exempts complain of the dinner served at the State Convention of Exempt Firemen, Wednesday, but do not blame their Rahway hosts. The man who had the contract at 65 cents a cover was not an expert in arranging dinners, and it was his fault that some of the tables were neglected while others were overloaded with eatables, and supplied with more waiters than were necessary.

Always Sociable in That Church.

A sociable given in the chapel of the First Presbyterian Church last evening was well attended. Refreshments were passed by a number of the women of the church, and the evening was pleasantly spent by the members of the congregation and their friends.

He's in Tune with the Members.

An entertainment and dance will be given in Saengerbund Hall next Monday evening, as already announced exclusively in The Press. Walter Koepple, leader of the singing, is meeting with much success, and is making many friends.

May Build During Vacation.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the one positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio. Sold by druggists, 75c.

The Spring House Cleaning Wisely urged by the BOARD OF HEALTH is not complete without a proper use of DISINFECTANTS. But, in choosing these, do not be misled into paying fancy prices for "patent" specialties. Common lime is better than any of them for damp cellars and stables. For vaults, drains, cess-pools, the best and cheapest disinfectant is COPPERAS, supplied by us by the pound or barrel at low rates. But for use in the house, in the plumbing, in kitchen sinks, in closets, for purifying the air of sick rooms, deodorizing offensive discharges—in short, for all purposes of a household disinfectant, nothing can excel the powerful solution of chlorides made and sold by us for 15 years under the name of REYNOLDS'S ODORLESS DISINFECTANT. Quart bottles 25c. To be diluted for use according to directions on label.

SNAP SHOTS OF THE WEST.

Plainfield People Enjoy a Journey by Camera Views Among Pioneer Churches.

"The two travelers in the West" was a lecture enjoyed by an audience that comfortably filled the main body of Trinity Reformed Church last night. The lecturer was Mrs. E. B. Horton, Secretary of the Women's Board of Domestic Missions of the Reformed Church of America, and her engagement was a very pleasant way the Ladies Christian Work Society of Trinity Church had of observing their thirteenth anniversary.

Singing by the church choir and music by Organist Titsworth preceded the introduction of the lecturer by Pastor Schenck. Her views, which had been taken by herself in her travels in the West, were thrown on a large canvas in front of the organ by Messrs. Teale, Doane and Coward of the Camera Club. The pictures were of the exterior and interior of Reformed churches and parsonages in Wisconsin, Iowa, Michigan and Dakota, used by the old Holland Dutch people, including the sod churches. All the places shown were visited by Mrs. Horton and her feminine companion last year in their tour, which was arranged by the Woman's Board of Domestic Missions.

Mrs. Horton is an interesting lecturer, and her audience did not tire of her talk or her views. A number of pictures of the Chicago Fair added to the entertainment.

Misses Gillem, Woodruff, Mills, Williams and VanWinkle, members of the Whatsoever Circle of King's Daughters, acted as ushers, and did the work to perfection. They also passed the collection baskets for the offering. They were distinguished by neat badges of purple ribbon, the color of the organization.

The only regrettable incident of the affair was the fact that the offering fell short of paying the expenses incurred, which will necessitate a draft on the treasury of the society.

TO OWNERS OF DOGS.

BOROUGH OF NORTH PLAINFIELD,
May 17, 1894.

The attention of all concerned is called to the following extract from an act passed by the Legislature of the State of New Jersey.

"That any person who shall own, keep or harbor any dogs, bitch or bitches shall have the same registered and numbered with the Clerk of the Borough in which the owner or person harboring the same shall reside, and shall place upon the neck of each dog or bitch kept or harbored as aforesaid, having engraved thereon upon a metal surface, the name of the owner of said dog or bitch and the registered number thereof; and it shall be lawful for any person to kill any dog or bitch found straying off the owner's premises without such collar upon its neck.

The person applying for registration shall pay the sum of one dollar for each dog or bitch thus registered."

The registry book is kept at the office of the Borough Clerk, J. K. Arnold, 92 Somerset street, and prompt compliance with the provisions of the aforesaid statute is urged.

"THE GREY MARE" AGAIN.

She Pleases Another Large Audience and Works for Charity.

The second performance of "The Grey Mare" was witnessed by a good-sized audience in the Casino last night. The proceeds of the play went to the Boys Club, which will be made considerably richer by the affair. In many respects this second performance was superior to the first, two weeks ago. There was a marked improvement in the spirit and go of one or two of the more important scenes, while the individual work in the shorter roles was smoother than it was when the play was given before. This was to be expected, as when once that bugbear, the first night, is past, everyone is more at his ease. Professionals, when once the dreaded first night is over, go on playing their parts as naturally as one eats one's dinner, but amateurs have the disadvantage of seldom playing at anything but a first night.

Perhaps the most noticeable improvement last night was in the make-up of the entire company, which was good enough to disarm the most hypercritical.

The stage looked as attractive as ever, and the smoothness of the stage management, and the handling of the difficult combinations of lights, spoke volumes for the clear head that had these many worrying but essential details in charge. Indeed, it would be difficult to find anyone with the necessary experience and ability to take Mr. Mason's place in the all-important position of stage manager.

The same excellent orchestra furnished the music for the entre-acts, and repeated by request the selections from the favorite opera of the Winter, Carmen.

In addition to the flowers to the women, which were very handsome, last night, Mr. Walz received a basket of exquisite pink roses, and Mr. VanBuren was presented with a basket of lilies of the valley tied with bows of white ribbon.

After the performance a supper given by the men of the cast was served in the ladies dining room of the club. The table of twenty covers was literally strewn with roses, and the company and their guests made merry over the good things both material and mental until a late hour. Those at the supper were: Mr. and Mrs. J. Parker Mason, Mr. and Mrs. William L. Saunders, Mr. and Mrs. Constantine P. Raill, Mrs. S. A. Haines, Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. Ely, Wm. R. Cock, the Misses Brown, the Misses Harte, Frederick W. Wile, James S. Anthony, Geo. Taggart, Laurens VanBuren, Albert A. Holly and Richard Colburn.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

The Spring Conference of the Union County Christian Endeavor Union will be held in the Westfield Presbyterian Church Friday evening, May 25. Interesting speakers are to address the meeting, and important amendments to the constitution will be presented. A most enjoyable and profitable time is expected by the Endeavorers. The badge banner will be awarded to the society having the largest per cent. of its active members present.

The Thirteenth International Convention will be held in Cleveland July 11-15. Extensive preparations are in progress to make this a grand affair, and many delegates are expected. Plainfield should send its quota. Miss Alice B. Spangenberg of Netherwood, District Secretary of Union County, will supply information to all inquirers. The railroads will make liberal concessions on fare. The convention will be worth the journey. Two choruses, comprising one thousand young people, will lead the convention in song.

A consecration service will be held in the First Baptist Church this evening by the Christian Endeavor Society.

The regular monthly social of the Christian Endeavor Society of the First Church of Christ was held at Pastor Hand's home, West Front street, last evening. The evening was passed pleasantly, after which refreshments were served.

In a Hot Box About a Cold Box.

An ice box standing in front of a second-hand furniture store was listed for $1.50 by a practical joker. While the proprietor was at lunch, a passer-by noticed the price, and, needing just such a box, agreed with the attendant on a purchase. He paid the $1.50, besides 15 cents for delivery. Being industrious, he had the box on the wagon awaiting the proprietor's return, so he could deliver the article at once as he agreed to. His feelings can be imagined when the boss told him that the price for the box was $6 instead of $1.50. Later the purchaser returned, in such a rage that the clerk narrowly escaped a thrashing.

Just What The Daily Press Has Always Said, the Doctors Officially Declare.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—At a recent meeting of the Plainfield Medical Association it was decided to make the following statement to the public through the daily papers, viz: that it is the opinion of the members of this association that the establishment of a system of sewerage is imperative for the preservation of the public health and that such system should be introduced as soon as possible.

OUR THRIFTY SISTER.

Fanwood's Going to Grow Right Up to Plainfield's Shoulder Under the New Regime.

The movement to make Fanwood a borough moves gloriously on. It is bound to succeed under the skilful and energetic guidance of the committee. The first move after incorporation will be to macadamize the highways, making a perfect system. The borough separation of Fanwood from Scotch Plains is necessitated by the desire for modern improvements. The wealthy residents want to spend lots of money in building up the place, and they can't get what they want from the township.

Has to Draw the Line Somewhere.

Charles Maire of Dunellen feels that the burglars of that pleasant little round-house borough are getting too familiar. He holds that when he has given them one night's use of his house he has fulfilled his social duties to them and it is his neighbors' turn. Mr. Maire has'n't been in Dunellen long, and when the burglars first visited his place he accepted their call with becoming good nature. They keep coming, however, at regular intervals, in spite of lack of invitation, and their repetition he regards as an intrusion. For people who overstep the limits of hospitality he feels that a little cold lead is the proper thing, so he has loaded up a trusty gun, and will point it outdoors when next the midnight visitors approach his house.

Stand Back, Ye Young and Heedless.

Fanwood's new health inspector, Wright Babcock, is a rouser. He has started in to examine every cesspool, and intends to have them all put in healthful condition. He has asked Mayor George C. Miller for workmen and tools, and the Mayor has promised him full assistance. Mr. Babcock warns all children and heedless persons to stand back from the cesspools while they are uncovered.

To Whom It May Concern.

Having suffered all the tortures of rheumatism for the past two years, and after taking any number of so-called remedies without any apparent relief, I deem it only justice to the public to recommend the sulphur and vapor baths as given by Hiram Hornish of North avenue, as not only a relief but a permanent cure.

WARREN CHAPEL ENDEAVORERS.

Sixth Anniversary Celebration a Gratifying Event.

The sixth anniversary of the Warren Chapel Christian Endeavor Society was the event celebrated by a large number of Endeavorers in the chapel last evening. M. M. Dunham presided. It was the first evening since last September that he had felt well enough to venture out. The wall back of the platform was covered with dogwood blossoms and leaves.

Rev. J. S. Braker, of Scotch Plains, opened by reading part of Psalms 34. Miss Sadie Searing, the Secretary, followed with a report of the year in the society. Her statements were, in short, as follows:

There are now 54 active members, 20 associate and 17 honorary. Four associate endeavors have become active members in the year. Three active members have died since last October. The ten committees are all working faithfully, each in a certain line of endeavor.

The Lookout Committee is really the eyes of the society. On the watch for new members, it welcomes and encourages them when they join. The Prayer Meeting Committee has held 52 meetings since May 17, 1893, with a large average attendance. Leaders were provided by the committee for each meeting. The Sunday-school Committee was recently organized. Absent scholars have been looked after and substitute teachers have been found by the committee. The Good Literature Committee has distributed 3,000 tracts. The good they have done cannot be estimated. Several successful entertainments have been held by the Social Committee with the assistance of the Reception Committee. Missionary and temperance meetings under the management of those committees have been very instructive. The Flower Committee has decorated the chapel for Sunday services and special occasions. The Music Committee, besides the regular work, had assisted at entertainments.

The Junior Endeavor Society was organized under Mrs. E. W. Taylor and Mrs. J. K. VanArsdale with a membership of 56. The average attendance has been 33.

Mr. Dunham referred to the fact that the secretary had reported deaths in the society in the six years. In this connection the hymn "Some Time We'll Understand" was sung. Miss Kate Mullon of Brooklyn sang "Safe at Home with Jesus", the society joining in the chorus.

The Treasurer's report, as read by the secretary, was:

|---|---|
| Balance at beginning of year | $ 3.02 |
| Collections | 10.00 |
| Received by cards | 8.31 |
| Entertainment profits | 56.24 |
| Total receipts | $77.57 |
| Expended | 67.59 |
| Balance in treasury | $ 9.98 |

A description of the work in the Junior Society was presented by Mrs. E. W. Taylor. The methods used were original. The children are being made familiar with the Bible's books and characters. Notes from public school teachers, which showed that the young Endeavorers were the better for the instruction, were read. Once a month a collection is made for missionary purposes. A boy is being supported in a South Carolina school.

Hattie and May Squires, Ruth and Katie Deike and Lillie Haberle, of the Juniors, sang "Walking with Jesus". A solo, "Not a Sparrow Falleth", was sung by Miss Mullon.

Short addresses were made by Mr. Dunham and Mr. Braker and then Miss Maggie Shepard, the organist, was presented with a purse of money. A short social time, during which refreshments were served, ended the evening.

The chairman of the Social Committee, A. R. Johnson, was in charge of the details of entertainment.

WANTS THE RAILWAY TO REPAY.

Trolley Car Accident Likely to Result in a Lawsuit.

Miss Julia Allen, who drove into town from over the mountain two weeks ago and had her spine injured by being thrown from her wagon as the result of a trolley-car accident on Somerset street, has been removed from the Westervelt avenue home where she was cared for, and is now at her home in Liberty Corners. Her father will claim damages from the railroad company. He claims the loss of his daughter's services and the expenses of her illness. She lost a situation because of the crippling.

Getting Strict.

Orders have been issued by Councilman Lounsbury, who is chairman of the Marshal Committee, that hereafter all applicants for license must pay the fee in full at once or be prosecuted. Heretofore residents would pay part down and the balance later on. The clerk receives 50 cents for each license granted.

'Twas Ever Thus in Middlesex.

The Berlin Bridge Company gave a banquet to the Middlesex County Freeholders and got the contract to build a new Landing Bridge for $29,495. The Union Bridge Company claim to have bid $18,000 for the same job, and the courts are ventilating the charges of collusion.

Of Plainfield Lineage.

Messrs. Huriburt and Capron, who captured the Snake Hill murderer, have relatives in Plainfield. Mr. Huriburt is a cousin of J. B. Huriburt of Emily street, and Mr. Capron is an uncle of Walter Capron who works in Vogeler's.

So Glad He Came, He'll Celebrate.

As a mark of his esteem for the people of his pastorate and town, Rev. A. I. Martine will celebrate next Sunday the fourth anniversary of his taking charge of the Dunellen Presbyterian Church.

Takes Plainfield Artisans!

Swan Smalley of Jackson avenue, foreman for Frantz the Scotch Plains carpenter and builder, is soon to erect a handsome residence for Mr. Bender of New York city on Murray Hill.

Good Effect of a Bath.

Four little people found a dog on Westervelt avenue yesternoon. They said he was dead of old age. But when they washed his face in cold water he resurrected and declared the funeral off.

Earth's Tributes to Plainfield.

The lumber that C. T. Rogers has been carting to Plainfield all this week comes from Pennsylvania.

Equine Tonsorialism.

The stylish Spring dress of Dr. Zeglio's sorrel team is the result of J. N. Honeyman's clipping.

SAID FOSTER TO THE GOVERNOR—

The Two Genial Gentlemen Exchange Compliments Over the Judgeship Declination.

Senator Foster M. Voorhees caled on Governor Werts yesterday and informed him that he felt impelled, for honorable reasons, to decline the proffered honor of Circuit Court Judge, and requested that his name be withdrawn.

"I am very sorry, Senator, that you can not see your way clear to accept,"—said the Governor.—"I certainly was sincere in my selection of you. The position is one of honor, and would, in my estimation, be congenial to your tastes."

"Very true, Governor, and I heartily appreciate your kindness in considering my name"—returned the Union Senator.—"I feel deeply grateful and highly honorable reasons purely."

The two men chatted awhile, shook hands, and Mr. Voorhees returned to his post of duty in the Senate Chamber.

CHAPTERS GONE BEFORE.

What You May Have Missed, You Can Now Catch Up on.

For the sake of those who have neglected to read the early chapters of that great story now running as a serial on Page 4, the following synopsis is given of chapters that have appeared up to this issue:

SYNOPSIS OF "SHIPS THAT PASS IN THE NIGHT"

Bernardine Holme is the niece of a London shopkeeper. She is intellectual, writes for the press, and takes part in political discussions. Finally she loses her health and goes to a hotel for consumptives in Switzerland. There she meets the Disagreeable Man, Robert Allitsen. He is a misanthrope, with a pessimism more gloomy than that of Schopenhauer, and he proceeds to fulfil his self-imposed mission by trying to convince Bernardine that life is not worth living. But his morbid cynicisms serve to make the young woman more cheerful and contented with her lot and with the world in general. Chapter III—Bernardine meets a worldly and selfish rich woman named Mrs. Reffold, whose husband is a hopeless invalid, and teaches her a lesson. IV—The love affair of the postman and his sweetheart. VI—A beautiful allegory teaching that happiness and contentment are in everyday life and in daily effort and not afar off.

A Pigeon-Shooter's Misfortune.

Enoch Miller, the well-known pigeon-shooter, of Branch Mills, near Westfield, will have his right hand amputated this afternoon. The physicians say that this must be done to save life, as blood poisoning has set in. He was cleaning his gun a week ago, and accidentally cut his hand with a knife. The wound was small, and was at first neglected. The arm soon began to swell. The amputation of the hand will end Miller's shooting career.

He's a Democrat, Too.

Warden John C. Blore is an economical manager of the county jail. Under his supervision the daily cost per prisoner is only 21½ cents. Freeholder Vanderbeek and others of the committee investigated the jail and highly praised the management of Mr. Blore.

That's Right.

The borough marshals are to have a ten-days vacation this Summer.

Hearsy.

North Plainfield is soon to have a signal box service.

He's a Hustler.

Pedefiou's Hotel in the Valley is being improved.

A RETIRED BUSINESS WOMAN.

A Page From Her History.

The important experiences of others are interesting. The following is no exception: "I had been troubled with heart disease 25 years, much of that time very seriously. For five years I was treated by one physician continuously. I was in business, but obliged to retire on account of my health. A physician told my friends that I could not live a month. My feet and limbs were badly swollen, and I was indeed in a serious condition when a gentleman directed my attention to Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, and said that his sister, who had been afflicted with heart disease, had been cured by the remedy, and was again a strong, healthy woman. I purchased a bottle of the Heart Cure, and in less than an hour after taking the first dose I could feel a decided improvement in the circulation of my blood. When I had taken three doses I could move my ankles, something I had not done for months, and my limbs had been swollen so long that they seemed almost putrified. Before I had taken one bottle of the New Heart Cure the swelling had all gone down, and I was so much better that I did my own work. On my recommendation six others are taking this valuable remedy."—Mrs. Morgan, 569 W. Harrison St., Chicago, Ill.

Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, a discovery of an eminent specialist in heart disease, is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is positively free from all opiates or dangerous drugs.

Aged and Afflicted.

There is no change in the condition of Mrs. John Moore, the aged wife of the blind man whose home is at the corner of Warren street and Brook avenue. Dr. Lowrie calls twice daily, and is doing his best to help the invalid. Her age is against her, and she is only a frail little body, who it seems has had more than her share of suffering.

Birds of Passage.

Those who have become interested in Beatrice Harraden's genius through her "Ships That Pass in the Night" and who missed that exquisite story of hers, "Birds of Passage", may still obtain complete copies of that tale by purchasing copies of last Saturday's Daily Press.

Bound to Have His Evidence.

Michael Huber of Garwood, accused of selling liquor unlicensed, has furnished bonds for the action of the October Grand Jury. The informer against him was required to furnish $1,000 bonds for his appearance as a witness.

Kegs Come and Go, and Lagers Flow.

The query Does Plainfield drink much beer? is graphically answered by the huge truckloads of empty kegs carted almost daily to the freight-house the past week or two, for shipment to the brewers for refilling.

Substantial Gratitude.

The members of Warren Engine Company are proud of the handsome chair presented to them by Mr. Jennings, whose house they saved

A Cold-Water Gathering.

Dunellen's W. C. T. U. will make its annual report in the union temperance meeting in the First Baptist Church of New Market Sunday night. Miss Clara Parrish of Illinois will talk of her work of rescuing the perishing.

Beautiful Wife, Neglected Husband.

Plainfield girls who are fond of errands of mercy will be immensely interested in the visit of Bernardine to the neglected husband of the beautiful Mrs. Reffold, in the instalments of "Ships That Pass in the Night" on Page 4 today and tomorrow.

Sunday Sports in the Suburbs.

The Dunellen Call says that if those Plainfield young men don't stop using profane language and cutting up disgracefully on New Market pond Sundays they'll be locked up.

Quartering an Estate.

An appraisement of the personal property of the late Henry VanMiddlesworth of Dunellen estimates the value at nearly $500. The will, admitted to probate, equally divides the estate among the four sons.

To Finish the Chapel Fund.

A literary and musical entertainment will be given this evening in the Mount Pleasant school-house, to raise the last $50 for the chapel fund. Miss Raybert and Miss Blair of this city will assist.

Can't Stand Everything.

Westfield town boys stone the Public School Fife and Drum Corps when they parade and play.

CHAPTER VII.
BERNARDINE.

The crisp mountain air and the warm sunshine began slowly to have their effect on Bernardine, in spite of the Disagreeable Man's verdict. She still looked singularly lifeless and appeared to drag herself about with painful effort, but the place suited her, and she enjoyed sitting in the sun listening to the music which was played by a scratchy string band. Some of the Kurhaus guests, seeing that she was alone and ailing, made some attempt to be kindly to her. She always seemed astonished that people should concern themselves about her? Whatever her faults were, it never struck her that she might be of any importance to others, however important she might be to herself. She was grateful for any little kindness which was shown her, but at first she kept very much to herself, talking chiefly with the Disagreeable Man, who, by the way, had surprised every one—but no one more than himself—by his unwonted behavior in bestowing even a fraction of his companionship on a Petershof human being.

There was a great deal of curiosity about her, but no one ventured to question her since Mrs. Reffold's defeat. Mrs. Reffold herself rather avoided her, having always a vague suspicion that Bernardine tried to make fun of her. But whether out of perversity or not Bernardine never would be avoided by her, never let her pass by without a few words of conversation, and always went to her for information, much to the amusement of Mrs. Reffold's faithful attendants.

There was always a twinkle in Bernardine's eye when she spoke with Mrs. Reffold. She never fastened herself onto any one. No one could say she intruded. As time went on there was a vague sort of feeling that she did not intrude enough. She was ready to speak if any one cared to speak with her, but she never began a conversation except with Mrs. Reffold. When people did talk to her, they found her genial. Then the sad face would smile kindly and the sad eyes speak kind sympathy, or some bit of fun would flash forth and a peal of young laughter ring out. It seemed strange that such fun could come from her.

Those who noticed her said she appeared always to be thinking.

She was thinking and learning.

Some few remarks roughly made by the Disagreeable Man had impressed her deeply.

"You have come to a new world," he said, "the world of suffering. You are in a fury because your career has been checked and because you have been put on the shelf—you of all people. Now you will learn how many quite as able as yourself, and abler, have been put on the shelf, too, and have to stay there. You are only a pupil in suffering. What about the professors? If your wonderful wisdom has left you with any sense at all, look about you and learn."

So she was looking and thinking and learning. And as the days went by perhaps a softer light came into her eyes.

All her life long her standard of judging people had been an intellectual standard or an artistic standard—what people had done with outward and visible signs, how far they had contributed to thought, how far they had influenced any great movement or originated it, how much of a benefit they had been to their century or their country, how much social or political activity, how much educational energy they had devoted to the pressing need of the times.

She was undoubtedly a clever, cultured young woman. The great work of her life had been self culture. To know and understand she had spared neither herself nor any one else. To know and to use her acquired knowledge intellectually as teacher, perhaps, too, as writer, had been the great aim of her life. Everything that furthered this aim won her instant attention. It never struck her that she was selfish. One does not think of that until the great check comes. It goes on and is lifted. But a barrier rises up. Then, finding one can advance no farther, one turns round, and what does one see?

Bernardine saw that she had come a long journey. She saw what the Traveler saw. That was all she saw at first. Then she remembered that she had done the journey entirely for her own sake. Perhaps it might not have looked so dreary if it had been undertaken for some one else.

She had claimed nothing of any one; she had given nothing to any one; she had simply taken her life in her own hands and made what she could of it. What had she made of it?

Many women asked for riches, for position, for influence and authority and admiration. She had only asked to be able to work. It seemed little enough to ask. That she asked so little placed her, so she thought, apart from the common herd of eager askers. To be cut off from active life and earnest work was a possibility which never occurred to her.

It never crossed her mind that in asking for the one thing for which she longed she was really asking for the greatest thing. Now, in the hour of her enfeeblement and in the hour of the bitterness of her heart, she still prided herself upon wanting so little.

"It seems so little to ask," she cried to herself time after time. "I only want to be able to do a few strokes of work. I would be content now to do so little if only I might do some. The laziest day laborer on the road would laugh at the small amount of work which would content me now."

She told the Disagreeable Man that one day.

"So you think you are moderate in your demands," he said to her. "You are a most amusing young woman. You are so perfectly unconscious how exacting you really are. For, after all, what is it you want? You want to have that wonderful brain of yours restored, so that you may begin to teach and perhaps write a book. Well, to repeat my former words, you are still at phase one, and you are longing to be strong enough to fulfill your ambitions and write a book. When you arrive at phase four, you will be quite content to dust one of your uncle's books instead—far more useful work and far more worthy of encouragement. If every one who wrote books now would be satisfied to dust books already written, what a regenerated world it would become!"

She laughed good temperedly. His remarks did not vex her, or at least she showed no vexation. He seemed to have constituted himself as her critic, and she made no objections. She had given him little bits of stray confidence about herself, and she received everything he had to say with that kind of forbearance which shivalry bids us show to the weak and ailing. She made allowances for him, but she did more than that for him—she did not let him see that she made allowances. Moreover, she recognized amidst all his roughness a certain kind of sympathy which she could not resent because it was not aggressive, for to some natures the expression of sympathy is an irritation—to be sympathized with means to be pitied, and to be pitied means to be looked down upon. She was sorry for him, but she would not have told him so for worlds. He would have shrunk from pity as much as she did. And yet the sympathy which she thought she did not want for herself she was silently giving to those around her like herself thwarted, each in a different way perhaps, still thwarted all the same.

She found more than once that she was learning to measure people by a standard different from her former one—not by what they had done or been, but by what they had suffered. But such a change as this does not come suddenly, though, in a place like Petershof, it comes quickly, almost unconsciously.

She became immensely interested in some of the guests, and there were curious types in the Kurhaus. The foreigners attracted her chiefly. A little Parisian danseuse, none too quiet in her manner, won Bernardine's fancy.

"I so want to get better, cherie," she said to Bernardine. "Life is so bright. Death—ah, how the very thought makes one shiver! That horrid doctor says I must not skate. It is not wise. When was I wise? Wise people don't enjoy themselves. And I have enjoyed myself and will still."

"How can you go about with that little danseuse?" the Disagreeable Man said to Bernardine one day. "Do you know who she is?"

"Yes," said Bernardine. "She is the lady who thinks you must be a very ill bred person because you stalk into meals with your hands in your pockets. She wondered how I could bring myself to speak to you."

"I dare say many people wonder at that," said Robert Allitsen rather peevishly.

"Oh, no," replied Bernardine. "They wonder that you talk to me. They think I must either be very clever or else very disagreeable."

"I should not call you clever," said Robert Allitsen grimly.

"No," answered Bernardine pensively. "But I always did think myself clever until I came here. Now I am beginning to know better. But it is rather a shock, isn't it?"

"I have never experienced the shock," he said.

"Then you still think you are clever?" she asked.

"There is only one man my intellectual equal in Petershof, and he is not here any more," he said gravely. "Now I come to remember, he died. That is the worst of making friendships here—people die."

"Still, it is something to be left king of the intellectual world," said Bernardine. "I never thought of you in that light."

There was a sly smile about her lips as she spoke, and there was the ghost of a smile on the Disagreeable Man's face.

"Why do you talk with that horrid Swede?" he said suddenly. "He is a wretched low foreigner. Have you heard some of his views?"

"Some of them," answered Bernardine cheerfully. "One of his views is really amusing—that it is very rude of you to read the newspaper during mealtime, and he asks if it is an English custom. I tell him it depends entirely on the Englishman and the Englishman's neighbor!"

So she, too, had her raps at him, but always in the kindest way.

He had a curious effect on her. His very bitterness seemed to check in its growth her own bitterness. The cup of poison of which he himself had drunk deep he passed on to her. She drank of it, and it did not poison her. She was morbid, and she needed cheerful companionship. His dismal companionship and his hard way of looking at life ought by rights to have oppressed her, instead of which she became less sorrowful.

Was the Disagreeable Man perhaps a reader of character? Did he know how to help her in his own grim, gruff way? Did himself had suffered so much. Perhaps he did know.

CHAPTER VIII.
THE STORY MOVES ON AT LAST.

Bernardine was playing chess one day with the Swedish professor. On the Kurhaus terrace the guests were sunning themselves, warmly wrapped up to protect themselves from the cold and well provided with parasols to protect themselves from the glare. Some were reading, some were playing cards or Russian dominoes, and others were doing nothing. There was a good deal of fun and a great deal of scrabbling among the Portuguese colony. The little danseuse and three gentlemen acquaintances were drinking coffee and not behaving too quietly. Pretty Fraulein Muller was leaning over her balcony carrying on a conversation with a picturesque Spanish youth below. Most of the English party had gone sledging and tobogganing. Mrs. Reffold had asked Bernardine to join them, but she had refused. Mrs. Reffold's friends were anything but attractive to Bernardine, although she liked Mrs. Reffold, herself immensely. There was no special reason why she should like her. She certainly had no cause to admire her everyday behavior, nor her neglect of her invalid husband, who was passing away, uncared for in the present and not likely to be mourned for in the future. Mrs. Reffold was gay, careless and beautiful. She understood nothing about nursing and cared less. So a trained nurse looked after Mr. Reffold, and Mrs. Reffold went sledging.

"Dear Wilfrid is so unselfish," she said. "He will not have me stay at home. But I feel very selfish." That was her stock remark. Most people answered her by saying, "Oh, no, Mrs. Reffold, don't say that." But when she made the remark to Bernardine and expected the usual reply Bernardine said instead:

"Mr. Reffold seems lonely."

"Oh, he has a trained nurse, and she can read to him," said Mrs. Reffold hurriedly. She seemed ruffled.

"I had a trained nurse once," replied Bernardine, "and she could read, but she would not. She said it hurt her throat."

"Dear me, how very unfortunate for you!" said Mrs Reffold. "Ah, there is Captain Graham calling. I must not keep the sledges waiting."

That was a few days ago, but today when Bernardine was playing chess with the Swedish professor Mrs. Reffold came to her. There was a curious mixture of shyness and abandon in Mrs. Reffold's manner.

"Miss Holme," she said, "I have thought of such a splendid idea. Will you go and see Mr. Reffold this afternoon? That would be a nice little change for him."

Bernardine smiled.

"If you wish it," she answered.

Mrs. Reffold nodded and hastened away, and Bernardine continued her game, and having finished it rose to go.

GLUT OF HARD COAL.

Only a Few Carloads of Soft Fuel, However, at South Amboy.

NEW YORK, May 19.—The situation at South Amboy, N. J., in regard to bituminous coal not relieved by the release of any of the coal consigned to shippers which has been seized by the Pennsylvania railroad. Only about 120 car loads are visible there, and no coal except anthracite is being moved. At least 300 coal handlers are idle at South Amboy alone. To this number must be adden many hundreds more at Port Reading, Port Johnson and other tide-water shipping points.

Of anthracite coal there is a glut at all these places, especially in what are known as the "family" sizes, viz, stove and chestnut, and at South Plainfield and Perth Amboy the stocking grounds are absolutely full to overflow. This is the result of the open winter and the practice of economy owing to the hard times.

There is a corresponding scarcity, however, of the cheaper grades of steam coal, such as pea and broken coal, which are readily burned by furnaces adapted to their use in mills and factories, but not by steamers.

Storm Interrupts Tariff Discussion.

WASHINGTON, May 19.—Late yesterday afternoon a severe local thunder storm broke over the city, its centre appearing to be directly over the capitol building. The rain, which fell in torrents, was accompanied by hail, which made such a din on the double glass roof of the senate chamber that it was impossible to hear what was being said and a recess for ten minutes was necessary. The republicans and Mr. Harris and other leaders during the recess for permitting such a delay for consideration of the bill, while democrats asserted in reply that even the delays had combined with the republicans in filibustering tactics.

LIVES AND BOATS LOST

Lake Michigan Lashed for Hours By a Tremendous Sea.

MANY SCENES OF HORROR

Schooners Dashed to Pieces and Numbers of Their Crews Swept to Watery Graves in Chicago Harbor In the Presence of Tens of Thousands of Horror-Stricken People Who Lined the Shore and Crowded Windows and Housetops—A Day of Heroic Effort and Great Suffering for the Life-Saving Crews—Many Well-Earned Additions to Their Records—Disaster Off Milwaukee.

CHICAGO, May 19.—Lake Michigan has not been lashed and churned for months as she was yesterday by the fierce wind that has been sweeping down from the north for the past fifty-six hours. This morning it is believed that twelver or fifteen lives have been lost along the shore off this city and its suburbs. The only other point reporting loss of life is Milwaukee, where six of the schooner Cummings' crew were drowned before they could be rescued by the life saving crew. Half a dozen schooners and smaller craft have foundered off this city during the day; a score or more are dismantled and stove in, making an almost hopeless fight against the gale and the huge waves that every few minutes swept over them, endangering the lives of those who were still on board.

It was a day of heroic effort and great suffering for the life saving crews scattered along the shore. At least 30 vessels were anchored outside the harbor waiting for the storm to subside. All were more or less damaged and the signals of distress that appeared among them from time to time during the day kept the life savers busy.

Twenty five or thirty men were brought in, all exhausted and suffering intensely from the exposure and cold. In several cases help arrived too late and a corpse was found among the half-conscious sailors who, benumbed by the cold and unable to protect themselves were almost beaten to death by the furious waves.

All night the storm did not abate and every hour increased the peril of those on board the numerous vessels outside the harbor, pulling at their anchors and in imminent danger of being brought into collision with each other or of being pounded to pieces on the beach.

Scenes of horror that chilled the blood of thousands of spectators were enacted in the harbor for two miles below the Illinois Central depot last evening.

As the storm increased in violence during the afternoon the waves grew mountain high, dashing over the breakwater, deluging the tracks and enveloping the passing trains with torrents of spray.

Out in the harbor a dozen three-masted schooners, heavily laden with lumber, were riding at anchor. A few minutes after 4 o'clock three of the number hoisted signals of distress and citizens on shore telephoned to the police and fire departments, as well as to the life saving station at Jackson park.

A few minutes later the three-masted schooner Evening Star, of this city, parted her chains, and came for the shore like a rocket. She struck the heavy piling of the breakwater and her timbers crashed in as though they were egg shells.

As the vessel struck the six sailors aboard jumped for their lives. Five landed on a pile of scrap iron, going down on all fours, but the sixth, a Norwegian named Olson, missed land by a couple of feet and went down into the waves. The cheers that had broken from thousands of spectators turned into a groan as the man disappeared from view. The next moment a succession of monster waves had cleaned the deck of thousands of pine planks which covered the surface of the water and made any attempt to rescue the unfortunate men impossible.

Hardly had the Evening Star struck when there was a shout from the throng of excited onlookers and it was seen that another three-master had parted her ropes and was coming ashore.

This was the Jack Thompson, also lumber laden.

She followed the path of the Star and came helm on. The shock precipitated into the water the heavy timber upon which the five members of the crew were standing.

Four of them clung to a big plank to which they held on like grim death. The fifth man was hanging by one hand to a spar a couple of hundred yards north.

By this time the life boat had arrived, but it was evident that any attempt to launch it would only result in its being crushed to pieces, and the crew turned their attention to the rescue of the men in the water.

Several unsuccessful attempts to cast lines were made, but finally a rocket was thrown across the raft and caught by one of the sailors. The throng held its breath as the rope was slowly drawn in, for it seemed as though every wave would wash the unfortunates back into the water; but when the land was reached and the benumbed men were helped ashore, the rescuers were rewarded by a roar like the reverberation of artillery.

In the meantime the other member of the crew had been washed into a pier abutting Twenty-second street where he managed to cling to the piling and was pulled up by some of the spectators.

Shortly after 6 o'clock the two-master Murphy, lumber-laden, came ashore within 50 yards of the Thompson. She was driven up so close to land that the crew had little difficulty in jumping ashore. The waves soon battered the three boats to pieces.

Shortly after 6 o'clock another big three-master, which had been riding at anchor about a mile out, parted her chains and commenced to come for the shore at 29th street. By this time fully a hundred thousand men and children lined the lake front for a distance of a mile and tens of thousands more occupied the windows and roofs of the buildings, that command a view of the lake.

A babble of voices mingled with the shrieking of the wind and the roar of the waves as the schooner came nearer and nearer the shore.

Darkness was coming on, but it was seen that eight men were clinging to the rigging.

For a moment, when the vessel was a few hundred yards from the shore, it seemed as though her anchor had found an abiding place, but a moment later a wave bigger than all the rest came sweeping down from the northwest and upon its crest the boat was carried on to the piling.

She rebounded like a rubber ball while another wave came sweeping over the rigging.

In the meantime the life saving crew, reinforced by a half dozen of their men, had made ready their lines. The first rocket took effect and one by one the men were brought ashore, while the thousands made their voices heard above the roar of the water.

When the eight men had been rescued it was discovered that the ninth member of the crew was missing and two members of the life saving crew volunteered to go to the vessel. They found the missing man pinned down in the forecastle by a pile of lumber, but just as they were about to extricate the body, the vessel made a lurch and they were washed into the water. Ropes had been fastened around their waists, but the floating lumber impeded their efforts to pull them ashore and it was not until fifteen minutes later that, more dead than alive, the gallant men were brought to land insensible.

About 9 o'clock the schooner Myrtle was seen drifting ashore near Twenty-ninth street. Six half frozen men were clinging to the rigging. The schooner leaned over on her side, heaving in the trough of the sea, while wave after wave swept over her. The life saving crew was busy a mile away and could give no assistance.

The captain, whose name is Warner, was the first to go. A huge wave swept him overboard and he was not seen again. The men then took refuge in the cabin on the main deck. The schooner had drifted to Thirty-fourth street, when her mainmast was carried away, taking with it as it fell one side of the cabin. Deprived of this shelter, the remaining sailors were washed overboard one by one in full view of the thousands on the shore until but one was left.

He took off his clothes during a lull in the storm and jumped overboard, striking out for the shore. He had gone but a few yards, however, when he was carried under by the waves and did not reappear. Soon after her decks had been swept clear of this human freight the schooner foundered 300 feet off Thirty-fifth street.

Forty lives were saved by the crews of the life saving boats and the tugs of the Chicago companies during the day. The first act was to rescue from the South pier twelve men who had been in a perilous position all night. They had gone to the pier for fishing during the day. The life savers experienced great difficulty in getting the half dead men to tie the life lines around their bodies and throw themselves into the water to be pulled to the boat in a minute or two. Five of the men were so exhausted by their all-night imprisonment clinging to the pier that the life saving crew were compelled to get on the pier and actually throw the sufferers into the water with a line attached to their bodies.

ONLY TWO OF A CREW SAVED.

Desperate All-Day Efforts of Life-savers at Milwaukee.

MILWAUKEE, May 19.—With only her masts sticking out of the water the three-masted schooner M. J. Cummings is sunk in the bay south of the straight cut. Six sailors and a woman, constituting the crew, as well as a member of the life-saving station, clung to the rigging, facing death every moment all day. The life-saving crew several times escaped drowning by a miracle, the lifeboat was overturned three times and was finally wrecked. At 3:15 o'clock in the afternoon one of the men in the rigging, exhausted and frozen, fell into the water, and so they dropped off one by one until only two sailors and the cook, a woman, remained.

Twice tugs of the Milwaukee line attempted to reach the doomed boat and carry off the crew, but the sea was so high that they were compelled to give up the attempt.

About 10 o'clock the life saving crew of eight men manned the big life boat and made an effort to rescue the crew of the sunken schooner. They went out some distance beyond the mouth of the straight cut and then made for the schooner.

Soon the people on shore witnessed a thrilling scene. As the life boat neared the schooner Capt. Pratton says the waves became worse on account of the shallow water, and at times members of the life saving crew, sitting in their boat, could not see the top masts of the vessel a short distance away. Capt. Pratton attempted to bring the life boat under the stern of the schooner and to make fast.

While the effort was being made a huge wave lifted the life boat and its occupants and threw it squarely over the schooner.

The life boat was swept past between two of the masts and was nearly knocked to pieces. One of the crew, Frank Guerdis, jumped from the life boat upon the schooner with the idea of making the life boat fast. Another enormous wave swept over both boats. It broke the line which Guerdis held when he jumped upon the schooner, carried off the life boat and left Guerdis upon the schooner.

The next minute the life boat was overturned by a huge wave and the men thrown into the water. The boat soon righted itself and all the men except one who had broken his arm succeeded in getting in the boat again. The member with the broken arm had his life preserver on and floated toward shore. He was nearly dead from exhaustion when he reached shore but will recover.

A few minutes later the life boat, which had been beating shoreward, was overturned again. The crew climbed into the boat, righted it and floated to within 200 feet of shore, when it was overturned for the third time. The men, with the aid of their life preservers, floated ashore. They landed at the foot of Greenfield avenue.

Repeated efforts were made to reach the schooner when at 5:30 the life saving crew went out again and finally managed to reach the boat. Only three members of the crew could be seen still clinging to the rigging, and Frank Guerdis, of the life saving crew, had also been able to hold on. Two of those above water were dead and were not brought to shore, and only two were finally saved, they were seamen, the woman having perished with the other unfortunates. The woman had been tied to the mast with ropes, but died at noon from exposure. The name of the sailor clinging to the rigging dead, is not known. All the others are at the bottom of the lake.

OUTLOOK OF BUSINESS

The Immediate Future Not Over Encouraging.

Tariff Uncertainty Continues a Trade Restricting Element—Fuel Situation Growing Worse—Industrial Shutdowns and Limited Transportation Operations Increasing.

NEW YORK, May 19.—The third week in succession is just closing in which there has been no material gain in volume of business and there is still little improvement in prospect for trade in the near future, according to Bradstreet's weekly review of the business situation of the country. Although pleasant weather has favored retail lines in many directions, jobbers in staple goods have not found a corresponding increase in demand.

Tariff Uncertainty Still a Drawback.

Continued uncertainty regarding tariff legislation restricts trading in "futures" in all staple lines. This is largely responsible for the reduction in the volume of bank clearings. Smaller orders have been received by jobbers in dry goods, clothing, shoes, notions and other leading lines at Chicago, St. Louis, Baltimore and other western and southern distributing centers, from localities where the effects of the bituminous coal strike have been most pronounced.

The general industrial situation does not improve, although the striking New York and Paterson silk weavers, who have been out three months and have lost over $1,250,000 in wages, have gone back to work.

Situation as to Fuel Supplies.

The coal conference at Cleveland failed to settle the miners' strike, and the situation as to fuel supplies continues to grow worse. Shutdowns of industrial concerns, restricted transportation operations, and seizures by railroad companies of coal on track is increasing. Large quantities of foreign coal have been engaged for delivery on the Atlantic seaboard.

The number of idle through strikes remains at about 225,000. Notwithstanding the pinch for want of soft coal among railways, iron and steel works and other industries, Boston reports supplies sufficient for a month or more, and Duluth is said to have half a million bushels on hand.

Tendency of Prices Downward.

The general tendency of prices of staples is downward, the only advances other than those in Bessemer pig iron and steel billets, due exclusively to the strike of soft coal miners, being those for naval stores at Savannah and sugar at New York and New Orleans. The decreases include wheat, 2 1-1 c.; wool, 1 a 2 c.; live hogs, 10 c.; live cattle, 15 c.; corn, 1 c.; oats, 3-8 c.; pork, 50c.; lard, 20c., and coffee and cotton, 1-8c. each.

Bank clearings show a moderate increase within the week, the total for 78 cities being $887,000,000, a decrease of about 1.7 per cent. from the total the week before, and a falling off of 27 per cent. from the aggregate in the like week last year.

Stocks of cotton goods at some eastern mills are accumulating; prices of print cloths are lower, fully 1-2 c., as compared with a year ago, and orders for men's-wear woolens for fall delivery are about one-third the ordinary volume, thus affecting the demand for raw wool.

TO BOSTON ON BICYCLES.

Progress of the Journey of the Two Plucky Philadelphia Women.

HARTFORD, Conn., May 19.—Mrs. George H. Chase and Mrs. Louis Lesure, young ladies prominent in social circles in Philadelphia, passed through this city yesterday enroute to Boston on bicycles. They left the Quaker city Sunday morning and arrived in New York Monday afternoon. On Wednesday morning they rode to Stamford. They came to New Haven Thursday, spent three hours in that city, and proceeded in the afternoon to Meriden, making the day's total run 90 miles.

Both the ladies are in excellent physical condition, and are delighted with their experiences as far as this city.

They do not fear molestation on the country roads as both are armed and are familiar with the use of a revolver, and ready to defend themselves if necessary.

Mill Strikers Riotous.

HACKENSACK, N. J., May 19.—Fifty Italian weavers in the Hackensack Silk mill, owned by Givernaud Bros., who also own the mill at Homestead, in West Hoboken, have gone on strike because of a reduction in their wages. They were very demonstrative and attempted to prevent the other weavers from entering the mill after dinner. In several instances they used violence, but no blood was shed. The young women were subjected to many indignities and insults. Sheriff Bogert has been notified of the existing trouble.

Irvington-Milburn Bicycle Race.

NEW YORK, May 19.—Great preparations are being made for the Irvington-Milburn twenty-five mile bicycle road race, to be held on Memorial day, May 30. The entry list closed May 16, and shows a fine lot of competitors. The committee of the Metropolitan Association of Cycling clubs have decided not to allow colored men to compete.

World Famous Rifle Shot Defeated.

PORTCHESTER, N. Y., May 19.—In the rifle match here, 100 shots, 25 ring German target, 200 yards off-hand, on the grounds of the Portchester rifle club, James E. Smith of the Portchester Rifle club defeated Gus Zimmerman, the world famous rifle shot of New York city, by a score of 2,145 to 2,071.

Ex-Gov. Price Very Low.

OAKLAND, N. J., May 19.—The report that ex-Gov. Price, of this place, is dead is untrue. The aged administrator is very low, but is still in the land of the living. The presence of Sheriff Bogert here yesterday was not in any way connected with ex-Gov. Price's case.

Nellie Ackerman Has Not Confessed.

HACKENSACK, N. J., May 19.—The report in a New York evening paper that Nellie Ackerman had confessed to robbing the Fairmount depot is untrue. She has confessed to nothing.

Gas Works Out of Fuel.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., May 19.—The Clyde Glass works at Clyde, will close down for want of coal.

VETO BY GOV. FLOWER.

In Which the Executive Speaks His Mind in Plain Language.

ALBANY, May 19.—Gov. Flower has vetoed Senator Lexow's bill providing for the payment of the expenses of the senate committee appointed to investigate the police department of the city of New York. In his veto the governor says: "If I thought the purpose behind the bill was an honest one, or that the interests of the state or of New York city would be benefitted by the proposed investigation, I would give the measure my approval. But the bill has every appearance of being a misuse of public money and of legislative power for the manufacture of political capital or the division of political patronage. These are plain words with which to characterize an act of the legislature. They will not be relished by those to whom they apply. They will be criticized by those whose personal or political purposes they frustrate. But I think the people understand plain language best, and when plain facts are handled they require plain treatment. The people are not easily deceived by polite phrases or by language which conceals rather than expresses thought. They like frankness best."

WILL CONTINUE THE STRIKE.

So the Soft Coal Miners Decide at Their Final Consultation.

CLEVELAND, O., May 19.—The striking soft coal miners held a final consultation yesterday afternoon, at which it was decided to continue the fight until the operators agree to restore the old scale. President McBride made an address to the delegates, urging them to use only peaceable means to gain the desired result, and to strengthen their lines by extending their organization.

Vice-President Penna said there was nothing left for the miners to do but fight, and they would make a hard battle. If the operators had made as strong an effort to be fully represented at the convention as had the miners the meeting would have ended in a settlement of the differences at issue.

Tortured Through Her Child.

HARTFORD, Conn., May 19.—In the divorce suit of Mrs. Sarah Jane Allhouse, of West Suffield, against her husband, Lucius H. Allhouse, Mrs. Allhouse testified that her husband tortured her through their infant child. He hated both wife and child, and stated that his purpose in abusing the child was to wound the mother. When the child was six months old he whipped it twelve times. The following month the child was sick with the mumps and because she tried to save the child from his abuse he struck her in the face. The divorce was granted.

He Probably Wrecked the Bank.

NEW YORK, May 19.—The affairs of the Harlem River bank, which, on April 26, was closed by order of Supt. Preston, of the state banking department, has just taken on another phase, Justice Ryan having issued a warrant for the arrest of Bookkeeper J. J. Kean. The warrant was issued on the application of Supt. Preston, who charges Kean with having stolen between $19,000 and $20,000. It is now thought that the closing of the bank was directly due to Kean's defalcation.

SPURT IN TARIFF WORK

Senate Making Fairly Good Progress Now.

More Time to Be Given to the Measure From Now On—Mr. Allison Denies That the Republicans Have Decided on Concerted Action—Must Expect Filibustering.

WASHINGTON, May 19.—A very satisfactory rate of progression on the tariff bill was struck in the senate yesterday, and was kept up from noon till the hour of adjournment. The dozen items that had been left on schedule A—"chemicals, oils and paints"—on Thursday evening were disposed of, and schedule B—"earths, earthenware and glass-ware"—was taken up and proceeded with to its close. The next schedule is "metals, and manufactures of iron and steel."

The resolution for the daily meeting of the senate at 10 a. m. and for the taking up of the tariff bill at 10:30 was agreed to after a good deal of discussion, in which Senator Frye (rep., Me.) said that, in his opinion, all parliamentary methods should be resorted to defeat the measure, but that he had not been able to get the republican side of the senate to take the same view. Mr. Dolph (rep., Ore.) professed his readiness to unite with the senator from Maine.

Senator Allison denied the existence of any understanding on the republican side as to action on the bill, and said that senators would act on their individual judgments.

Senator Chandler (rep., N. H.) warned democratic senators not to act on the theory that there would be no filibustering against the bill.

When the metal schedule was reached, the bill went over for the day, and the senate, at 6:05 p. m., adjourned.

House of Representatives.

The first half hour of the day's session of the house was spent in passing a resolution to give the committee on railways and canals a clerk. That having been accomplished the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill for the year ending June 30, 1895, was taken up in committee of the whole. Under an agreement reached by the leaders, after an hour's skirmishing, general debate on the bill was closed at 5 o'clock, and the house voted to adjourn over Saturday.

The most of the afternoon was occupied with a discussion of the matter of "docking" members for absent days, which took a wide range. The occasion for the discussion was the notice by Representative Boatner (dem., La.,) of his intention to move an amendment to the bill, by which members absent on leave would not be compelled to suffer a reduction of pay.

At 5 o'clock the house took a recess under the rules until 8 o'clock, the evening session for the consideration of private pension and relief bills.

Galvin Signed With Buffalo.

BUFFALO, N. Y., May 19.—James Galvin, the well known pitcher, has signed to play with the Buffalos, and will pitch his first game on Sunday next.

BAD FOR BRECKINRIDGE.

Relentless War Waged by the Women of Kentucky.

NEW YORK, May 19.—A Sun special from Pittsburg, Pa., says: A gentleman who has just returned from Kentucky was in Lexington when Col. W. C. P. Breckinridge made his speech there. He relates some significant incidents of the campaign. A Lexington man went home the day of the forthcoming speech with a Breckinridge button in his coat lapel, and told his wife that he had decided to support him. She replied: "As head of the family, I recognize your right to place your political influence wherever you please, and, as a loyal wife, I shall do all I can for the success of your candidate. I am going to the florist's to get a bunch of the finest white flowers I can find. I shall meet the train the colonel arrives on, invite him into my carriage, and ride up with him." The citizen looked at his wife in amazement. He knew that she was quite capable of carrying out her programme, and he knew that he must prevent it. She agreed to relinquish her plan when he took off the Breckinridge button and promised to oppose the colonel. Another Lexington man met some ladies on the street and joined them in their walk. He wore a Breckinridge button. One of the ladies said to him: "We should be delighted with your company, but we cannot be seen in public with a man wearing that button; neither can we receive such a man at our homes." The button promptly came off. These are samples of the work the women of Kentucky are doing against the re-election of Col. Breckinridge.

Her Body Taken to Rome, N. Y.

JERSEY CITY, May 19.—The body of Katie Rupp, who was fatally shot at Snake Hill last Sunday by Bernhardt Altenberger, was taken in charge last evening by C. E. Rollins, in whose hotel the girl was employed, for removal to Rome, N. Y. The funeral services will be held in the German Catholic church at Rome at 2 p. m., Sunday. Chief of Police Murphy expects that Detective Doyle will arrive here with Altenberger this afternoon. The murderer will be detained at police headquarters until Monday morning, when he will be arraigned and formally committed to the county jail for murder.

Red Hot Rate War Promised.

DENVER, Col., May 19.—The report that the Union Pacific is offering a free ride around the mountain loop for four of the big conventions to be held here this summer, if it proves true, will probably result in such a passenger rate war as has not been known in a decade. The Rock Island has entered the contest by offering Republican National league excursionists a free ride to the summit of Pikes Peak. The Santa Fe may carry its passengers free to Grand Junction and return, and the Missouri Pacific may go into combination with the Rio Grande and make circle rides free.

Solar Storm.

GALESBURG, Ill., May 19.—Prof. Larkin of Knox college observatory, after watching all day the solar cyclone, says its dimensions exceeded those of any storm he has seen. It is now at its full height. Its length is 86,000 miles, and the width varies from 22,000 to 43,000 miles. The peculiar features are jets and bridges. The whole mass has a twisting, rotary motion. There are two storm shades. The professor attributes the unusual heat now being experienced to this solar storm.

WHEN ALL ELSE FAILED.

Paine's Celery Compound Made Mrs. Leighton and Her Sister Well Again.

"O, I'm only a little nervous.

"I didn't use to be.

"What can I do to overcome it?"

Just what a woman means by being a little nervous she can't exactly say. She tells you she is restless; that she can no longer sew or read; conversation no longer interests, or it even troubles her; noise startles her and she cries for no cause.

Such are the first small beginnings of nervous weakness. The world is full of loving, patient wives and mothers who have been called upon to suffer intense emotional strain; have undertaken to nurse those dear to them through protracted illness or have worked beyond their physical powers.

During the many years of hard and wonderful work, Prof. Edward E. Phelps, Dartmouth's great professor, had these weak, "run down" women in mind. The study of such cases of nervous prostration, neuralgia, rheumatism, dyspepsia and debility led him to that most marvelous discovery of the century, Paine's celery compound. Prof. Phelps became convinced that the trouble in all these cases of weakness lay in a disturbance of nutrition.

The cure lies in purer, richer blood and better fed nervous tissues. Paine's celery compound stirs the excretive organs, the liver and kidneys to stronger action; the blood grows at once purer and redder and more capable of carrying nutriment and oxygen to every nerve and muscular fiber of the body.

Paine's celery compound makes people well by building up new tissues in place of the old; regulating shaky nerves by appropriate nerve food and sending strong, full tide of pure blood through the diseased parts of the liver, heart, stomach and kidneys.

To worried women, just as to business men staggering under financial adversity, comes nervousness and final breakdown. "I am not ill enough to take medicine," she too often says, and puts off from day to day the correction of her trouble.

Paine's celery compound is the great spring medicine. It cures every form of nervous weakness and special disorders of liver, heart, stomach and kidneys that arise from impure blood and a run down system badly nourished.

These are the difficulties that Paine's celery compound corrects. It builds up the whole body blood, nerves and tissues in a way that nothing else has ever equaled. People get well who thoughtfully and thoroughly try it. For rheumatism it is the one true specific.

Prof. F. A. Leighton is instructor and superintendent of the state dairy school at the Iowa state agricultural college at Ames, Ia. He has been there several years and is well known throughout that state. His wife, writing to Wells, Richardson & Co., who now prepare Paine's celery compound, says:

"Last April I had rheumatism so severely that I could not get around by the aid of crutches. Nothing that I used did me any good and I despaired of regaining my health. A friend recommended Paine's celery compound to me and I used it regularly for two months. As a result I was able to visit the world's fair, staying there for quite a while and walking all day without any difficulty.

"The compound also did my sister a great deal of good while attending college, giving her strength and health. There is nothing I know of in the world that is its equal for building up the weak and run-down and giving strength and tone to the system. I am better than for years, and ascribe my improvement wholly to the use of Paine's celery compound.

Are You Up to Date

Can you discuss Beatrice Harraden's novel, which is causing so much talk in the society of two continents? If you have not yet read

SHIPS THAT PASS IN THE NIGHT

You will find it in this paper, published as a Serial.

Not Carlyle Harris' Father.

OGDENSBURG, N. Y., May 19.—Charles L. Harris, of Syracuse, who was admitted to the state hospital here on May 13, is not believed to be the father of Carlyle W. Harris. He is about 54 years of age and has a long history of intemperance. He has taken the Keeley cure several times and has been treated in an inebriate asylum. His is a case of pronounced alcoholic insanity. He is a public patient.

Gives Away Historical Documents.

NEW YORK, May 19.—The Duke of Veragua has made a gift to the Lenox library of forty-six original documents of the Columbus family which were exhibited at the Chicago fair. The documents are royal letters patent, orders, letters and warrants, from 1488 to 1537, addressed to Christopher Columbus and his son by the Sovereigns of Portugal and Spain.

To Defend Their Brother.

NEW LONDON, Conn., May 19.—Fred N. Brady and his sister have arrived from Rockland, Mass., to employ counsel to defend their brother, Alex Brady, accused of murdering Purdue, the soldier. The pond near where the murder occurred was drawn off, but no revolver was found. Alex Brady says Miss Maloney will yet tell who killed Purdue.

Fourth Roman Bishop of Albany.

ALBANY, May 19.—The Rev. T. M. A. Burke, who, according to a cable despatch from Rome, has been named by the pope as the successor of the late Rt. Rev. Francis McNierney, bishop of Albany, is the pastor of St. Joseph's church, in this city. He will have under his care 123 churches, 51 chapels, 80 stations and one theological seminary. He will be the fourth Roman Catholic bishop of Albany.

Ready to Burn Hard Coal.

NEW YORK, May 19.—Chauncey M. Depew said to-day that the New York Central railroad had eighty-five locomotives equipped to burn anthracite coal and these were enough to run all the passenger trains and some of the freight trains. The West Shore road, he said, was equipped to do all its business with anthracite and would not be at all effected by the strike of the bituminous coal miners.

THE DAILY PRESS.

A. L. FORCE, - - Publisher and Proprietor.
WALTER IRVING CLARKE, - Managing Editor.

CIRCULATION EXCEEDS THAT OF ALL OTHER PLAINFIELD DAILIES COMBINED.

The opinion of Justice Abbett in the case of Attorney-General against Adrain and Rogers is stated in The Press today.

The time selected for filing the opinion—after the Legislature has practically finished its work—acquits Justice Abbett of any purpose to attaint the Senate which he refuses to recognize.

As to the opinion itself, The Press can join the Trenton True American in saying that it is a masterly presentation of the political history, parliamentary and constitutional principles, and legal maxims involved. It does not call into play any fine-spun theories nor any obliteration of facts; its foundations are laid in the history of our country, and its deductions are cemented by the decisions of our highest tribunals.

One can readily see from this opinion why Justice Abbett refused to join in that supported by the majority of the court; and none will fail to be grateful that the law of the case has been soundly stated.

EARLY INTELLIGENCE.

—Hallock leads the hatting trade.

Plainfield Prisoners Plead Guilty.

All of the prisoners indicted by the Grand Jury were arraigned in the Union County Court this morning. Nearly all pleaded not guilty. The trying of the cases will be begun a week from Monday.

The three Plainfielders, Frank Hollenbeck, Philip Sheridan and David McLerman pleaded guilty. They will be sentenced next Saturday. Hollenbeck went his own bail for $500. He is the junk-dealer of 847 North avenue who, over a year ago, received lead pipe which the two boys had stolen from William Mills's house on Richmond street. It is claimed that Hollenbeck told the boys to steal the pipe.

Loneliness.

Have you ever thought of loneliness as "a part of God's scheme, so that the soul of man might turn to Him and Him alone?" Read what Bernardine says on that point, in "Ships That Pass in the Night".

Less Serious.

William C. Burt, of West Seventh street, went again to Brattleboro, Vt., last evening, and telegraphed this morning that his daughter, Miss Clara M. Burt, who was injured in a runaway, is doing as well as can be expected.

A Story of Many Interests.

Camera devotees will be amused by the Disagreeable Man's attempts at photographing Lisa and Hans, in Chapter X of "Ships That Pass in the Night", and other camera operations.

New Bridge at Netherwood.

The Committee on the Netherwood Bridge having reported to the Union County Freeholders in favor of a new $1,100 truss bridge, with 20 feet roadway, the bridge was ordered built.

THE PLAINFIELD SCHOOL BILL.

Governor Werts Still Considering It.

(Special by Wire to The Press.)

JERSEY CITY, May 19.—Governor Werts was asked at his home here this afternoon, by a Daily Press representative, if any disposition had yet been made of Senate Bill 51.

He replied that he still had the bill in his possession and would do nothing with it till Monday.

LEG CRUSHED BY CARS.

Oscar Waldron, a Dunellen Lad, Crippled for Life.

Oscar Waldron, 11 years old, of Dunellen, had his right leg cut off below the knee on the Central Railroad shortly before noon today.

The accident occurred near the Greenbrook tanks. The boy, who was with Frank Walters, Charles Moore and James Hill, attempted to board a westbound empty coal train drawn by Engine 407 to gather coal. He fell and the wheels passed over his leg.

The boy's uncle, who was at work in a field, was called. Word was sent to Dunellen and train 68 stopped and brought the sufferer to Plainfield. Detective Corse, who had been notified, was in waiting with a light wagon and took the boy to Muhlenberg Hospital. Young Waldron was very brave, his only fear being that he would bleed to death before the Hospital was reached. Amputation was made this afternoon four inches below the knee. The patient was in good condition after the operation and his recovery is assured.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

T. H. Keller has gone to the Knoxville shoot.

Send Thomas a Blank Sheet.

Dear Mr. Editor—You please not put any more things in the paper until I give you further orders, myself. And Oblige

THOS. HONAN.

FOR THE relief and cure of a cold in the head there is more potency in Ely's Cream Balm than in anything else it is possible to prescribe. This preparation has for years past been making a brilliant success as a remedy for cold in the head, catarrh and hay fever. Used in the initial stages of these complaints Cream Balm prevents any serious development of the symptoms, while almost numberless cases are on record of radical cures of chronic catarrh and hay fever after all other treatments have proved of no avail.

But, in choosing these, do not be misled into paying fancy prices for "patent" specialties. Common lime is better than any of them for damp cellars and stables. For vaults, drains, cess-pools, the best and cheapest disinfectant is COPPERAS, supplied by us by the pound or barrel at low rates. But for use in the house, in the plumbing, in kitchen sinks, in closets, for purifying the air of sick rooms, deodorizing offensive discharges—in short, for all purposes of a household disinfectant, nothing can excel the powerful solution of chlorides made and sold by us for 15 years under the name of REYNOLDS'S ODORLESS DISINFECTANT. #### New Law on Borough Elections.

A new law affecting North Plainfield provides that at the annual elections for borough officers, that are held on the same day that town meetings or election of township officers are held in the various townships of this State, the legal voters of said boroughs shall be entitled to vote for a chosen freeholder for any township out of which such borough was formed when such freeholder is to be elected in such township, but for no other township officers; and further that there shall be elected in said boroughs an overseer of the poor, who shall hold his office for the term of three years, and until his successor shall be qualified, and shall enter into bond with the said borough for the faithful performance of his duties according to law in such sum and sureties as the mayor and council of said borough shall approved.

He'll Shoot, May 30.

With Decoration Day will probably come the clearing up of a mystery which, although not of the greatest importance, has lately been the subject of much discussion among a certain class of boroughites.

Willard Ross has had the gun which he obtained from John Duck, in trade for Brahma chickens, many weeks; but has never once discharged it. Kind friends have volunteered to assist him in the first attempt, and the day has been set for May 30. Committees on grounds, encouragement, explanation, charging, certificate and celebration are to be selected.

Now We'll All Drive Over.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—It may be welcome news to many of your readers to know that we have thrown open our sixty greenhouses to the public for a complimentary exhibition of orchids and other plants at our nurseries in Short Hills. The orchids are now on view in the orchid flowering house, and include many rare and remarkable varieties of great beauty. All of your readers are cordially invited to the feast. The exhibition lasts two weeks.

$100 Reward, $100.

MIDDLEBUSH, Somerset Co., N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For the past forty years I have been afflicted with bleeding piles. I suffered constant pain in the lower part of my body, but when I had an operation of the bowels the pain was perfectly terrible, and was most always attended with the loss of a large quantity of blood. My condition was complicated with prolapse of the rectum, which at first only made its appearance when I had a movement of the bowels, but at length the parts became so weakened that the protrusion took place while walking or stooping, or after the slightest exertion, and sometimes even while I was at rest. Whenever this happened it gave rise to the most agonizing pain, and felt as though something was pulling the life right out of me. In fact only those similarly situated can imagine the suffering and distress which I had to endure from day to day, and which made my life a terrible burden. Hearing of Dr. Lighthill's wonderful success in the cure of difficult chronic diseases, I placed myself under his care, and now I am proud and happy to say that, marvelous as it may seem, he effected a complete and radical cure in my case in every respect, and he performed this cure without any painful operation or preventing me from work. Since this terrible disease has been removed by Dr. Lighthill's skill I feel new life, and for the first time in forty years I feel once more what it is to be without daily pain, discomfort and distress. I am not a wealthy man, but no amount of money would tempt me to be put back in my former condition.

I make this public statement, not only from a deep and everlasting sense of gratitude to Dr. Lighthill, but also as a simple Christian duty to let the afflicted know where they can find a physician whose skill cannot be surpassed, and in whom implicit confidence can be placed. H. VROOM.

To the Residents of Plainfield, N. J.

Mr. H. Vroom, whose statement appears above, is a brother-in-law of mine. I personally know of his case and his suffering and also know the happy fact that to the surprise of himself and his friends, Dr. Lighthill effected a radical and permanent cure. His statement is true in every respect and does not say half enough in praise of Dr. Lighthill. Anyone who wishes this statement verified is at liberty to come and see me personally.

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS CHAPTERS.

Bernardine Holme is the niece of a London shopkeeper. She is intellectual, writes for the press, and takes part in political discussions. Finally she loses her health and goes to a hotel for consumptives in Switzerland. There she meets the Disagreeable Man, Robert Allitsen. He is a misanthrope, with a pessimism more gloomy than that of Schopenhauer, and he proceeds to fulfil his self-imposed mission by trying to convince Bernardine that life is not worth living. But his morbid cynicisms serve to make the young woman more cheerful and contented with her lot and with the world in general. Chapter III—Bernardine meets a worldly and selfish rich woman named Mrs. Reffold, whose husband is a hopeless invalid, and teaches her a lesson. IV—The love affair of the postman and his sweetheart. VI—A beautiful allegory teaching that happiness and contentment are in everyday life and in daily effort and not afar off. VII—Bernardine promises to visit the invalid husband of the beautiful Mrs. Reffold.

The Reffolds were rich and lived in a suit of apartments in the more luxurious part of the Kurhaus. Bernardine knocked at the door, and the nurse came to open it.

Mrs. Reffold asks me to visit Mr. Reffold," Bernardine said, and the nurse showed her into the pleasant sitting room.

Mr. Reffold was lying on the sofa. He looked up as Bernardine came in, and a smile of pleasure spread over his wan face.

"I don't know whether I intrude," said Bernardine, "but Mrs. Reffold said I might come to see you."

Mrs. Reffold signed to the nurse to withdraw.

She had never before spoken to him. She had often seen him lying by himself in the sunshine.

"Are you paid for coming to me?" he asked eagerly.

The words seemed rude enough, but there was no rudeness in the manner.

"No, I am not paid," she said gently, and then she took a chair and sat near him.

"Ah, that's well!" he said, with a sigh of relief. "I'm so tired of paid service. To know that things are done for me because a certain amount of francs are given so that those things may be done—well, one gets weary of it; that's all!"

There was bitterness in every word he spoke. "I lie here," he said, "and the loneliness of it—the loneliness of it!"

"Shall I read to you?" she asked kindly. She did not know what to say to him.

"I want to talk first," he replied. "I want to talk first to some one who is not paid for talking to me. I have often watched you and wondered who you were. Why do you look so sad? No one is waiting for you to die."

"Don't talk like that!" she said, and she bent over him and arranged the cushions for him more comfortably. He looked just like a great lank hired child.

"Are you one of my wife's friends?" he asked.

"I don't suppose I am," she answered gently, "but I like her, all the same. Indeed I like her very much. And I think her beautiful."

"Ah, she is beautiful!" he said eagerly. "Doesn't she look splendid in her furs? By Jove, you are right! She is a beautiful woman. I am proud of her."

Then the smile faded from his face.

"Beautiful," he said half to himself, "but hard."

"Come, now," said Bernardine, "you are surrounded with books and newspapers. What shall I read to you?"

"No one reads what I want," he answered peevishly. "My tastes are not their tastes. I don't suppose you would care to read what I want to hear."

"Well," she said cheerily, "try me. Make your choice."

"Very well. The Sporting and Dramatic," he said. "Read every word of that. And about that theatrical divorce case. And every word of that too. Don't you skip and cheat me."

She laughed and settled herself down to amuse him. And he listened contentedly.

"That is something like literature," he said once or twice. "I can understand papers of that sort going like wildfire."

When he was tired of being read to, she talked to him in a manner that would have astonished the Disagreeable Man—not of books nor learning, but of people she had met and of places she had seen, and there was a fun in everything she said. She knew London well, and she could tell him about the Jewish and the Chinese quarters and about her adventures in company with a man who took her here, there and everywhere.

She made him some tea, and she cheered the poor fellow as he had not been cheered for months.

"You're just a little brick!" he said when she was leaving. Then once more he added eagerly:

"And you're not to be paid, are you?"

"Not a single sou," she laughed. "What a strange idea of yours!"

"You are not offended?" he said anxiously. "But you can't think what a difference it makes to me. You are not offended?"

"Not in the least!" she answered. "I know quite well how you mean it. You want a little kindness with nothing at the back of it. Now goodby!"

He called her when she was outside the door.

"I say, will you come again soon?"

"Yes, I will come tomorrow."

"Do you know you've been a little brick. I hope I haven't tired you. You are only a bit of a thing yourself; but, by Jove, you know how to put a fellow in a good temper!"

When Mrs. Reffold went down to table d'hote that night, she met Bernardine on the stairs and stopped to speak with her.

"We've had a splendid afternoon," she said, "and we've arranged to go again tomorrow at the same time. Such a pity you don't come! Oh, by the way, thank you for going to see my husband. I hope he did not tire you. He is a little querulous, I think. He so enjoyed your visit. Poor fellow! It is sad to see him so ill, isn't it?"

CHAPTER IX.

BERNARDINE PREACHES.

After this scarcely a day passed but Bernardine went to see Mr. Reffold. The most inexperienced eye could have known that he was becoming rapidly worse. Marie, the chambermaid, knew it and spoke of it frequently to Bernardine.

"The poor lonely fellow!" she said time after time.

Every one except Mrs. Reffold seemed to recognize that Mr. Reffold's days were numbered. Either she did not or would not understand. She made no alteration in the disposal of her time. Sledging parties and skating picnics were the order of the day. She was thoroughly pleased with herself and received the attentions of her admirers as a matter of course. The Petershof climate had got into her head, and it is a well known fact that this glorious air has the effect on some people of banishing from their minds all inconvenient notions of duty and devotion and all memory of the special object of their sojourn in Petershof. The coolness and calmness with which such people ignore their responsibilities or allow strangers to assume them would be an occasion for humor if it were not an opportunity for indignation, though indeed it would take a very exceptionally sober minded spectator not to get some fun out of the blissful self satisfaction and unconsciousness which characterize the most negligent of "caretakers."

Mrs. Reffold was not the only sinner in this respect. It would have been interesting to get together a ten party of invalids alone and put the ball rolling about the respective behaviors of their respective friends. Not a pleasing chronicle. No very choice pages to add to the book of real life. Still valuable items in their way, representative of the actual as opposed to the ideal. In most instances there would have been ample testimony to that cruel monster known as neglect.

Bernardine spoke once to the Disagreeable Man on this subject. She spoke with indignation, and he answered with indifference, shrugging his shoulders.

"These things occur," he said. "It is not that they are worse here than everywhere else. It is simply that they are together in an accumulated mass and as such strike us with tremendous force. I myself am accustomed to these exhibitions of selfishness and neglect. I should be astonished if they did not take place. Don't mix yourself up with anything. If people are neglected, they are neglected, and there is the end of it. To imagine that you or I are going to do any good by filling up the breach is simply an insanity leading to unnecessarily disagreeable consequences. I know you go to see Mr. Reffold. Take my advice and keep away."

"You speak like a Calvinist," she answered, rather ruffled, "with the quintessence of self protectiveness, and I don't believe you mean a word you say."

"My dear young woman," he said, "we are not living in a poetry book bound with gilt edges. We are living in a paper backed volume of prose. Be sensible. Don't ruffle yourself on account of other people. Don't even trouble to criticise them. It is only a nuisance to yourself. All this simply points back to my first suggestion. Fill up your time with some hobby, cheese mites or the influenza bacillus, and then you will be quite content to let people be neglected, lonely and to die. You will look upon it as an ordinary and natural process."

She waved her hand as though to stop him.

"There are days," she said, "when I can't bear to talk with you, and this is one of them."

"I am sorry," he answered, quite gently for him, and he moved away from her and started for his usual lonely walk.

Bernardine turned home, intending to go to see Mr. Reffold. He had become quite attached to her and looked forward eagerly to her visits. He said her voice was gentle and her manner quiet; there was no bustling vitality about her to irritate his worn nerves. He was probably an empty headed, stupid fellow, but it was none the less sad to see him passing away.

He called her Little Brick. He said that no other epithet suited her so exactly. He was quite satisfied now that she was not paid for coming to see him. As for the reading, no one could read The Sporting and Dramatic News and The Era so well as Little Brick. Sometimes he spoke with her about his wife, but only in general terms of bitterness and not always complainingly. She listened and said nothing.

"I'm a chap that wants very little," he said once. "Those who want little get nothing."

That was all he said, but Bernardine knew to whom he referred.

Today as Bernardine was on her way back to the Kurhaus she was thinking constantly of Mrs. Reffold and wondering whether she ought to be made to realize that her husband was becoming rapidly worse. While engrossed with this thought a long train of sledges and toboggans passed her. The sound of the bells and the noisy merriment made her look up, and she saw beautiful Mrs. Reffold among the pleasure seekers.

"If only I dared tell her now," said Bernardine to herself, "loudly and before them all."

Then a more sensible mood came over her.

"After all, it is not my affair," she said.

And the sledges passed away out of hearing.

When Bernardine sat with Mr. Reffold that afternoon, she did not mention that she had seen his wife. He coughed a great deal and seemed to be worse than usual and complained of fever. But he liked to have her and would not hear of her going.

"Stay," he said. "It is not much of a pleasure to you, but it is a great pleasure to me."

There was an anxious look on his face, such a look as people wear when they wish to ask some question of great moment, but dare not begin.

At last he seemed to summon up courage.

"Little Brick," he said, in a weak, low voice, "I have something on my mind. You won't laugh, I know. You're not the sort. I know you're clever and thoughtful and all that. You could tell me more than all the parsons put together. I know you're clever; my wife says so. She says only a very clever woman would wear such boots and hats."

Bernardine smiled.

"Well," she said kindly, "tell me."

"You must have thought a good deal, I suppose," he continued, "about life and death and that sort of thing. I've never thought at all. Does it matter, Little Brick? It's too late now; I can't begin to think. But speak to me. Tell me what you think. Do you believe we get another chance and are glad to behave less like curs and brutes? Or is it all ended in that lonely little churchyard there? I've never troubled about these things before, but now I know I am so near that gloomy little churchyard—well, it makes me wonder. As for the Bible, I never cared to read it. I was never much of a reader, though I've got through two or three firework novels and sporting stories. Does it matter, Little Brick?"

"How do I know?" she said gently. "How does any one know? People say they know, but it is all a great mystery—nothing but a mystery. Everything that we say can be but a guess. People have gone mad over their guessing, or they have broken their hearts. But still the mystery remains, and we cannot solve it."

"If you don't know anything, Little Brick," he said, "at least tell me what you think. And don't be too learned. Remember, I'm only a brainless fellow."

He seemed to be waiting eagerly for her answer.

"If I were you," she said, "I should not worry. Just make up your mind to do better when you get another chance. One can't do more than that. That is what I shall think of, that God will give each of us another chance, and that each one of us will take it and do better—I and you and every one. So there is no need to fret over failure when one hopes one may be allowed to redeem that failure later on. Besides which life is very hard. Why, we ourselves recognize that. If there be a God, some intelligence greater than human intelligence, he will understand better than ourselves that life is very hard and difficult, and he will be astonished not because we are not better, but because we are not worse. At least that would be my notion of a God. I should not worry if I were you. Just make up your mind to do better if you get the chance and be content with that."

"If that is what you think, Little Brick," he answered, "it is quite good enough for me. And it does not matter about prayers, and the Bible, and all that sort of thing."

"I don't think it matters," she said. "I never have thought such things mattered. What does matter is to judge gently and not to come down like a sledge hammer on other people's failings. Who are we, any of us, that we should be hard on others?"

"'And not come down like a sledge hammer on other people's failings,'" he repeated slowly. "I wonder if I have ever judged gently?"

"I believe you have," she answered.

He shook his head.

"No," he said, "I have been a paltry fellow. I have been lying here and elsewhere, too, eating my heart away with bitterness until you came. Since then I have sometimes forgotten to feel bitter. A little kindness does away with a great deal of bitterness."

He turned wearily on his side.

"I think I could sleep, Little Brick," he said almost in a whisper. "I want to dream about your sermon. And I'm not to worry, am I?"

"No," she answered as she stepped noiselessly across the room, "you are not to worry."

CHAPTER X.

THE DISAGREEABLE MAN IS SEEN IN A NEW LIGHT.

One specially fine morning a knock came at Bernardine's door. She opened it and found Robert Allitsen standing there trying to recover his breath.

"I am going to Loschwitz, a village about 12 miles off," he said. "And I have ordered a sledge. Do you care to come too?"

"If I may pay my share," she said.

"Of course," he answered. "I did not suppose you would like to be paid for any better than I should like to pay for you."

Bernardine laughed.

"When do we start?" she asked.

"Now," he answered. "Bring a rug, and also that shawl of yours which is always falling down and come at once without any fuss. We shall be out for the whole day. What about Mrs. Grundy? We could manage to take her if you wished, but she would not be comfortable sitting among the photographic apparatus, and I certainly should not give up my seat to her."

"Then leave her at home," said Bernardine cheerily.

And so they settled it.

In less than a quarter of an hour they had started, and Bernardine leaned luxuriously back to enjoy to the full her first sledge ride.

It was all new to her—the swift passing through the crisp air without any sensation of motion; the sleepy tinkling of the bells on the horses' heads; the noiseless cutting through of the snow path.

All these weeks she had known nothing of the country, and now she found herself in the snowy fairy land of which the Disagreeable Man had often spoken to her—a ground of vast plains of untouched snow, whiter than any dream of whiteness, jewelled by the sunshine with priceless diamonds, numberless as the sands of the sea; the great pines bearing their burden of snow patiently; others, less patient, having shaken themselves free from what the heavens had sent them to bear, and now the streams, flowing on reluctantly over ice coated rocks and the ice cathedrals formed by the icicles between the rocks.

On the heights the quaint chalets, some merely huts for storing wood; on others farms or the homes of peasants; some dark brown, almost black, betraying their age; others of a paler hue, showing that the sun had not yet mellowed them into a deep rich color. And on all alike the fringe of icicles. A wonderful white world.

It was a long time before Bernardine even wished to speak. This beautiful whiteness may become monotonous after a time, but there is something very awe inspiring about it, something which catches the soul and holds it.

The Disagreeable Man sat quietly by her side. Once or twice he bent forward to protect the camera when the sledge gave a lurch.

After some time they met a procession of sledges laden with timber and August, the driver, and Robert Allitsen exchanged some fun and merriment with the drivers in their quaint blue smocks. The noise of the conversation and the excitement of getting past the sledges brought Bernardine back to speech again.

"I have never before enjoyed anything so much," she said.

"So you have found your tongue," he said. "Do you mind talking a little now? I feel rather lonely."

This was said in such a pathetic, aggrieved tone that Bernardine laughed and looked at her companion. His face wore an unusually bright expression. He was evidently out to enjoy himself.

"You talk," she said, "and tell me all about the country."

And he told her what he knew and, among other things, about the avalanches.

He was able to point out where some had fallen the previous year. He stopped in the middle of his conversation to tell her to put up her umbrella.

"I can't trouble to hold it for you," he said, "but I don't mind opening it. The sun is blazing today, and you will get your eyes bad if you are not careful. That would be a pity, for you seem to me rather better lately."

"What a confession for you to make of any one!" said she.

"Oh, I don't mean to say that you will ever get well," he added grimly. "You seem to have pulled yourself in too many directions for that. You have tried to be too alive, and now you are obliged to join the genus cabbage."

"I am certainly less ill than I was when I first came," she said. "And I feel in a better frame of mind altogether. I am learning a good deal in sad Petershof."

"That is more than I have done," he answered.

"Well, perhaps you teach instead," she said. "You have taught me several things. Now, go on telling me about the country people. You like them?"

"I love them," he said simply. "I know them well, and they know me. You see, I have been in this district so long now and have walked about so much that the very woodcutters know me, and the drivers give me lifts on their piles of timber."

"You are not surly with the poor people, then?" said Bernardine. "Though I must say I cannot imagine you being genial. Were you ever genial, I wonder?"

"I don't think that has ever been laid to my charge," he answered.

The time passed away pleasantly. The Disagreeable Man was scarcely himself today. Or was it that he was more like himself? He seemed in a boyish mood; he made fun out of nothing and laughed with such young, fresh laughter that even August, the grave blue spectacled driver, was moved to mirth. As for Bernardine, she had to look at Robert Allitsen several times to be sure that he was the same Robert Allitsen she had known two hours ago in Petershof. But she made no remark and showed no surprise, but met his merriness half way. No one could be a cheerier companion than herself when she chose.

At last they arrived at Loschwitz. The sledge wound its way through the sloshy streets of the queer little village and finally drew up in front of the Gasthaus. It was a black sunburnt chalet, with green shutters and steps leading up to a green balcony. A fringe of sausages hung from the roof; red bedding was scorching in the sunshine; three cats were sunning themselves on the steps; a young woman sat in the green balcony knitting. There were some curious inscriptions on the walls of the chalet and the date was distinctly marked, "1670."

An old woman over the way sat in her doorway spinning. She looked up as the sledge stopped before the Gasthaus, but the young woman in the green balcony went on knitting and saw nothing.

A buxom elderly hausfrau came out to greet the guests. She wore a naturally kind expression on her old face, but when she saw who the gentleman was the kindness positive increased to kindness superlative.

She first retired and called out:

"Liza, Fritz, Liza, Trudchen, come quickly!"

Then she came back and cried:

"Herr Allitsen, what a surprise!"

She shook his hand times without number, greeted Bernardine with motherly tenderness and interspersed all her remarks with frantic cries of "Liza, Fritz, Trudchen, make haste!"

She became very hot and excited and gesticulated violently.

All this time the young woman sat knitting, but not looking up. She had been beautiful, but her face was worn now, and her eyes had that vacant stare which betokened the vacant mind.

The mother whispered to Robert Allitsen:

"She notices no one now. She sits there always waiting."

Tears came into the kind old eyes.

Robert Allitsen went and bent down to the young woman and held out his hand.

"Catharina," he said gently.

She looked up then and saw him and recognized him.

Then the sad face smiled a welcome.

He sat near her and took her knitting in his hand, pretending to examine what she had done, chatting to her quietly all the time. He asked her what she had been doing with herself since he had last seen her, and she said:

"Waiting. I am always waiting."

He knew that she referred to her lover, who had been lost in an avalanche the eve before their wedding morning. That was four years ago, but Catharina was still waiting. Allitsen remembered her as a bright young girl, singing in the Gasthaus, waiting cheerfully on the guests, a bright, gracious presence. No one could cook trout as she could. Many a dish of trout had she served up for him. And now she sat in the sunshine knitting and waiting, scarcely ever looking up. That was her life.

"Catharina," he said as he gave her back her knitting, "do you remember how you used to cook me the trout?"

Another smile passed over her face. Yes, she remembered.

"Will you cook me some today?"

She shook her head and returned to her knitting.

Bernardine watched the Disagreeable Man with amazement. She could not have believed that his manner could be so tender and kindly. The old mother standing near her whispered:

"He was always so good to us all. We love him, every one of us. When poor Catharina was betrothed five years ago, it was to Herr Allitsen we first told the good news. He has a wonderful way about him—just look at him with Catharina now. She has not noticed any one for months, but she knows him, you see."

At that moment the other members of the household came—Liza, Fritz and Trudchen—Liza, a maiden of 19, of the homely Swiss type; Fritz, a handsome lad of 14, and Trudchen, just free from school, with her school satchel swung on her back. There was no shyness in their greeting. The Disagreeable Man was evidently an old and much loved friend and inspired confidence, not awe. Trudchen fumbled in his coat pocket and found what she expected to find there—some sweets—which she immediately began to eat, perfectly contented and self satisfied. She smiled and nodded at Robert Allitsen as though to reassure him that the sweets were not bad and that she was enjoying them.

"Liza will see to lunch," said the old mother. "You shall have some mutton cutlets and some forellen. But before she goes she has something to tell you."

"I am betrothed to Hans," Liza said, blushing.

"I always knew you were fond of Hans," said the Disagreeable Man. "He is a good fellow, Liza, and I'm glad you love him. But haven't you just teased him!"

"That was good for him," Liza said brightly.

"Is he here today?" Robert Allitsen asked.

Liza nodded.

"Then I shall take your photographs," he said.

While they had been speaking Catharina rose from her seat and passed into the house. Her mother followed her and watched her go into the kitchen.

"I should like to cook the forellen," she said very quietly.

It was months since she had done anything in the house. The old mother's heart beat with pleasure.

"Catharina, my best loved child!" she whispered, and she gathered the poor, suffering soul near to her.

In about half an hour the Disagreeable Man and Bernardine sat down to their meal. Robert Allitsen had ordered a bottle of sassella, and he was just pouring it out when Catharina brought in the forellen.

"Why, Catharina," he said, "you don't mean you've cooked them? Then they will be good!"

She smiled and seemed pleased and then went out of the room.

Then he told Bernardine her history and spoke with such kindness and sympathy that Bernardine was again amazed at him, but she made no remark.

"Catharina was always sorry that I was ill," he said. "When I staid here, as I have done for weeks together, she used to take every care of me. And it was a kindly sympathy which I could not resent. In those days I was suffering more than I have done for a long time now, and she was very pitiful. She could not bear to hear me cough. I used to tell her that she must learn not to feel, but you see she did not learn her lesson, for when this trouble came on her she felt too much. And you see what she is."

They had a cheery meal together, and then Bernardine talked with the old mother while the Disagreeable Man busied himself with his camera. Liza was for putting on her best dress and doing her hair in some wonderful way. But he would not hear of such a thing, but seeing that she looked disappointed he gave in and said she should be photographed just as she wished, and off she ran to change her attire. She went up to her room a picturesque, homely working girl, and she came down a tidy, awkward looking young woman, with all her finery on and all her charm off.

The Disagreeable Man grunted, but said nothing.

Then Hans arrived, and then came the posing, which caused much amusement. They both stood perfectly straight, just as a soldier stands before presenting arms. Both faces were perfectly expressionless. The Disagreeable Man was in despair.

"Look happy!" he entreated.

They tried to smile, but the anxiety to do so produced an expression of melancholy which was too much for the gravity of the photographer. He laughed heartily.

"Look as though you weren't going to be photographed," he suggested. "Liza, for goodness' sake look as though you were baking the bread. And, Hans, try to believe that you are doing some of your beautiful carving."

The patience of the photographer was something wonderful. At last he succeeded in making them appear at their ease. And then he told Liza that she must go and change her dress and be photographed now in the way he wished. She came down again, looking 50 times prettier in her working clothes. Now he was in his element. He arranged Liza and Hans on the sledge of timber, which had then driven up, and made a picturesque group of them all, Hans and Liza sitting side by side on the timber, the horses standing there so patiently after their long journey through the forests, the driver leaning against his sledge smoking his long china pipe.

"That will be something like a picture," he said to Bernardine when the performance was over. "Now I am going for about a mile's walk. Will you come with me and see what I am going to photograph, or will you rest here till I come back?"

She chose the latter, and during his absence was shown the treasures and possessions of a Swiss peasant's home.

Domino, the Great Money Winner.

Domino, the great unbeaten 3-year-old thoroughbred, may well be called the king of the turf. He is owned by James R. and Foxhall Keene and is a son of Himyar and Nannie Gray. Last year as a 2-year-old he won the Hyde Park stakes, the Futurity and other big events and enriched his owner by taking into camp in stakes and purses alone the sum of $170,310. In a match race with Richard Croker's Dobbins the two great horses ran a dead heat. Domino is highly favored for the American Derby this year.

DOMINO.

Bicyclist John S. Johnson.

One of the swiftest amateur wheelmen on the track today is John S. Johnson of Minneapolis. Last year he established a new world's record against time of 1 minute 58 1-5 seconds, and he also holds numerous other records from 100 yards up to a mile. Johnson is also the champion amateur skater of the world.

Manager Billy Madden.

Willam Madden, the famous manager of pugilists, known the world over as Billy Madden, has brought out several world beaters. He managed John L. Sullivan early in his career and assisted BILLY MADDEN.

Jack Dempsey, "The Nonpareil," in getting middleweight championship honors. Madden also advertised that he had another world beater in Peter Maher, the Irish champion, but Joe Goddard and Bob Fitzsimmons soon knocked the prophecy and Maher into the realm of the has beens.

A Famous Fencer.

One of the best amateur fencers in America is Dr. Graeme M. Hammond of the New York Athletic club. In 1889 he won the dueling swords championship of the United States, and in 1891 he was champion with dueling swords and foils. In 1893 he captured the national honors with both dueling swords and sabers. Back in 1877 he was champion quarter mile runner.

President Luscomb of the L. A. W.

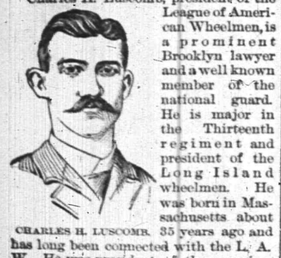
Charles H. Luscomb, president of the League of American Wheelmen, is a prominent Brooklyn lawyer and a well known member of the national guard. He is major in the Thirteenth regiment and president of the Long Island wheelmen. He was born in Massachusetts about 35 years ago and has long been connected with the L. A. W. He was president of the organization four years ago, but was voted out of office because he was in advance of his fellow officers in road improvement.



CHARLES H. LUSCOMB.

Captain Case of the Yale Nine.

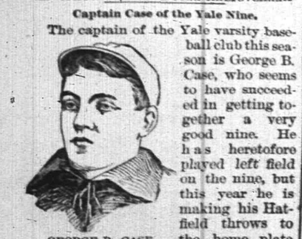
The captain of the Yale varsity baseball club this season is George B. Case, who seems to have succeeded in getting together a very good nine. He has heretofore played left field on the nine, but this year he is making his Hatfield throws to the home plate from center field. This year, as last, Carter, the long armed young giant, is Yale's mainstay in the box.



GEORGE B. CASE.

Directum, the Stallion King.

Directum, the whirlwind of the turf who became king of trotting stallions last year, is by Director out of Stemwinder. He was bred by John Green of California, trained by Monroe Salisbury and driven by John Kelly. He was 4 years old last year and trotted in 2:07 at New York, establishing a new record for stallions and a new 4-year-old stallion record. Later in the season he trotted in 2:05¼ at Nashville. This year Directum will be after the world's record, 2:04, held by Nancy Hanks.

Catcher Charles A. Farrell.

This year the New York club paid $7,500 for the release of Catcher Charles A. Farrell and Pitcher Jouett Meekin. The Washington club, with which Farrell and Meekin made a great record last year, got the money, and Farrell is receiving a salary of $400 a month from the New York club. Farrell is one of the greatest catchers now behind the bat. He was a member of the Chicago club in 1890 and deserted to the Players' league. He has also played with Indianapolis and Pittsburg.

CHARLES A. FARRELL.

Bicyclist Frank Waller.

Frank Waller, the ex-amateur wheelman who recently went to France to race for cash, was born in Munich 31 years ago. He made a new 24 hour record as an amateur in 1892 and became a professional in December, 1893. In the great six day bicycle race in New York that month Waller finished second to the veteran Albert Schock and made a great record. He speaks broken English and is called "The Flying Dutchman."

Pitcher Daniel W. Daub.

One of the crack pitchers of the Brooklyn club this year is Daniel W. Daub, who was born in Ohio about 25 years ago. He began his professional career in 1893 as a member of the Cincinnati club, but did not get a fair trial and was released. His good work with the Chattanooga club attracted widespread attention, and the Brooklyns signed him. On Aug. 10, 1893, Daub held the Washingtons down to two safe hits and one run.

Champion Handball Player Phil Casey.

Philip Casey, the champion handball player of the world, was born in Ireland about 50 years ago, is 6 feet tall and in playing condition weighs about 190 pounds. In 1868 Casey won the American championship from Bernard McQuade. Since then he has never met defeat. In 1887 Casey and John Lawlor played for the championship of the world and $1,000 a side, and Casey won with ease. He served two terms as alderman in Brooklyn and trained Sullivan for his fight with Corbett.

World's Champion James J. Corbett.

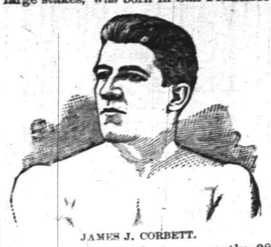
James J. Corbett, champion pugilist of the world, who is matched to fight Peter Jackson for the championship and large stakes, was born in San Francisco



JAMES J. CORBETT.

Sept. 1, 1866, and is consequently 28 years of age. Early in his career he whipped Joe Choynski, Jake Kilrain, Dominick McCaffrey and many other lesser lights. On Sept. 7, 1892, he won the championship by defeating John L. Sullivan in 21 rounds. On Jan. 24, 1894, Corbett added to his great reputation by whipping Charley Mitchell in three rounds. Corbett and Jackson fought a 61 round draw May 21, 1891.

Don Alonzo.

Don Alonzo, one of Mike Dwyer's best horses this year, won 13 out of 19

races last season, was second four times and unplaced twice. He took into camp $10,650. He is a 4-year-old.

Pitcher D. T. Young.

D. T. Young of the Cleveland baseball club was one of the most successful pitchers last season. He was born in

D. T. YOUNG.

Gilmore, O., 27 years ago and began life as a Nebraska farmer; hence his sobriquet "The Farmer." He began pitching with the Canton (O.) team in 1890 and made such a record that the Cleveland league team at once engaged him. He is a cool and powerful pitcher.

Clifford, the Kentucky Thoroughbred.

Clifford, the great Kentucky thoroughbred, is 4 years old and the property of Eugene Leigh. He started in 24 races last season, won 18 of them, was second once, third four times and unplaced but once. He captured $25,541 in stakes and purses for his owner. One of his best races was the defeat of Lamplighter and Yo Tambien.

Shortstop William Murphy.

William Murphy, or "Yale" Murphy, the clever shortstop of the New York baseball club, is the smallest player in the National league. He is only 5 feet 3 inches tall and weighs but 125 pounds. He is a famous batsman, however, and plays his position with rare skill and success. In 1893 he was a member of the Yale varsity baseball club and averaged two hits in every game against Harvard and Princeton. He was born in Somerville, Mass., 25 years ago.

Captain Davis of Harvard's Crew.

The captain of the Harvard varsity boat crew this year is Lincoln Davis. He is a Boston boy and was born there about 22 years ago. He is 6 feet 1¾ inches tall, weighs 178 pounds, pulls a powerful and skillful oar and has excellent control over his men. In 1892 he rowed in the sophomore boat and was a substitute on the varsity boat crew. Last year he was one of Harvard's beaten eight in the great annual race with Yale.

five years he is recognized as one of the strongest American born players in the country today. In a chess masters' tournament in New York not long ago Pillsbury met such well known experts as Albin, Delmar, Showalter, Hodges, Ettlinger, D. Baird, J. Baird, Halpern and Hanham, and won seven out of the nine games.

Pitcher Jouett Meekin.

Jouett Meekin, the new pitcher of the New York club, is a native of New Albany, Ind., and has been playing baseball for a number of years. He pitched his first prominent professional games with the Louisvilles, played for a time in a Western league club and last year pitched fairly good ball for the Washingtons. He and Farrell were recently purchased for $7,500 by the New York club.

Nancy Hanks, the Turf Queen.

Nancy Hanks, queen of the trotting turf, is now 8 years old. She was bred near Lexington, Ky., by a farmer named

NANCY HANKS.

H. Boswell and was by Happy Medium—Nancy Lee. She first broke the world's record in 1892, trotting in 2:07¼ and dethroning Sunol, 2:08¼. She has since reduced her record to 2:04 and will probably endeavor to get even nearer to the two minute mark this year. She is owned by J. Malcolm Forbes of Boston.

Captain Wiggin of the Harvard Nine.

Joseph Wiggin, Jr., captain and crack pitcher of the Harvard baseball team this year, is a player of considerable experience. He has been prominent in baseball circles at Cambridge for four years, and the present is his second season as pitcher of the varsity team. He is 22 years of age, and this is his first year at the law school. An injury to his hand last year has seriously handicapped him as a pitcher.

LITTLE BOY BLUE.

The little toy dog is covered with dust,
But sturdy and stanch he stands:
And the little toy soldier is red with rust,
And his musket moulds in his hands.
Time was when the little toy dog was new,
And the soldier was passing fair,
And that was the time when our Little Boy Blue
Kissed them and put them there.

And as he was dreaming, an angel song
Awakened our Little Boy Blue—
Oh, the years are many, the years are long,
But the little toy friends are true.

Ay, faithful to Little Boy Blue they stand,
Each in the same old place,
Awaiting the touch of a little hand,
The smile of a little face.
And they wonder, as waiting these long years through,
In the dust of that little chair,
What has become of our Little Boy Blue
Since he kissed them and put them there.

TROOP A TO RIDE.

Glorious Sport Promised, in Compliment to President Holly of the Riding Club.

The Plainfield Riding Club will give an entertainment next Thursday evening, May 24, at 8, as a compliment to their President, John I. Holly, who has worked through the past year so hard and to such good advantage, and who has brought the club to such a splendid condition, both socially and financially, as it is at present. The members felt that they would like to give Mr. Holly something in token of his services that would be appreciated both by him and the club, and they have hit on the novel idea of having him ask the commissioned and non-commissioned officers of Troop A to ride with them on that evening, and will entertain their guests at a supper following the ride. The ladies have been especially asked to ride and lend their grace and dignity to the evening's entertainment; and to further insure their attendance, a committee of ladies consisting of Mrs. Pentz, the Misses Holly, Vail and Van-Boskerck was appointed to ask them to attend. Admission to the rink will be by card only, and may be had of the committee, Mr. Van Boskerck and Mr. Pentz, as may also be the tickets for the dinner. The Press feels sure that Mr. Pentz, having charge of the horses, and being a member of Troop A, will have many fiery steeds in the ring not heretofore seen there, also that Mr. Van Boskerck will acquit himself in the arrangement for the supper in his usual highly satisfactory manner. As this will be one of the swellest, if not one of the most novel entertainments, that Plainfield people have had a chance to witness, those who are fortuate enough to get tickets may be envied, and The Press predicts a most enjoyable evening for both the club and their guests.

POPULAR PENNSY.

The Last Personally Conducted Tour to Washington, D. C., via Pennsylvania Railroad.

The last of the series of personally conducted tours to the National Capital will leave New York and Philadelphia, Thursday, May 24. $13 from New York, $11 from Philadelphia, and proportionate rates from intermediate points, covers transportation in both directions in a special train of Pennsylvania Railroad standard coaches, and hotel accommodation at the best of Washington's hotels. Experienced tourist agent and chaperon will accompany the tourists, giving all information relative to the various departments of the Government which are visited and in active operation.

This is a most delightful time for a visit to the beautiful city of Washington, and this tour offers an exceptional opportunity for reviewing one of the most charming cities of the upper South. The trip also instructs one into the many details of the Government's activity, and embodies an educational feature of no little value.

The special train will leave New York at 11 a. m. and Broad Street Station, Philadelphia, at 1:50 p. m., returning, leave Washington the Saturday following. Application for space on this tour should be made at an early date to the ticket agents of the Pennsylvania Railroad, or to the tourist agents of the company, 1196 Broadway, New York, or 233 South Fourth street, Philadelphia.

A Jersey Democrat's Good Move.

Representative Fielder (Dem., N. J.) has introduced a bill for the protection of the property of passengers carried in sleeping-cars, by requiring companies running sleeping-cars to furnish each car with a safe in which valuables may be deposited; failure to comply to be punishable by a fine of $50 per day for each car operated without a safe. The bill also provides that hereafter the passenger fare for sleeping and parlor-cars shall not exceed the rate of one-half cent per mile for lower berths, and for upper berths two-thirds as much.

A Bright Career Cut Short.

Patrons of the J. E. Linde Paper Co. will miss from his accustomed place Charles A. Galluba, one of the company's most popular salesmen, who died Wednesday at the home of his widowed mother in Newark. He was on duty Saturday, but suffered from a heavy cold which developed quickly into pneumonia. The funeral took place this afternoon, with interment in Fairmount Cemetery. Decedent had but recently passed his twenty-fifth birthday, and the untimely severing of his bright career brings deep sorrow to all who knew him.

Rainy-Night Sociable.

The Social Committee of the Epworth League managed a pleasant sociable in Grace M. E. Church last evening. The weather shortened the programme by keeping away several who were to take part, but did not affect the attendance or the enjoyment to any great extent.

The following was the programme:

Prominent among the guests were: Misses Ethel Titsworth, Ethel Crane, Kathie Bocap, Helen Davis, Anna Davis, Angela Brady, and Millie Spicer, Master Clarence Bocap, and others. Miss Mamie was the recipient of many handsome gifts.

An Atlas All Ought to Have.

Owing to the large size of F. A. Dunham's new city map, and the greater convenience of the atlas for handling and for general reference, many of the subscribers to the former have expressed a wish to have their subscriptions changed to atlases. This increased demand will make it necessary to have a larger edition of the map in atlas form published.

Burial of Chauncey Shaffer.

W. C. Burt of this city yesterday accompanied to Bound Brook for interment the body of his father-in-law, Chauncey Shaffer. Mrs. Burt was unable to attend, being detained at the bedside of her daughter, Miss Clara, who was seriously injured in a runaway accident in Brattleboro.

Getting Rich Quick.

THE BABCOCK BUILDING.

Edsall's Emporium a Veritable Wonder-Palace for Plainfield.

The Babcock Building, Plainfield's costliest commercial structure, has been an object of interest to all during its erection. Now that Edsall's new stores have been completed and are occupied, public-spirited Plainfielders are expressing their pleasure at the addition to the city's business interest given by such handsome building and such an elegantly domiciled establishment.

It is appropriate to the advanced ideas of the late George H. Babcock that the main store of the building should be utilized by an enterprise like Edsall's.

The fixtures and the finish of the store fit the rest of the building. Everyone who knows Edsall expected that his new store would be worthy of his business, but all admit their surprise at the magnificence of the place when they visit the store. Of course the first comparison is with New York stores, and it is agreed that Edsall now surpasses those of many wealthy New York merchants. People have not been slow in congratulating Mr. Edsall in the most enthusiastic terms, and all of the many patrons who have gone to the new store have made favorable comment on his enterprise.

But perfect lighting and ventilation, and the elegant fixtures, are not the only attractions. The large display of new goods which covers so many departments of trade, and the astonishing low prices prevailing, are most inviting to shoppers.

The new department of crockery, china and house-furnishing goods is one which is fully equal to New York establishments. Mr. Edsall imports direct from European cities a considerable quantity of the wares in this branch of his business, and is thereby enabled to sell at the lowest prices.

Back of the main stores have been arranged the millinery parlors. Convenient and well adapted for the purpose, these rooms are quiet and cosy, and nothing can disturb one who is undertaking the difficult task of choosing between bonnets. New York's best talent in this line has charge, and the skill of the milliners is aided by the supply of the most stylish goods.

A general enlargement has been made in every department in the store. The prices throughout are like those of New York, and frequently customers find that they are even lower. A good authority on stores is the commercial traveler, and many of the men in that business say they know of no other store in the State as fine as Edsall's and claim it compares well with New York stores.

Great satisfaction with his new move and a feeling that still greater success awaits him are expressed by Mr. Edsall, and the heavy trade he is obtaining bears him out. People tell him that, in assuming the tremendous responsibilities he has in branching out thus, he has done what few others would dare to attempt. Great success can certainly be assured Mr. Edsall if his previous accomplishments in Plainfield and elsewhere count for anything.

The first illuminnation of the large front show windows will be this evening.

WEST END NOTES.

C. W. Tallman has received his newly-painted grocery wagon.

A. Leland does not want to go to Rahway again on a hard tire safety. He says it pays to have a pneumatic.

A. Brooks of Grant avenue has returned to his work with the Pond Machine Tool Company, after a brief illness.

Insurance men have been testing the hydrants around the Pond Machine Tool Works, and all proved satisfactory.

The West Ends play the Cuban Giants this afternoon at 3:30. As this is the deciding game, it promises to be very exciting.

The Pond Machine Tool Company have shipped two standard Portland cement grinders to the Portland Cement Company of New York.

M. Burke started Monday, his eighteenth birthday, in the show business with Hall & Co., in New York State. His specialty is tight-rope walking.

Trolley car No. 5 is in the car shop and is receiving a new coat of varnish. No. 1 will go in to be varnished, and the rest will follow for a new coat of paint.

The West End Dramatic Company practises every evening for the entertainment to be given in Reform Hall Tuesday evening for the benefit of the base-ball team.

The fishing brigade went to New Market again yesterday, and got ten German carp, among them one weighing 17 pounds. The members fishing were Capt. Fahye, Lieutenant Nicholson, Commodore Penny, Jersey City Harry, and Samptown Thompson.

WEST ENDER.

How to Make One Dollar Do the Work of Two.

In these times you want your money to go as far as possible, make one dollar do what two would last year, and Mr. White, the Front street merchant, says that is just what you can do in his store. The list of prices that he names on staple goods that everyone wants will surely keep the trade from wandering very far away from the White Front.

Make Note of This.

The French have a proverb—"Young folks tell what they do, old ones what they have done, and fools what they intend to do". Make note of this, and don't content yourself with intending to have your weak eyes attended to, but go at once to Collier's, 103 Park avenue, and learn how to restore them to their natural degree of usefulness.

Commuters Excursion to Fourth Ward.

The 4:30 train from New York yesterday afternoon flew past the North Avenue station through failure of the air brakes to work. The engineer blew for hand brakes, and the train was stopped near Plainfield avenue and backed up.

NEITHER THE TRUE SENATE.

Justice Abbett's Opinion on the New Jersey Legislative Muddle.

TRENTON, May 18.—Justice Abbett of the Supreme Court today filed his long-awaited dissenting opinion in the dual Senate case. The opinion of the Court as delivered by Chief Justice Beasley nearly three months ago, that the Senate as organized by the Republicans in the early part of January last, was the legal body, and that the organization known as the Democratic Senate was unlawfully constituted, was concurred in by all the Justices of the Supreme Court, except Justice Abbett, who reserved the public expression of his views on the case till this afternoon. His opinion covers thirty-three legal cap type-written pages. He has reached the conclusion that neither of the Senates in question was the true Senate of New Jersey. He holds that the Senate is a continuous body, and that at the time covered by the inquiry, it consisted of the thirteen Senators, whose terms of office had not then expired.

The debates in the Constitutional Convention of 1887, and those in the Senate, and the procedure of that body, show that the Senate of the United States is continuous, and in the case of Robertson against Smith, in the Supreme Court of Indiana, Judge Niblack, in delivering the opinion of the Court, says:

"I feel quite assured that the Senate of this State is not, like the Senate of the United States, a continuous body. In the Senate of the United States a majority constitutes a quorum, and as there is always more than a quorum of qualified Senators holding seats in that body, its organic existence is necessarily continuous. But in the Senate of this State two-thirds of its members are necessary to make a quorum. As one-half of its members go out of office at the end of each legislative term of two years, that is to say, on the day after each general and biennial election, it becomes at the end of each such legislative term a disorganized body."

These reasons for stating that the United States Senate is necessarily continuous apply to both the United States Senate and to the Senate of New Jersey. A majority constitutes a quorum in both bodies, and in both there is always more than a quorum of qualified Senators holding seats in the body. If it is necessarily continuous in one case, it must for the same reason be necessarily continuous in the other.

The language of the New Jersey Constitution, Justice Abbett says, is substantially identical with that part of the Constitution of the United States whose provisions have been held to create a continuous Senate. He holds that the only difference is that the New Jersey Senators are chosen for three years instead of six, and represent counties instead of States. That one Constitution was modeled on the other seems to him beyond question. Justice Abbett contends that the usage in New Jersey has been in accordance with his interpretation of the Constitution. He says that from 1847 to 1893, inclusive, no Senator-elect has been permitted to take his seat in the Senate as a matter of right upon the presentation of his credentials. The cases of contest shown in the record are referred to by Justice Abbett, and he asserts that in each of them the Journal shows that the roll of Senators was called by the Secretary chosen at the preciding session of the Senate, and that only the names of the hold-over Senators were called as members of the then existing Senate. Coming down to a recent date, Justice Abbett says:

At the commencement of the legislative year of 1887 there were fourteen hold-over Senators, and they alone acted as the Senate; they repeatedly by motion and by a majority vote postponed the organization of the Senate from Jan. 11 to Feb. 1, and on this last date the hold-over Senators, still acting as the Senate, elected a President pro tem., and proceeded, as a Senate, to induct the Senators-elect into office in the same way as heretofore stated. This precedent and the record of votes taken clearly show that it was then considered unquestioned that the hold-overs constituted the Senate, and that Senators-elect had no right to participate in the action of the Senate until they were inducted into office by the Senators composed of hold-over Senators in the mode that had been recognized as proper for nearly half a century.

The Journal of 1849, and every Journal since, expressly shows that the Senate called to order consisted only of the hold-over Senators. No others are stated to have appeared in their seats or to have been called. This was so in years when there were contests and in years when there were no contests.

This history of the Senate of New Jersey, showing a claim of continuous existence on the part of hold-over Senators for nearly fifty years without protest seems to me to be a complete answer to the insistment that the contention that the Senate is an ever-living body is a novel one.

On the subject of what constitutes a quorum of the Senate, which was an interesting feature of the argument, Justice Abbett says:

At the usual hour for commencing the annual session there were but nine Senators in the chamber, and it was not within the power of these nine to choose a President of the Senate or do any other business, as a Senate. After Mr. Adrain had taken the Chair, the four hold-over Senators appeared, and thus supplied the number necessary to constitute a quorum.

If the four had, as a matter of fact, joined the nine in acting upon the resolution which is depended upon to secure Mr. Adrain's title, there would be good ground for the contention in this case that he was elected President by their votes. The four, however, insist that they did not join the nine, that they did not act with them, and that they were present only for the purpose of demanding the induction of certain Senators-elect upon the presentation of their credentials.

The evidence in this case clearly supports this claim, and the mere presence of the four in the Senate chamber, in the attitude of protestants, and distinctly refusing to act with the nine, except upon certain conditions which were denied, cannot be held to have supplied the quorum necessary to do business.

Mr. Adrain was therefore only a presiding officer of a body consisting of nine Senators, and was not elected President of the Senate by a quorum of that body. In view of these conclusions, I am of the opinion that judgment of ouster should be entered against both respondents.

Mrs. Putnam, Forristdale, Mass., says:

THE TROLLEY MOVEMENT.

Suburban Electric Railway Working Its Way Through Union County.

The Suburban Electric Street Railway Company has applied to the Union County Board of Freeholders for a franchise to lay tracks and operate cars from Elizabeth to Westfield.

It is the company's purpose to extend its route from the junction of North Broad street and Westfield avenue, Elizabeth, along Westfield avenue to Cherry street, Westfield, where the road will connect with the electric line proposed to Plainfield.

There is no doubt that considerable objection will be made to the company laying its rails along the route marked out, as Westfield avenue is one of the best and most used roads in the county.

At the next meeting of the Board a date will be fixed for a hearing, and all favoring or opposed to the project will be given an opportunity to present their objections.

Meeting a Famous Woman.

The invitation of Mrs. David P. Hall to meet Mrs. Howe and young ladies of the Civita Club, Brooklyn, Friday afternoon, was responded to by a large number of friends. Miss Catharine Maltby, one of the managers of the club, gave an interesting account of the formation and intent of the club. Miss Guirlin read a paper entitled "An Arraignment Against Society", full of telling hits on the evils of fashionable life. Miss Woodin presented a paper on "The Care of Incapable Children", stirring pity, citing the noble example set by other nations, notably the Germans, and urging young women of the present day to take up work for God and humanity. She was followed by Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, who gave a brief but interesting account of the interest and labors of her husband in this line of work, giving instances of the remarkable development of some of the children under their charge. Tea and social chat concluded a delightful afternoon.

He'll Work Hard on 'Em All.

Freeholder Tier of Plainfield has been placed in chairmanship of the Committee on Jail Inspection, and given membership in the Committee on Legal Questions, Committee to Settle with the Sheriff, and Committee on Construction of Springfield Avenue.

Judge Gently.

"What does matter is to judge gently and not to come down like a sledge hammer on other people's feelings."—From Bernardine's sermon in "Ships That Pass in the Night."

Mme. Fursch-Madi Not to Come.

The concert F. M. Hulett planned for May 22 is postponed indefinitely, owing to the illness of the chief artist, Mme. E. Fursch-Madi.

WHAT THE COUNTY COSTS.

Careful Figuring Brings the Year's Appropriation Down to $188,000.

The Committee on Appropriations reported to the Union County Freeholders Thursday afternoon that after a careful estimate, taking in consideration the payment of $25,000 principal of bonded indebtedness, they believed that by an economical and businesslike administration of the county affairs the current expenses could be met with a levy of $188,000, together with the assets of $20,000.

They recommended that the sum of $188,000 be raised by taxation, to be divided among the accounts as follows:

Court, $37,000; jail expenses, $6,500; lunacy, $31,000; expenses of Board and salaries, $9,500; coroner's expenses, $1,000; election, $1,500; stationery, $3,000; publication, $3,500; incidentals, schools, etc., $7,500; principal on bonds, $25,000; interest on bonds, $23,550; bank interest, $1,450; repairs of county roads, $15,000; permanent improvement of public buildings, $7,500; bridges and culverts, $23,000.

The report and recommendation were adopted.

Going It Young.

Westfield mothers have had to resort to the law to reclaim their boys, and ten wayward youngsters have been arrested for breaking into the Lambert distillery in Willow Grove and intoxicating themselves on wine and applejack. Some of the boys show signs of becoming confirmed drunkards, and will be sent to the State Reform School.

May Save His Hand.

The proposed amputation of Enoch Miller's hand did not take place yesterday afternoon. Thomas Keller, a close friend of the unfortunate marksman, visited him at his home near Westfield yesterday and was glad to find that his hand may be saved after all. A portion of the fingers may have to be sacrificed, but an effort is being made to avoid even partial amputation.

she was taken to see the cows in the stalls and had a lecture given her on the respective merits of Schneewitchen, a white cow, Kartoffelkuchen, a dark brown one, and Roselin, the beauty of them all. Then she looked at the spinning wheel and watched the old hausfrau turn the treadle. And so the time passed, Bernardine making good friends of them all. Catharina had returned to her knitting and began working, and as before not noticing any one. But Bernardine sat by her side, playing with the cat, and after a time Catharina looked up at Bernardine's little thin face, and after some hesitation stroked it gently with her hand.

"Fraulein is not strong," she said tenderly. "If fraulein lived here, I should take care of her."

That was a remnant of Catharina's past. She had always loved everything that was ailing and weakly.

Her hand rested on Bernardine's hand. Bernardine pressed it in kindly sympathy, thinking the while of the girl's past happiness and present bereavement.

"Liza is betrothed," she said as though to herself. "They don't tell me, but I know. I was betrothed once."

She went on knitting. And that was all she said of herself.

Then, after a pause, she said:

"Fraulein is betrothed?"

Bernardine smiled and shook her head, and Catharina made no further inquiries. But she looked up from her work from time to time and seemed pleased that Bernardine still staid with her. At last the old mother came to say that the coffee was ready, and Bernardine followed her into the parlor.

She watched Bernardine drinking the coffee and finally poured herself out a cup too.

"This is the first time Herr Allitsen has ever brought a friend," she said. "He has always been alone. Fraulein is betrothed to Herr Allitsen—is that so? Ah, I am glad. He is so good and so kind."

Bernardine stopped drinking her coffee.

"No, I am not betrothed," she said cheerily. "We are just friends, and not always that either. We quarrel."

"All lovers do that," persisted Frau Steinhart triumphantly.

"Well, you ask him yourself," said Bernardine, much amused. She had never looked upon Robert Allitsen in that light before. "See, there he comes."

Bernardine was not present at the court martial, but this was what occurred. While the Disagreeable Man was paying the reckoning Frau Steinhart said in her most motherly tones:

"Fraulein is a very dear young lady. Herr Allitsen has made a wise choice. He is betrothed at last."

The Disagreeable Man stopped counting out the money.

"Stupid old Frau Steinhart!" he said good naturedly. "People like myself don't get betrothed. We get buried instead."

"Na, na," she answered. "What a thing to say, and so unlike you too! No, but tell me."

"Well, I am telling you the truth," he replied. "If you don't believe me, ask fraulein herself."

"I have asked her," said Frau Steinhart, "and she told me to ask you."

The Disagreeable Man was much amused. He had never thought of Bernardine in that way.

He paid the bill and then did something which rather astonished Frau Steinhart and half convinced her.

He took the bill to Bernardine, told her the amount of her share, and she repaid him then and there.

There was a twinkle in her eye as she looked up at him. Then the composure of her features relaxed, and she laughed.

He laughed, too, but no comment was made upon the episode. Then began the goodbys and the preparations for the return journey.

Bernardine bent over Catharina and kissed her sad face.

"Fraulein will come again?" she whispered eagerly.

And Bernardine promised. There was something in Bernardine's manner which had won the poor girl's fancy—some unspoken sympathy, some quiet geniality.

Just as they were starting Frau Steinhart whispered to Robert Allitsen:

"It is a little disappointing to me, Herr Allitsen. I did so hope you were betrothed."

August, the blue spectacled driver, cracked his whip, and off the horses started homeward.

For some time there was no conversation between the two occupants of the sledge. Bernardine was busy thinking about the experiences of the day, and the Disagreeable Man seemed in a brown study. At last he broke the silence by asking her how she liked his friends and what she thought of Swiss home life. And so the time passed pleasantly.

He looked at her once and said she seemed cold.

"You are not warmly clothed," he said. "I have an extra coat. Put it on. Don't make a fuss, but do so at once. I know the climate, and you don't."

She obeyed and said she was all the cozier for it. As they were nearing Petershof he said half nervously:

"So my friends took you for my betrothed. I hope you are not offended."

"Why should I be?" she said frankly. "I was only amused, because there never were two people less loverlike than you and I are."

"No, that's quite true," he replied in a tone of voice which betokened relief.

"So that I really don't see that we need concern ourselves further in the matter," she added, wishing to put him quite at his ease. "I'm not offended, and you are not offended, and there's an end of it."

"You seem to me to be a very sensible young woman in some respects," the Disagreeable Man remarked after a pause. He was now quite cheerful again and felt he could really praise his companion. "Although you have read so much, you seem to me sometimes to take a sensible view of things. Now, I don't want to be betrothed to you any more than I suppose you want to be betrothed to me. And yet we can talk quietly about the matter without a scene. That would be impossible with most women."

Bernardine laughed.

"Well, I only know," she said cheerily, "that I have enjoyed my day very much, and I'm much obliged to you for your companionship. The fresh air and the change of surroundings will have done me good."

His reply was characteristic of him.

"It is the least disagreeable day I have spent for many months," he said quietly.

"Let me settle with you for the sledge now," she said, drawing out her purse, just as they came in sight of the Kurhaus.

They settled money matters and were quits.

Then he helped her out of the sledge, and he stooped to pick up the shawl she dropped.

"Here is the shawl you are always dropping," he said. "You're rather cold, aren't you? Here, come to the restaurant and have some brandy. Don't make a fuss. I know what's the right thing for you."

She followed him to the restaurant, touched by his rough kindness. He himself took nothing, but he paid for her brandy.

That evening after table d'hote, or rather after he had finished his dinner, he rose to go to his room as usual. He generally went off without a remark. But tonight he said:

"Good night, and thank you for your companionship. It has been my birthday today, and I've quite enjoyed it."

CHAPTER XI.

"IF ONE HAS MADE THE ONE GREAT SACRIFICE."

There was a suicide in the Kurhaus one afternoon. A Dutchman, Vandervelt, had received rather a bad account of himself from the doctor a few days previously, and in a fit of depression, so it was thought, he had put a bullet through his head. It had occurred through Marie's unconscious agency. She found him lying on his sofa when she went as usual to take him his afternoon glass of milk. He asked her to give him a packet which was on the top shelf of his cupboard.

"Willingly," she said, and she jumped nimbly on the chair and gave him the case.

"Anything more?" she asked kindly as she watched him draw himself up from the sofa. She thought at the time that he looked wild and strange. But then, as she pathetically said afterward, who did not look wild and strange in the Kurhaus?

"Yes," he said. "Here are 5 francs for you."

She thought that rather unusual, too, but 5 francs, especially coming unexpectedly like that, were not to be despised, and Marie determined to send them off to that mutterli at home in the nut brown chalet at Grusch.

So she thanked Mynheer van Vandervelt and went off to the pantry to drink some cold tea which the English people had left and to clean the lamps. Having done that and knowing that the matron was busily engaged carrying on a flirtation with a young Frenchman, Marie took out her writing materials and began a letter to her old mother. These peasants know how to love each other, and some of them know how to tell each other too. Marie knew. And she told her mother of the gifts she was bringing home, the little nothings given her by the guests.

She was very happy writing this letter. The little nut brown home rose before her.

"Ach," she said, "how I long to be home!"

And then she put down her pen and sighed.

"Ach," she said, "and when I'm there I shall long to be here. Da wo ich nicht bin, da ist das gluck."

Marie was something of a philosopher.

Suddenly she heard the report of a pistol, followed by a second report. She dashed out of her little pantry and ran in the direction of the sound. She saw Warli in the passage. He was looking scared, and his letters had fallen to the ground. He pointed to No. 54.

It was the Dutchman's room.

Help arrived. The door was forced open, and Vandervelt was found dead. The case from which he had taken the pistol was lying on the sofa. When Marie saw that, she knew that she had been an unconscious accomplice. Her tender heart overflowed with grief. While others were lifting him up she leaned her head against the wall and sobbed.

"It was my fault; it was my fault!" she cried. "I gave him the case. But how was I to know?"

They took her away and tried to comfort her, but it was all in vain.

"And he gave me 5 francs," she sobbed. "I shudder to think of them."

It was all in vain that Warli gave her a letter for which she had been longing for many days.

"It is from your mutterli," he said as he put it into her hands. "I give it willingly. I don't like the looks of one or two of the letters I have to give you, Marie-chen. That Hans writes to you. Confound him!"

But nothing could cheer her. Warli went away shaking his curly head sadly, shocked at the death of the Dutchman and shocked at Marie's sorrow. And the cheery little postman did not do much whistling that evening.

Bernardine heard of Marie's trouble and rang for her to come. Marie answered the bell, looking the picture of misery. Her kind face was tear stained, and her only voice was a sob.

Bernardine drew the girl to her.

"Poor old Marie," she whispered. "Come and cry your kind heart out, and then you will feel better. Sit by me here and don't try to speak. And I will make you some tea in true English fashion, and you must take it hot, and it will do you good."

The simple sisterly kindness and silent sympathy soothed Marie after a time. The sobs ceased and the tears also. And Marie put her hand in her pocket and gave Bernardine the 5 francs.

"Fraulein Hullme, I hate them," she said. "I could never keep them. How could I send them now to my old mother? They would bring her ill luck—indeed they would."

The matter was solved by Bernardine in a masterly fashion. She suggested that Marie should buy flowers with the money and put them on the Dutchman's coffin. This idea comforted Marie beyond Bernardine's most sanguine expectations.

"A beautiful tin wreath," she said several times. "I know the exact kind. When my father died, we put one on his grave."

That same evening, during table d'hote, Bernardine told the Disagreeable Man the history of the afternoon. He had been developing photographs and had heard nothing. He seemed very little interested in her relation of the suicide and merely remarked:

"Well, there's one person less in the world."

"I think you make these remarks from habit," Bernardine said quietly, and she went on with her dinner, attempting no further conversation with him. She herself had been much moved by the sad occurrence. Every one in the Kurhaus was more or less upset, and there was a thoughtful, anxious expression on more than one ordinarily thoughtless face.

The little French danseuse was quiet; the Portuguese ladies were decidedly tearful; the vulgar German baroness was quite depressed; the comedian at the Belgian table ate his dinner in silence. In fact, there was a weight pressing down on all. Was it really possible, thought Bernardine, that Robert Allitsen was the only one there unconcerned and unmoved? She had seen him in a different light among his friends, the country folk, but it was just a glimpse which had not lasted long. The young heartedness, the geniality, the sympathy which had so astonished her during their day's outing astonished her still more by their total disappearance. The gruffness had returned, or had it never been absent? The lovelessness and leadenness of his temperament had once more asserted themselves, or was it that they had never for one single day been in the background?

These thoughts passed through her mind as he sat next to her reading his paper—that paper which he never passed on to any one. She hardened her heart against him. There was no need for ill health and disappointment to have brought any one to a miserable state of indifference like that. Then she looked at his wan face and frail form, and her heart softened at once. At the moment when her heart softened to him he astonished her by handing her his paper.

"Here is something to interest you," he said, "an article on 'Realism In Fiction' or some nonsense like that. You needn't read it now. I don't want the paper again."

"I thought you never lent anything," she said as she glanced at the article, "much less gave it."

"Giving and lending are not usually in my line," he replied. "I think I told you once that I thought selfishness perfectly desirable and legitimate if one had made the one great sacrifice."

"Yes," she said eagerly. "I have often wondered what you considered the one great sacrifice."

"Come out into the air," he answered "and I will tell you."

She went to put on her cloak and hat and found him waiting for her at the top of the staircase. They passed out into the beautiful night. The sky was radiantly bejeweled, the air crisp and cold and harmless to do ill. In the distance the yodelling of some peasants. In the hotels the fun and merriment, side by side with the suffering and hopelessness. In the deaconess' house the body of the Dutchman. In God's heavens God's stars.

Robert Allitsen and Bernardine walked silently for some time.

"Well," she said, "now tell me."

"The one great sacrifice," he said halt to himself, "is the going on living one's life for the sake of another when everything that would seem to make life acceptable has been wrenched away, not the pleasures, but the duties and the possibilities of expressing one's energies, either in one direction or another—when, in fact, living is only a long, tedious dying. If one has made this sacrifice, everything else may be forgiven."

He paused a moment and then continued:

"I have made this sacrifice; therefore I consider I have done my part without flinching. The greatest thing I had to give up I gave up—my death. More could not be required of any one."

He paused again, and Bernardine was silent from mere awe.

"But freedom comes at last," he said, "and some day I shall be free. When my mother dies, I shall be free. She is old. If I were to die, I should break her heart, or rather she would fancy that her heart was broken. And it comes to the same thing. And I should not like to give her more grief than she has had. So I am just waiting. It may be months or weeks or years. But I know how to wait. If I have not learned anything else, I have learned how to wait. And then"——

Bernardine had unconsciously put her hand on his arm. Her face was full of suffering.

"And then?" she asked, with almost painful eagerness.

"And then I shall follow your Dutchman's example," he said deliberately.

Bernardine's hand fell from the Disagreeable Man's arm.

"You are cold, you little thing," he said almost tenderly for him. "You are shivering."

"Was I?" she said, with a short laugh. "I was wondering when you would get your freedom and whether you would use it in the fashion you now intend."

"Why should there be any doubt?" he asked.

"One always hopes there would be a doubt," she said, half in a whisper.

Then he looked up and saw all the pain on the little face.

CHAPTER XII.

THE DISAGREEABLE MAN MAKES A LOAN.

The Dutchman was buried in the little cemetery which faced the hospital. Marie's tin wreath was placed on the grave. And there the matter ended. The Kurhaus guests recovered from their depression; the German baroness returned to her buoyant vulgarity; the little danseuse to her busy flirtations. The French marchioness, celebrated in Parisian circles for her domestic virtues, from which she was now taking a holiday, and a very considerable holiday, too, gathered her nerves together again and took renewed pleasure in the society of the Russian gentleman. The French marchioness had already been requested to leave three other hotels in Petershof, but it was not at all probable that the proprietors of the Kurhaus would have presumed to measure madame's morality or immorality. The Kurhaus committee had a benign indulgence for humanity—provided, of course, that humanity had a purse—an indulgence which some of the English hotels would not have done badly to imitate. There was a story afloat concerning the English quarter that a tired little English lady, of no importance to look at, probably not rich and probably not handsome, came to the most respectable hotel in Petershof, thinking to find there the peace and quiet which her weariness required.

But no one knew who the little lady was, whence she had come and why. She kept entirely to herself and was thankful for the luxury of loneliness after some overwhelming sorrow.

One day she was requested to go. The proprietor of the hotel was distressed, but he could not do otherwise than comply with the demands of his guests.

"It is not known who you are, mademoiselle," he said. "And you are not approved of. You English are curious people. But what can I do? You have a cheap room and are a stranger to me. The others have expensive apartments and come year after year. You see my position, mademoiselle? I am sorry."

So the little tired lady had to go. That was how the story went. It was not known what became of her, but it was known that the English people in the Kurhaus tried to persuade her to come to them. But she had lost heart and died of distress.

This could not have happened in the Kurhaus, where all were received on equal terms, those about whom nothing was known and those about whom too much was known. The strange mixture and the contrasts of character afforded endless scope for observation and amusement, and Bernardine, who was daily becoming more interested in her surroundings, felt that she would have been sorry to have exchanged her present abode for the English quarter. The amusing part of it was that the English people in the Kurhaus were regarded by their compatriots in the English quarter as sheep of the blackest dye! This was all the more ridiculous because with two exceptions—firstly, of Mrs. Reffold, who took nearly all her pleasures with the American colony in the Grand Hotel, and, secondly, of a Scotch widow who had returned to Petershof to weep over her husband's grave, but put away her grief, together with her widow's weeds, and consoled herself with a Spanish gentleman—with these two exceptions, the little English community in the Kurhaus was most humdrum and harmless, being occupied, as in the case of the Disagreeable Man, with cameras and cheese mites, or in other cases with the still more engrossing pastime of taking care of one's ill health, whether real or fancied, but yet an innocent hobby in itself and giving one absolutely no leisure to do anything worse—a great recommendation for any pastime.

This was not Bernardine's occupation. It was difficult to say what she did with herself, for she had not yet followed Robert Allitsen's advice and taken up some definite work, and the very fact that she had no such wish pointed probably to a state of health which forbade it.

She, naturally so keen and hardworking, was content to take what the hour brought, and the hour brought various things. Chess with the Swedish professor, or Russian dominoes with the shriveled up little Polish governess who always tried to cheat and who clutched her tiny winnings with precisely the same greediness shown by the Monte Carlo female gamblers. Or the hour brought a stroll with the French danseuse and her poodle, and a conversation about the mere trivialities of life, which a year or two, or even a few months ago, Bernardine would have condemned as beneath contempt, but which were now taking their rightful place in her new standard of importances, for some natures learn, with greater difficulty and after greater delay than others, that the real importances of our existence are the not insignificant ones of everyday life, the nothingnesses which the philosopher in his study, reasoning about and analyzing human character, is apt to overlook, but which nevertheless make him and every one else more of a human reality and less of an abstraction. And Bernardine, hitherto occupied with so called intellectual pursuits with problems of the study, of no value to the great world outside the study, or with social problems of the great world, great movements and great questions, was now just beginning to appreciate the value of the little incidents of that same great world. Or the hour brought its own thoughts, and Bernardine found herself constantly thinking of the Disagreeable Man, always in sorrow and always with sympathy and sometimes with tenderness.

When he told her about the one sacrifice, she could have wished to wrap him round with love and tenderness. If he could only have known it, he had never been so near love as then. She had suffered so much herself, and with increasing weaknesses had so wished to put off the burden of the flesh that her whole heart went out to him.

Would he get his freedom, she wondered, and would he use it? Sometimes when she was with him she would look up to see whether she could read the answer in his face, but she never saw any variation of expression there, nothing to give her even a suggestion. But this she noticed—that there was a marked variation in his manner, and that when he had been rough in bearing or bitter in speech he made silent amends at the earliest opportunity by being less rough and less bitter. She felt this was no small concession on the part of the Disagreeable Man.

He was particularly disagreeable on the day when the Dutchman was buried, and so the following day when Bernardine met him in the little English library she was not surprised to find him almost kindly.

He had chosen the book which she wanted, but he gave it up to her at once without any grumbling, though Bernardine expected him to change his mind before they left the library.

"Well," he said as they walked along together, "and have you recovered from the death of the Dutchman?"

"Have you recovered, rather let me ask?" she said. "You were in a horrid mood last night."

"I was feeling wretchedly ill," he said quietly.

That was the first time he had ever alluded to his own health.

"Not that there is any need to make an excuse," he continued, "for I do not recognize that there is any necessity to consult one's surroundings and alter the inclination of one's mind accordingly. Still, as a matter of fact, I felt very ill."

"And today?" she asked.

"Today I am myself again," he answered quickly, "that usual normal self of mine, whatever that may mean. I slept well, and I dreamed of you. I can't say that I had been thinking of you, because I had not. But I dreamed that we were children together and playmates. Now, that was very odd, because I was a lonely child and never had any playmates."

"And I was lonely, too," said Bernardine.

"Every one is lonely," he said, "but every one does not know it."

"But now and again the knowledge comes like a revelation," she said, "and we realize that we stand practically alone, out of any one's reach for help or comfort. When you come to think of it, too, how little able we are to explain ourselves! When you have wanted to say something which was burning within you, have you not noticed on the face of the listener that unmistakable look of noncomprehension which throws you back on yourself? That is one of the moments when the soul knows its own loneliness."

Robert Allitsen looked up at her.

"You little thing," he said, "you put things neatly sometimes. You have felt, haven't you?"

"I suppose so," she said. "But that is true of most people."

"I beg your pardon," he answered, "most people neither think nor feel unless they think they have an ache, and then they feel it!"

"I believe," said Bernardine, 'that there is more thinking and feeling than one generally supposes."

"Well, I can't be bothered with that now," he said. "And you interrupted me about my dream. That is an annoying habit you have."

"Go on," she said. "I apologize."

"I dreamed we were children together and playmates," he continued. "We were not at all happy together, but still we were playmates. There was nothing we did not quarrel about. You were disagreeable, and I was spiteful. Our greatest dispute was over a Christmas tree. And that was odd, too, for I have never seen a Christmas tree."

"Well?" she said, for he had paused. "What a long time you take to tell a story!"

"You were not called Bernardine," he said. "You were called by some ordinary, sensible name. I don't remember what. But you were very disagreeable. That I remember well. At last you disappeared, and I went about looking for you. 'If I can find something to cause a quarrel,' I said to myself, 'she will come back.' So I went and smashed your doll's head. But you did not come back. Then I set on fire your doll's house. But even that did not bring you back. Nothing brought you back. That was my dream. I hope you are not offended. Not that it makes any difference if you are."

Bernardine laughed.

"I am sorry that I should have been such an unpleasant playmate," she said. "It was a good thing I did disappear."

"Perhaps it was," he said. "There would have been a terrible scene about that doll's head. An odd thing for me to dream about Christmas trees and dolls and playmates, especially when I went to sleep thinking about my new camera."

"You have a new camera?" she asked.

"Yes," he answered, "and a beauty too. Would you like to see it?"

She expressed a wish to see it, and when they reached the Kurhaus she went with him up to his beautiful room, where he spent his time in the company of his microscope and his chemical bottles and his photographic possessions.

"If you sit down and look at those photographs, I will make you some tea," he said. "There is the camera, but please not to touch it until I am ready to show it myself."

She watched him preparing the tea. He did everything so daintily, this Disagreeable Man. He put a handkerchief on the table to serve for an afternoon teacloth, and a tiny vase of violets formed the centerpiece. He had no cups, but he polished up two tumblers, and no housemaid could have been more particular about their glossiness. Then he boiled the water and made the tea. Once she offered to help him, but he shook his head.

"Kindly not to interfere," he said grimly. "No one can make tea better than I can."

After tea they began the inspection of the new camera, and Robert Allitsen showed her all the newest improvements. He did not seem to think much of her intelligence, for he explained everything as though he were talking to a child, until Bernardine rather lost patience.

"You need not enter into such elaborate explanations," she suggested. "I have a small amount of intelligence, though you do not seem to detect it."

He looked at her as one might look at an impatient child.

"Kindly not to interrupt me," he replied mildly. "How very impatient you are! And how restless! What must you have been like before you fell ill?"

But he took the hint all the same and shortened his explanations, and as Bernardine was genuinely interested he was well satisfied. From time to time he looked at his old camera and at his companion, and from the expression of unease on his face it was evident that some contest was going on in his mind. Twice he stood near his old camera and turned round to Bernardine, intending to make some remark. Then he changed his mind and walked abruptly to the other end of the room, as though to seek advice from his chemical bottles. Bernardine meanwhile had risen from her chair and was looking out of the window.

"You have a lovely view," she said. "It must be nice to look at that when you are tired of dissecting cheese mites. All the same, I think the white scenery gives one a great sense of sadness and loneliness."

"Why do you speak always of loneliness?" he asked.

"I have been thinking a good deal about it," she said. "When I was strong and vigorous, the idea of loneliness never entered my mind. Now I see how lonely most people are. If I believed in God as a personal God, I should be inclined to think that loneliness were part of his scheme, so that the soul of man might turn to him and him alone."

The Disagreeable Man was standing by his camera again. His decision was made.

"Don't think about those questions," he said kindly. "Don't worry and fret too much about the philosophy of life. Leave philosophy alone and take to photography instead. Here, I will lend you my old camera."

"Do you mean that?" she asked, glancing at him in astonishment.

"Of course I mean it," he said.

He looked remarkably pleased with himself, and Bernardine could not help smiling. He looked just as a child looks when he has given up a toy to another child and is conscious that he has behaved himself rather well.

"I am very much obliged to you," she said frankly. "I have had a great wish to learn photography."

"I might have lent my camera to you before, mightn't I?" he said thoughtfully.

"No," she answered. "There was not any reason."

"No," he said, with a kind of relief, "there was not any reason. That is quite true."

"When will you give me my first lesson?" she asked. "Perhaps, though, you would like to wait a few days, in case you change your mind."

"It takes me some time to make up my mind," he replied, "but I do not change it. So I will give you your first lesson tomorrow. Only you must not be impatient. You must consent to be taught. You cannot possibly know everything."

They fixed a time for the morrow, and Bernardine went off with the camera, and meeting Marie on the staircase confided to her the piece of good fortune which had befallen her.

"See what Herr Allitsen has lent me, Marie!" she said.

Marie raised her hands in astonishment.

"Who would have thought such a thing of Herr Allitsen?" said Marie. "Why, he does not like lending me a match."

Bernardine laughed and passed on to her room.

And the Disagreeable Man meanwhile was cutting a new scientific book which had just come from England. He spent a good deal of money on himself. He was soon absorbed in this book and much interested in the diagrams.

Suddenly he looked up to the corner where the old camera had stood before Bernardine took it away in triumph.

"I hope she won't hurt that camera," he said a little uneasily. "I am half sorry that"——

Then a kinder mood took possession of him.

"Well, at least it will keep her from fussing and fretting and thinking. Still I hope she won't hurt it."

CHAPTER XIII.

A DOMESTIC SCENE.

One afternoon when Mrs. Reffold came to say goodby to her husband before going out for the usual sledge drive he surprised her by his unwonted manner.

"Take your cloak off," he said sharply. "You cannot go for your drive this afternoon. You don't often give up your time to me. You must do so today."

She was so astonished that she at once laid aside her cloak and hat and touched the bell.

"Why are you ringing?" Mr. Reffold asked testily.

"To send a message of excuse," she answered, with provoking cheerfulness.

She scribbled something on a card and gave it to the servant who answered the bell.

"Now," she said, with great sweetness of manner. And she sat down beside him, drew out her fancy work and worked away contentedly. She would have made a charming study of a devoted wife soothing a much loved husband in his hours of sickness and weariness.

"Do you mind giving up your drive?" he asked.

"Not in the least," she replied. "I am rather tired of sledging."

"You soon get tired of things, Winifred," he said.

"Yes, I do," was the answer. "I am so easily bored. I am quite tired of this place."

"You will have to stay here a little longer," he said, "and then you will be free to go where you choose. I wish I could die quicker for you, Winifred."

Mrs. Reffold looked up from her embroidery.

"You will get better soon," she said. "You are better."

"Yes, you've helped a good deal to make me better," he said bitterly. "You have been a most unselfish person, haven't you? You have given me every care and attention, haven't you?"

"You seem to me in a very strange mood today," she said, looking puzzled. "I don't understand you."

Mr. Reffold laughed.

"Poor Winifred," he said. "If it is ever your lot to fall ill and be neglected, perhaps then you will think of me."

Don't Hesitate, but Call and Be Convinced That Every Statement We Make Is True.

To those who do not already know that there is established in Newark, at 105 Halsey street, a physician who stands in the foremost rank of his profession, who is indorsed by the leading colleges of the country and who can prove by witnesses right here in Newark (not by one, but by hundreds) that he has succeeded in curing cases that have been utterly given up by other physicians, and good ones, too. To those who do not these facts we state that any person, rich or poor, old or young, is welcome here and receive examination and advice free of charge.

Thousands praise the day they came to us for treatment. There is no guess work, no experimenting, no painful operation. No matter how difficult the case, no matter how much of the physician's time it may consume, the diagnosis will not only be thorough, it will be absolutely free. There is no taint of quackery or deception; no claim or statement is made that is not borne out by facts and living witnesses.

Mrs. Abby A. Ray, late of 86 Grove street, East Orange, who now lives at 400 Ellmore street, Escanaba, Mich., writes, under date of January 12: "The medicine arrived this morning and I am so glad it came. I am almost out, and it has helped me so much and I am so much pleased with its wonderful effort on my broken down system that I would like to testify to your great success in my case. I am feeling as well now, in fact better, than I had ever hoped to again."

CALIFORNIA TROTTERS.

We have lately learned that the fastest horses from California, such as Sunol, Arion, Stamboul, and many from the San Mateo Stock Farm were raised on a judicious system which consists of feeding them daily, together with their usual feed, a spice known as "RED BALL BRAND STOCK FOOD." We understand that this Spice is composed of Herbs, Seeds and particularly a Root indigenous to California, which has special merit for its diuretic, tonic and demulcent properties. So great has been the success obtained by this Food, which lately was awarded the Gold Medal at the California State Fair, that it is fed now by all first-class horsemen on the Pacific Coast. CHAS. KERTELL, manufacturer, has received numerous testimonials in its favor, of which the following, from the Palo Alto Stock Farm, is a specimen:

DEAR SIR: This is to certify that your Red Ball Brand Stock Food has been fed to Sunol, Palo Alto, Arion, Bell Bird and in fact to all our colts during the past two years with very gratifying results, and has given entire satisfaction to all connected with this establishment during that time. We are still continuing to feed it regularly.

BROKE DOWN AND CRIED

Altenberger Realizes His Situation at Last.

Asks That Word Be Sent to His Relatives—He Is Fully Identified By Four People and Again Goes Over His Confession—His Straightforward Way Aroused Sympathy.

JERSEY CITY, May 21.—Bernard Altenberger, the murderer of Katie Rupp, has been fully identified by four witnesses, all of whom saw him in company with the unfortunate young woman a week ago last Sunday. Altenberger was taken from his cell to Chief Murphy's office shortly before noon. He appeared nervous and broken down and seemed to fully realize his position.

Police Commissioner West, accompanied by several friends were present, but before identification was attempted several other gentlemen were invited into the office.

Altogether there were nineteen persons present, exclusive of the officer and the prisoner. They were formed into a circle around the room, Altenberger being among them.

Mrs. Mary Gannon, at whose house the couple hired a room, was the first witness called in. She was very much excited and was almost crying. She glanced hurriedly around the circle, and as her eyes fell upon Altenberger she exclaimed:

"That's the poor fellow. Oh, I feel so sorry for him." Then she gave way to her feelings and left the room sobbing.

John K. Holmes, at whose restaurant Altenberger and Miss Rupp ate breakfast on the tragic Sunday morning, was next called. He picked Altenberger out of the circle without any hesitation and told how, after the couple finished eating, they asked if he could tell them where they could hire a room, and he took them to Mrs. Gannon's house.

Altenberger admitted these facts and the straightforward, boyish way in which he admitted everything aroused sympathy for him among those present.

The other two witnesses, Mrs. Mary Thompson, colored, and her grand-daughter, Josephine Jordan, who reside at Snake Hill, not having arrived, Altenberger was taken into another room by Inspector Lange, where he broke down and wept bitterly.

He told the inspector that he realized for the first time that it was a matter of life and death with him and he would like the inspector to write to his step father, Christian Kraft, at Wurtemburg, Germany, and to his half-sister, who resides at Rome, N. Y., and tell them of his predicament. He also says he was not arraigned at Utica, N. Y., for murder or on any other charge, but was merely told by the Utica officials that they desired to transfer him to the New Jersey authorities.

He denied the story told by Christine Vetter, of Elizabeth, N. J., that he wanted her to get her money and run away with him. He said that he never knew that she ever had any money, and the inspector is inclined to believe him, because he has been so truthful in other matters relating to the case.

He denied that he had any idea of killing Miss Rupp at first, but said he was seized with an uncontrollable impulse to shoot her. These statements were reduced to writing and he signed them.

He asked the inspector as to the penalty for his crime and when told that it would be either hanging or imprisonment for life, he said that was rather hard, as in his country murder was only punished with death when committed for the purpose of robbery. Mrs. Thompson and her granddaughter arrived as Altenberger was signing his statement and he was taken back to Chief Murphy's office and again placed in the circle.

Mrs. Thompson identified him as soon as she saw him, as did also the girl. Altenberger admitted that he and Katie Rupp stopped at Mrs. Thompson's house and got a drink of water, but said Mrs. Thompson was mistaken as to the time. Mrs. Thompson thought it was about noon: Altenberger said it was between 5 and 6 o'clock.

After Altenberger was taken down stairs Inspector Lange sent for Assemblyman Max Salinger who, after a conference with the prisoner, said he would probably undertake the prisoner's defence.

Altenberger was arraigned in the court of oyer and terminer to plead this morning and was then committed to the county jail.

SPANISH ANARCHISTS SHOT.

The Men Who Aided Pallas Put to Death This Morning.

BARCELONA, May 21.—The anarchists who were condemned to death for aiding Pallas in the plot to kill Gen. Martinez de Campos were taken to the Mont Juich fortress Saturday by a large force of guards.

They were closely watched all night. Sunday their friends were allowed to visit them. Last evening they were removed to the chapel where the priests ministered to them over night. They were shot this morning.

Objection to Color.

NEW YORK, May 21.—Simmons, the colored rider, whose entry for the Irvington-Millburne bicycle road race was rejected on account of his color, has decided to bring the matter into the courts. He claims that the race was open to the world and he had as much right to compete as anyone else. Simmons will be on hand at the start of the race on Decoration day and demand the right to compete. If this is denied him he will appeal to the courts for an injunction restraining the Metropolitan association from interfering with his rights as a citizen. The Irvington-Millburne course on which the race is to be run is a public highway and he claims as much right to ride over it as any other citizen and there promises to be considerable trouble over the matter. It is said the reason they rejected his entry was to prevent his winning. He is a fast rider and many good judges believe he can win first prize in the Irvington-Millburne event.

Slot Machines Must Go.

FONDA, N. Y., May 21.—The grand jury has passed a resolution instructing the sheriff to remove all nickle-in-the-slot machines that may be found in Montgomery county. The sheriff will take immediate action.

Galvin's Army Goes to Pieces.

ALTOONA, Pa., May 21.—Galvin's commonweal army went to pieces somewhere west of Johnstown on Friday night. The members are working their way eastward by freight trains in small squads. Galvin has gone to Harrisburg.

BLAND HAS HIGH HOPES.

He Is Delighted With the Outlook for Free Silver.

WASHINGTON, May 21.—Representatives Bland and Tarsney returned to Washington enthusiastic over the action of the Kansas City convention.

"The convention," said Mr. Bland, "adopted a free coinage plank with the ratio of 16 to 1. The resolutions did not specifically give the ratio, but they declared in favor of both metals and urged the restoration of bimetallism where it was before the demonetization of silver, which was 16 to 1."

"Were not national issues alone considered by the convention?" he was asked.

"Yes, national issues were the only consideration. The money question was the only paramount subject. Our people are a unit for free silver. The convention's endorsemsnt of free silver expresses the sentiment of 95 per cent. of all the western and southwestern people."

"You have been suggested as the logical democratic candidate for 1896 because of your position upon silver. Do you care to speak about that?"

Mr. Bland was manifestly disposed to regard the suggestion lightly, and at first made no response to the query. When informed that anything he might say upon the subject would be read with interest, he said, with a slight show of impatience: "Oh, I've nothing to say about that. I don't think there is anything in it."

"Will the democrats of your section insist upon a free silver candidate two years hence?"

"Yes, they will be satisfied with nothing less."

"Suppose the eastern democrats refuse to accept such a nominee?"

"Well," said Mr. Bland, with a quiet laugh, "I presume the dominant element will win. If we are the stronger we will have our own man."

"Could a free silver candidate carry any of the eastern states?"

"I think we would stand a good chance in Ohio and Pennsylvania. The free silver sentiment seems very strong there. I notice that an influential democratic newspaper in Cincinnati warmly indorses our platform. This is an encouraging sign."

ARMOR PLATES SHATTERED

Most Important Test Ever Made by the Government.

WASHINGTON, May 21.—The most important armor test ever held in this country took place at the naval proving station down the Potomac, and the results obtained were startling to ordnance officers.

The heaviest plate yet manufactured was attacked by projectiles hurled from a 12-inch gun, and on the first shot the projectile penetrated and cracked the plate, practically rendering it useless.

The effect of the shot was to demonstrate that the heaviest armor is not invulnerable to our ordnance, and that the new Harveyizing process of hardening the surface of the plates did not prove effective on armor of this thickness.

The plate tested represented over 300 tons of armor for the battleship Indiana, and upon its performance depended the acceptance by the government of the entire lot.

The amount of armor involved in the test represented over $300,000, and unless the Bethlehem company, which furnished the plate, is able to make a better showing upon a second trial, which will probably be granted by the authorities, the entire lot will be rejected, and the company will have to throw out all of this armor.

The projectiles fired weighed upward of 800 pounds, and were propelled by powder charges varying from 300 to 400 pounds.

Great disappointment was manifested over the poor showing made by the armor.

EARTHQUAKE HORRORS.

Details of the Recent Calamity in Venezuela.

WASHINGTON, May 21.—Advices were received at the state department from Consul Plumacher at Maracaibo, dated May 5, showing that the greatest damage of the Venezuelan earthquake was done on the famous San Carloss and Merida railway, nearly completed, in the Andes. The axis of the disturbance, which lasted at some points three days, was along its line. Several of the splendid bridges were totally destroyed and others were considerably affected. Several stations were thrown down, the rails were twisted and bent and, in some places broken apart, and a number of lives were lost. La Guillos with all its inhabitants, disappeared entirely, a lake now occupying its site. In some places black water, having a fetid oder, was expelled from crevices in the earth. The earthquake is said to have been much worse than those of 1849 and 1875. At the latter the flourishing city of Cuent, Columbia, was demolished and five thousand persons lost their lives. The Venezuelan minister at Washington has been asked to receive contributions in this country for the relief of the sufferers by the catastrophe.

Smith Heresy Case.

SARATOGA, N. Y., May 21.—The report of the judicial committee on the Smith heresy case, which was to close the third day's session of the one hundred and sixth Presbyterian general assembly, was suddenly shelved, after a hurried conference of the leading members of the committee, held in the pulpit, back of the moderator. The hour for the reading of the report arrived just as the committee had decided to withhold the report until Monday. Dr. Gardner, chairman of the committee, has the report in his possession, and it will be read at the opening hour on Monday. It finds that the appeal of Dr. Smith of Cincinnati presbytery is in order, and recommends that it be entertained.

Suffering at Sea.

VANCOVER, B. C., May 21.—The steamer Bertha arrived at Nanaimo, brought down from Kodiak, Alaska, the captain and crew of the San Francisco sealer Undaunted, which was caught and ground to pieces in the ice floes off the mouth of the Coseper river. This happened on the seventh of March last, and that time until the fourth of April, when they were picked up by a coaster, the unfortunate men were confined to the drifting floe, subject to all the hardships which such a situation entailed, and the result was that, when rescued, they had reached the extremity of suffering, two of them being snowblind and three others demented. They were taken to Kodiak, and are now on their way home to California.

Negro Evangelization.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., May 21. — The important feature of the Presbyterian general assembly was the endorsement of the action of the committee on the Birmingham conference in recommending the rejection of the agreement to practically turn over the work of negro evangelization to the freemen's board.

The French Anarchist Guillotined This Morning.

He Was Pale and Nervous and His Voice Trembled as He Shouted "Courage! Long Live Anarchy!" Just Before the Knife Fell—Pinioned Much More Tightly Than Usual.

PARIS, May 21.—Emile Henry, who on Feb. 12 threw a bomb, in the cafe of the Hotel Terminus, was executed at 4:10 o'clock this morning.

At midnight the Place de la Roquette was virtually deserted. Two policemen on each side walked their beats and a groom with a relay horse for the omnibus from Charonne to the Place d'Italie was passing the prison.

At the Place Voltaire, a two minutes' walk from the prison, a strong force of police had been drawn up ready to respond instantly to the first call. The precautions were so exceptionally complete that even the anarchists must have been convinced of the folly of plotting to rescue the prisoner. Rumors of such a plot had been in circulation for two days and had influenced the government to take unusual steps in anticipation of an attack.

Shortly before 3 o'clock the persons in the Place de la Roquette could hear the distant tread of the Republican guards as they came to occupy the square. Led by a drum corps, the guards marched a thousand strong into the open space and took up positions.

At 3 o'clock the police cleared most of the square and more infantry and cavalry marched in. The total force, aside from the republican guards, then numbered fully a thousand.

Chaplain Valadier, M. Deibler, the headsman, and his assistant came a little later.

A few minutes before 3 the stars disappeared rapidly.

Among those who were allowed to enter the hollow square to see the execution were Clemenceau, the great radical, and Maurice Barres, the novelist; M. Ducret, and Mme. Yver, reporter for L'Intransigeant, the first woman ever allowed within the reserved space.

A minute or two after 4 o'clock the iron doors of the prison swung slowly apart. Chaplain Valadier walked in front. Henry was corded more tightly than is usual and over his shoulders was a black jacket. He was ghastly white, but walked with a firm step. As he approached the platform he shouted:

"Courage, comrades! Long live anarchy!"

His voice was not as loud as Vaillant's, and trembled noticeably.

Deibler's assistant whipped off his jacket. As they pushed him against the plank, he shouted again:

"Courage! Long live anarchy!"

His neck did not fit the lunette properly as he fell and Deibler gave him a rough tug forward.

The click of the knife was heard the next moment and Henry's head dropped to the ground.

The blood from the trunk spurted high as the body revolved into the basket.

Deibler himself picked up the head from the sawdust and threw it viciously into the basket with the body.

Then the sawdust was thrown over the body and head and they were shoved into the van, which was driven off less hastily than after Vaillant's execution.

M. Leygonie, the police commissary for the Roquette district, who went to Henry's cell, gave the United Press correspondent this account of the last scene there:

"The procureur of the republic, M. Lepine, M. Goron, the prison governor, and I entered the cell. The governor said: 'Henry, have courage. The day has come.' Unlike Vaillant, he did not utter a word for a minute. Then he asked to see the chaplain in husky tones. He offered no resistance."

The tightness of Henry's pinions were the subject of general remark. Between Henry's two shouts for anarchy he could be heard protesting weakly that he was bound too tightly and was not even allowed freedom of limb to walk properly.

Wants to Fight at Jacksonville.

NEW YORK, May 21.—Joe Vendig, of the Duval Athletic club of Jacksonville, Fla., is in receipt of a letter from Jim Corbett, who is now in London. Corbett writes that he has decided to give the Duval Athletic club the preference over all other clubs in regard to his fight with Peter Jackson. He also intimates that if Jackson refuses to fight him there the latter will have to go without a fight. Corbett explains his action in giving the Duval club the first call by saying that if it had not been for Vendig and other members of the Jacksonville organization his battle with Mitchell would not have come off.

ARMOR PLATE FRAUDS.

House Naval Committee Will Begin an Investigation.

WASHINGTON, May 21.—The armor plate frauds reported to have been committed at the Carnegie-Phipps company's works, Homestead, will be investigated by the house committee on naval affairs, of which Amos J. Cummings, of New York, is chairman. That is the result of the deliberations of the committee on rules over the resolution introduced last week by Representative Dunphy, of New York, and the action of the committee will probably be reported to the house to-day.

The Dunphy resolution provided for the appointment of a joint congressional committee to make the investigation.

It was the unanimous opinion of the committee on rules that a joint committee was entirely unnecessary, as the house had ample authority to clothe a committee of its own with all necessary authority to secure a full knowledge of all the facts. It was also the unanimous opinion of the committee on rules that the committee on naval affairs was much better qualified than any special committee composed of members outside of its roll could be to make the investigation, they being familiar with the technical matters and questions involved.

POLITICAL MEASURES ONLY.

Gov. Flower's Reason for Vetoing Bi-partisan Police Bills.

ALBANY, May 21.—Gov. Flower has vetoed the New York City Bi-partisan Police Commission bill and the Troy, Albany and Richmond County Police bills. In the memorandums filed with the bills the governor says in part: "These bills embody attempts by the legislature to reorganize the police departments of four municipalities. They all legislate out of office present commissioners of police appointed for a definite term. They are all directed against municipalities in which the present control is usually held by the party opposed to that represented by the majority of the present legislature. They are all intended to give political advantage to the party whose representatives passed them. They are framed upon no general or consistent principle of legislation or municipal administration. Not one of them was introduced in the legislature by a resident of the locality affected—only one of them by a legislative representative of the locality.

"The four bills are essentially political in their nature."

BIG FIRE AT PHILADELPHIA.

The Julius Sichel Company Burned Out—Loss, $400,000.

PHILDELPHIA, May 21.—The largest fire that Philadelphia has had for months broke out yesterday afternoon in the L-shaped building of the Julius Sichel company, fronting on North Eighth street and on Arch street. The damage on the stock of general furnishing goods, trimmings, etc., and fixtures will reach $76,000, on on which there is an insurance of $55,000.

This loss, together with the damage done adjoining properties, will make the entire loss about $400,000. The fire started at the bottom of an elevator shaft just at the angle of Sichel's L-shaped store and the flames ate their way up the shaft and made short work of the entire stock, and before they were extinguished the building was completely gutted.

Death of Edmund Yates.

LONDON, May 21.—Edmund Yates, author and journalist, who was stricken with apoplexy Saturday evening at the Garrick theater, where Lytton's "Money" was playing, and removed to the Savoy hotel, is dead.

Edmund Yates would have been 63 years old next July had he lived. He began writing for publication early in his twenties, and continued it to the end. Among his works are: "My Haunts and Their Frequenters," "Pages in Waiting," "Running the Gauntlet," "Kissing the Rod," "Dr. Wainwright's Patient" and "Personal Reminiscences and Experiences," which went through four editions. In 1872 Mr. Yates lectured in the United States. In 1874 he founded the World, a London weekly, which has a wide circulation. He was the sole proprietor of this journal until he died.

Ex-Gov. Campbell's Suit.

HAMILTON, O., May 21. — Additional pleadings in the case of Ex-Gov. James E. Campbell vs. Hooven, Owens & Rentschler have been filed. One is a cross petition by Ledora Owens, Campbell's sister-in-law, alleging the same facts as set up in the petition of James E. Campbell asking for relief. The other was an application by James E. Campbell for the appointment of a receiver for Hooven, Owens & Rentschler. It sets forth that the company being a corporation, has been conducted under the laws of Ohio as a co-partnership rather than as a corporation; that the directors have been and are now appropriating dividends to their own use and refuse to make a showing of the books and the firm's business.

ALARM AT JOHNSTOWN.

The Conemaugh Overflowing and People Fleeing for Their Lives.

JOHNSTOWN, Pa., May 21.—The Conemaugh river is overflowing and people are fleeing for their lives. The water in front of the Western Union telegraph office is three and one-half feet deep.

One Woman Drowned.

HUNTINGTON, Pa., May 21.—The present great flood has been exceeded only once in history of the Juniata valley, the last four days rainfall having raised the Juniata river and Raystown branch 21 feet above low water mark and entailing great destruction. Three new iron county bridges spanning the Juniata and Raystown branch have been swept away. The destruction of scores of minor bridges and washouts on public roads have closed all rural approaches to this place. The gas company plant here is submerged and the lower floors of many houses flooded. Mrs. Jacob Miller was drowned at Saxton while trying to save some property.

GREAT MAY FRESHETS

People Fleeing For Their Lives at Many Points in Pennsylvania.

All Streams Away Over Their Banks and the Waters Still Rising—Residents of Williamsport and Johnstown Terror-Stricken—Big Log Booms Give Way—Bridges Carried Off and City Property Flooded. One Woman Drowned—Railroads Under Water and Mills and Factories Forced to Close Down.

WILLIAMSPORT, Pa., May 21.—This city is passing through a state of flood excitement unequaled since the memorable June 1, 1889, when the river reached the unprecedented height of 33 1-8 feet and inundated two-thirds of the city. For many hours past rain has been falling heavily throughout the west branch water shed, and the river is now over twenty-five feet high and rising rapidly.

The conditions are shrouded in such uncertainty that no man can predict what the next few hours will bring forth and the wildest and most extravagant rumors are afloat.

Profiting by the experience of five years ago those in prospective danger are spending their time removing their effects to places of safety.

Thousands of men have worked like beavers removing goods to high ground or to the upper stories of buildings and the rumble of heavy wheels, the shouts of excited men and the ringing of alarm bells make altogether an exciting time.

The situation is discouraging to say the least, for the rain poured down all night in torrents and all the streams west of this city are raging floods.

At least 160,000,000 feet of logs have gone down the river. The big boom, with its 150,000,000 feet went last. Boom Boss Dinehart was busy with his crew and steamer all day. They visited the main boom and did their best to strengthen all weak points but to no avail, and at 1 o'clock this morning the great boom, with its million of dollars' worth of uncut lumber, gave way and Williamsport suffers a great financial disaster.

Shortly after noon the boom at Linden broke. There were about ten million feet in the structure and when it gave way, the logs started down stream. It was at first thought that most of the logs could be caught in the main boom, but it was not deemed advisable to do this owing to the fact that the pressure on the structure was then almost too heavy for it to bear. The additional strain which would have been sudden would be entirely too great, and the contents of the main boom would also go. The runaway logs were therefore allowed to pass. Lockhaven boom was reported to have given way under the pressure of high water and it was stated that fifteen million feet started down stream on a ten foot flood. Lumbermen here were of the opinion that the logs could be caught and efforts were made to give them a safe harbor.

BRADFORD, Pa., May 21.—Three days incessant rain and the flooding of mountain streams has swollen the east and west branches of the Tunungwant creek into a raging torrent. The waters have over-ran the creek boundaries, flooding the streets in the eastern part of the city, making them a sea of water. The foot-bridge leading to the Fifth ward was swept away.

A fire alarm at 3 o'clock in the morning brought out the fire department to aid the people to remove from their flooded homes.

In the Sixth ward 20 families were rescued and given temporary quarters at the American hotel at East Bradford.

The flood has put out the fires in numerous factories and mills.

A report that the city water-works reservoir, located in the mountains six miles west of the city, had sprung a leak and was giving way, spread throughout the city with lightning rapidity. A stampede for the hills ensued. Fathers and mothers, pale with fear, carring their children, fled panic stricken to higher ground. People living on the hillside who had friends and relatives living on the flats sent their horses galloping down town to bring their friends to a place of safety. The officials had men watching the reservoir and were receiving reports of its condition. They quickly denied the reported break and this somewhat allayed the excitement.

700 EMPLOYES LET GO.

Public Printer Benedict Serves Notice of Wholesale Discharges.

WASHINGTON, May 21.—An unknown number of the employes of the government printing office, estimated to be about 700, received notices from Mr. Benedict, in part, as follows:

"Being satisfied that the best interests of the public service and the efficient performance of the work of the government printing office necessitate a reduction in the number of employes, it becomes my duty to direct the foreman of printing to inform you that your services would not be required after the date of this notice. Cashier will settle any balance of wages due you at the earliest possible moment convenient with the duties of his desk."

Bold Attempt To Swindle.

WASHINGTON, May 21.—Washington detectives are looking for a young man representing himself to be the son of H. O. Havemeyer, the millionaire sugar refiner, who attempted to pass a check for $21,000 on the National Bank of the Republic. The young man presented the check at the bank Wednesday morning, introducing himself as H. O. Havemeyer, Jr., a son of the millionaire, and saying he had a letter from Congressman Bourke Cockran as identification. The check was drawn on the Chemical National bank of New York and is signed "H. O. Havemeyer, Jr." Cashier Bradley refused to honor the check until he could get confirmation from the Chemical, and in the meantime the young man escaped.

Long Life for Prendergast.

CHICAGO, May 21. — Patrick Eugene Prendergast, murderer of Carter Harrison, will get another continuance probably for ten days or two weeks when he appears in court Monday for trial as to his sanity. A continuance will be asked for by his attorneys on the ground that they are employed in other cases and will be engaged some time to come, and the state will enter no objection.

THE END IS IN SIGHT

So Declare the Managers of the Tariff Bill.

Expect to Begin Gathering Taxes Under the New Law on the First of July—Look for No Unreasonable Opposition on the Part of the Minority—Quay's "Remarks."

WASHINGTON, May 21.—"The end is in sight," remarked Senator Jones, of the finance committee, to-day, "and we expect to begin gathering taxes under the Wilson bill on the first day of July, which begins the new fiscal year."

This statement was endorsed by Mr. Harris. The fact that beginning to-day the senate will meet at 10 o'clock and the belief that the republicans have decided not to interpose unreasonable opposition or prolong debate on the bill, lead the managers of the bill to take a cheerful view of the situation.

Messrs. Harris, Voorhees and Jones, of Arkansas, assert they have the forty-three votes necessary to pass the bill. The republican leaders admit the impossibility of consolidating their votes into a cohesive whole, subject to the will of the parliamentary managers.

The metal schedule has now been reached and but two more schedules remain to be acted upon before the sugar schedule is called up. Democrats assert that they will finish the metal and wood schedules this week, but the republicans say the debate on iron ore, the manufactures of iron, will be protracted and that the metal schedule can not possibly be disposed of this week, leaving the free lumber debate to follow a week later.

No set speeches have been arranged on the tariff, but it is probable that Mr. Quay will come to the front again, as his state is especially interested in the metal schedule.

Mr. Quay says his statistics and the inexhaustible data he has at command bear directly upon this question, and now that the iron schedule has been reached it is proper that he should complete his "remarks." If Mr. Quay persists in taking up the thread of his discourse where he dropped it on the 8th of this month and yielded to other senators, he may precipitate a fight on the part of Mr. Harris for a further prolongation of the hours of debate at the evening end of the session.

Mr. Quay's speech so far as it has been delivered—in installments, April 14, 18 and 20, and May 3, 4 and 8—would make over 350 closely printed newspaper columns. Mr. Quay may possibly consume as much more space and printer's ink, for when he was congratulated the other day by Senator Blackburn on finally reaching a stopping place, Mr. Quay remarked slyly that he had only stopped to "load up."

With seven and a half hours for the consideration of the pending bill during the coming week it would seem that some headway ought to be made. Mr. Morgan is anxious to have the Chinese treaty disposed of and it may happen that Mr. Harris will grant him an afternoon for this purpose.

THE WEEK IN CONGRESS.

Probable Programme of the Work to Be Conducted in Both Branches.

WASHINGTON, May 21.—Some general legislation is in sight in the house this week. The managers have come to the conclusion that it will be safe now to intermit for a brief period their efforts to send appropriation bills to the senate, inasmuch as that body is apparently committed to the tariff bill for a month or more to the exclusion of all other business.

Two or three days will be required, it is believed, for the consideration of the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill, which will be taken up to-day under the five minute rule. Although general debate on the measure has been exhausted there are several features which will be criticized quite extensively in short speeches. Among these are the provisions of the bill intended to re-organize the accounting branch of the treasury department, and abolishing the offices of second comptroller and deputy second comptroller and reducing the clerical force. Another point of attack will be the omission from the bill of the force of clerks in the internal revenue division engaged in the settlement of sugar bounty claims. These have not been provided for on the theory that the bounty is to be abolished, but some republicans contend that it would be just as well to wait for the repeal of the law before the proposed reduction of the force is made in the appropriation bill.

With the final disposal of this measure consideration of appropriation bills will be suspended for a time and other matters taken up. The first of these will be the Brawley bill to suspend the operations of the 10 per cent. tax law in respect of the clearing house certificates and other substitutes for currency issued during the financial crisis of last year, reported from the committee on banking and currency. The amendment to be offered by Mr. Cox (dem., Tenn.) providing for the repeal of the law outright will be the principal feature of the discussion. The majority of the committe are committed against the unconditional repeal of the law, but it is understood that the great majority of democrats, all the populists, and a few republicans will vote for the amendment.

Striking corroboration of the accuracy of the statement to this effect heretofore made was furnished by Representative Everett, of Massachusetts, in the course of Friday's proceedings. He said he had been at home (Boston) several days, and while there had learned that the sentiment of his people on this subject was radically different from what he had supposed it to be, and, as a result of the information derived from this personal contact with his constituents, he should probably vote to repeal the law. One of the Maryland delegation, which has been generally supposed to be solidly opposed to repeal, is now said to favor the Cox amendment. These two measures are expected to occupy all of the week. Should their discussion fall short of that period the Hatch anti-option bill will be taken up.

Indiana's First Duel in Years.

CHICAGO, May 21.—A special from Jeffersonville, Ind., says: It has just leaked out that a duel was fought at the falls in the suburb of this city early Saturday morning by George S. Lemon and George Avery, a prominent young man of Louisville, Ky. Lemon was struck in the thigh by a bullet from Avery's revolver. It was extracted by Dr. S. S. McClure of this city. The cause of the duel is not known. It was the first real duel that has been fought in southern Indiana for 30 years.

CIRCULATION EXCEEDS THAT OF ALL OTHER PLAINFIELD DAILIES COMBINED.

"Ships that pass in the night, and speak each other in passing,
Only a signal shewn, and a distant voice in the darkness:
So on the ocean of life we pass and speak one another,
Only a look and a voice, then darkness again and a silence."

Up to a short time ago the Republicans in charge of the Legislature were piously anxious to make the State Board of Education non-partisan in its make-up. Last week they suddenly decided not to touch the Board. They discovered that the present Board is Republican by the accession of President Rogers, Speaker Holt and Comptroller Hancock, who naturally succeed Messrs. Adrain, Flynn and Heppenheimer. Commenting on the subject, the Trenton Times says very truly: "The doctrine of this Legislature seems to be that a non-partisan board is better than a Democratic board, but that a Republican board is better than either. That more have not been made Republican is because the Republicans realize their inability to retain control of the State, and they hope by making certain State boards non-partisan now that they will remain so when the Democrats return to power."

Plainfield's Imperative Need.

(From The Elizabeth Journal.)

The physicians of Plainfield have united in an appeal to the people and authorities of that city, giving it as their opinion "that the establishment of a system of sewerage is imperative for the preservation of the public health, and that such system should be introduced as soon as possible". This has long been expected. Plainfield has been one of the healthiest cities in the county and State, and yet it has never had a sewerage system. It was inevitable that, with the growth of the city, the accumulation of waste products and the introduction of water, a system of sewers would have to be constructed in order to preserve the health of the city. It is going to be a hard problem for Plainfield to solve. It has no natural drainage, for it is a perfectly flat place, a perfectly plain-field. Artificial drainage will have to be effected by means of machinery, in all probability. But at whatever cost, and with whatever engineering difficulties, Plainfield should at once establish a sewerage system in accordance with the request of the physicians. For if the soil on which the city stands shall become saturated with that which should be carried away, centuries will not suffice to make that soil wholesome again, and the health of the city will be forever more or less impaired.

Why He Does n't Like 'Em.

(From The Summit Record.)

The newspapers of New Jersey ought not to feel much hurt over the vicious attack made on them in the Assembly last Wednesday, by the Duke of Gloucester. He has had ample provocation for the venom that fills his heart when the word newspaper falls upon his ears. To the newspapers of the State, more than to any other agency, is due the credit of awakening the hostility of the people of New Jersey, to the scheme of legalizing vice for which Mr. Thompson stood sponsor a year ago. Of the 278 newspapers published in New Jersey we believe 277 were uncompromising in their denunciation of his project for the protection of lawbreakers, and the one newspaper that did not join in the assault on the legal barricade behind which Mr. Thompson had sheltered himself, was a Camden county publication of which he was then proprietor, but which has since been taken possession of by the sheriff. Little wonder he thinks newspaper editors are "highwaymen"! We wonder what he thinks of himself?

Euchre Tournament Decided Against Them.

The C. Y. M. L. team have lost the trophy in the Diocesan Euchre Tournament. The deciding game was played with the St. John's of Newark. Both teams were tied for first place.

The cards were with the Newark players. They won the first four games and then the Plainfielders won two. The Plainfield team consisted of Gill and Flynn, and the Newark team of Murphy and Larkin. Referee O'Hara came from Newark.

A Guinea Foul.

Policeman Giese had a warrant Saturday afternoon for the arrest of Hackman Cornelius Guinea, and when he served it Guinea said his feet took up the whole sidewalk, used other choice language, and then fought. The officer promptly subdued him, and locked him up. Later he was bailed out, and will have a hearing Saturday.

KILLED BY THE BLUE LINE.

Death the Penalty of Not Using the Tunnel.

John Phillips, a carpenter from New York, was struck and killed by a Blue Line flyer at the Westfield station this morning. He walked from a local train around the fence guard and stepped in front of the express.

He lived about 20 minutes and died without speaking. He had been employed by Mr. Hunt. His wife and a grown daughter live in New York.

NEWS OF THE PNEUS.

The storm was a severe test for the new track, not entirely completed, and the Crescents were satisfied with the contractor's work when assured today that it had not been washed away.

Take shares of the Crescent stock.

Secretary William J. Kiely, of the Journal Executive Committee, has received letters from Referee J. J. Holmes, Jr., of Orange and Judges Fred Hawley, Kings County Wheelmen, and A. H. Chamberlain, Jr., Union County Roadsters, agreeing to serve at the team road race to be held between Elizabeth and Springfield June 9.

Take shares of the Crescent stock.

The Elizabeth people were so sure of having the Fourth of July track team race for the H. L. Saltonstall cup in their city that the entry blanks had been printed with the Elizabeth announcement. Mr. Saltonstall's paper, the American Wheelman, had a similar announcement. The Crescents captured the race, however, and it will probably be just as successful as if it had been held in Saltonstall's city.

Five new members were admitted to the Crescent Wheelmen at the meeting of the Board of Governors Saturday night. Many new applications are being received.

Twenty-eight entry blanks, representing about 60 entries, have been received already by Secretary Teel for the opening meet. Springfield, Mass., New York, Brooklyn, Newark, Elizabeth, Rahway, Asbury Park and other outside places are represented.

The Crescents Racing Committee met Saturday night and appointed a number of officials for the opening day. Acceptances have not been received yet, but the list will doubtless be ready in a few days. James F. Buckle was appointed chairman of the Reception Committee with authority to select assistants.

C. M. Rydell will represent the Crescent Wheelmen in the great Irvington-Milburn race, Decoration Day.

The thing for enterprising Plainfield tradesmen to do, if they want to help in booming the town, is to buy stock in the Crescent Wheelmen's enterprise. The building of the track is a large undertaking and needs funds to make it a success. If it is a success, it will help Plainfield amazingly. Subscribe now.

Many wheelmen were expected in Plainfield yesterday to inspect the new track, as runs had been arranged by New York, Brooklyn and Newark, and by the Elizabeth Athletic Club and the Elizabeth Wheelmen. The storm kept most riders indoors, however, and the only strangers noticed at the track were two Greenwich wheelmen from New York. Two cyclers from Springfield, Mass., were in town, and quite a crowd rode from Red Bank. The latter left on the 3:30 train after they had asked that entry blanks be sent to them.

Colored Quarrel.

A complicated quarrel among four colored women was aired in Justice Mosher's Court this morning. Etta Thomas had Annie Fisher arrested and Henrietta Turner complained of Mary Taylor. Both charges were for assault.

Several witnesses were examined, and the four immediately interested testified at length. The row seemed to have been caused by a general desire for the affections and company of John Taylor. Both cases were dismissed.

When He Sends the Bonds, the Commission Comes.

John M. Hetfield this morning received from Washington an official notice that he had been appointed Plainfield's postmaster, together with papers to be filled out before he is entitled to a commission. His bond will be for $20,000, and the surety $40,000, each bondsman signing for twice the amount required from him.

Death of Mrs. Henneberry.

Mrs. Mary Henneberry, mother of Mrs. Thomas Curran, died at her daughter's home, 818 East Second street, at 10 last night.

She was taken ill suddenly and died before a doctor reached the house. She was 87 years old and death was apparently caused by old age.

—Following the regular business of the meeting of the Royal Arcanum, May 28, a royal entertainment will be provided for the members only.

—The storm interfered with the electric-light service last night, several sections of the city being at times in darkness because of broken wires.

—The Young Ladies Missionary Society of the First Baptist Church will hold its regular sewing meeting tomorrow afternoon at 2, in the lecture room.

—The fire gong blew at 10 this morning because of a broken wire on Plainfield avenue. Chief Doane had it repaired by 11:15 and blew a test from the electric station.

—The Willing Workers of Trinity Church will give an entertainment in the Y. M. C. A. rooms tomorrow evening at 8. Admission is only 10 cents, and it will be a very pleasant affair.

—A wire broke and dropped on East Second street near the Board of Trade club-house shortly after 3 this morning. The police sent word to the electric light station. The men who came up handled it with rubber glovrs until they found it was a dead district telegraph wire.

The Spring House Cleaning
Wisely urged by the BOARD OF HEALTH is not complete without a proper use of DISINFECTANTS. But, in choosing these, do not be misled into paying fancy prices for "patent" specialties. Common lime is better than any of them for damp cellars and stables. For vaults, drains, cess-pools, the best and cheapest disinfectant is COPPERAS, supplied by us by the pound or barrel at low rates. But for use in the house, in the plumbing, in kitchen sinks, in closets, for purifying the air of sick rooms, deodorizing offensive discharges—in short, for all purposes of a household disinfectant, nothing can excel the powerful solution of chlorides made and sold by us for 15 years under the name of REYNOLDS'S ODORLESS DISINFECTANT. Quart bottles 25c. To be diluted for use according to directions on label.

A Mammoth Success.

The throng of people who went to see Edsall's palace store Saturday night was larger than he anticipated. Although a large number of extra salespeople had been provided, still there were not enough handle the immense trade without some waiting.

Two cashiers were inadequate to make change as fast as the Hall system brought it to the desk. The crowd was immense, both outside viewing the magnificent show windows, and also in the store—buying rapidly the new and elegant goods. The low prices and fine qualities of the new and fashionable goods were the means of tempting many to buy. Everything operated with quietness and ease, the system and organization of the whole concern being about as perfect as is possible to make it. Only one incident occured as an exception. About 8:30 the main fuse of the electric light plant burned out, and left both floors of the store in total darkness for a few minutes. Happily, though, Mr. Hubbard the Babcock Estate electrician, was in the store at the time, and with lightning promptness repaired the damage, and business went on uninterrupted. Hundreds of patrons and friends of Mr. Edsall vied with one another in congratulating him on his enterprise in giving Plainfield such a commercial palace.

Mr. Edsall feels more than encouraged because of the public's liberal patronage bestowed upon him, for which he is very grateful. He says this is only the beginning of a great revolution in the trade of Plainfield, of which the citizens will learn more in the future.

The Young Stars whipped the Young Richmonds Saturday by 12 to 7. The Richmonds not being satisfied the Stars played them five innings more and won 11 to 5 The batteries: Stars, H. Angerbauer, Galbraith; Richmonds, Larry Doyle, Billy Keefe.

The Stars of Dunellen defeated a nine from Westfield, Saturday, by the score of 30 to 0. The features of the game were the pitching of B. Martin, who struck out 13, and the batting of S. Craig, who made two two-base hits and three singles.

All lovers of the sport should pay the small admission fee in Reform Hall tomorrow night, help the West End Base-Ball Association, and at the same time see a splendid entertainment.

The Harned Academy team beat the Moonshiners Saturday 21 to 8 The team:
Harned—Alfonso, Heno, Litell, Owens, Howe, Rockwell, Glennon, Maurice and Smith.
Moonshiners—Simpson, Dick, Wheeler, Morgan, Schuyler, Vail, Sebring, Crane and Albertis.
The game was in Harned's favors from beginning to end, they batting the ball in all parts of the field, and obliging the Moonshiners to change pitchers three times. Special praise should be given to J. Castener, for not allowing the Moonshiners to get more than four hits. The Harneds made twenty-three hits and four home runs. R. Finch umpired satisfactorily.

A REMARKABLE CURE

MIDDLEBUSH, Somerset Co., N. J.
TO THE PUBLIC:
For the past forty years I have been afflicted with bleeding piles. I suffered constant pain in the lower part of my body, but when I had an operation of the bowels the pain was perfectly terrible, and was most always attended with the loss of a large quantity of blood. My condition was complicated with prolapse of the rectum, which at first only made its appearance when I had a movement of the bowels, but at length the parts became so weakened that the protrusion took place while walking or stooping, or after the slightest exertion, and sometimes even while I was at rest. Whenever this happened it gave rise to the most agonizing pain, and felt as though something was pulling the life right out of me. In fact only those similarly situated can imagine the suffering and distress which I had to endure from day to day, and which made my life a terrible burden. Hearing of Dr. Lighthill's wonderful success in the cure of difficult chronic diseases, I placed myself under his care, and now I am proud and happy to say that, marvelous as it may seem, he effected a complete and radical cure in my case in every respect, and he performed this cure without any painful operation or preventing me from work. Since this terrible disease has been removed by Dr. Lighthill's skill I feel new life, and for the first time in forty years I feel once more what it is to be without daily pain, discomfort and distress. I am not a wealthy man, but no amount of money would tempt me to be put back in my former condition.
I make this public statement, not only from a deep and everlasting sense of gratitude to Dr. Lighthill, but also as a simple Christian duty to let the afflicted know where they can find a physician whose skill cannot be surpassed, and in whom implicit confidence can be placed. H. VROOM.

A LOCAL ENDORSEMENT.
No. 188 Somerset st., Plainfield, N. J.
To the Residents of Plainfield, N. J.
Mr. H. Vroom, whose statement appears above, is a brother-in-law of mine, I personally know of his case and his suffering and also know the happy fact that to the surprise of himself and his friends, Dr. Lighthill effected a radical and permanent cure. His statement is true in every respect and does not say half enough in praise of Dr. Lighthill. Anyone who wishes this statement verified is at liberty to come and see me personally.
JOHN C. KINNEY.

ONCE A YEAR, TOO OFTEN.

Growth of the Demand for Biennial Legislative Sessions.

The Legislature which closed its business sittings in Trenton last week will go into history as the longest in the history of the State. If the plan now in contemplation be carried out, it will easily lead the record in the matter of duration. It is to be some time in October before the fall of President Rogers's gavel is to mark the final adjournment. The annals of the State afford no parallel for the nine months continuance of the legislative function which will then have been covered by the State's lawmakers. There will, of course, intervene three or four months of inaction; but even if the length of the session is to be measured only by the time between the organization and the actual close of business, the record of this year will stand unchallenged. The period of active legislation closed last week. A session is to be held next Wednesday to act upon a series of vetoes, to which Governor Werts is expected to treat some of the bills submitted for his consideration. If the completion of the Winter's work at the meeting at which his vetoes are to be submitted be held to be essentially a final adjournment, the session will even then hold its own for unprecedented duration. The Legislature of 1890 managed to spin itself out till quite as late in the year. Next Wednesday will be the 23d of the month. It was May 22 when the Solons of the State departed from Trenton in 1890. But the Legislature of '90 did not assemble till a week later in January than that of this year did, so that this year outstrips its earlier rival in the length of its continuous service. It was June 2 when President Fish declared the final adjournment of the Legislature of 1886. But the Houses had completed their legislative duties by the middle of April. The Senate was delayed, however, by its participation in an impeachment trial, and sat for a week after the Assembly had gone home. Then, by concurrent resolution, the Senate took a recess, as the House had done, till June 1, when the two branches re-assembled that they might be formally disbanded. The actual duration of the session of that year was only fifteen weeks. The session of 1890 was prolonged for nineteen weeks. The lapse of time between the opening and the close of that which has just ended is a day or two more.

These inexcusably long sessions have lent fresh impetus to the popular demand for less frequent sittings, and a constitutional amendment providing for biennial, or even triennial, sessions is being urged with more fervor than ever. The quantity of unnecessary, if not hurtful, laws that an average Legislature manages to inflict upon the people is something astounding. Too much law is the curse of not New Jersey alone, but of every other State in the Union. Sift all the acts passed by the two houses in the last ten years and it would be difficult to find ten that have been demanded by the public welfare. That is not to say that they have all been against the public welfare, but the State would have got along just as well without them, and probably a good deal better. The State is a machine that, once set in motion, can run itself to a large extent. It is a machine that does not need to be pulled apart and rebuilt, or to be overhauled and repaired every year. Some one in Trenton well observed, while the "two senate controversy" was pending, that Pennsylvania can get along with one Legislature in two years, but that New Jersey needed two Legislatures in one year. There are only five or six States in the Union where Legislatures sit yearly, and these are failing into line. Ohio joined the biennial session ranks a few days ago, and great big New York, with ten times more people and territory, is likely to make biennial sessions a feature of the new constitution that is now being prepared for her. If such expansive and popular commonwealths as Pennsylvania and New York can get along with a Legislature in two years surely the little State of of New Jersey ought to be able to do it. The demand of the hour is for fewer laws and fewer Legislatures.

Sam'l of Posen.

M. B. Curtis has made a tremendous success at the Standard Theatre in New York in "Sam'l of Posen, the Drummer Up to Date", and is drawing audiences that are limited only by the capacity of the theatre. His impersonation of Sam'l Plastrick, the drummer, is just as funny as ever, and causes shouts of laughter and uproarious applause. Mr. Curtis has evidently renewed his popularity of a dozen years ago, and there are many indications that his engagement will be a long and prosperous one. "Sam'l of Posen" has been brought up to date, and as now given has no dull moments from the first scene to the final curtain. It is quite certain that Mr. Curtis has again won the place he once held in the hearts of theatre-goers. He has the assistance of an excellent company, and really good work is done by Eleanor Barry, Merri Osborne, George Boniface and Orrin Johnson. There is an unusually active demand for seats, and it may be necessary to give extra matinees in order to accommodate all who wish to see "Sam'l of Posen".

Talk on Holland Painters.

The second art lecture by A. T. Van-Laer was given in the Plainfield Seminary Saturday evening.

The most of the lecture was devoted to Rembrandt and other Holland painters with a short reference to Rubens and the Belgian painters. The lecture was entertaining and instructive and the illustrations of the paintings were thrown on a good-sized screen that added greatly to the interest of the subject matter.

PRISONER FREE, OFFICER IN JAIL.

Jersey Justice Turns the Tables on a Zealous Village Official.

Henry Myers of Westfield has been a special night-watchman for several months, being paid by the storekeepers to patrol the village streets. He had become unpopular with many of the villagers.

Heuber's saloon, known as the "Wheelman's Rest", is situated on the county road, midway between Westfield and Cranford. Myers lately determined to arrest the proprietor. A few days ago he sauntered into the place, bought and paid for a glass of whisky, and then arrested Heuber for selling liquor without a license. Myers took his prisoner before Justice Collins, who held him in $500 to await the action of the Grand Jury. Bail was furnished and Heuber departed. Myers was not so fortunate. The Judge held him in $100 as a witness. John O. Blenis went on his bond, but subsequently withdrew, and Myers had to go to the Elizabeth jail Friday night. At the station a crowd of 150 men and boys jeered at Myers, and as he boarded the train the crowd bombarded him with rotten eggs.

A new watchman has been employed by the storekeepers, and Myers languishes in jail, berating the law that allows a prisoner to go free, and the officer to go to jail.

Foster—Brown.

The engagement of Miss Elizabeth Plummer Foster of Everett, Washington, formerly of Netherwood, to George Sampson Brown, eldest son of Rev. Dr. T. Edwin Brown, the pastor of the Memorial Baptist Church of Philadelphia, is announced. Mr. Brown is a graduate of Brown's University, class of '88, and Columbia Law School, class of '90. He was for a year or more after graduation connected with the celebrated law firm in New York of Evarts, Beaman & Choate. For several years he has made his home in Everett and is the senior member of the firm of Brown & Brownell, attorneys for the Everett Land Company. Mr. Brown is also President of the Everett and Monte Christo Railroad Company, and a Director of the Everett National Bank. Miss Foster is a niece of John F. Plummer of New York, and Mrs. Henry E. Bowen of Plainfield.

A Unique Spectacle.

Just what the remarkable performance "Phantasma" is, none in Plainfield will know unless he attends one of the three performances to be given in Music Hall this week for the benefit of the Auxiliary Board of Muhlenberg Hospital. It is something which may not be described briefly, it is so wonderfully puzzling, surpassingly beautiful. The Newark Journal says it is a "unique spectacle of human beings apparently passing through one another, groups melting intovapor and a company disappearing before one's eyes like aflash". When those melting away into space are those you know the entertainment becomes doubly enchanting.

Woman and Home.

The May meeting of the Plainfield Branch Alliance will be held in All Souls Church tomorrow afternoon at 3. All women are welcome, and the following is the programme:

WOMAN AND HOME.

Home and Society.
Physical Education—
a. Correct Dress.
b. The Body and the Mind.
Household Science—
a. Simplicity in the Home.
b. Cheerfulness in the Home a Moral Necessity.
c. Some Leaks in American Homes.
Character Building—
a. Reverence.
b. Reason.

Bon Ton Theatre, Jersey City.

Theatre-goers in Jersey City and vicinity have come to the conclusion that it is unnecessary to go to New York to enjoy high-class vaudeville performance. Since the event of the opening of the Bon Ton the cosy little theatre has been daily packed to the doors, and in the language of the old showman you must go early to avoid the rush. The curtain rises about 1, and does not drop until 11. One does not feel the discomfort of the heat, as the house is cooled by artificial means, and fans and ice water are furnished gratis. The list of artists for this week is large and high class.

To Dedicate a Handsome Church.

The date set for the dedication of the new Cranford Presbyterian Church is Tuesday evening, June 19. On that occasion the dedicatory sermon will be preached by Rev. Dr. John Hall, pastor of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York. The dedication exercises will be continued the following Sunday, June 24. The sermon in the morning will be preached by Rev. Dr. William H. Roberts, of Philadelphia, and that in the evening by Rev. Dr. James F. Riggs, of New Brunswick, both former pastors.

The Fire Grew on His Hands.

Special Marshal Whitely set fire to the rubbish in the dump between Duer street and Steiner place, Friday afternoon. The fire spread, and burned through the rain of yesterday. The high wind last night made it a threatening blaze, and Mr. Whitely feared for his barn and for Mr. Pope's carriage shop. He sent in a still alarm at 8:30, and ten or eleven firemen turned out, connected hose to a hydrant, and by working an hour drenched out the fire.

An Open Transom.

The police found a transom open at Edsall's new store in the Babcock Building Saturday night, after the store was closed. They awoke Linn Edsall, and the transom was shut.

Waterbury Slides.

The Waterbury slides will probably be exhibited by the Camera Club this week. J. H. Doane and Harry Coward have the matter in charge.

—Plainfield friends of Mrs. E. M. Whittemore and of her work will find her book "Della, the Bluebird of Mulberry Bend", on sale at Estil's.

ALONG THE CENTRAL.

It is rumored that the private car Monmouth, which was somewhat damaged by fire a short time ago, will be thoroughly refitted and put in service as a club car between Plainfield and New York.

The new passenger engines on the Central are giving the best of satisfaction, both for strength and speed. The 450, which took one of the prizes at the World's Fair, is one of the fastest locomotives in the service.

General Passenger Agent H.P. Baldwin announces cheap excursion rates to Cleveland during the National Convention of the Y. P. S. C. E., which will be held July 11 to 15. The fare has been placed at $12 for the round trip, good for twenty days.

It is currently reported that the company will shortly inaugurate the check system for the payment of all employes. The paymaster is getting feeble and old, and it is said that the company would, by the check system, save an expense of about $700 a month, the cost of running the pay car over the road.

Lippincott's for June.

Lippincott's Magazine continues a favorite. For June it presents, besides a wealth of other literature both prose and verse, "The Wonder-Witch", a complete novel by M. G. McClelland, of strength, beauty and power. It is a charming romance of Virginia, beginning in war times, and happily concluding long afterwards. The title refers to a ring, which had a strange story of its own, and the supposed power of keeping its wearer constant to its giver.

Gilbert Parker's serial, "The Trespasser", reaches its close after carrying the hero through queer adventures and dire social and moral dangers.

Would That Plainfield Owned Its Plant!

The recent action of the Common Council of Madison, in reducing the cost of electric current from 15 to 10 cents per thousand volts for commercial use, has resulted in greatly increasing the demand for lights. Owing to the fear of the Councilmen that it might injure local interests, they have lately been compelled to refuse several offers to supply outsiders with current. Considerable building is being done in Madison in the way of business structures, and plans are making for the erection of others in the near future.

Living Pictures by Plainfield Women.

Seats were put on sale today, in Leggett's and Reynolds's pharmacies, for the Tableaux Phantasma to be produced in Music Hall this week. Three performances are to be given, and the hall is sure to be crowded at every performance. Plainfield society women will be the artists, and the wonderful spectacle of seeing them posed in lovely living pictures and then vanishing into thin air will win the admiration and plaudits of all. The beneficial object of the entertainment adds to its merit.

The Bicycle as a Thief-Evader.

As the delivery boy of Hillier & Co. was making his rounds on East Fifth street Friday afternoon he had a startling experience. A man who had evidently been watching him making collections stopped him and asked him for 10 cents. The lad refused, and the man made a sudden grab to secure the boy and his money. The youth was too quick, however, and jumped on his wheel, on which he had been leaning, and whizzed back to the office.

Caterer Werts.

The Country Club and other Plainfield friends of Max Werts of the Union County Country Club are glad that although he is to leave the club, having resigned the stewardship, he will remain in Plainfield and be prepared to cater to their gastronomic desires with his accustomed satisfactory skill. He will open an establishment on West Front street July 1.

A YOUNG GIRL'S FORTUNE.

AN INTERESTING SKETCH.

Nothing appeals so strongly to a mother's affection as her daughter just budding into womanhood. Following is an instance: "Our daughter, Blanche, now 15 years of age, had been terribly afflicted with nervousness, and had lost the entire use of her right arm. She was in such a condition that we had to keep her from school and abandon her music lessons. In fact, we feared St. Vitus dance, and are positive but for an invaluable remedy she would have had that terrible affliction. We had employed physicians, but she received no benefit from them. The first of last August she weighed but 75 pounds, and although she has taken only three bottles of Nervine she now weighs 106 pounds; her nervousness and symptoms of St. Vitus dance are entirely gone, she attends school regularly, and studies with comfort and ease. She has recovered complete use of her arm, her appetite is splendid, and no money could procure for our daughter the health Dr. Miles' Nervine has brought her.

When my brother recommended the remedy I had no faith in patent medicines, and would not listen to him, but as a last resort he sent us a bottle, we began giving it to Blanche, and the effect was almost immediate."—Mrs. R. R. Bullock, Brighton, N. Y.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is positively free from opiates or dangerous drugs.

ALLIGATOR IN THE GARDEN.

East Second Street Excited Over a Fierce Saurian's Intrusion.

Mrs. John J. Kenney of 358 East Second street went into the garden to gather lettuce at 11 yesterday morning. An alligator raised its head from its hiding place among the plants and opened its mouth with a fierce expression. Mrs. Kenney ran to the house.

Then Mr. Kenney ventured out very carefully and selected a large beanpole. Armed with this he tracked the alligator to a heap of logs. The reptile took refuge next to the fence and made a strong fight. With the aid of his father-in-law, Mr. Kenney finally caged his visitor in a basket.

The alligator was about two feet long. The owner was found to be a neighbor who had secured it from Capt. Wm. Hand of Park avenue. It had been missing three weeks.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the one positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio. Sold by druggists, 75c.

LIVING WITHOUT LYING.

American People a Nation of Story-Tellers from Force of Habit.

Rev. Charles E. Herring, of the First Presbyterian Church, preached last evening on the subject "Can We Live Without Lying". All sides of the question were fully discussed.

Mr. Herring said the United States was a "nation of liars". Not that the people were so much disposed to be wicked in this direction, but that lying had become a habit so fixed that people committed the sin unconsciously. He defined and gave illustrations of the conventional, the conversational and the commercial lie, and touched upon the sub-divisions of lies according to size. The "delighted to see you" and "not at home" lies of society, the extravagant expressions and exaggerated stories of conversation, and the implied or indirect lies of trade, were all considered and condemned.

The Bible's position on the sin was contrasted with the statements of authorities that a lie was not a sin unless somebody was injured by the telling of it. Mr. Herring said that a man could keep from lying by the grace of God and in concluding advised his hearers to constantly guard their tongues against temptation.

Stolen by a Passer-by.

Mrs. Killoran of Cottage place delivered the week's wash to a customer on Fifth street near Madison avenue, Saturday night, and left an umbrella on the steps while she went inside. When she came out of the house the umbrella was gone.

SHIPS THAT PASS IN THE NIGHT.

By BEATRICE HARRADEN.

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS CHAPTERS.

Bernardine Holme is the niece of a London shopkeeper. She is intellectual, writes for the press, and takes part in political discussions. Finally she loses her health and goes to a hotel for consumptives in Switzerland. There she meets the Disagreeable Man, Robert Allitsen. He is a misanthrope, with a pessimism more gloomy than that of Schopenhauer, and he proceeds to fulfil his self-imposed mission by trying to convince Bernardine that life is not worth living. But his morbid cynicisms serve to make the young woman more cheerful and contented with her lot and with the world in general. Chapter III—Bernardine meets a worldly and selfish rich woman named Mrs. Reffold, whose husband is a hopeless invalid, and teaches her a lesson. IV—The love affair of the postman and his sweetheart. V—A beautiful allegory teaching that happiness and contentment are in everyday life and in daily effort and not afar off. VII—Bernardine promises to visit the invalid husband of the beautiful Mrs. Reffold. VII, VIII and IX—Bernardine visits the invalid husband of Mrs. Reffold and so sheds the light of her cheerfulness that the poor neglected man thinks she is a "little brick." Meantime the Disagreeable Man continues disagreeable and incidentally informs Bernardine that he has made "the one great sacrifice"—that is to say, he was living for his mother's sake when he would prefer death. This excites Bernardine's admiration. XII—The Disagreeable Man lends Bernardine a photographic camera, for he himself is fond of photography. XIII—The Disagreeable Man seems to be getting a little more cheerful, owing to Bernardine's influence, but it is against his will. Mr. Reffold chides his wife for her neglect of him.

Continued.

"Neglected?" she said in some surprise. "What do you mean? I thought you had everything you wanted. The nurse brought excellent testimonials. I was careful in the choice of her. You have never complained before."

He turned wearily on his side and made no answer, and for some time there was silence between them. Then he watched her as she bent over her embroidery.

"You are very beautiful, Winifred," he said quietly, "but you are a selfish woman. Has it ever struck you that you are selfish?"

Mrs. Reffold gave no reply, but she made a resolution to write to her particular friend at Cannes and confide to her how very trying her husband had become.

"I suppose it is part of his illness," she thought meekly. "But it is hard to have to bear it."

And Mrs. Reffold pitied herself profoundly. She stitched sincere pity for herself into that piece of embroidery.

"I remember you telling me," continued Mr. Reffold, "that sick people repelled you. That was when I was strong and vigorous. But since I have been ill I have often recalled your words. Poor Winifred! You did not think then that you would have an invalid husband on your hands. Well, you were not intended for sickroom nursing, and you have not tried to be what you were not intended for. Perhaps you were right, after all."

"I don't know why you should be so unkind today," Mrs. Reffold said, with pathetic patience. "I can't understand you. You have never spoken like this before."

"No," he said, "but I have thought like this before. All the hours that you have left me lonely I have been thinking like this, with my heart full of bitterness against you, until that little girl, that Little Brick, came along."

After that it was some time before he spoke. He was thinking of his Little Brick, and of all the pleasant hours he had spent with her, and of the kind, wise words she had spoken to him, an ignorant fellow. She was something like a companion.

So he went on thinking, and Mrs. Reffold went on embroidering. She was now feeling herself to be almost a heroine. It is a very easy matter to make oneself into a heroine or a martyr. Selfish, neglectful? What did he mean? Oh, it was just part of his illness. She must go on bearing her burden as she had borne it these many months. Her rightful position was in a London ballroom, instead of which she had to be shut up in an Alpine village—a hard lot. It was little enough pleasure she could get, and apparently her husband grudged her that.

His manner to her this afternoon was not such as to encourage her to stay in from her drive on another occasion. Tomorrow she would go sledging.

That flash of light which reveals ourselves to ourselves had not yet come to Mrs. Reffold.

She looked at her husband and thought from his restfulness that he had gone to sleep, and she was just beginning to write to that particular friend at Cannes to tell her what a trial she was undergoing when Mr. Reffold called her to his side.

"Winifred," he said gently, and there was tenderness in his voice and love written on his face, "Winifred, I am sorry if I have been sharp to you. Little Brick says we mustn't come down like sledge hammers on each other, and that is what I have been doing this afternoon. Perhaps I have been hard. I am such an illness to myself that I must be an illness to others too. And you weren't meant for this sort of thing, were you? You are a bright, beautiful creature, and I am an unfortunate dog not to have been able to make you happier. I know I am irritable. I can't help myself; indeed I can't."

This great, long fellow was so yearning for love and sympathy.

What would it not have been to him if she had gathered him into her arms and soothed all his irritability and suffering with her love?

But she pressed his hand and kissed him lightly on the cheek and told him that he had been a little sharp, but that she quite understood, and that she was not hurt. Her charm of manner gave him some satisfaction. And when Bernardine came in a few minutes later she found Mr. Reffold looking happier and more contented than she had ever seen him. Mrs. Reffold, who was relieved at the interruption, received Bernardine warmly, though there was a certain amount of shyness which she had never been able to conquer in Bernardine's presence. There was something in the younger woman which quelled Mrs. Reffold. It may have been some mental quality, or it may have been her boots.

"Little Brick," said Mr. Reffold, "isn't it nice to have Winifred here? And I have been so disagreeable and snappish."

"Oh, we won't say anything about that now," said Mrs. Reffold, smiling sweetly.

"But I've said I am sorry," he continued. "And one can't do more."

"No," said Bernardine, who was amused at the notion of Mr. Reffold apologizing to Mrs. Reffold, and of Mrs. Reffold posing as the gracious forgiver, "one can't do more." But she could not control her feelings, and she laughed.

"You seem rather merry this afternoon," Mr. Reffold said in a reproachful tone of voice.

"Yes," she said. And she laughed again. Mrs. Reffold's forgiving graciousness had altogether upset her gravity.

"You might at least tell us the joke," Mrs. Reffold said.

Bernardine looked at her hopelessly and laughed again.

"I have been developing photographs all the afternoon," she said, "and I suppose the closeness of the air and the badness of my negatives have been too much for me. Anyway I know I must seem very rude."

She recovered herself after that and tried hard not to think of Mrs. Reffold as the dispenser of forgiveness, although it was some time before she could look at her hostess without wishing to laugh. The corners of her mouth twitched, and her brown eyes twinkled mischievously, and she spoke very rapidly, making fun of her first attempts at photography and criticising herself so comically that both Mr. and Mrs. Reffold were much amused.

All the same Bernardine was relieved when Mrs. Reffold went to fetch some silks and left her with Mr. Reffold.

"I am very happy this afternoon, Little Brick," he said to her. "My wife has been sitting with me. But instead of enjoying the pleasure as I ought to have done I began to find fault with her. I don't know how long I should not have gone on grumbling but that I suddenly recollected what you taught me—that we were not to come down like sledge hammers on each other's failings. When I remembered that, it was quite easy to forgive all the neglect and thoughtlessness. Since you have talked to me, Little Brick, everything has become easier to me."

"It is something in your own mind which has worked this," she said, "your own kind, generous mind, and you put it down to my words."

But he shook his head.

"If I knew of any poor unfortunate devil that wanted to be eased and comforted," he said, "I should tell him about you, Little Brick. You have been very good to me. You may be clever, but you have never worried my stupid brain with too much scholarship. I'm just an ignorant chap, and you've never let me feel it."

He took her hand and raised it reverently to his lips.

CONTINUED TOMORROW.

A SURGEON'S KNIFE

gives you a feeling of horror and dread. There is no longer necessity for its use in many diseases formerly regarded as incurable without cutting.

The Triumph of Conservative Surgery is well illustrated by the fact that RUPTURE or Breach, is now radically cured without the knife and without pain. Clumsy, chafing trusses can be thrown away! They never cure but often induce inflammation, strangulation and death.

TUMORS Ovarian, Fibroid (Uterine) and many others, are now removed without the perils of cutting operations.

PILE TUMORS, however large, Fistula and other diseases of the lower bowel, are permanently cured without pain or resort to the knife.

STONE in the Bladder, no matter how large, is crushed, pulverized, washed out and perfectly removed without cutting.

STRICTURE of Urinary Passage is cutting in hundreds of cases. For pamphlet, references and all particulars, send 10 cents (in stamps) to World's Dispensary Medical Association, 663 Main St., Buffalo, N. Y.

Don't Hesitate, but Call and Be Convinced That Every Statement We Make Is True.

To those who do not already know that there is established in Newark, at 105 Halsey street, a physician who stands in the foremost rank of his profession, who is indorsed by the leading colleges of the country and who can prove by witnesses right here in Newark (not by one, but by hundreds) that he has succeeded in curing cases that have been utterly given up by other physicians, and good ones too. To those who do not these facts we state that any person, rich or poor, old or young, is welcome here and receive examination and advice free of charge.

Thousands praise the day they came to us for treatment. There is no guess work, no experimenting, no painful operation. No matter how difficult the case, no matter how much of the physician's time it may consume, the diagnosis will not only be thorough, it will be absolutely free. There is no taint of quackery or deception; no claim or statement is made that is not borne out by facts and living witnesses.

Mrs. Abby A. Ray, late of 86 Grove street, East Orange, who now lives at 400 Ellmore street, Escanaba, Mich., writes, under date of January 12: "The medicine arrived this morning and I am so glad it came. I am almost out, and it has helped me so much and I am so much pleased with its wonderful effort on my broken down system that I would like to testify to your great success in my case. I am feeling as well now, in fact better, than I had ever hoped to again."

This is one of many letters that we receive daily. We have the originals at our office and if you wish you may see them. Another thing: We never publish or reveal a patient's name unless they so desire.

DR. STARKWEATHER.

There is not a penny to pay for the fullest medical advice. Dr. Starkweather is a graduate of the Berkshire Medical College, Massachusetts, and of the Medico-Chirurgical College of Philadelphia; endorsed also by the College of Physicians and Surgeons and Bellevue Medical College of New York. We invite all sufferers from whatever cause to call at our office, No. 105 Halsey street, Newark, where Dr. Starkweather is in attendance daily to give examination and advice entirely free of charge. It matters not what the disease, or how many years you have suffered, in spite of means adopted in your behalf, a visit to this office and the privileges of the same will cost you nothing, and may be the means of saving your life. We prepare all our medicines and prescribe the remedies indicated. This plan enables the patient to receive directly from us such remedies as will produce the results promised.

Our office is open daily from 10 a. m. to 9 p. m. Sundays 4 to 6 p. m.

Those living at a distance can consult the Doctor by letter.

DR. STARKWEATHER'S HOME REMEDIES, No. 105 Halsey street, Newark, N. J.

HEAD AND SHOULDERS above every other blood-purifier, stands Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. See the evidence of it. It's sold in every case, on trial. If it ever fails to benefit or cure, you have your money back.

In restoring your strength, when you're "run-down" and "used-up;" in cleansing your blood from every impurity, whether it's a simple eruption or the worst scrofula; and in building up wholesome flesh, when you're thin and weak—there's nothing to equal the "Discovery." In every disease caused by a torpid liver or impure blood, it's the only guaranteed remedy.

MRS. ELIZABETH J. BUSHWAW, of Sidney, Ohio, writes: "My little boy was so afflicted with liver trouble and other diseases that our family physician said he could not live. In fact, they all thought so. I gave him Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and Pellets and they saved his life. We have used the 'Discovery' for throat and bronchial trouble, and found such perfect relief that we can recommend it very highly."

COTTOLENE IS MADE TO EAT

Made from clarified oil, expressed from Cotton Seed—as pure and golden as the Southern Sunshine which produces it.

For convenience in handling, there is added to this oil enough beef suet to make it a semi-solid.

The combination of these two pure natural products makes Cottolene, a shortening and cooking fat, with which in healthfulness, cleanliness, flavor and economy, nothing in the world can compare.

RIVERS STILL BOOMING

Many Pennsylvania Towns Almost Submerged.

Waters at Some Points Higher Than During the Flood of 1889—Communication With Williamsport Reestablished—Several Lives Lost at Pottsville and Other Fatalities Reported at Harrisburg—Houses Flooded, Business at a Standstill, Roads Washed Out, Railroad Traffic Delayed and Bridges Swept Away—Floods in Western New York—Effect of the Storm in New Jersey.

PHILADELPHIA, May 22.—The Schuylkill river is 22 feet above the low water mark at Manayunk, a suburb of this city, and several of the streets are flooded. Every mill along the banks of the river is flooded in the lower story and a general shut down has occurred. The Pencoyd Iron works, which are situated on comparatively high grounds, are flooded and operations are suspended. The river is rising at the rate of seven inches per hour and the overflow is believed to be the greatest since 1869.

The flood in the Schuylkill river is gathering strength and volume with each hour and the river is raging like a mountain torrent. The water is three feet deep over the tracks of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad and two feet of water covers the ground floor of the company's station at Twenty-third and Chestnut streets. The six feet of water in the B. & O. tunnel between Arch and Springgarden streets and all travel south is interrupted over the road.

Above south street bridge a fleet of schooners were moored at the wharves and one of them was torn from its moorings by the fierce current and it swept down upon another schooner and within a few minutes six schooners and a canal boat were whirling down the river in a tangled mass towards the bridge.

The bridge tender saw the coming danger and threw the draw open in the hope that the vessels would pass through with the current. The floating mass, however, struck an abutment of the bridge and jammed against the other and came to a stop. The schooners are badly damaged and are still jammed together against the pier and all are in danger of capsizing.

TRAINS DELAYED AT READING.

People in the Lower Section of the City Abandoning Their Homes.

READING, May 22—The Philadelphia express which arrived here last night ran through three feet of water, and no more trains are able to get through, as it is impossible to pass through with safety. The Schuylkill at this point is now 20 feet above low water mark and is still rising at the rate of about eight inches an hour.

Trees, outbuildings and shanties are passing down the stream.

A passenger who came through from Mahonoy City via Pottsville says that the flood north of Broad mountain is terrible and the damage to the collieries will be very great.

The Pennsylvania tracks above Reading are flooded to the depth of three feet, and passenger and freight trains have been abandoned for the present. The water is now over the tracks in front of the Pennsylvania station at the foot of Penn street, this city.

The people residing in the lower section of the city are greatly excited and many have temporarily vacated their dwellings for fear some of the dams north of Reading may break and thereby cause a sudden rise and cut off their escape.

The train which left here at 6:30 last night for Philadelphia was obliged to tie up at Bridgeport.

Barnum's show, which became stranded here by the storm finally got away last night, going direct to Wilkesbarre via Allentown. They were to have exhibited at Sunbury to-day.

SITUATION AT POTTSVILLE.

Reports of Loss of Life Now Beginning to Come In.

POTTSVILLE, May 22.—The storm continued as fiercely as ever throughout this county all last night with no signs of abatement. Every colliery of the Reading company is idle. The collieries of the Lehigh Valley Coal company and all of the individual operations are also filled with water. The extent of the damage will certainly go over $100,000. The trains on all of the railroads have been much delayed and the officials are afraid of the bridges.

The Schuylkill river was never so high as it is now.

Reports of loss of loss of life are now coming in. John Brown, aged 17 years, was drowned while trying to cross a creek at Forestville. Edward Evans, an old man, is reported drowned near Heckscherville. A big Gypsy camp near Tremont was washed out and several members are missing.

To prevent the blockading of the culverts and creeks many bridges have been torn down and the obstructions removed so as to give free passage to the flood. The Reading railroad has either lost completely or had badly damaged at least 20 bridges in this one county, besides much havoc with embankments.

Railroad traffic is at a standstill,

DESTITUTION AND DESTRUCTION

The Whole of the Susquehanna Valley Inundated.

LEWISBURG, May 22.—The sweeping torrents that bounded over the banks of the Susquehanna river continues to rise at the rate of eight inches an hour, and is now higher than it was in 1889, and the heavy rains will no doubt swell the deluge at least two feet higher.

The whole Susquehanna valley is inundated and the destruction and destitution is widespread.

Lewisburg is situated on high ground and has not been damaged with the exception of some buildings on the surrounding flats. The water works, gas works, and electric light plant which are located along the river, have been stopped and until the flood recedes the town will be without water or light of any kind.

A train of freight cars has been placed on the bridge, the floor of which is almost touched by the water.

The town is entirely surrounded by water.

The damage along the Lewisburg & Tyrone railroad that runs from here to Bellefonte is very great. Hundreds of families are homeless and destitute of provisions and with the waters rapidly rising a feeling of horror prevails.

Millions of feet of logs and cut lumber, and buildings of every kind are sweeping past here in the river. Business has been suspended.

Nearing the Flood of '89.

SUNBURY, May 22.—The Susquehanna river is steadily rising and it is already over the banks and flooding the town as it did in 1889. Thousands of feet of logs and sawed timbers are passing down the river at this place from the Williamsport boom that broke last night and from points west of there. Great interest is centered on the Shamokin branch of the Northern Central railroad where it crosses Spring Run. A wicket at that point is kept closed to prevent water from backing up and flooding the eastern portion of Sunbury and the railroad is in danger of giving way under the immense pressure. Many people have moved their household effects and supplies to their upper stories where they are now living. No trains can run to Williamsport on either the Erie or Reading road from here. No train on the Reading road has run west of West Milton since the midnight train Sunday night. Shamokin creek, which empties into the river below Sunbury, is overflowing its banks along the valley. The river here has nearly reached the point in the flood of 1889, and is still rising.

South Harrisburg Flooded.

HARRISBURG, May 22. — At Juniatta bridge and points west of this city, persons living near the river have left their homes having been compelled in several instances to drive their live stock through the rapidly advancing water. No lives have been lost. Should the water go much higher the electric railway plants will be compelled to shut down and the operation of the lines will suspend. All the industrial plants in South Harrisburg have shut down on account of the high water. All trains are late.

Owners of wagons are getting $10 each for removing pianos from flood threatened houses.

It is rumored that five men were drowned at Clark's ferry.

Waters Rising at Easton.

EASTON, May 22.—The Lehigh river is rising rapidly. The warehouses along the stream were emptied of goods on the ground floors before they became submerged. The Delaware is rising slowly. Valuable lumber is continually passing Easton from the upper Lehigh and the new road along the river in course of construction between Easton and Chain dam by the Easton Electric Railway company, has been undermined and ruined.

Damage Not Great at Williamsport.

PHILADELPHIA, May 22.—Communication with Williamsport has been restored. Although Williamsport is more or less submerged, the damage does not appear to be very great and no lives are known to be lost. The greatest sufferers were the lumbermen, who lost heavily by the sweeping away of their booms. The water there is falling. Railroad traffic may be resumed to-day between Williamsport and Canandaigua.

At Wilkesbarre.

WILKESBARRE, May 22.—The Susquehanna river at this point is rising at the rate of a foot an hour and is now eighteen feet above low water mark. At Nescopeck, ten miles from here, the creeks are swollen and trains on the Pennsylvania railroad are being held until the bridges can be tested to see if they are thoroughly safe. Throughout the country districts great damage has been done to the crops by the strong winds.

Great Damage at Norristown.

NORRISTOWN, May 22.—The Schuylkill river here is thirty-two feet above high water mark and rain came down in torrents all night. Mill owners along the river are heavy losers. Barbadoes island, which is a mile long, is almost covered with water and crops are ruined. The Reading railroad between here and Philadelphia has four feet of water over the tracks. All trains have been suspended.

Living in Second Stories.

DUNCANNON, May 22.—The Susquehanna river is so high here that Market street residents have moved out of their houses which the water now occupies. The river is rising at the rate of six inches per hour. Duncan's island is altogether under water and its citizens have moved to the second story of their houses for safety.

Higher Than the Flood of '89.

LANCASTER, May 22.—The Susquehanna river at Marietta is higher than the flood of 1889 and still rising at the rate of four inches an hour. The river and canal are one and the houses on Front street have been deserted by the occupants.

IN NEW JERSEY.

The Damage By the Storm Especially Severe Along the Coast.

NEWARK, N. J., May 22.—The heavy rains of the past few days have caused all streams in this state to rise rapidly and damage is reported from many places. Along the coast the storm has been particularly severe. Atlantic City, Cape May, Asbury Park, Long Branch and Seabright all report high winds and heavy rains and consequently damage to beach property. No serious wrecks are reported.

At Lambertville the Delaware river is rising about eight inches an hour and people near its banks are preparing to move out.

The whole country around Salem has the appearance of a sea. Farmers will suffer heavy, as their early planting will be washed out.

Along the coast railroad traffic is either entirely suspended or delayed by wash outs or sand covered the tracks.

Wilmington Lowlands Flooded:

WILMINGTON, Del., May 22.—As a result of the storm this city from the east to the southwest is surrounded by flooded lowlands. The overflow is the greatest in many years. Seventy feet of an embankment on the Newark & Delaware City railroad was washed away and the running of trains has stopped.

Fear Foul Play.

CHICAGO, May 22.—The police authorities firmly believe that William Simsrott, grand secretary and treasurer of the Switchmen's Mutual Aid association, has met with foul play and offer a reward of for the recovery of his body, dead or alive. His accounts are correct.

Trains Taken Off.

MASSILON, O., May 22.—The Wheeling & Lake Erie railroad has taken off passenger trains and all except local freight trains, on account of the scarcity of coal.

Four Votes Recorded to Put Iron on Free List.

Debate on One Item in the Iron and Steel Schedule Lasted the Whole Day—House Decides That the "Salary Docking" Law Has Been Repealed, But the Speaker Obstinate.

WASHINGTON, May 22.—The senate worked under the eight hour law yesterday. It was in session from 10 a. m. till 6 p. m., and all but half an hour of the time was given to the tariff bill. The three reserved items in the glass and china schedule were again postponed, and the consideration of the iron and steel schedule (C) was entered upon.

The first item in that schedule is an amendment of the finance committee to lay a duty of 40 cents a ton on iron ore. The debate on that question lasted the whole day and was, for the most part, of an interesting and somewhat exciting character.

On the democratic side it was confined to Senators Vest, Hill, Butler and Brice; on the republican side it took in Senators Sherman, Platt, Hale, Aldrich and others, while the populist party was represented by Mr. Peffer.

An amendment offered by the latter to put iron ore on the free list was voted down, with only four votes in its favor—those of Senators Allen, Hill, Kyle and Peffer. An amendment to increase the duty on iron ore from 40 to 60 cents a ton was pending at the adjournment.

House of Representatives.

Messrs. Bell (dem., Tex.) and Childs (rep., Ill.) found it impossible to secure unanimous consent for present considerations of bills to add another story to the Fort Worth postoffice at a cost not exceeding $50,000, and to appoint an additional judge for the United States court for the northern district of Illinois, and then the house in committee of the whole took up the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill under the five minute rule.

During the afternoon fifteen pages of the 128 in the bill were disposed of, with but few amendments. The most important of these, was a declaration introduced by Representative Hayes (dem., Ia.) of the sense of the house that section forty revised statutes regulating the pay of members had been repealed. This was the law under which the sergeant-at-arms of the house, by direction of the democratic caucus, has been deducting the salaries of members when they were absent, except in cases of illness. The speaker, however, says he will not be bound by the house's action. He takes the ground that the statute is still in force, and that it shall be strictly enforced until it is repealed in words. An amendment offered by Representative Boatner (dem., La.) directing deductions of salary to be made in cases of unexcused absences, except for sickness, was ruled out on a point of order.

Hypothecated Recalled Bonds.

SEDALIA, Mo., May 22. — In 1883 the board of education issued $40,000 of 6 per cent. bonds, later calling them in an putting out others in their stead. The old bonds were not destroyed, and Cashier Thompson, of the defunct First National bank, hypothecated them with Kansas City, Newark, N. J., and West Chester, Pa., capitalists and bankers. The cashier kept all knowledge of the transaction from the public by paying the interest on the coupons as it fell due. The holders of the bonds will not lose anything, as they will be able to recover the full amount. Government detectives are close on defaulter Thompson's trail.

Speaker Holt Will Resign.

TRENTON, N. J., May 22.—John I. Holt, of Passaic, speaker of the house of assembly, will on Friday or Saturday of this week, when the session of the legislature comes to an end, resign as a member of that body. He has learned since his appointment as riparian commissioner that he cannot hold both offices at the same time, hence he will sever his connection with the legislature.

New Trial for Dr. Wernt.

PHILADELPHIA, May 22.—The supreme court has granted a new trial to Dr. Wm. B. Wernt, who was recently convicted of manslaughter and sentenced to six years' imprisonment for the killing of Patrick Gallagher during a primary election fight.

President Shooting Snipe.

HATTERAS, N. C., May 22.—The Violet, having on board the presidential party, arrived at Bodie's island from the across the sound, and the party disembarked and are now shooting snipe and marsh birds along the shore.

Pennsylvania K. of P.

PITTSBURG, May 22.—The forty-first annual conclave of the Grand Commandery of Pennsylvania Knights Templar opened in Pittsburg this morning.

BACK TOWARD BARBARISM.

King Alexander Abolishes the Liberal Constitution.

BELGRADE, May 22.—King Alexander has accomplished another coup d'etat. A royal proclamation just issued abolishes the constitution of 1888 and restores that of 1869, giving the king the right to appoint one-third of the members of the chamber of deputies. With the restoration of the old constitution the secret ballot ceases and the electoral system of scrutin de liste is abrogated. The king has taken this step upon the advice of his father, ex-King Milan. Under the orders of the king Premier Nicolajevias will at once reorganize the cabinet. The abolition of the constitution of 1888 revokes all laws enacted under that instrument, which include the guarantee of freedom of the press, the right to hold public assemblies, and to maintain secret and other societies and the privilege of local administration. These laws are replaced by the more stringent ones under the constitution of 1869. The skuptschine will be immediately dissolved.

The radicals are intensely excited over the action of the king, and draconic measures will be required to preserve order. The proclamation of the king putting the new order of things into operation was read to the troops at 4 o'clock in the morning. A number of military officers who are suspected of having affiliations with the radicals have been placed on the retired list. Many of the radical leaders in Belgrade have already become fugitives, fearful that imprisonment or something worse may befall them. The prefects throughout the kingdom have been ordered to disarm the radical peasantry without delay. The radical malcontents, though greatly excited, are paralyzed by the suddenness and thoroughness of the king's action, and though there will undoubtedly be much local disorder it is not probable that civil war will ensue.

POSITIVE TESTIMONY.

Major Buttz Offered $75,000 to Senator Kyle for His Vote.

WASHINGTON, May 22.—When the bribery committee took a recess Senator Gray, speaking for the committee, said that as soon as this case was concluded the committee would print the testimony and lay it before the senate. The fact that a direct offer of money was made has been proven by one witness at least. Mr. Hunton knew nothing except heresay evidence, but told the committee what he had learned from his son, Theodore Hunton, jr. His son was next put on the stand, and told the committee how he had been approached by Major Buttz and offered a sum of money if he would induce his father to vote against the pending tariff bill. Mr. Kyle was on the stand longer than anyone else, but it was developed that the offer to bribe him had been made to him directly by the man charged with the offense. Senator Kyle testified that Mr. Buttz had offered him money for his vote, saying that he could have $75,000, and made an offer of $14,000 down.

California Wheat.

SAN FRANCISBO, May 22.—The outlook for wheat in California is bad. Conservative experts do not think that the crop will be over half an average yield, because of the long drought in February and April. For seven weeks not a drop of rain fell, and, as this dry weather came at a critical time, it killed much grain, or stunted it so that it is good only for feed. Throughout southern California the wheat is bad, as the drought was excessive. In the northern counties there will be about half a crop. Rain fell last week and slight rains fell a day or so ago at several interior points, but these showers have helped fruit only. Altogether, this is the worst wheat year California has had since 1877.

Man in Female Attire.

NEW YORK, May 22.—A man in woman's clothing, and having the appearance of a respectable widow, was arraigned at the Tombs police court. He said he was Charles Williams, 45 years old, of Newark. Williams was loitering around the waiting room of the 39th street ferry at the foot of Whitehall street. Several ladies complained of his actions in the toilet rooms, and he was arrested. Justice Martin committed him to the city prison for six months, and said that he regretted that he couldn't make it Sing Sing for ten years. Williams claims Syracuse, N. Y., as his birthplace, and admits being arrested there for the same offense. The police think he is a clever pickpocket.

Boston Unemployed.

BOSTON, May 22.—At a meeting of unemployed on Boston common a resolution was passed deploring the action of the governor's council in rejecting the name of James F. Carey, of Haverhill, as one of the commission on unemployed, and requesting that the governor make public the reasons for non-confirmation. They claim that the unemployed are entitled to at least one representative on the commission, and they recommend to the governor the following names from which to select such representative: Henry L. Abrahams, of Boston; Boyal B. Young, of Revere; T. T. Pomeroy, of Haverill, and they strongly urge the reconsideration of the name of James F. Carey.

Strike Ended at Paterson.

PATERSON, N. J., May 22.—The ribbon-weavers of Doherty & Wadsworth's mill returned to work, ending their strike of three months' standing. The weavers, who, owing to the dulness of the trade, were unable to secure employment, held a meeting to try to stir up another strike, but there is no sign of their efforts bearing fruit.

Republican Police Commissioner.

NEW YORK, May 22.—Mayor Gilroy has appointed Charles H. Murray, a republican, police commissioner, to take the place of Commissioner McLean, whose term expired May 1. The term for Murray is six years. He was the state supervisor of the United States census of 1890.

Snow in Kentucky.

CINCINNATI, May 22.—Snow storms are reported in various parts of Kentucky. In some places it is six inches deep.

CHAFING, BUT DEFIANT

Coxey Doesn't Enjoy Life in Washington Jail.

Browne Considers Himself a Martyr and Poor Old Christopher Columbus Jones Has Nothing to Say—The "Army" Will Probably Go to Pieces.

Coxey Issues an Address.

WASHINGTON, May 22.—Although Jacob S. Coxey, Carl Browne and Christopher Columbus Jones have only spent one night of their 20-day sentences in jail the former is already chafing under confinement. Browne is well content in the belief, or feigned belief, that he is making of himself a martyr, while poor old Jones is gloomy and has nothing to say.

Coxey is bitter in his denunciation of the treatment he and his companions in trouble received after sentence was passed. That he was denied the privilege of riding in his carriage to the jail and was compelled to make the journey in the prison van with a dozen other prisoners, both black and white, and that he and his companions were handcuffed, while the others were not, was particularly galling to the commander-in-chief of the commonweal forces of North America.

The proceedings preliminary to the passing of sentence were in line with the series of extraordinary incidents that have marked the whole trial.

Judge Miller said he had come to court at some personal sacrifice on account of a personal bereavement (the judge's brother died Sunday) and then asked the usual question, whether the defendants had anything to say why sentence should not be passed.

Representative Hudson, of Kansas, one of Coxey's counsel, immediately rose and delivered a political address.

As an American citizen, he said, he could not help stating that he had considerable contempt for the government in its prosecution of this case. Every point had been decided against the defendants. On the day they were at the capitol there were thousands of people on the grass. It was a little difficult for the untrained mind to understand how the congress of the United States could set aside grounds from which peaceable people were kept out.

"You know and I know," Hudson said, "that he (Coxey) was not arrested and convicted because he stepped on the grass, but because he carried a banner in opposition to the political ideas of those who are powerful in the administration of this government. They have demanded the conviction of these men."

"Who are they?" asked Judge Miller.

"The parties who are dominant, who are all-powerful," answered Mr. Hudson.

"Who are these myths, these ghosts?" asked Judge Miller, again.

"Those who are in favor of a gold standard."

"If that is so they haven't reached this court," was the judge's reply.

Mr. Hudson launched off into politics and was taken to task by the judge. "The sentence of this court," he said, "will make people think this government is undertaking a policy of suppression."

"Fortunately," said the judge, "the courts pronounce sentence without taking into consideration what people think."

Mr. Hyman, of the defense, made an appeal for a nominal sentence and then Carl Browne had his say. He began by withdrawing the appeals made in his behalf and said he had none to make. He had asked for a jury trial but he now believed he made a mistake. "I do not believe," he said in a loud voice, "that the people of the United States believe that such a lot of filth and stagnation exists as is in the courts here. I do not mean your honor, you are different."

Then Browne proceeded in his usual blasphemous strain for some time comparing the jury to those who had participated in the crucifixion. He finally said he believed the few hours or days or months he would pass in jail would do more to help the cause than his feebie voice could. In conclusion he said he asked for no mercy but would accept his punishment cheerfully.

Coxey rose next. It was the first time, he said, that he had ever stood before a court for sentence and it was a pleasing thought that he was innocent of the charge. He told how the arrest was made and maintained that he was not walking on the grass and carried no banner. But he was not surprised that the jury brought in such a verdict and he blamed the newspapers for it in representing his commonweal as a band of desperadoes.

"I do not appeal for mercy because I have committed no crime," he said, "but I do ask for justice."

The assistant district attorney asked the judge to impose a jail sentence and not impose a fine, which would be paid by the contributions of ignorant men.

Judge Miller entered into a long review of the case. He arraigned Coxey severely. There were no politics in the case, no prosecution of Mr. Coxey for his ideas. Mr. Coxey must confine his methods of salvation to the law of the land. It was a matter of congratulation that only 300 or 400 men responded to his call to march on Washington. "I thank God working people or the suffering people did not respond," said the court. Coxey had proposed to bring 100,000 idle people here to set an example by breaking a law. "Who in the world should be punished for violation of the law, if you should not, Mr. Coxey?" he asked.

"I did not violate it," said Coxey.

"You have your head so full of your schemes that you think anything that stands in your way is wrong," said the judge. "What right of yours has been abridged in the District of Columbia?" asked the court.

Judge Miller referred to Coxey's "absolute folly," arraigned him as a "dreamer," and said "I don't know of any case where the court would be more justified in passing the maximum sentence, but I am not going to do it." Then the judge told the defendants that he could send them to jail for 120 days and fine them $200 each, but he would not do so. He wished, he said, that Coxey and Browne had so demeaned themselves that more than a nominal sentence would not be necessary, but their demeanor in court had changed this feeling.

Judge Miller then imposed the sentence—twenty days imprisonment in the district jail for all three defendants and $5 fine or ten days additional imprisonment for Coxey and Browne.

The effect of Coxey's conviction on his camp followers, already demoralized by drenching rain storms, insufficient food and shelter and repeated changes of base, will probably be their entire disintegration. Even now the "army" is mostly made up of idle negroes recruited in Washington and Maryland and has scarcely any of its original members left. "Oklahoma Sam" and Jesse Coxey are hunting for one of the malcontents, who had ridden off with a Canadian mare belonging to the "general."

COXEY ISSUES AN ADDRESS.

And Points Out Numerous Misguided Prophecies of the Press.

WASHINGTON, May 22.—Before going to prison Coxey prepared an elaborate proclamation which he has since furnished to the press. One extract will serve as a specimen of the entire production:

"Some newspapers said that we would never leave Massilon, O.; we left. The next said that we would never cross the Pennsylvania line; we crossed. Next, never pass through Pittsburg; we passed. Next, that we were too lazy to climb the Allegheny mountains; we climbed. Next, that we would go to pieces in sparsely supplied surroundings of the capital; the pieces did not go. Next, that the district commissioners would not allow us to march on Pennsylvania avenue; we marched. Next, that we would never have the courage to go on the steps of our nation's home; we went. And were arrested, for what? Exercising our revolution-sire-founded-constitutional right of free speech? Oh, no. They dare not do that, their crack of doom would come too soon if they attempted that, and they knew it, too. Their tactics were to bring odium upon us, and rely upon a servile and soot-scattering press to blacken us."

Kelly's Men at Quincy.

QUINCY, Ill., May 22.—Kelly's army will remain here until to-morrow. The men are comfortably cared for. They came in wet and hungry on their flat boats which were lashed together and towed by a steamer.

MR. POWDERLY'S DISMISSAL.

The Summary Action of the K. of L. Executive Board Denounced.

SCRANTON, Pa., May 22.—General Master Workman Powderly, when seen by a reporter, said that he could not believe that he had been expelled from the Knights of Labor, since the laws of the knights require that charges shall be served and a trial held, all of which has not been done.

Yesterday afternoon a special meeting of District Assembly 16 was held in this city to consider this matter, at which were representatives of seven out of twelve local assemblies. Mr. Powderly was invited to appear and asked to explain his side of the case, which he did with readiness.

With tears in his eyes the ex-general master workman complained of the persecutions to which he has been subjected by his personal enemies and read numerous letters to show his entire innocence of any wrong done by him to the organization of which he was so long the head. He thought it a great hardship that he should have been dismissed from an order which he had faithfully served for 13 years without a trial and without a chance to defend himself.

The knights here are greatly wrought up over Mr. Powderly's dismissal and district assembly 16 passed strong resolutions bearing upon the matter. They regret the action of the general executive board without first giving Mr. Powderly a trial, express their belief in his innocence, and condemn a local morning paper controlled by a knight for reproducing an article from the Philadelphia Times, without printing Mr. Powderly's side of the case.

Republican Member Unseated.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., May 22.—The house sat all day with locked doors and with officers out with warrants for the arrest of absent members to complete a quorum. The democrats wanted the quorum to enable them to unseat Representative Cole, of Pawtucket, a republican, and the republicans kept out of the way to prevent the act. The democrats were successful, the quorum was secured and the resolution was passed unseating Mr. Cole and seating Claude J. Farnsworth.

Feteing the Chicago's Officers.

LONDON, May 22.—The officers of the United States cruiser Chicago have received invitations to visit all the large towns in England. Admiral Erben and Capt. Mahan have accepted invitations to a dinner at the Royal Naval club of London, on June 2. This club is the most conservative one in London. Nobody under the rank of commander can become a member.

Done With Their Old Employes.

CHICAGO, May 22.—The 3,000 former employes in the Pullman works have been paid the nine and a fraction days' wages due them, amounting in each case to $15 or $16. Second Vice President Wickes said this action ended their connection with the company and what they would now do he could not tell.

Plenty of Orders, But No Fuel.

YOUNGSTOWN, O., May 23.—For the first time in twelve years the mills of the Mahoning Valley Iron company are idle. The shut down is occasioned by the fuel famine. The company have plenty of orders, but not a pound of coal.

Local Weather Forecast.

Clearing; east winds; warmer.

THE DAILY PRESS.

A. L. FORCE, - - Publisher and Proprietor.
WALTER IRVING CLARKE, - Managing Editor.

CIRCULATION EXCEEDS THAT OF ALL OTHER PLAINFIELD DAILIES COMBINED.

The Newark News remarks that with 430 new ones on the statute books it will be easier than ever to break laws of New Jersey.

The Elizabeth Herald nominates Frank Bergen for Governor, and says he did more than either Foster Voorhees or Mayor Rankin to save his city from bankruptcy.

It comes high, but it costs you nothing. That elegant cycling supplement tomorrow will be treasured in every Plainfield household, and The Daily Press pays the freight.

Chandler W. Riker, Secretary of the Plainfield Street Railway Company, has been appointed City Counsel of Newark by Mayor Lebkuecher. Newark's a city requiring lots of law, and it needs a smart man to give it—just such a man as Chandler W. Riker. If any man can, he can.

Plainfield ought to feel ashamed of herself when she looks at her own miserable "City Park" and reflects that that pretty, progressive little village of Nutley, over the mountains, is to have a public park twelve acres in extent, and laid out according to plans proposed by a well-known landscape artist of New York. There will be drives, walks, shrubbery and flower-beds, a base-ball diamond, a foot-ball field and tennis courts. Yet Plainfield can raise nothing better than a square plot with scrawny forest trees and a cinder lawn.

When such a thing as the Tableaux Phantasma is to be boomed, the managers look (and look not in vain) to the three daily papers of Plainfield for the liberal and gratuitous use of their columns. But when a programme for the show is to be printed, at a profit to the printer, the order is taken to New York, despite the fact that any one of the local papers could print it in the same style and at the same price as metropolitan job offices. That's patronizing home trade! That's local reciprocity! That's the reward of a local paper for its devotion to its town.

Terse Truth.

(From The Trenton True American.)

The Legislature comes back this week not to pass any public measure, but to continue and enforce its role as an office-grabber.

The public demand for cheaper gas, for the protection of the water supply, for the control of railroad fares and ferriage, has been utterly ignored. The whole energies of the session have been devoted to making places, by the most violent means, for a gang of chronic office seekers and office holders.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

P. Ludwig Conde went to New York this afternoon to embark for Germany.

S. H. Springer and son of the borough are on a business trip to Atlantic Highlands.

Two children of Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Vail of Elmwood place are ill with malarial fever.

Samuel Kinney of Quakertown, Pa., is visiting his son, Matthew Kinney of West Front street.

Miss Munn has returned from Spring Lake for a visit with Miss Morgan, of East Ninth street.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. Ely of Grace Court will return tomorrow after a stay of a week in new York.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Leland of Chicago are visiting Mrs. Leland's mother, Mrs. Firman Walker of East Fifth street.

Policeman Frederickson was again on duty last night, although he has not fully recovered from an attack of squinancy.

George F. Opdyke and family will return from Nazareth, Pa., tomorrow, to reside in their house on West Eighth street.

Leaders in Plainfield's latest and most widely talked of enterprise will illuminate the pages of The Daily Press tomorrow. By their faces and their fruits ye shall know them.

Joe Patterson and Burt Boe are enthusiastic over their recent trip to Washington. They saw all the great sights, and were so popularly received that they may get an official appointment before long.

The floral decorations in Trinity Reformed Church, of late, causing so much approving comment, are the work of Mrs. J. C. Van Dyke, who certainly shows admirable taste in her selection and arrangement of the plants and blooms.

Miss Glenck of Craig place today completed arrangements whereby she will shortly enter Pennington Seminary. She expects to take a six years' course with the intention of going to India as a missionary. Miss Glenck will devote a part of her time in the seminary to teaching shorthand and typewriting.

—Use the best paper first and take enough space to make the ad effective; use all you profitably can in that paper before you consider any other. One good ad beats two poor ones. Two short poles are not as good as one long one when you're after persimmons. The biggest circulation in Plainfield is that of The Press.

Nervous

It's a tonic you want—

Hires' Rootbeer.

This sparkling, exhilarating, and refreshing drink, while being far more agreeable in bouquet and flavor than the finest wine or champagne, is at the same time unlike them, being free from alcohol.

A temperance drink for temperance people, delicious and wholesome as well. Purifies the blood, tickles the palate.

Package makes five gallons.
Ask your storekeeper for it.

Take no substitutes.

Send a-cent stamp to Chas. E. Hires Co., Philadelphia, for beautiful picture cards.

TABLEAUX PHANTASMA.

Society Women to Appear and Vanish in Magical Dissolving Views.

Spirits? Ghosts? Of course there are, and they will be seen by Plainfielders who on Thursday or Friday evening or Friday afternoon of this week go to Music Hall and witness the Phantasma entertainment to be given in aid of the Auxiliary Board of Muhlenberg Hospital.

Under the glare of calcium lights you will see the atmosphere take to itself form and become a picture, beautiful, dazzling and animated with life. and yet, as you gaze upon it, the vision will slowly fade away, and naught but the memory will remain. The effect of a beautiful Sappho walking to the centre of Music Hall stage, assuming a pose upon a pedestal, and, after pausing a moment, vanish into space, even as a beautiful bubble bursts into beauty, and is gone, will startle local amusement lovers. A company of cadets will march into view, perform a few evolutions and presto will be gone without the firing of a shot. These and many things as beautiful and wonderful will be seen at the Phantasma entertainment Thursday evening, and Friday afternoon and evening.

The following gives further particulars:

MUSIC.

Piano Soloist—Miss Ada Marsh.
Soloists—Miss Underwood, Elmer Runyon, David Titsworth, Fred Walz, Laurens Van-Buren.
Orchestra under the direction of Mr. Rogers.

Corporation Notice.

Plainfield, N. J., May 21, 1894.

Notice is hereby given that Frank E. Miller has applied to the Common Council of the city of Plainfield for a license to sell spirituous and fermented liquors at Netherwood Hotel in the Second Ward, which application is signed by

Constantine P. Ralli, A. R. Dyett,
Alfred Cocks, Jeppe Erickson,
John Christianson, Jacob Hanson,
William D. Callahan, George R. Bowen,
George N. Cortwright, Vincent W. Nash,
Christian Sorenson,

citizens and freeholders. All persons knowing of any reason why such license should not be granted are requested to make known the same in writing to the City Clerk on or before the 4th day of June instant.

Done in accordance with the requirements of the "ordinance to license inns and taverns, and to regulate and prohibit the sale of spituous and fermented liquors"

JAMES F MACMURRAY, City Clerk.

The Spring House Cleaning

Wisely urged by the BOARD OF HEALTH is not complete without a proper use of DISINFECTANTS. But, in choosing these, do not be misled into paying fancy prices for "patent" specialties. Common lime is better than any of them for damp cellars and stables. For vaults, drains, cess-pools, the best and cheapest disinfectant is COPPERAS, supplied by us by the pound or barrel at low rates. But for use in the house, in the plumbing, in kitchen sinks, in closets, for purifying the air of sick rooms, deodorizing offensive discharges—in short, for all purposes of a household disinfectant, nothing can excel the powerful solution of chlorides made and sold by us for 15 years under the name of REYNOLDS'S ODORLESS DISINFECTANT. Quart bottles 25c. To be diluted for use according to directions on label.

REYNOLDS'S PHARMACY, Park and North avenues.

Went Visiting in the Rain.

The storm made small the party of members of Warren Engine Company which went to Bound Brook to visit Hose Company No. 1 last night, but they carried a picture which gave their entertainers an idea of how the others looked.

A Row in the Borough.

A quarrel occurred on upper Grove street at 11:30 last evening in which one boroughite shot at another twice without effect. Chief Marshal Pangborn is investigating and arrests will follow.

A Wedding.

Charles Lewis of Raleigh, N. C., and Miss Ida J. Brown of this city, were married at the home of the bride on West Second street, May 19, by Rev. T. A. V. Henry.

They'll Never Do So Any More.

School Trustee Joseph detected two youths the other evening attempting to purloin jack roses from an admired bush in his front yard on Manning avenue.

In Bad Shape.

The curbing on Park place and Somerset street ought to be repaired, even if it takes a private subscription to accomplish the improvement.

Out Again.

Constable Henry Meyers of Westfield, who was jailed as a witness against Mike Heuber, was released on bail yesterday.

He'll Make His Mark as an Artist.

Wm. Stahl of Grove street will be graduated from the Art Students League, 23rd street, New York, in a few weeks.

Of All the Great Achievements

of science for alleviation of human suffering, nothing takes higher rank than Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, which is acknowledged by all who have tested its powers in the treatment of their own ailments, and by medical practitioners who have witnessed its wonderful efficacy, to be the most potent agent known for the relief and cure of all blood disorders, kidney disease and derangements of the vital organs.

Work for Tramps—If They Want It.

The Employment Committee of the Citizens Organized Aid Association have made arrangements to provide work whereby tramps passing through town may earn their meals. Householders are earnestly requested not to feed tramps gratuitously, but to send them, instead, to the woodyard of E. H. Holmes, 208 Madison avenue. In return for a moderate amount of work each tramp will receive an order for a meal at a neighboring house. The tramp should present to Mr. Holmes, as his endorsement, a slip from a householders ticket of the Organized Aid, or one of Mr. Holmes's business cards with the name of the person sending him across the back. These can be obtained gratuitously of Mr. Manning at the Y. M. C. A. Rooms on Front street, or of Mr. Holmes on Madison avenue. Should neither of these be at hand a note to Mr. Holmes, signed by the sender of the tramp, will be accepted.

High School Athletics.

The P. H. S. A. A. has decided to make its open events of Field Day open to all school students within 8 miles, and open to Pingry's School. The complete list is now as follows:

100-yds dash, open.
1-3-mile bicycle handicap, open.
Running high jump, open.
1-2-mile bicycle race.
Putting the shot.
2 3-mile bicycle race, open.
Standing broad jump.
1-mile bicycle race.
1-3-mile run.
2-mile bicycle handicap, open to school members and also honorary members of the P. H. S. A. A.

Farewell Next Sunday.

Rev. Frederick Koechli of the German Reformed Church, Craig place, North Plainfield, will move to Somerville about June 1. He expects to preach his farewell sermon next Sunday and begin his pastorate in the Somerville Church at once. Mr. Koechli will probably come from Somerville during June to preach here once each Sunday. A new pastor is to be selected for the Plainfield Church by July 1.

A REMARKABLE CURE

MIDDLEBUSH, Somerset Co., N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For the past forty years I have been afflicted with bleeding piles. I suffered constant pain in the lower part of my body, but when I had an operation of the bowels the pain was perfectly terrible, and was most always attended with the loss of a large quantity of blood. My condition was complicated with prolapse of the rectum, which at first only made its appearance when I had a movement of the bowels, but at length the parts became so weakened that the protrusion took place while walking or stooping, or after the slightest exertion, and sometimes even while I was at rest. Whenever this happened it gave rise to the most agonizing pain, and felt as though something was pulling the life right out of me. In fact only those similarly situated can imagine the suffering and distress which I had to endure from day to day, and which made my life a terrible burden. Hearing of Dr. Lighthill's wonderful success in the cure of difficult chronic diseases, I placed myself under his care, and now I am proud and happy to say that, marvelous as it may seem, he effected a complete and radical cure in my case in every respect, and he performed this cure without any painful operation or preventing me from work. Since this terrible disease has been removed by Dr. Lighthill's skill I feel new life, and for the first time in forty years I feel once more what it is to be without daily pain, discomfort and distress. I am not a wealthy man, but no amount of money would tempt me to be put back in my former condition.

I make this public statement, not only from a deep and everlasting sense of gratitude to Dr. Lighthill, but also as a simple Christian duty to let the afflicted know where they can find a physician whose skill cannot be surpassed, and in whom implicit confidence can be placed. H. VROOM.

A LOCAL ENDORSEMENT.

No. 188 Somerset st., Plainfield, N. J.

To the Residents of Plainfield, N. J.

Mr. H. Vroom, whose statement appears above, is a brother-in-law of mine. I personally know of his case and his suffering and also know the happy fact that to the surprise of himself and his friends, Dr. Lighthill effected a radical and permanent cure. His statement is true in every respect and does not say half enough in praise of Dr. Lighthill. Anyone who wishes this statement verified is at liberty to come and see me personally. JOHN C. KINNEY.

In These Times

You want your money to go as far as possible, and you don't have to open your eyes very wide to see who is in a position to sell what you want at the lowest prices and one's reputation for selling goods on a close margin and giving the greatest values stands out more than ever. Three great factors—Small expense, buying for cash and selling for cash and no rent to pay enables us to name prices that give us the inside track. These prices make

ALL READY FOR SEWERS.

Progress Being Made with Machine-Like Steadiness.

A short adjourned session of the Common Council was held last evening. All of the members were present except Councilmen Dumont and Westphal.

Residents between Grant and Clinton avenues who recently petitioned for the opening of a street between those two avenues, from West Front street to South Second, withdrew their request. They thought the improvement would cost too much. A petition from property-owners subject to assessment for the cost objected to the proposed street on the ground that it was not needed. The matter was referred to the Committee on Streets.

Frank E. Miller's revised request for licensing Hotel Netherwood was referred.

Councilman Fisk presented a petition from property-owners for the construction of sewers in accordance with an act of the Legislature passed April 7, 1890. It was signed by the owners of $3,672,599 worth of property, about $112,000 more than the necessary three-fifths of the assessed valuation of the city.

The petition was read and referred to the Finance Committee for the verification of the values of property stated.

Mr. Fisk said he had examined Terrill road, the condition of which had been complained of. The city had arranged with the Township Committee of Fanwood to keep the part of the road south of the Central Railroad in repair if Fanwood would care for the northern section. This latter section, said Mr. Fisk, was the poor part, and so the petitioners were referred to the Township Committee.

The dog law was brought in by Mr. Fisk. By the new act the city was compelled to provide the clerk with a book in which to record names and numbers. Each dog-owner was obliged to pay $1 for a number, which was to be put upon the dog's collar with the owner's name and address. The city and the city clerk would divide the fee, the city getting 88 and the clerk 12 cents. Clerk MacMurray was authorized to buy a book.

On motion of Councilman Frost $500 was appropriated for the Street Committee with which to take such steps as may be necessary for the introduction of sewers.

The Council adjourned without further business.

THE WORLD'S GREATEST, IN TOWN.

Large Aggregation of Famous Artists Heard in a Plainfield Concert.

The 23d Regt. Band, Braham's Orchestra, the Brilliant and the Unique quartettes, Jules Levy the "only" cornetist, George Frank the bass horn soloist, Vess L. Ossoman, the banjoist, and a variety of other famous artists, were heard by a delighted audience in the chapel of the First Presbyterian Church last night. The concert was under the direction of Judge George H. Bruce of Cranford, who after a clear explanation of the modern phonograph proceeded to reel off through its big funnel the many gems collected on its cylinders. From the "Bohemian Girl" to the "High School Cadets" every selection was perfectly reproduced, and as extras the church choir sang and Pastor Herring spoke, and the phonograph talked right back in surpassing mimicry. The choir's selection was "Onward Christian Soldiers!" and Mr. Herring thanked Judge Bruce for the very delightful entertainment. The vocal quartette, "Dancing on the Old Barn Floor", and the whistling solo with bird imitations, were particularly appreciated. Judge Bruce proved himself a capital manipulator of the wonderful machine, and a most cordial welcome awaits his return to Plainfield.

EAST FRONT STREET CHANGES.

Among Them, Perhaps a Downstairs Move of the First National Bank.

The "Under the Bank" store soon to be vacated by VanEmburgh & Son on their removal to the Babcock Building was leased by the Babcock Estate in the Spring so that its prospective tenants might remain there till their new quarters should be ready. Now the Estate wants to sublet after June 1, and Mrs. L. Adams the milliner talks of renting. She, however, does not wish to change location till September 1. It may be that the Bank will decide to take possession itself, as many of its patrons would like it to move downstairs. It is believed that larger business would result to the First National by such a move. Many people object to climbing the steps to the present location. The Bank is considering the matter. The First National is an institution into which all would like to get on the ground floor.

Uprooted a Shade Tree.

The fine shade tree in front of the home of W. H. Rogers, West Fifth street and Madison avenue, was blown over by a sudden blast of wind in the storm yesterday afternoon. The blast seemed to have a rotary motion like a tornado, and wrenched all of the trees in that neighborhood. This tree fell against Mr. Rogers's house, but did not damage it much. Mr. Rogers will miss its shade, and said he would not have taken $100 for it.

Good Republican Doctrine.

The Borough Committee on Streets have reduced the pay of teamsters a half-dollar a day.

$100 Reward, $100.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the one positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio. Sold by druggists, 75c.

YOUNG MEN READY FOR STRIKES.

They'll Spare No Effort to Win This Fight, If It Takes All Summer.

An individual bowling tournament for prizes will be commenced on the C.Y.M.L. alleys Wednesday evening. It has been arranged by the Bowling Committee, M. J. Mack, D. Galbraith and M. Winn, and the handicapping has been done by Captain J. J. Lynch.

The players have been divided and handicapped as follows:

Class A—T. Carty, P. Butscher, J. Whalen, P. Kiely, J. J. Lynch.

Class B—D. Galbraith, J. C. Traynor, J. Gallagher, W. J. Kiely, J. Curran, M. J. Mack, M. Winn, M. Owens, J. Flynn, J. Moran, T. J. Hughes, W. H. Forrestel. Handicap from Class A, in whole series, 15 pins.

Class C—J. Hibbitts, C. Guinee, F. McInerney, M. Higgins, J. Waters, J. Wierenga. Handicap from Class A, 45; from Class B, 30.

Class D—C. Lang, W. Claassen, M. Gill, T. Burns, M. Whalen, M. J. Higgins, T. Strapp, M. Winn, M. Cashin, E. Delehanty, J. Donnelly, T. Cammerford, W. O'Connor. Handicap from Class A, 75; from Class B, 60; from Class C, 30.

The classes will bowl separately, each man scoring for 30 frames. Class C will bowl tomorrow night, Class B next Friday, Class D next Monday, and Class A next Tuesday.

Ten players will then be selected to continue the tournament and the rest will drop out. This last division will be made by taking the men scoring highest from the classes as follows: From A, 2; from B, 3; from C, 2; from D, 3. The ten will bowl the final games for prizes on a date not yet fixed.

William Claassen is in charge of the prizes. He begins himself by offering a handsome shaving set, now on exhibition in the club-house. He has the gifts of nine other prizes pledged.

PRANKS OF A TROLLEY WIRE.

Conrad Seabold Knocked Senseless by the Current, and James McCormick Has a Lively Contact.

A guard wire fell across the trolley wire yesterday afternoon at 4:30, at Chatham and Somerset streets. The cars were detained only a few minutes, but while the live wire lay across the street Conrad Seabold, an employe of Rudolph Spiegel of the Crescent Hotel, a large-sized robust German, stepped forth, and, although warned not to touch the wire, picked it up and fell backwards so suddenly that many witnesses thought him dead.

In a few minutes, however, Conrad came to, and walked a few feet, only to fall again. When he first fell, the wire was pulled by his weight from the trolley wire, and that enabled him to release his hold of it.

Edward King, a colored employe of the Plainfield Electric Light Company, notified Supt. McClurg, who immediately appeared, as did also Supt. John Adleman of the Street Railway. James McCormick, a motorman, forced the wire into the gutter with his rubber boots and rubber hat, and attempted to pick the wire up with a gloved hand, and was sent sprawling across the sidewalk.

The only damage was the cutting off of the electric light current furnished to a barber shop further up the street which has lights tapped from the Plainfield circuit.

Conrad now says: "I no more will touch wires, not even little ones around a bale of hay".

GREENBROOK ROAD EXTENSION.

Here's a Genuine Public Improvement, for North Plainfield Obstructionists to Defeat.

Greenbrook road, which ends at Sebring's Mills at the lower end of North Plainfield Township, about five miles from Somerset street, will undoubtedly be continued along the foot of the mountain so as to intersect with Mountain avenue at Bound Brook, and thereby make a continuous thoroughfare into Somerville from North Plainfield.

Residents of Somerset County who reside in North Plainfield and vicinity must now pass through both Union and Middlesex Counties to reach the county-seat. Property-owners along the line of the proposed extension, which is in Bridgewater Township, are enthusiastic over the matter, and steps will soon be taken to put the enterprise under way.

WESTFIELD DEMOCRACY UP AND DOING.

Already Organizing for the Next Campaign—One Place Where Congressman Dunn Is Applauded.

The Democrats of Westfield held a meeting Saturday evening in Etta Hall to reorganize the party. C. W. Harden was elected permanent president and Robert Cain secretary. A committee to prepare a constitution and by-laws was appointed. Addresses were made by John B. Green and T. H. McGarrah. Resolutions were adopted indorsing the Administration of Grover Cleveland, demanding the speedy enactment of the Wilson tariff, and thanking John T. Dunn for his assistance in having M. M. Scudder appointed postmaster.

Third of the Series Still to Come.

The third of the People's Service sermons will be preached by Pastor Schenck in Trinity Reformed Church next Sunday evening. Because of the storm last Sunday he substituted another sermon, reserving the Prodigal Son for a larger congregation.

Are You a Boomer? Then Join on.

If you've any interest in the town's development, if you want to keep pace with all that is most progressive, you should possess, preserve and send away to outsiders copies of The Daily Press tomorrow, showing Plainfield's latest great advancement.

What Bait Do They Use?

Two pair, four of a kind, and they don't win, either. You may find them down along the brook almost any fair afternoon, wandering aimlessly beside the ripples, dragging fish lines and wondering why the fish don't bite.

P. M. HETFIELD'S BONDSMEN.

They Are His Father, Levi Hetfield, and J. P. Homan and Andrew Love, Sr.

Postmaster John M. Hetfield yesterday afternoon filled out his bonds to the Government and forwarded them to Washington.

His bondsmen are his father, Levi Hetfield, J. P. Homan and Andrew Love, Sr. The bond is for $20,000, and the surety is double that amount.

The forwarding to Plainfield of Mr. Hetfield's commission will follow the filing of the bonds.

GERMAN JOLLITY.

Gesang Members and Friends Enjoy Music, Drama and Dance.

The Germans of the Gesang and Turn Verein gave a most enjoyable entertainment and dance last night. Their hall on Somerset street was well filled with an interested audience during the entertainment, and by a jolly crowd of dancers afterward. N. H. Guttmann was the musician of the evening.

The following was the programme, which was cleverly presented by members of the society:

ITS CIRCULATION WORLD-WIDE.

The Daily Press Covers Plainfield and Outskirts, and Branches Out Into Foreign Climes.

Besides being read by everybody in Plainfield, and enjoying its customary general circulation out of town, copies of The Press of yesterday were sent, on paid orders, to many addresses in the Pacific States, England, Spain and Greece, as that issue contained first and exclusively an important piece of social news which today every New York and Philadelphia paper copied from its columns, and which society leaders everywhere will read with particular interest. The incident is noteworthy because it is so constantly duplicated in Daily Press experience.

Miss Jackson's Recital.

Miss Addie Parker Jackson, a graduate of the Emerson College of Oratory, who has given a number of readings during the past Winter in Boston and vicinity, will give a recital in the Casino Thursday evening, May 31. She will be assisted by Miss Lavinia French, pianist, of this city, a pupil of Xaver Scharwenka, also by Miss Mary J. Meeker, contralto soloist of New York. The price of tickets is 75 cents, and they are on sale in Reynolds's Pharmacy and Estil's bookstore.

Netherwood's Water Kings.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of Union Water Company was held in Cranford yesterday, and Benjamin F. Ham, John Kean, Jr., Frank Bergen, Foster M. Voorhees, James Maguire, and Sylvester Cahill, Jr., were elected directors for the ensuing year. The annual report of the operations of the company exhibited a condition of the company's business and prospects satisfactory to the company.

Dave Campbell Among the 4,000.

David S. Campbell, formerly of North Plainfield and now a resident of Dunellen and a school teacher in Ford's Corners, has been appointed to represent the National Educational Association for a part of Middlesex County. A convention will be held in Asbury Park, July 6 to 13. New Jersey will be represented by 4,000 teachers, and the New Jersey Teachers Association will hold a special session July 9.

A Suggestion Not Adopted.

A North Plainfield school teacher reproved a youthful miss for whistling out loud in school, and told the youthful miss to ask her mother what they did with little girls for doing so. The next day the teacher asked the child what her mother had said, and the answer came forth that they put boy's pants on girls who whistled. Fifteen minutes for recess.

Welcomes all Sportsmen.

Jacob Hipp, formerly of Raritan, having purchased the retail liquor business of Frank Linke, at 179-181 Somerset street, invites the public to call and inspect the new bowling alleys. The bar is well stocked with fine ales, liquors, wines and cigars. Mr. Hipp will give a grand public opening in a short time.

To Pay for Preliminaries.

The councilmanic Street Committee will use the $500 appropriated for them last night principally in civil engineering work. Everything possible will be done at once, so as to have the plans of the sewerage system complete when the proposed ordinance is acted upon.

Did n't Sprinkle at All When He Was a Boy.

Sine Coon says if Uncle Peter would contribute enough to sprinkle the street in front of his Somerset street property there'd be no doubt of his reaching the century mark.

FOR THE relief and cure of a cold in the head there is more potency in Ely's Cream Balm than in anything else it is possible to prescribe. This preparation has for years past been making a brilliant success as a remedy for cold in the head, catarrh and hay fever. Used in the initial stages of these complaints Cream Balm prevents any serious development of the symptoms, while almost numberless cases are on record of radical cures of chronic catarrh and hay fever after all other treatments have proved of no avail.

SONS OF VETERANS ORGANIZED.

John Lewis is Captain, and It Is Fully Officered.

There was a very large attendance of Sons of Veterans in Winfield Scott Post rooms last evening to organize a camp, which was accomplished, and with the promise of having one of the best in the State.

The meeting was called to order, and W. C. Dobbins was made chairman, and Cyrus Moore secretary.

They at once proceeded to organize, all present signifying their desire to do so by signing their name to the application list and depositing their fee. The following Sons will constitute the Charter of the Camp:

Horace Martin, John Lewis, Charles Graves, Jr., S. C. Terry, Winn Coddington, W. Boe, George Bedford, Cyrus Moore, C. Compton, George Whitely, C. Stevens, F. Sutton, Edward Smith, W. C. Smith, Jr., Compton Vail, A. Drake, F. DeCamp, F. Harrold, C. Sprigg, W. C. Dobbins, Willard Sutton, F. J. Emmons, C. E. Emmons, C. R. Halligan, W. Howarth, B. McVoy, W. Pennington, F. L. Walker, L. Townley, and H. H. Brokaw.

After the above had been received it was decided to nominate and elect officers for the new camp and the following were chosen:

Captain—John Lewis.
First Lieutenant—Horace J. Martin.
Second Lieutenant—W. C. Dobbins.
Chaplain—S. C. Terry.
First Sergeant—George Bedford.
Q. M. Sergeant—C. Moore.
Corresponding Secretary—C. Stephens.
Financial Secretary—Cyrus Moore.
Treasurer—Willard Sutton.

It was thought best to try, if possible, to have the Camp mustered in next Monday evening. Invitations were ordered sent to Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., Major Anderson Post, No. 109, G. A. R., and Women's Relief Corps, No. 10, to be present on that occasion.

The following were appointed a committee to arrange with the women for next Monday evening's entertainment:

Horace J. Martin, C. Graves, Jr., Fred Harold, S. C. Terry, Edward Smith.

The meeting then adjourned to meet in one week, at which time the mustering officers of the State Department Sons of Veterans will be present.

Maurice M. Newcorn.

The eight-days-old son of Mr. and Mrs. William Newcorn was christened Maurice M. by Rabbi Garwitz at Mr. Newcorn's home on West Front street yesterday. The ceremony was performed in the presence of about 30 friends, the medical profession being represented by Doctors Long and Manning.

The godfather was Garrett Dreier, and the godmother Mrs. Augustus Dreier. Many presents were received from New York and Plainfield friends. The guests were entertained at dinner afterward.

Judgment for a Livery Bill.

Justice Mosher gave Esaias Curtis a judgment for $5 and costs against John Wolff this morning. Curtis wanted $5 horse hire which Wolff refused to give him. The bill was contracted a month ago when Curtis took Wolff to Martinsville to buy pigs. They quarreled and the debt was n't paid.

The Supper is Free.

A full-dress rehearsal of "Bedlam Le Loose" was held in Red Men's Hall last evening. The parts were well taken, and Miantonomoh's entertainment tomorrow night promises to be very successful. An extra attraction will be a free supper.

Tinners Start in for Themselves.

Matthew Kinney and Edward E. Wilson started yesterday in the tinning business at 90 Somerset street. Both men have had practical experience. They were formerly employed by A. M. Griffen.

NEWS OF THE PNEUS.

The Manhattan Bicycle Club will run to Plainfield June 19.

The Bedford Cycling Club will run to Plainfield August 26.

The Daily Press will tomorrow publish a handsome and valuable souvenir supplement of especial interest to all cyclers.

A. V. Kline and John J. Kenney will act as umpires at the Decoration Day track meet of the Union County Roadsters in Rahway.

That journal, which despite the fact that its sporting reporter is a member of the Crescent Wheelmen continually misrepresents and maligns the Wheelmen, has been stating that membership in the Wheelmen was valueless because outsiders buying season tickets were entitled to the same privileges as members. The fact is that the only privilege purchased by outsiders is the use of the track for practice when it is not otherwise in use, and only by being a member can one have full access at all times to the club-house, grounds and manifold privileges of the association.

Bachelors Beat.

Bowlers from Scott's rolled a game on Jacob Hipp's new alleys last evening. The married men tried to bowl the bachelors, but fell over 300 pins short of their rivals' score. None of the scores was remarkable.

The score:

| SINGLE. | | MARRIED. | |

A Delightful Revelation.

They are to be envied who heard the lecture of Wm. Hamilton Gibson, in the Casino yesterday, under the auspices of the Monday Afternoon Club. The subject was "Cross-fertilization of flowers", a theme on which none can talk nor write more charmingly than Mr. Gibson. His illustrations by the charts and mechanical appliances used made nature's wonderful contrivances easily understood. Students of botany were delighted in entering a step further into a temple whose threshold they had crossed, and to those ignorant of botany it was a revelation.

Poetical Rendicants.

Officer Kiely arrested two boys at 11 this morning for begging on West Front street. They carried cards on which were printed pathetic verses. The general sentiment of the lines was that the boys' injuries made them worthy of aid. One had a sore foot and a leg of the other boy had been amputated. They said they were Henry Williams of Newark and James Fleming of Jersey City. The two were ordered out of town by City Judge Coddington.

SHIPS THAT PASS IN THE NIGHT.

By BEATRICE HARRADEN.

Continued.

"I say," he continued, "tell my wife it made me happy to have her with me this afternoon. Then perhaps she will stay in another time. I should like her to know. And she was sweet in her manner, wasn't she? And, by Jove, she is beautiful! I am glad you have seen her here today. It must be dull for her with an invalid like me. And I know I am irritable. Go and tell her that she made me happy, will you?"

The little bit of happiness at which the poor fellow snatched seemed to make him more pathetic than before. Bernardine promised to tell his wife and went off to find her, making as an excuse a book which Mrs. Reffold had offered to lend her. Mrs. Reffold was in her bedroom. She asked Bernardine to sit down while she searched for the book. She had a very gracious manner when she chose. "You are looking much better, Miss Holme," she said kindly. "I cannot help noticing your face. It looks younger and brighter. The bracing air has done you good."

"Yes, I am better," Bernardine said, rather astonished that Mrs. Reffold should have noticed her at all. "Mr. Allitsen informs me that I shall live, but never be strong. He settles every question of that sort to his own satisfaction, but not always to the satisfaction of other people!"

"He is a curious person," Mrs. Reffold said, smiling, "though I must say he is not quite as gruff as he used to be. You seem to be good friends with him."

She would have liked to say more on this subject, but experience had taught her that Bernardine was not to be trifled with.

"I don't know about being good friends," Bernardine said, "but I have a great sympathy for him. I know myself what it is to be cut off from work and active life. I have been through a misery. But mine is nothing to his."

She rose to go, but Mrs. Reffold detained her.

"Don't go yet," she said. "It is pleasant to have you."

She was leaning back in an armchair, playing with the fringe of an antimacassar.

"Oh, how tired I am of this horrid place!" she said suddenly. "And I have had a most wearying afternoon. Mr. Reffold seems to be more irritable every day. It is very hard that I should have to bear it."

Bernardine listened to her in astonishment.

"Yes," she added, "I am quite worn out. He never used to be so irritable. It is all very tiresome. It is quite telling on my health."

She looked the picture of health.

"His grumbling this afternoon has been incessant—so much so that he himself was ashamed and asked me to forgive him. You heard him, didn't you?"

"Yes, I heard him," Bernardine said.

"And of course I forgave him at once," Mrs. Reffold said piously. "Naturally one would do that, but the vexation remains all the same."

"Can these things be?" thought Bernardine to herself.

"He spoke in a most ridiculous way," she went on. "It certainly is not encouraging for me to spend another afternoon with him. I shall go sledging tomorrow."

"You generally do go sledging, don't you?" Bernardine asked mildly.

Mrs. Reffold looked at her suspiciously. She was never quite sure that Bernardine was not making fun of her.

"It is little enough pleasure I do have," she added as though in self defense. "And he seems to grudge me that too."

"I don't think he would grudge you anything," Bernardine said, with some warmth. "He loves you too much for that. You don't know how much pleasure you give him when you spare him a little of your time. He told me how happy you made him this afternoon. You could see for yourself that he was happy. Mrs. Reffold, make him happy while you still have him. Don't you understand that he is passing away from you—don't you understand, or is it that you won't? We all see it—all except you."

She stopped suddenly, surprised at her boldness.

Mrs. Reffold was still leaning back in the armchair, her hands clasped together above her beautiful head. Her face was pale. She did not speak. Bernardine waited. The silence was unbroken save by the merry cries of some children tobogganing in the Kurhaus garden. The stillness grew oppressive, and Bernardine rose. She knew from the effort which those few words had cost her how far removed she was from her old former self.

"Goodby, Mrs. Reffold," she said nervously.

"Goodby, Miss Holme," was the only answer.

Don't Hesitate, but Call and Be Convinced That Every Statement We Make Is True.

To those who do not already know that there is established in Newark, at 105 Halsey street, a physician who stands in the foremost rank of his profession, who is indorsed by the leading colleges of the country and who can prove by witnesses right here in Newark (not by one, but by hundreds) that he has succeeded in curing cases that have been utterly given up by other physicians, and good ones too. To those who do not these facts we state that any person, rich or poor, old or young, is welcome here and receive examination and advice free of charge.

Thousands praise the day they came to us for treatment. There is no guess work, no experimenting, no painful operation. No matter how difficult the case, no matter how much of the physician's time it may consume, the diagnosis will not only be thorough, it will be absolutely free. There is no taint of quackery or deception; no claim or statement is made that is not borne out by facts and living witnesses.

Mrs. Abby A. Ray, late of 86 Grove street, East Orange, who now lives at 400 Ellmore street, Escanaba, Mich., writes, under date of January 12: "The medicine arrived this morning and I am so glad it came. I am almost out, and it has helped me so much and I am so much pleased with its wonderful effort on my broken down system that I would like to testify to your great success in my case. I am feeling as well now, in fact better, than I had ever hoped to again."

This is one of many letters that we receive daily. We have the originals at our office and if you wish you may see them. Another thing: We never publish or reveal a patient's name unless they so desire.

DR. STARKWEATHER.

There is not a penny to pay for the fullest medical advice. Dr. Starkweather is a graduate of the Berkshire Medical College, Massachusetts, and of the Medico-Chirurgical College of Philadelphia; endorsed also by the College of Physicians and Surgeons and Bellevue Medical College of New York. We invite all sufferers from whatever cause to call at our office, No. 105 Halsey street, Newark, where Dr. Starkweather is in attendance daily to give examination and advice entirely free of charge. It matters not what the disease, or how many years you have suffered, in spite of means adopted in your behalf, a visit to this office and the privileges of the same will cost you nothing, and may be the means of saving your life. We prepare all our medicines and prescribe the remedies indicated. This plan enables the patient to receive directly from us such remedies as will produce the results promised.

Our office is open daily from 10 a. m. to 9 p. m. Sundays 4 to 6 p. m.

LOSS IN THE MILLIONS

Estimate of Damage Done By the Big Flood.

Not So Great in Destructiveness as the Freshet of 1889, Because the People Remembered the Lesson Taught By the Previous Flood—Loss of Life Small.

PHILADELPHIA, May 23.—Now that telegraphic communication has been restored to all points in the state an estimate of the damage done by the flood of the past three days can be made. Although the rivers and streams were swollen to nearly as great heights as in the flood of 1889, the destruction wrought by the waters was not nearly so great as the inundation of five years ago. Residents of the river towns learned a dreadful lesson from the 1889 flood, and when the water began to rise this time they were prompt to remove themselves and their effects to places of safety, and thus the destruction is much less than it would have been if the overflowing of the rivers had not been heeded. The railroads also suffered less in a monetary way than in the 1889 flood. They also learned a lesson at that time that bore fruit in more strongly constructed roadbeds and the substitution of iron bridges for many of the flimsy wooden structures that were washed away.

Losses in the Millions.

Although not approaching in destructiveness the flood of 1889 the spring freshet of 1894 will be long remembered and the state will not recover for many a day from the loss that has been inflicted upon property. What this loss will be it is difficult at this time to even approximate, as every place is prone to exaggerate the loss that has been inflicted. Still, it will take millions of dollars to repair the destruction and cover the loss in stoppages of mills and the wages of workmen.

Reports from all parts of the state show with the exception of Johnstown that the flood is going down. At Johnstown it rained heavily again last night and fresh torrents are pouring down from the mountain and again swelling the Conemaugh and threatening another overflow.

Lumbermen Suffered Heavily.

Williamsport has emerged from beneath the water and taken an account of the damage done. Though many houses were flooded to the second floor but practically little property in the city itself is destroyed. The greatest loss was by the breaking away of the great log boom with its millions of feet of lumber. This and the subsequent stoppage of the sawmills in the vicinity for the summer work will raise the loss in that city and Lycoming county to about $3,000,000.

Lock Haven was also badly washed out and there, as at Williamsport, the greatest loss resulted from the breaking away of the log booms. Many people at Lock Haven were driven from their homes from Sunday until last night, but no lives were lost.

Few Fatalities.

The few casualties all through the state resulting from the flood is a fact particularly to be rejoiced at. A dozen deaths from drowning will cover the loss of life from the freshet.

The railroads were badly washed out but are rapidly recovering. The Pennsylvania railroad has resumed its train service on nearly schedule time on all its divisions except the main line to Pittsburg. This division suffered severely at a number of points and although the officials of the road think they may get their trains through to-day, they are not hopeful of doing so until Thursday.

The Philadelphia and Reading lines are all open except the Williamsport division which is blocked at Muncy by the carrying away of a bridge between there and Williamsport.

B. & O. Tracks Still Submerged.

The Baltimore & Ohio road, whose tracks in this city are submerged, is using the Pennsylvania road to run its trains around the flooded parts of the road and is furnishing nearly its usual train service south.

In this city the Schuylkill and Delaware rivers are slowly receding from the streets near the banks and piles of mud and soaked houses will soon be the only marks to show that there was a flood here. The greatest damage done here was the flooding of the mills in the great manufacturing district of Manayunk.

Boston Wants New Fire Chiefs.

BOSTON, May 23.—A petition is being signed, and is to be sent to Mayor Matthews, asking for the removal of Fire Commissioners Fitch, Murphy and Innis and the appointment of a new man in place of Chief L. P. Webber. The petitioners, it is said, represent $75,000,000 worth of taxable property within the fire limits of Boston. The petition is the outcome of the feeling of dissatisfaction among merchants of Boston over the management of the fire department, a feeling that has been increased since the big Roxbury fire and the one closely following it on State street.

Sloop Edith a Floating Saloon.

SALEM, Mass., May 23.—The police seized the sloop Edith of Gloucester, owned by Evno Gardner, and arrested the proprietor and boatman yesterday for selling intoxicating liquors. Later both were fined $50 and costs. The police think the Edith has been employed in this illegal selling among the no-license seaboard towns and cities for some time.

Erastus Stebbins Dead.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., May 23.—Erastus Stebbins, founder of the E. Stebbins Manufacturing company, of Brightwood, is dead at his home in Chicopee of heart disease. The E. Stebbins Manufacturing company is one of the oldest industries in the Connecticut valley and was established by Mr. Stebbins in 1848.

Wood Pulp Mill Burned.

BELLOWS FALLS, Vt., May 23.—The large wood pulp mill of the Beldens Falls Pulp company four miles north of Middlebury was destroyed by fire last night. The fire department of Middlebury sent engines. The loss will be very heavy.

Insulted By Brazilians.

TANGIER, May 23.—It is reported here that the Portuguese vice consul at Rabat has been insulted and beaten by a number of Brazilian residents.

Knighted By Queen Victoria.

LONDON, May 23.—The queen has knighted Mr. George Williams, president of the Young Men's Christian association.

STATE BANK TAX.

The Next Sharp and Bitter Battle in Congress.

WASHINGTON, May 23.—Members who have interested themselves in the subject believe that the debate on the bill to repeal the 10 per cent. state bank tax will be the most spirited and acrimonious of any that has occurred during the present session. The lines are being rigidly drawn, and it is difficult at this time to predict what fate the measure will meet. The bill will probably come up before the house on Wednesday of this week if the legislative appropriation bill be disposed of in the interim. It is believed that the majority either for or against the measure will be small. The republicans will oppose it almost unanimously, although some of the representatives of that party from the extreme west and northwest are disposed to regard it favorably. The sentiment among the democrats is divided, although a preponderance of the party are sturdy supporters of the bill. Mr. Springer of Illinois, the chairman of the house committee on banking and currency, will make the opening speech in opposition. Mr. Springer said that in his opinion about 60 democratic votes will be cast against the bill. If this proves to be the case and the populists and republicans take similar action, the bill will probably be defeated by a small majority. If there be a full attendance of the house and the democratic vote is not more than 40 against the bill, it will probably carry by a small majority. The eastern democrats, particularly those from New York and New England, are in the main favorable to the proposition. Some of the democratic friends of the bill will insist upon unconditional repeal. Others as stoutly assert that they will agree to repeal only with certain limitations; such, for example, as surrounding the proposed state bank system with safeguards in the form of federal supervision. This is the rock on which the opponents of the bill believe that its friends will split, and that in the end it will be impossible to secure a sufficient number of votes to carry through either of the alternative propositions.

Against the Fee System.

WASHINGTON, May 23.—Representative William A. Stone of Pennsylvania, of the house judiciary committee, presented a favorable report on a bill introduced by him some months ago to place marshals, district attorneys and clerks of the United States courts on salary and abolish the system of fees by which they have been paid. The bill fixes the salaries for marshals and district attorneys throughout the United States at $4,000 each, and leaves the compensation of clerks at such sum as the attorney-general shall decide, not exceeding $4,000 per annum. A letter from the attorney-general shows that the bill will not only effect a great saving, but do away with frivolous prosecutions, unwarranted by law. Under the present fee system about 50 per. cent. of the prosecutions in the United States courts result in acquittals or discontinuance. It is a system which most of the states have abandoned, and the report states that it ought not to be tolerated any longer by the government.

Battle With Train Robbers.

EL RENO, Okla., May 23.—Two men supposed to be members of the Dalton gang of train robbers, passed through El Reno traveling eastward. The sheriff telegraphed to Yukon to intercept them. A posse was organized, and when the train robbers made their appearance they were attacked. The defense was as hot as the attack, and a running fight ensued. A man named Farish was shot in the groin, the bullet passing entirely through him. He is not expected to live. An old man named Nelson was shot in the forehead, but not dangerously. A number of other persons were wounded more or less in the skirmish, among them a man named Snyder, who was shot in the face and will die. One of the robbers was shot off his horse and captured, but resisted to the last, and several of his captors bear cuts and bruises on the head where he beat them with his six-shooter. The other robber made good his escape, but is supposed to have been hit two or three times.

Judge Jenkins' Famous Order.

WASHINGTON, May 23.—The house judiciary committee adopted the report of the sub-committee which investigated the action of Judge Jenkins of Milwaukee, in restraining the employes of the Northern Pacific railway from striking. The report received the endorsement of all the democratic members of the committee. Only one of the four republicans present, Mr. Ray of New York, voted in the negative. The report of the committee says that the evidence fails to show any corrupt intent on the part of the judge, that he believed the orders granted by him were legal and that while he erred in this respect his errors afford no ground for proceedings against him.

Will Not March With the A. P. A.

CHIPPEWA FALLS, Wis., May 23.—All the Catholic societies have passed resolutions against taking part in the Decoration day exercises. The societies have always joined the procession in a body and contributed to the success of the demonstration. Their reason for withdrawing, they claim, is that the leading G. A. R. men are members of the A. P. A., and that the grand marshal of the day is a leader of the latter society. This action was taken at a special meeting called for the purpose and has created a good deal of unpleasant feeling.

Russia Will Let Servia Alone.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 23.—The foreign office has informed M. Persiani, the Russian minister at Belgrade, that Russia will in no way interfere in the present state of affairs in Servia. This is understood to mean that King Alexander has forfeited the friendship of Russia by his action in the interest of his father, ex-King Milan, who is believed to have instigated the Servian coup d'etat. In political circles ex-King Milan's return to Belgrade after his promise not to do so is considered a breach of faith to the czar, which will not be forgotten or forgiven.

International Anarchist Plots.

PARIS, May 23.—The Journal Des Debates says the police have arrested an anarchist who is discovered to have been in regular communication by letter with the anarchists who were responsible for the recent bomb explosions in Liege, Belgium. From papers found upon the man arrested his identity is established as the organizer of an international association of anarchists, whose members are chosen by lot to destroy by means of the bomb the enemies of anarchy in Europe.

Iowa Saloons Wide Open.

DES MOINES, Ia., May 23. — The front doors of the saloons in this city were wide open for the first time in 10 years. The city council authorized the opening of seven saloons, and by noon three had opened, each having five bartenders.

MINE MOBS ASSEMBLED

Trouble Feared To-day in the Coal Regions.

Bradenville Surrounded By 200 Armed Strikers—Shots Fired Into a House Where Non-Union Men Are Quartered—Miners to Be Driven Out By Force.

BRADENVILLE, Pa., May 23.—This town was surrounded by a mob of 200 striking coal miners yesterday and only 30 non-union miners were allowed to go to work at the Derry plant. The mob fired four shots into a house where some of the non-union men had taken refuge, but it is not known if anyone was injured or not as the mob has surrounded the house and will not allow the imprisoned men to escape.

Last night the strikers were reinforced; fully 2,000 strikers are now surrounding the town.

Superintendent E. F. Saxman of the Derry plant is here with 20 deputies, and if any attempt is made to operate the plant to-day serious trouble will result, as the strikers are armed and declare they will not allow non-union men to enter the mines.

The citizens of this village are greatly excited, as one word from either side will cause blood to flow freely.

ARMED STRIKERS ASSEMBLED.

Miners Will Be Driven From Stickle Hollow Plants By Force.

UNIONTOWN, Pa., May 23.—Four hundred armed strikers from the Fourth pool camped last night within a stone's throw of the Stickle Hollow plants of the Washington Coal and Coke company. They marched from Fayette City and other points along the Monongahela river, and purpose bringing the men out to-day by force. They expect to be joined by at least 400 men from Smithton, and any attempt to resist them will cause bloodshed.

There are about a dozen winchesters in the gang and nearly every one carries either a shotgun or a revolver. This is the first break in the ranks of the river miners and they propose driving these men back into line, no matter what the cost.

Serious Mine Riot.

LA SALLE, Ill., May 23.—A riotous demonstration occurred among the striking miners at the mines of the Union Coal company, just across the river, yesterday afternoon, in which eight or ten non-union men were seriously injured. Mine Superintendent Benjamin Hetherington and Edward Cummings were the most seriously hurt, both being beaten into insensibility. The strikers to the number of 600 or 700, composed of Poles, Hungarians and Italians, attacked the men at work in the mines.

Strikers Urged to Be Firm.

PITTSBURG, May 23.—The national officers of the United Mine workers have issued a bulletin giving the causes of the failure to settle the strike at the convention in Cleveland last week. The miners are urged to hold their position a short time longer to win a victory. The effects of the suspension, the bulletin says, are now so widespread and so disastrous to general business that a settlement on a satisfactory basis to both sides will be made before long.

Apprehension for the Marion.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 23.—There is some apprehension in naval circles for the safety of the United States steamer Marion, which was badly damaged in a typhoon shortly after leaving Yokohama, several months ago, and compelled to put back for repairs. The Marion started again for San Francisco and was to call at Honolulu. When the steamer Gaelic which arrived from the Orient via Honolulu left the latter port the Marion had not reached there, although she had been out 37 days and nothing been seen of her.

FOUND BALL CARTRIDGES.

Fatalities Probably Prevented By Col. Burdett's Forethought.

HARTFORD, Conn., May 23.—Possible fatalities were prevented by Col. Burdett's forethought at the spring field day of the First regiment, C. N. G., in this city. The regiment, 700 strong, had marched to the South Meadows to take part in field manœuvres, 6,000 rounds of blank ammunition having been issued to the companies.

Suddenly an order came from Col. Burdett two miles away, signalled by the signal corps, "Move not a step until cartridge boxes are examined for ball cartridges."

The search resulted in a box of 20 rounds of ball cartridges being found in one company; a man in Company F had two in his box, and a man in Company B one. The manœuvres then proceeded.

After a sharp drill in open order, an attack was made by the First battalion, commanded by Major John Hickey, upon the Second battalion, commanded by Major Schulze, supposed to be encamped. The First battalion was repelled and the "battle" ended for dinner. In the afternoon a regiment was exercised in street riot drill in the city and was afterward reviewed by Gov. Morris.

SALE OF THE TOWN POSTPONED

Manchester Residents Given More Time to Settle Up.

NEWARK, N. J., May 23.—The sale under foreclosure of the village of Manchester, which was to have been made by the sheriff of Ocean county to-day, has been adjourned for four weeks. This is the result of an effort to effect a settlement.

The foreclosure was upon a mortgage held by the Mutual Benefit Life Insurance company of Newark. It was given in 1867 by John Torry, who then owned the site of the present village. Since then the larger part of Manchester has been built. Those who purchased the ground and built upon it were not apparently aware of the existence of the mortgage. Their title was thus defective, and the result is that their property is now to be exposed for sale unless some arrangement can be made with the mortgagee.

Church Damaged By Landslide.

BRADDOCK, Pa., May 23.—An extensive landslide has seriously injured the First Presbyterian church building to the extent that at least a part of the building will have to be reconstructed. It had just been completed at a cost of $4,000. The part wrecked contains the new $5,000 organ presented by Andrew Carnegie.

To Elect Senators By Direct Vote.

WASHINGTON, May 23.—The house committee on election of president, vice-president and members of congress has ordered favorably reported the bill of Mr. Tucker (dem., Va.) providing for the election of senators by a direct vote of the people.

Kelly's Men Again in Clover.

QUINCY, Ill., May 23.—The Kelly fleet moved down to Goose Island and went into camp last night. The Peoples' ferry gave $25 and will give half the ferry receipts for the benefit of the army. The trades assembly has given $200 for lumber with which to make the boats seaworthy. A committee of seven is canvassing for supplies and some enthusiastic citizens want the commonwealers to remain over Sunday. A barbecue is to be held on the island and the army will be well fed.

TELLER IS SATISFIED

Tariff Bill Better Than the Republicans Expected.

Says He Will Aid the Democrats in Putting It Through—He Discountenances Taunting the Majority With Inconsistency—Still Working On the Metal Schedule.

WASHINGTON, May 23.—During the eight hours' session of the senate yesterday eight items of the metal schedule were disposed of—the most important of them being that which puts iron ore on the dutiable list at the rate of 40 cents a ton. This item had been discussed for the greater part of two days and was eventually agreed to without a division, and by a practically unanimous vote—a proposition to make the rate 60 cents a ton having been laid on the table—33 to 21. This result was not reached until after a couple of hours' discussion in which a good many bitter remarks were exchanged between the opposite sides of the chamber.

The most noticeable speech of the day was one made by Mr. Teller (rep., Col.), in which he discountenanced the practice of taunting democratic senators with inconsistency. They had explained, he said, the cause of their inconsistency, and their defence was absolute and perfect. He declared that he would join them in putting the bill through, in the best possible shape, that the bill was ample for the protection of American industries, and that it was a better bill than he had expected, or than any which the republican side of the chamber had hoped to get. The senate adjourned at 6:15.

By a vote of 169 to 71 the house, in committee of the whole, at the end of three hours' debate on the subject of civil service, declared that it would strike out the paragraph in the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill providing for the payment of salaries to the members and employes of the civil service commission. The commission and the law under which it operates were attacked in a number of vigorous speeches on the democratic side and defended by republicans, aided by Messrs. Everett and Crain. But five pages of the bill had been disposed of, as the result of the day's session, when the house adjourned at 5 o'clock.

The house passed the resolution reported from the committee on rules providing for the investigation by the naval committee of the alleged armor plate frauds by the Carnegie-Phipps company at Homestead.

ONE DEAD, THREE WOUNDED.

Bloody Battle Between Officers and White Caps.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., May 23.—One killed and three seriously wounded is the result of a pitched battle between officers of the law and a gang of White Caps at Forest City, St. Francis county, Ark., yesterday afternoon.

The riot is the climax of the excitement in St. Francis county caused by the arrest of a number of people charged with being members of the gang of outlaws. Several weeks ago Detective Webster, of Memphis, was employed by the sheriff of St. Francis county to run the White Caps and as a result forty arrests followed, some of them being prominent citizens. The disclosures caused intense excitement and the people demanded that speedy justice be meted out to the White Caps.

A special term of the criminal court was ordered and the court convened at Forest City yesterday to try the cases. Shortly after the adjournment of court Detective Webster accompanied by Deputy Sheriff Sherman and two or three court bailiffs stepped into a saloon to get a drink.

As the officers entered they met several members of the gang of White Caps who are out on bail.

Henry Gore, a merchant of Palestine, Ark., who is charged with being a member of the White Caps opened fire on the officers, which was the signal for a general fusilade.

For several minutes the air was filled with bullets and the people in the neighborhood fled for their lives. After the smoke had cleared away Detective Webster was found with a bullet hole through his heart, while beside him lay Deputy Sheriffs Sherman and P. D. Gowling, with serious wounds, while a few feet further Henry Gore, the leader of the White Caps was weltering in his own blood, from a wound inflicted by one of the officers.

To Have a Sunday Paper.

ATTLEBORO, Mass., May 23.—This town is to have a Sunday paper, the first in its history. It will be the Weekly Advocate, founded by David L. Lowe years ago, but which has not been published for four years. It will be a four page sheet, and independent in politics. The new publishers are Leonard Nichols, of the Providence Journal staff, and William J. Watson. It will appear June 17.

Postmasters Confirmed.

WASHINGTON, May 23.—The senate has confirmed the following postmaster nominations:

New Hampshire—Byron More, Concord.
Vermont—Thomas Larner, St. Albans.
Massachusetts—T. B. Lucas, Middleboro; J. J Kennedy, Stoughton.

Will Sue the Town for Damages.

HARTFORD, Conn., May 23.—The relatives of Mrs. Nancy Bailey, who was killed in a runaway accident at Bristol on Friday, will sue the town for damages. It is claimed that the overturning of the wagon was caused by the defective condition of the highway.

Withdrew From the Canvass.

HARRISBURG, Pa., May 23.—Giles D. Price, candidate for the nomination for auditor general, and Thomas J. Stewart for secretary of internal affairs, have withdrawn from the field. There will be no postponement of the convention.

Ex-Gov. Price Better.

OAKLAND, N. J., May 23.—Ex-Governor Price is somewhat improved, and there is now a possibility of his recovery. Just what action will be taken in connection with the order of Chancellor McGill is not known.

Snow in Tennessee.

BRISTOL, Tenn., May 23—Snow has been falling here and the neighboring mountains are covered with it. On White Top, east of here, it is five inches deep.

M'CLAVE HARD PRESSED

Sensational New York Police Investigation.

The Commissioner Says He Was Worth $400,000 When He Entered Office and Is Worth No More Now—Detectives Hunting for the Missing ex-Son-in-Law.

NEW YORK, May 23.—The case of Police Commissioner McClave before the senate investigating committee has brought forth several sensations. His ex-son-in-law, Gideon Granger, who testified Monday that McClave had received money in considerable sums for getting men on the police force and for having policemen promoted, and was denounced as a drunkard, forger and thief by McClave during a fit of rage, has mysteriously disappeared, although he promised the committee faithfully that he would be on hand to continue his testimony.

When Granger failed to respond to the call of his name McClave resumed the stand. He declared that he was worth $400,000 and that he was worth that amount at the time he was appointed police commissioner. He said he made his fortune in 16 years. Said he owned a country seat besides city property; kept six servants, two carriage horses, a riding horse for his daughter, two horses at his country residence, and 80 horses for his lumber business. He said he did not own a yacht, but a rowboat instead.

Lawyer Goff asked Mr. McClave if he did not secure a position for Granger after the he knew of his doings.

The witness hesitated a little and then said he did. "Did you not recommend him also for a position in the postoffice knowing he was a forger?"

Mr. McClave got excited at this question. "I heard," shouted he, "that Granger had reformed and I tried to do the best I could for him."

Lawyer Goff, after making the witness admit that he had evidence of his son-in-law's forgeries in his possession for four years, asked him if it was not a fact that he had put him in as secretary of the Yankee White Manufacturing company when he knew he was a forger?

Mr. McClave admitted he did in the hope of reforming him.

"How much do you make a year in your business?" asked Mr. Goff.

"Ordinarily an average of $52,000 to $60,000. I made $113,000 in the year 1892."

"For how long?"

"For the past eight or ten years."

"And yet you say you were as rich the day you became police commissioner as you are now?"

"Yes, sir, that's what I say."

Mr. Goff asked the witness if he knew whether a warrant had been issued for the apprehension of Granger. Mr. McClave replied that he had no such knowledge, but that Mr. Nicoll (his lawyer) had advised him to procure a warrant.

After a tilt with Mr. Nicoll Mr. Goff said he wanted Granger to testify as badly as Mr. Nicoll, and added: "I will ask Mr. McClave to instruct Supt. Byrnes to secure Granger."

Mr. McClave said he would go personally and see the superintendent. "I will ask him," he said, "to put every man he can spare on Granger's tracks."

After adjournment Mr. McClave went to police headquarters and asked Supt. Byrnes to send out detectives to arrest Granger. The same request came from the senate investigating committee and officers were at once detailed to look for the missing witness.

Want Citizens to Pay.

NEW YORK, May 23.—At a meeting of of the special committee of the Chamber of Commerce it was resolved to appeal to the citizens of New York for funds to defray the expenses of the Lexow investigation. An appeal was accordingly drawn up and will be mailed to prominent citizens. The committee which drew up the appeal considers $30,000 necessary, of which amount two sums of $1,000 have already been received.

Effect of the Coal Famine.

LITTLE FALLS, N. Y., May 23.—The New York Central railroad is suffering badly from the soft coal famine. The West Shore shops at Frankfort will be compelled to shut down next week unless the strike is settled. They employ 1,000 men. The Central is receiving soft coal from the West Shore at Frankfort and other points. The mills are using hard coal, as not a pound of soft coal is to be had in Little Falls.

Fled From Six Women.

DENVER, May 23.—R. Ashford Taylor, grandson of President Zachary Taylor, who came to Denver early in March, assuming the name of Patrick McGowan, on account of having shot a man in Louisville, Ky., in a quarrel over a woman, has fled from this city, leaving behind six women who claim that he promised to marry them. His flight was hastened by an accidental meeting and exchange of confidences between two of the women.

Fleeing From a Volcano.

ROME, May 23.—The volcano on the island of Stromboli is showing great activity. The eruption is increasing in violence and there are frequent earthquakes. The people living on the island have left their houses in terror. The government has sent two vessels to the island to relieve the inhabitants in case of need.

"Welcher" Stedeker at Toronto

TORONTO, May 23.—Leon Stedeker, the bookmaker who "welched" immediately after the Brooklyn Handicap, is now in this city. He said he had too many Dr. Rice winter tickets out at long odds. He expects to be able shortly to return to the turf. He is accompanied by Mrs. Stedeker.

Archdeacon of New Bedford.

BOSTON, May 23.—Rev. Edmund S. Rousmanier, of New Bedford, has been appointed by Bishop Lawrence archdeacon of the archdeaconry of New Bedford. The appointment was unanimously confirmed.

Signed By Gov. Flower.

ALBANY, May 23.—The governor has signed Assemblyman Lawson's bill increasing the salaries of the doormen and acting doormen of the New York city park police force to $1,000.

Yate's Body to Be Cremated.

LONDON, May 23.—Edmund Yate's body will be cremated at Woking cemetery on May 24.

THE DAILY PRESS.

A. L. FORCE, - - Publisher and Proprietor.
WALTER IRVING CLARKE, - Managing Editor.

CIRCULATION EXCEEDS THAT OF ALL OTHER PLAINFIELD DAILIES COMBINED.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., MAY 23, 1894

Thank heaven the cesspool is doomed.

Hang out your flags and bunting Memorial Day.

Have you noticed?—the fire-gong has resumed its faultless workings, and is doing business in great shape at the old stand.

Now let's all put our shoulder to the wheel and move the freight-house. Another petition to H. P. Baldwin would oil the bearings, or better still would be a delegation of leading citizens.

The fate of the informer is hard in Westfield. They locked Henry Meyers up because he peached on Michael Heuber's selling liquor, and now they have petitioned the Town Committee to discharge him from the force.

"News for Captain Grant", sneeringly remarked the Carey organ in connection with its report of a cock fight. The pit was way out Park avenue, in Middlesex County, and beyond the city limits the Plainfield police have no jurisdiction.

Just one paper in Plainfield has the interests of the town sufficiently at heart to issue for the good of the place the ostly souvenir supplement which is a feature of this issue. Substantial enterprise is the exclusive field of this paper in this town. The Daily Press is published for Plainfield's progress.

Reading the list of names of Tableaux Phantasma participants published exclusively in The Daily Press of yesterday, one would think that about all the town was going to be on the stage. Well, a mighty good share of it is, but if all the friends of the fair amateur "vanishing ladies" gather in Music Hall to see the mystic performances, the audiences will have to have overflow meetings in the Crescent Riding Academy and the Babcock Building.

The Daily Press is proud. Plainfield is proud, of the Plainfield Crescent Wheelmen. That estimable body of solid young business men is pushing to success a gigantic undertaking which will work much good to Plainfield. Since the heralding abroad of the building of the Crescent Oval the outside world has taken a renewed interest in this town, and Plainfield is destined to be the wheelmen's Mecca. This getting the world's eyes on Plainfield is a mighty good thing. It means a substantial boom. If you haven't yet joined the procession, now is the time to subscribe for stock and boost the Wheelmen and the town along the road to glory. This is no Coxey movement, but a mighty progressive bit of modern hustling. Enterprise such as that of the Wheelmen merits getting out the band. As the lamented Gep: 49er would say, "Whoop 'er up!" There 's glory for Plainfield in the Crescent Oval.

Within five years, through the operation of the interstate commerce law, the small town has been placed upon an equality with the larger city in the matter of freight rates. Previously prohibitory rates ruled wherever there was but one railroad. Cost of transportation was as unstable as the wind. Cut rate followed pool rate, one extreme the other, and each succeeding 1st of January terminated all. The law now has given permanency to the conditions which regulate the carrying tariff. Rates are based upon distance and not upon the elements of competition. This fact redounds to the advantage of the small town, for freights being equal the manufacturer naturally seeks the location where his employees can obtain lowest living and cheapest rents or perchance by the exercise of thrift and energy may gain independence and secure homes. Many places which were virtually at a standstill before the enactment by congress of the interstate law have since doubled in population and become actual manufacturing centers. A village possesses advantages for the laborer and consequent advantage for the employer which cannot exist in populous and area covering cities.

ADVERTISE THE TOWN.

Business firms that are progressive in these days advertise their business. Those who do not remain unknown and eventually cease to exist. Buyers must be informed where goods are on sale. Sellers must look for the purchaser, and he expects them to.

Unquestionably the advertising of a town or city furnishes a splendid medium for acquainting the outside world of its individual business enterprise. Advertising a town is a most effective way of calling attention to the wares of its business men, because those who visit the town will easily find out what its merchants have to sell.

One of the great cities of the Atlantic seaboard has recently formed a trades league, and this organization is now jealously at work calling the attention of the country to the many advantages their city offers. One of the latest methods adopted by the league is for each member to have printed on its letter heads and envelopes a list of the attractions of the city, its population, its business facilities in the way of railroads and water transportation, its buildings, schools, parks, death rate, market territory and system, churches and their denominations, industrial arts and manufactures, also tax rates, water rates, costs of rent and living.

This is a cheap and effective way of telling the business world that their city amounts to something, and that its residents invite strangers to come and see and buy. This plan can be profitably worked in any town, and in no other way can so much be accomplished at so small an outlay. The newspapers of the town should also be placed in the hotels of the cities and towns of sections of the country that are likely in no other way to know of its advantages. Books of the town may be put in railway depots, hotels and public libraries of adjacent and faraway towns and cities.

MAKE A MOVE!

The Trenton True American well says:

An effort is making among the Democratic Senators to secure the adoption of a closure rule, in order to secure an earlier passage of the tariff bill, and twenty-eight Democratic Senators, it is reported, have already signified their willingness to vote for such a measure. It is said to be the plan of those behind the movement to hold a caucus, make closure the issue, and then if its opponents refuse to recede from their position, to let the country know who is responsible for the failure of the majority to change the ridiculous rules of the Senate. There are only five or six Democratic Senators who would stand in the way of this movement. Let them be put to the test. The country is disgusted with what appears to be the imbecility of the majority to assert itself as compared with the vigorous and determined action of the Republicans, heretofore, when they had any important measure on hand, and they would hail with satisfaction any movement that would show to the country that they are dead earnest in their effort to secure tariff reform.

EARLY INTELLIGENCE.

—The meeting at the East Third Street Mission this evening promises to be an interesting one.

—The storm undermined the stone heaps at Wilson's stone crusher and did considerable damage.

—Randolph Marsh, Deputy of Bricklayers' Union, No. 14, went to Somerville last evening to assist Union No. 23.

—It is probable that a name will be given to the new Camp of Sons of Veterans at the next meeting, Monday evening.

—Justice Nash will try the landlord and tenant case of Mulford against O'Hara, May 29; and that on contract of French et al. against Smith, May 31.

—In spite of the disagreeable weather last evening, Putnam & DeGraw were unable to close their store until after 9, on account of the excellent trade.

—Putnam & DeGraw are keeping pace with the old established stores in quality of goods and prices. They are popular because they treat the people right.

—The Salvation Army's strawberry and ice-cream festival Decoration Day night will be attended by the Bound Brook corps and officers from New York.

—The tire on one of the front wheels of a United States Express wagon came off this noon while the wagon was passing along Somerset street, and had to be fastened on with wire.

—Herbert Moore of Grove street severely scratched the face of Herbert Schutt of Duer street with an umbrella while the two were engaged in a friendly fencing match yesterday afternoon.

—Rev. D. Blow, late of Virginia, will give a temperance talk in Reform Hall tomorrow evening at 8, and there will be a musical programme consisting of piano solos and duets by two young women.

—Thomas Coughlin of Mt. Bethel pleaded guilty to drunkenness, in the City Court this morning. He was arrested yesterday afternoon on East Ninth street by Special Policeman V. W. Nash. Judge Coddington suspended sentence.

Installation Tonight.

The newly-elected officers of the Epworth League will be installed this evening in Vincent Chapel. The prayer-meeting will be under the auspices of the League, and every member is urged to be present.

Hello, Netherwood!

The New York and New Jersey Telephone Company, ever awake to the needs of the day, have granted the petition of Netherwood people for a pay station at Netherwood, and one will be established in Guttridge's grocery store.

Annual Meeting.

The annual meeting of the Reformed Branch Alliance of Unitarian and Other Christian Women will be held in the Congregational Church, May 31, at 4 in the afternoon.

—Use the best paper first and take enough space to make the ad effective; use all you profitably can in that paper before you consider any other. One good ad beats two poor ones. Two short poles are not as good as one long one when you're after persimmons. The biggest circulation in Plainfield is that of The Press.

Important Railroad Decision.

BOSTON, May 23.—In the Supreme court a jury returned a verdict of 17 cents for the Old Colony Railroad company in its suit against Lawyer Charles S. Rackeman to recover a fare between Boston and Hyde Park, which defendant would not pay because there was no seat for him. It was made a test case and may go to the full bench on law points.

Collieries Flooded; Mules Drowned.

MAUCH CHUNK, Pa., May 23.—Every one of the fourteen collieries of the Lehigh Coal and Navigation company located at Nesquehoning and Pansford is flooded. Twenty dead mules were taken out of No. 1 shaft at Nesquehoning.

Virginia Miners Resume Work.

CHARLESTOWN, W. Va., May 23.—The majority of the mines in the New river, Loup creek and Kanawha regions have resumed work, some running on full time.

Local Weather Forecast.

Partly cloudy; slightly warmer; variable winds, becoming easterly

IT'S A MILLSTONE

About a young man's neck to be a sufferer from nervous exhaustion, nervous debility, impaired memory, low spirits, irritable temper, and the thousand and one derangements of mind and body that result from, unnatural, pernicious habits, contracted through ignorance. Such habits result in loss of manly power, wreck the constitution and sometimes produce softening of the brain, epilepsy, paralysis, and even dread insanity.

To reach, re-claim and restore such unfortunates to health and happiness, is the aim of the publishers of a book written in plain but chaste language, on the nature, symptoms and curability, by home treatment, of such diseases. This book will be sent sealed, in plain envelope, on receipt of ten cents in stamps, for postage. Address, World's Dispensary Medical Association, 663 Main St., Buffalo, N. Y.

TO BE SETTLED TONIGHT.

(Special by Wire to The Press)

TRENTON, May 23.—The Governor has not yet made any disposition of the Plainfield School Bill, but will file it after the Legislature meets tonight at 8, and it will then become a law.

TOMORROW THE FIRST.

All the Town Will Flock to See the Tableaux Phantasma.

Under the bright glare of hidden lights Plainfielders will tomorrow night see the atmosphere on the Music Hall stage take to itself life and become a beautiful animated picture. The entertainment "Phantasma" to be given tomorrow night and Friday afternoon and evening will be a success beyond all doubt, for wherever it has been presented those seeing it have returned to see its reproduction on succeeding nights, bringing with them relatives and friends.

Faces familiar to residents of this city for years will be conjured up in the centre of a brightly lighted stage, and in a way that renders impossible any theories of trap doors. Beautiful visions come and go, one dissolving into another, and all so dexterously arranged and neatly carried out that to attempt any explanation seems hopeless, without the aid of Prof. Sherman, the inventor.

The Orange Chronicle gives the following description of the tableau:

"Next came the most remarkably weird and thrilling illustration, 'The Spectre Bride'. It was marvelously realistic. The bridegroom appeared sitting on the stage reading a letter which told of the death of his bride in a distant land, when suddenly she appeared before him in her wedding gown. Stepping toward her he clasped her in his arms only to have her fade away, leaving him alone. Again she appeared, and as suddenly took fright. Once more the vision appeared, when seizing a rapier he thrust it through and through her in a frenzy, while she writhed in apparent agony. He sank into a chair and she disappeared, only to reappear again and place on his head a beautiful wreath."

The most prominent young people in Plainfield society will appear in the entertainments, and no doubt a round sum will be realized for the Auxiliary Board of Muhlenberg Hospital, in whose aid they are given.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

Miss Zulie Schroder, of Watchung avenue, is spending a week with Miss E. Stotthoff, of Greene avenue, Brooklyn.

Max Werts has leased the Major Boyd home at 544 West Front street for his catering business.

Owing to the serious illness of Mrs. J. W. Dryden's mother, the Misses Dryden have been obliged to withdraw from the Tableaux Phantasma.

Word has been received in this city of the death of Mrs. Rosa Vosselman, wife of John Vosselman, which occurred Tuesday, May 15, in Titusville.

W. C. Burt of West Seventh street returned from Vermont again last night. His daughter, who was injured in the runaway, has gained slightly in strength, but is still unconscious most of the time.

H. C. Drake, George Kyte and Samuel W. Ball will decorate the soldiers graves in Scotch Plains Memorial Day. Robert Milligan will have charge of the Westfield detail. I. L. McVoy will be local officer of the day for Winfield Scott Post.

F. W. Swayzee, of Washington, private secretary of President Thomas Platt of the United States Express Company, soon will move into the house 937 Prospect avenue. A load of furnitnre came by express today, and was taken to the house by Manager Mills.

For sick headache and all other conditions resulting from constipation, go by the book on Beecham's pills.

Book free, pills 25c. At drugstores; or write to B F Allen Co, 365 Canal st, New York.

NEWS OF THE PNEUS.

Otto Nehr, a young machinist employed in W. H. Rogers's repair shop, is making a bicycle for himself, doing all of the work except the nickel-plating. He has purchased wooden rims and turned the hubs, and is now fitting spokes made from nickeled piano wire. The frame he will make of a high pattern for two 28-inch wheels, but imitating no particular make. The wheel, fitted with 1¼ inch inner-tube tires, is expected to weigh 20 pounds.

The New Brunswick Bicycle Club will run to Plainfield tonight.

Nearly all of the prizes for the opening races of the new track, June 2, are displayed in the window of J. Hervey Doane's jewelry store.

The bicycle racing which is included in the events arranged for the P.H.S.A.A. field day, June 9, will be held under the L. A. W. A number of members of the Association rode to Westfield this afternoon to arouse interest among cyclers who are eligible to enter.

The Crescent track was reported to be in excellent shape taday, after the storm was over. None of the surface was washed away, and the rain prepared the top dressing for rolling.

Witnesses in a Divorce Case.

Rev. T. Logan Murphy, Chief Marshal Pangborn, W. Coriell and John McDonald were subpœnaed to Newark today to testify in Chancery concerning the suit of Mrs. Richard Coriell for divorce. She and her husband have been parted 20 years.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the one positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio. ### TO OWNERS OF DOGS.

BOROUGH OF NORTH PLAINFIELD,
May 17, 1894.

The attention of all concerned is called to the following extract from an act passed by the Legislature of the State of New Jersey.

"That any person who shall own, keep or harbor any dogs, bitch or bitches shall have the same registered and numbered with the Clerk of the Borough in which the owner or person harboring the same shall reside, and shall place upon the neck of each dog or bitch kept or harbored a collar, having engraved thereon upon a metal surface, the name of the owner of said dog or bitch and the registered number thereof; and it shall be lawful for any person to kill any dog or bitch found straying off the owner's premises without such collar upon its neck.

The person applying for registration shall pay the sum of one dollar for each dog or bitch thus registered."

The registry book is kept at the office of the Borough Clerk, J. K. Arnold, 92 Somerset street, and prompt compliance with the provisions of the aforesaid statute is urged.

A REMARKABLE CURE

MIDDLEBUSH, Somerset Co., N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For the past forty years I have been afflicted with bleeding piles. I suffered constant pain in the lower part of my body, but when I had an operation of the bowels the pain was perfectly terrible, and was most always attended with the loss of a large quantity of blood. My condition was complicated with prolapse of the rectum, which at first only made its appearance when I had a movement of the bowels, but at length the parts became so weakened that the protrusion took place while walking or stooping, or after the slightest exertion, and sometimes even while I was at rest. Whenever this happened it gave rise to the most agonizing pain, and felt as though something was pulling the life right out of me. In fact only those similarly situated can imagine the suffering and distress which I had to endure from day to day, and which made my life a terrible burden. Hearing of Dr. Lighthill's wonderful success in the cure of difficult chronic diseases, I placed myself under his care, and now I am proud and happy to say that, marvelous as it may seem, he effected a complete and radical cure in my case in every respect, and he performed this cure without any painful operation or preventing me from work. Since this terrible disease has been removed by Dr. Lighthill's skill I feel new life, and for the first time in forty years I feel once more what it is to be without daily pain, discomfort and distress. I am not a wealthy man, but no amount of money would tempt me to be put back in my former condition.

I make this public statement, not only from a deep and everlasting sense of gratitude to Dr. Lighthill, but also as a simple Christian duty to let the afflicted know where they can find a physician whose skill cannot be surpassed, and in whom implicit confidence can be placed. H. VROOM.

A LOCAL ENDORSEMENT.

No. 188 Somerset st., Plainfield, N. J.

To the Residents of Plainfield, N. J.

Mr. H. Vroom, whose statement appears above, is a brother-in-law of mine. I personally know of his case and his suffering and also know the happy fact that to the surprise of himself and his friends, Dr. Lighthill effected a radical and permanent cure. His statement is true in every respect and does not say half enough in praise of Dr. Lighthill. Anyone who wishes this statement verified is at liberty to come and see me personally. JOHN C. KINNEY.

WOMAN AND HOME.

Plainfield Branch Alliance Discusses the Gentler Sex.

The May meeting of the Plainfield Branch Alliance was held in the parlors of All Souls Church yesterday afternoon. An interesting session was enjoyed, although the rain kept some of the members at home.

Before the regular topic was discussed, Mrs. Ryder gave a very interesting account of the work and methods of the Ramabai Circle which is striving to elevate the condition of the thousands of young widows in India by introducing Christianity and education.

The subject of the afternoon's discussion was "Woman and the Home". Mrs. David P. Hall began with an original paper on "The waist of fashion plates—how shall we reform them?" It was full of bright and humorous ideas.

Miss Isabelle Tweedy made a brief address on "Physical Education and Correct Dress". This subject was also discussed by Mrs. W. H. Riley and Miss Erskine. Mrs. Charles Sykes of Scotch Plains made a few remarks on "Simplicity in the Home", and read appropriate selections from Emerson. Miss E. C. Perkins talked on "Cheerfulness in the home a moral necessity". Miss Erskine spoke on "Character Building" and read selections from Emerson. Miss S. R. Krom read an interesting clipping showing the difference between New York and Connecticut in laws regarding the rights of women.

FOR A NEW SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

Excellent Entertainment Provided by Trinity Young People.

A pleasing entertainment for a worthy purpose was given in the Y. M. C. A. rooms last evening. The proceeds will be added to the Trinity Reformed Church fund for building a new Sunday-school.

The managers of the entertainment were four young women, Christian Endeavorers, who are so modest as to request that their names should not be mentioned. Under the name of "Willing Workers" they had prepared a programme which was much enjoyed. The audience was gratifyingly large in spite of the weather. All of the parts were well taken and nothing failed to please in the presentation of the following programme:

Song—"Twenty Frogs Went To School".
Misses Bruda Wolff, Martha Anthony, Annie Metler, Anna Hazell, Lucy Corlell.
Dialogue—"Have a shine, Sah?".

If all the goods used in Plainfield that can be bought as low as in New York were purchased in Plainfield, it would be the most prosperous as well as the most beautiful city in the State. Let us by all means patronize home and home industries. Where, then, shall we buy our wall paper? At Love's, corner of North and Watchung avenues, who spends thousands of dollars a year in Plainfield engraving the blocks for the finest made in America. Mr. Swalm will show you the largest line ever seen in Plainfield, from the cheapest kitchen paper to heavy pressed paper. Also you will find a full line of mouldings, paints, oils and glass. Love is agent for the J. & J. Dobson carpets and rugs, which are sold at the same price as their New York store.

The Roselle Imbroglio.

Constable W. R. Mattox this morning served two warrants issued by Justice Nash on complaint of C. H. Hale of Roselle against Justice F. M. Tiernan and his son Charles of the same place, for assault and battery. The constable took them before another Roselle justice. They each gave $100 bail for appearance before the Grand Jury in October. President William G. E. See is Hale's lawyer.

Finished at Last.

A very exciting checker match took place last evening for the championship of the Fourth ward, between Jack and Jim against Joe and Edward. The match ended in favor of Jack and Jim, each winning two out of three. This leaves Jack and Jim the champions of the Fourth ward. One of the games played was very exciting, lasting one hour and a half.

Engineering for Sewers.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Evangelist Crane led the Christian Endeavor meeting in Trinity Reformed Church Monday evening, and it was a most pleasant and profitable gathering.

The sociable under the auspices of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of Trinity Reformed Church that was to take place tomorrow evening has been postponed until some time in June.

The Union County Christian Endeavor Union will hold their annual conference in the Westfield Presbyterian Church, Friday evening, May 25, at 7:45. Members are requested to bring their No. 6 singing books with them.

In response to invitation from the committee, Miss Alice Spangenberg has consented to make an address before the Morris County Christian Endeavor Convention in German Valley May 25. Her subject will be "How to Educate and Enlist Christian Endeavorers in Mission Work".

The following programme will be given under the auspices of the Christian Endeavor Society of Warren Chapel tomorrow evening at 8:

PART I.

Piano Solo.....Mrs. F. Canfield
Chorus—Star of Descending Night.
Duet—Gipsy Countess, E. B. Ryder, Miss I. E. Dunham
Solo—A Touch of Humanity.....Mr. Bond
Reading.....Miss Anna D. Cooper
Solo.....Miss K. Mullon of Brooklyn
Chorus—Hush Thee My Baby.

PART II.

Male Quartette—Messrs. Ryder, Clark, Moore and Rand
Duet—In the Starlight—Misses M. Smith, I. E. Dunham, E. Smith M. Shepherd.
Solo.....R. Clark
Chorus—Come Where the Lilies.
Reading.....Miss Anna D. Cooper

Solo and Chorus—We'll Have to Mortgage the Farm—William Tallamy, Mrs. William Westphal, Miss Maggie Page, Miss Lizzie Duvier, William Westphal, Bertram Tallamy.

To Teach Politics and Statesmanship.

Among the acts approved by Governor Werts last week is one authorizing the distribution among the school libraries of the State of a history of New Jersey's later politics and legislation on which William Edgar Sackett, of East Orange, has been engaged for the last six or seven months. The work has not been completed yet, and the Legislature has paid Sackett an unusual and appreciated compliment in thus consenting in advance of its publication to its addition to the volumes in the school libraries. The appearance of the book is anticipated with the liveliest interest in public circles, and thousands of public men have already forwarded their subscription cards for it. It is to cover the legislative and political history of the State for the last twenty-five years, and will help to make the people of today acquainted with the men who have been and are shaping their public affairs for them. The theory on which it is to be placed in the libraries is that it is quite as essential that the growing youth of the State should know something of its later history and of the men who are or have been instrumental in making it as of the achievements and men of its earlier times. The Governor, State Comptroller and State School Superintendent are to determine, when the book is out of press, whether it meets this requirement sufficiently well to justify its placing on the shelves of the school libraries.

Preparing for Memorial Day.

At the meeting of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, held last evening, the Committee on Camp of Sons of Veterans reported what had been done in this matter, and the report was received.

Commander Reese of Westfield was detained at home by illness, and Adjutant M. C. Dobbins was asked to call on Mr. Reese today, to complete arrangements for Memorial Day. Other routine business was transacted, after which the meeting adjourned.

FOR THE BASE-BALL FUND.

West End Association Gives a Good Show for a Worthy Object.

That the West End Base-Ball Association is at earnest in its attempts to make base-ball a feature of the Summer's sport was shown by its work last night at the first entertainment in Reform Hall. The storm doubtless kept many away, but the managers are not dissatisfied with their success.

Walter Magee, Wm. Nicholson, Alex. Muir, David Thompson, James Penny and Walter Higgins showed in a clever way "How to Square Accounts with Your Laundress". Harry Turner and Frederick W. Bowden sang, the latter responding to an encore with "The Girl I Left Behind". A sketch "Fun in a Gymnasium", was received with great applause. In it John Thompson and Joseph Miles had a three-round boxing match and David Thompson and James Penny a set-to.

In the second part Wm. Nicholson sang "Sweet Marie" and a selection was rendered by the Ætna Quartette, Will and Bertram Tallamy, W. A. Leland and Harry Yerger. Fred W. Bowden sang "The Sheriff's Sale" and then a sketch entitled "The Dentist's Clerk" was presented by W. A. Leland, David Thompson, Jas. Penny, Albert McComas, Walter Magee, Wm. Nicholson and Harry Turner.

The Committee of Arrangements included J. H. Cose, G. E. Firstbrook, W. N. Magee and A. Leland. David Thompson was the stage manager. Music was furnished by Higham Brothers.

Clarke Will Contest.

NEW YORK, May 23.—The fight over the fortune which was left by Richard J. Clarke, the retired restaurant keeper, who died at Plainfield, N. J., in June, 1892, has just been begun over again in the Supreme court before Judge Beach and a jury. Clarke was a butcher and died at the age of 82 years. He made a number of bequests, but made Mrs. Alice A. Schell, a widow who nursed him during his last illness, his principal beneficiary. His estate is estimated to be worth about $200,000. His nearest relatives were cousins and they will contest the will, charging undue influences and mental incapacity.

Temperance Tea.

Mrs. Francis of Elizabeth will speak in the W. C. T. U. rooms tomorrow afternoon at 3:30 on the subject "The World's and National W. C. T. U". The "Y's" and all friends of the Union are invited to be present. Tea will be served.

The Human Electrical Forces!

How They Control the Organs of the Body.

The electrical force of the human body, as the nerve fluid may be termed, is an especially attractive department of science, as it exerts so marked an influence on the health of the organs of the body. Nerve force is produced by the brain and conveyed by means of the nerves to the various organs of the body, thus supplying the latter with the vitality necessary to insure their health. The pneumogastric nerve, as shown here, may be said to be the most important of the entire nerve system, as it supplies the heart, lungs, stomach, bowels, etc., with the nerve force necessary to keep them active and healthy. As will be seen by the cut the long nerve descending from the base of the brain and terminating in the bowels is the pneumogastric, while the numerous little branches supply the heart, lungs and stomach with necessary vitality. When the brain becomes in any way disordered by irritability or exhaustion, the nerve force which it supplies is lessened, and the organs receiving the diminished supply are consequently weakened.

Physicians generally fail to recognize the importance of this fact, but treat the organ itself instead of the cause of the trouble. The noted specialist, Franklin Miles, M. D., LL. B., has given the greater part of his life to the study of this subject, and the principal discoveries concerning it are due to his efforts. Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, the unrivaled brain and nerve food, is prepared on the principle that all nervous and many other difficulties originate from disorders of the nerve centers. Its wonderful success in curing these disorders is testified to by thousands in every part of the land.

Restorative Nervine cures sleeplessness, nervous prostration, dizziness, hysteria, sexual debility, St. Vitus dance, epilepsy, etc. It is free from opiates or dangerous drugs. It is sold on a positive guarantee by all druggists, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid.

Sold by A. D. Hallinson, 205 North Avenue, opp. station.

Colt's Estate.

HARTFORD, Conn., May 23.—The inventory of the estate of the late Commodore Caldwell H. Colt has been filed for probate. It amounts to $785,496, $500,000 of which is the value of 4,794 shares of the Colt's Patent Firearms Manufacturing company. Real estate is valued at $33,500; railroad bonds $62,985; the yachts Dauntless at $5,000, Oriole $3,000, Atala $600. The remainder of the estate is in insurance, bank and railroad stocks in some of the leading companies in the country.

Prendergast May Yet Be Hanged.

CHICAGO, May 23.—Prendergast, the assassin, has been given a longer lease of life or imprisonment in the county jail by the agreement of lawyers representing the state and the prisoner that the insanity inquiry should go over to June 11. Judge Chetlain, who acquiesced in the arrangement will not be sitting in the criminal branch of the Cook county courts at that time. The prosecution has fought hard for this delay and Prendergast may yet be sent to the gallows.

Ryan Knocks Out Falvey.

HARTFORD, Conn., May 23.—Tommy Ryan, champion welter weight of the world, knocked out Jack Falvey, of Providence, in the third round last night. Ryan had the advantage in height and weight, but it was his skill that outclassed Falvey. The contest was the last of a programme of boxing and wrestling contests that came off under the auspices of the Governor's Foot Guard.

FOR THE relief and cure of a cold in the head there is more potency in Ely's Cream Balm than in anything else it is possible to prescribe. This preparation has for years past been making a brilliant success as a remedy for cold in the head, catarrh and hay fever. Used in the initial stages of these complaints Cream Balm prevents any serious development of the symptoms, while almost numberless cases are on record of radical cures of chronic catarrh and hay fever after all other treatments have proved of no avail.

HYMENEAL.

Hodge—Humpstone.

The marriage of Miss Fanny Humpstone, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Humpstone of 321 West Front street, Dunellen, to Charles Frederick Hodge, of Finderne, took place yesterday afternoon at 3 at the home of the bride. Rev. Mr. Martine performed the ceremony before a large gathering of friends and relatives.

The wedding march was played by John Humpstone, a brother of the groom.

The bride wore a dress of light cloth with brown moire trimmings, and carried a handsome bouquet of tea roses, lilies of the valley and maidenhair ferns.

Myers Hodge of Somerville and John Ayers of Rahway were the ushers.

Among those present were: Mr. and Mrs. W. Hetfield, Mr. and Mrs. Smalley, Charles Johnson, Dunellen; Miss Millie Humpstone, Miss Grace Humpstone, Miss Winckler, Miss Smalley, Miss Lunger, Mr. and Mrs. David Richards, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Hodge, Miss M. Thompson, Miss C. Smalley, Plainfield; Mr. and Mrs. Goyn Hodge, father and mother of the groom, Mrs. King, Miss Margaret Camin, Finderne; Mr. and Mrs. Huff, Bound Brook; Mr. and Mrs. Goyn Hodge, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Henry Hodge and Neaf Apgar, Somerville.

The gifts were numerous and costly.

Mr. and Mrs. Hodge left Bound Brook last evening at 6 for Washington. They will return Saturday and take up their residence in Finderne.

CHAPTER XIV.

CONCERNING THE CARETAKERS.

The doctors in Petershof always said that the caretakers of the invalids were a much greater anxiety than the invalids themselves. The invalids would either get better or die—one of two things probably. At any rate, you knew where you were with them. But not so with the caretakers. There was nothing they were not capable of doing, except taking reasonable care of their invalids. They either fussed about too much, or else they did not fuss about at all. They all began by doing the right thing. They all ended by doing the wrong. The fussy ones had fits of apathy when the poor irritable patients seemed to get a little better. The negligent ones had paroxysms of attentiveness when their invalids, accustomed to loneliness and neglect, seemed to become rather worse by being worried.

To remonstrate with the caretakers would have been folly, for they were well satisfied with their own methods.

To contrive their departure would have been an impossibility, for they were firmly convinced that their presence was necessary to the welfare of their charges. And then, too, judging from the way in which they managed to amuse themselves, they liked being in Petershof, though they never owned that to the invalids. On the contrary, it was the custom for the caretakers to depreciate the place and to deplore the necessity which obliged them to continue there month after month. They were fond, too, of talking about the sacrifices which they made and the pleasures which they willingly gave up in order to stay with their invalids. They said this in the presence of their invalids. And if the latter had told them by all means to pack up and go back to the pleasures which they had renounced they would have been astonished at the ingratitude which could suggest the idea.

They were amusing characters, these caretakers. They were so thoroughly unconscious of their deficiencies. They might neglect their own invalids, but they would look after other people's invalids and play the nurse most soothingly and prettily where there was no call and no occasion. Then they would come and relate to their neglected dear ones what they had been doing for others, and the dear ones would smile quietly and watch the buttons being stitched on for strangers and the cornflour which they could not get nicely made for themselves being carefully prepared for other people's neglected dear ones.

Some of the dear ones were rather bitter. But there were many of a higher order of intelligence who seemed to realize that they had no right to be ill, and that being ill and therefore a burden on their friends they must make the best of everything and be grateful for what was given them and patient when anything was withheld.

Others of a still higher order of understanding attributed the eccentricities of the caretakers to one cause alone—the Petershof air. They knew it had the invariable effect of getting into the head and upsetting the balance of those who drank deep of it. Therefore no one was to blame, and no one need be bitter. But these were the philosophers of the colony—a select and dainty few in any colony. But there were several rebels among the invalids, and they found consolation in confiding to each other their separate grievances. They generally held their conferences in the rooms known as the newspaper rooms, where they were not likely to be interrupted by any caretakers who might have staid at home because they were tired out.

Today there were only a few rebels gathered together, but they were more than usually excited, because the doctors had told several of them that their respective caretakers must be sent home.

"What must I do?" said little Mlle. Gerardy, wringing her hands. "The doctor says that I must tell my sister to go home; that she only worries me and makes me worse. He calls her a 'whirlwind.' If I won't tell her, then he will tell her, and we shall have some more scenes. Mon Dieu, and I am so tired of them. They terrify me. I would suffer anything rather than have a fresh scene. And I can't get her to do anything for me. She has no time for me. And yet she thinks she takes the greatest possible care of me and devotes the whole day to me. Why, sometimes I never see her for hours together."

"Well, at least she does not quarrel with every one, as my mother does," said a Polish gentleman—M. Lichinsky. "Nearly every day she has a quarrel with some one or other, and then she comes to me and says she has been insulted. And others come to me mad with rage and complain that they have been insulted by her. As though I were to blame! I tell them that now. I tell them that my mother's quarrels are not my quarrels. But one longs for peace. And the doctor says I must have it, and that my mother must go home at once. If I tell her that, she will have a tremendous quarrel with the doctor. As it is, he will scarcely speak to her. So you see, Mlle. Gerardy, that I, too, am in a bad plight. What am I to do?"

Then a young American spoke. He had been getting gradually worse since he came to Petershof, but his brother, a bright, sturdy young fellow, seemed quite unconscious of the seriousness of his condition.

"And what am I to do?" he asked pathetically. "My brother does not even think I am ill. He says I am to rouse myself and come skating and tobogganing with him. Then I tell him that the doctor says I must lie quietly in the sun. I have no one to take care of me, so I try to take a little care of myself, and then I am laughed at. It is bad enough to be ill, but it is worse when those who might help you a little won't even believe in your illness. I wrote home once and told them, but they go by what he says. And they, too, tell me to rouse myself."

His cheeks were sunken; his eyes were leaden. There was no power in his voice, no vigor in his frame. He was just slipping quickly down the hill for want of proper care and understanding.

"I don't know whether I am much better off than you," said an English lady, Mrs. Bridgetower. "I certainly have a trained nurse to look after me, but she is altogether too much for me, and she does just as she pleases. She is always ailing or else pretends to be, and she is always depressed. She grumbles from 8 in the morning till 9 at night. I have heard that she is cheerful with other people, but she never gives me the benefit of her brightness. Poor thing! She does feel the cold very much, but it is not very cheering to see her crouching near the stove, with her arms almost clasping it. When she is not talking of her own looks, all she says is, 'Oh, if I had only not come to Petershof!' or, 'Why did I ever leave that hospital in Manchester?' or 'The cold is eating into the very marrow of my bones.' At first she used to read to me, but it was such a dismal performance that I could not bear to hear her. Why don't I send her home? Well, my husband will not hear of me being alone, and he thinks I might do worse than keep Nurse Frances. And perhaps I might."

"I would give a good deal to have a sister like pretty Fraulein Muller has," said little Fraulein Oberhof. "She came to look after me the other day when I was alone. She has the kindest way about her. But when my sister came in she was not pleased to find Fraulein Sophie Muller with me. She does not do anything for me herself, and she does not like any one else to do anything either. Still she is very good to other people. She comes up from the theater sometimes at half past 9—that is the hour when I am just sleepy—and she stamps about the room and makes cornflour for the old Polish lady. Then off she goes, taking with her the cornflour, together with my sleep. Once I complained, but she said I was irritable. You can't think how teasing it is to hear the noise of the spoon stirring the cornflour just when you are feeling drowsy. You say to yourself: 'Will that cornflour never be made? It seems to take centuries.'"

"One could be more patient if it were being made for oneself," said M. Lichinsky. "But at least, fraulein, your sister does not quarrel with every one. You must be grateful for that mercy."

Even as he spoke a stout lady thrust herself into the reading room. She looked very hot and excited. She was M. Lichinsky's mother. She spoke with a whirlwind of Polish words. It is sometimes difficult to know when these people are angry and when they are pleased. But there was no mistake about Mme. Lichinsky. She was always angry. Her son rose from the sofa and followed her to the door. Then he turned round to his confederates and shrugged his shoulders.

"Another quarrel!" he said hopelessly.

CHAPTER XV.

WHICH CONTAINS NOTHING.

"You may have talent for other things," Robert Allitsen said one day to Bernardine, "but you certainly have no talent for photography. You have not made the slightest progress."

"I don't at all agree with you," Bernardine answered rather peevishly. "I think I am getting on very well."

"You are no judge," he said. "To begin with, you cannot focus properly. You have a crooked eye. I have told you that several times."

"You certainly have," she put in. "You don't let me forget that."

"Your photograph of that horrid little danseuse whom you like so much," he said, "is simply abominable. She looks like a fury. Well, she may be one for all I know, but in real life she has not the appearance of one."

"I think that is the best photograph I have done," Bernardine said, highly indignant. She could tolerate his unpleasantness about subjects of which she knew far more than he did, but his masterfulness about a subject of which she really knew nothing was more than she could bear with patience. He had not the tact to see that she was irritated.

"I don't know about it being the best," he said, "unless it is the best specimen of your inexperience. Looked at from that point of view, it does stand first."

She flushed crimson with temper.

"Nothing is easier than to make fun of others," she said fiercely. "It is the resource of the ignorant."

Then, after the fashion of angry women, having said her say, she stalked away. If there had been a door to bang, she would certainly have banged it. However, she did what she could under the circumstances—she pushed a curtain roughly aside and passed into the concert room, where every night of the season's six months a scratchy string orchestra entertained the Kurhaus guests. She left the Disagreeable Man standing in the passage.

"Dear me," he said thoughtfully. And he stroked his chin. Then he trudged slowly up to his room.

"Dear me," he said once more.

Arrived in his bedroom, he began to read. But after a few minutes he shut his book, took the lamp to the looking glass and brushed his hair. Then he put on a black coat and a white silk tie. There was a speck of dust on the coat. He carefully removed that and then extinguished the lamp.

On his way down stairs he met Marie, who gazed at him in astonishment. It was quite unusual for him to be seen again when he had once come up from table d'hote. She noticed the black coat and the white silk tie, too, and reported on these eccentricities to her colleague Anna.

Don't Hesitate, but Call and Be Convinced That Every Statement We Make Is True.

To those who do not already know that there is established in Newark, at 105 Halsey street, a physician who stands in the foremost rank of his profession, who is indorsed by the leading colleges of the country and who can prove by witnesses right here in Newark (not by one, but by hundreds) that he has succeeded in curing cases that have been utterly given up by other physicians, and good ones too. To those who do not these facts we state that any person, rich or poor, old or young, is welcome here and receive examination and advice free of charge.

Thousands praise the day they came to us for treatment. There is no guess work, no experimenting, no painful operation. No matter how difficult the case, no matter how much of the physician's time it may consume, the diagnosis will not only be thorough, it will be absolutely free. There is no taint of quackery or deception; no claim or statement is made that is not borne out by facts and living witnesses.

Mrs. Abby A. Ray, late of 86 Grove street, East Orange, who now lives at 400 Ellmore street, Escanaba, Mich., writes, under date of January 12: "The medicine arrived this morning and I am so glad it came. I am almost out, and it has helped me so much and I am so much pleased with its wonderful effort on my broken down system that I would like to testify to your great success in my case. I am feeling as well now, in fact better, than I had ever hoped to again."

This is one of many letters that we receive daily. We have the originals at our office and if you wish you may see them. Another thing: We never publish or reveal a patient's name unless they so desire.

DR. STARKWEATHER.

There is not a penny to pay for the fullest medical advice. Dr. Starkweather is a graduate of the Berkshire Medical College, Massachusetts, and of the Medico-Chirurgical College of Philadelphia; endorsed also by the College of Physicians and Surgeons and Bellevue Medical College of New York. We invite all sufferers from whatever cause to call at our office, No. 105 Halsey street, Newark, where Dr. Starkweather is in attendance daily to give examination and advice entirely free of charge. It matters not what the disease, or how many years you have suffered, in spite of means adopted in your behalf, a visit to this office and the privileges of the same will cost you nothing, and may be the means of saving your life. We prepare all our medicines and prescribe the remedies as indicated. This plan enables the patient to receive directly from us such remedies as will produce the results promised.

Our office is open daily from 10 a. m. to 9 p. m. Sundays 4 to 6 p. m.

Those living at a distance can consult the Doctor by letter.

PRAISE FOR GORMAN

Democrats Delighted With His Tariff Speech.

Republicans Not Backward in Admitting That the Maryland Senator Presented a Strong Argument in Support of the Measure—Listened to With Great Interest.

WASHINGTON, May 24.—Senator Gorman, since his tariff speech of yesterday, has been the recipient of much flattering praise from his democratic colleagues, and republicans are not backward in admitting that the Maryland senator presented a forcible argument in support the measure.

Senator Gorman's speech was listened to with great interest by senators and a crowded gallery. He opened in a prophetic strain, saying: "Mr. President, we are nearing the end. After twenty years of political progress, of positive growth, of constant development, and of universal enlightenment, the democratic party and the American people are within sight of the promised land. Emancipation is at hand—emancipation from partisan oppression, from the greed of classes, from extortion, from willful extravagance, from financial fantasy, from spoils, from restrictions upon individual liberty, from jingoism, from all those evils, in brief, which the democratic party inherited as a hateful legacy from three decades of republican maladministration."

Then he added with significant emphasis: "Our friends on the other side seem very anxious to learn upon what theory this bill was constructed. I will tell them. It was constructed upon the democratic theory of a tariff for revenue, with such incidental protection as can be given consistently to the industries of the country. It follows strictly the course marked out by President Cleveland in his letter of acceptance. It is not a free trade measure, but it is a long step for freer trade than either the Mills bill or the tariff of 1883. It is not a protection act for the sake of protection, but it does discriminate between raw materials and manufactured articles to the full extent of the difference between European and American wages.

"It is not a deficit-creating bill, such as either the present law has proven to be, or as the bill which passed the house was certain to be if enacted. It is democratic, because it reduces taxation to the actual requirements of the government. It is just, because it eliminates the favoritism of the present law and lessens the burdens upon the great majority of the people. It is wise because it makes possible the quick revival of business activity so sadly needed and universally desired. It is by business-like, because it provides sufficient revenue to meet necessary expenditures without further issue of bonds. It is patriotic, because whatever of discrimination it contains is in favor of American citizens. It is prudent, because it does not attempt to ignore facts in bearing out a theory."

Turning to the alleged influence of the sugar trust and like organizations in shaping the senate bill, he said: "The assertion that any trust or trusts have dictated any part of any schedule of this bill I pronounce unqualifiedly false. They have received the same attention, although not as much consideration, as individuals engaged in the business of manufacture—no more and no less.

"We have gone quite as far as we can go, in a word, without seriously impairing the government's sources of necessary revenue. Much has been said in criticism of our action in imposing any duty whatever on sugar. But let me ask any fair-minded man if it would be just to the people of Louisiana to take from them every shred of the advantage foisted upon them against their will by the republican party for a political purpose, to deprive them, in fact, of their very means of livelihood, and give them nothing in return?

"Louisiana stands to-day on the same plane with Pennsylvania, New York and New Jersey, one of the same union of states, and entitled to the same consideration. But if there were no such industry, or even state, in existence, the wonderful development of beet sugar production in Nebraska and California fully warrants the incidental protection which will be afforded by this revenue duty. That, sir, is the reason why we have placed an ad valorem duty of 40 per cent. upon all sugars, and I cannot and will not believe that the generous-minded people of the east, who themselves have profited from such measures so long and so greatly, will disapprove our action.

On the income tax question Mr. Gorman spoke as follows: "In the matter of internal revenue, I may say that personally I am in full accord with the sentiments so ably and eloquently expressed by the senators from New York and New Jersey regarding the income tax. Like them I consider that it served its purposes as a war tax and has no fitting place in our fiscal system in a time of peace. I could not, I say frankly, vote conscientiously or consistently with my judgment and convictions to make this method of taxation a part of our settled policy. But, much as I deplore the fastening of an income tax in any form upon our tariff bill, I cannot ignore the fact that a large majority of my democratic colleagues honestly differ from myself in this matter, and are so confident of the soundness of their position that they are willing to subject it to the test of a few years, thus enabling the people to see its actual workings and then pass upon it directly. In these circumstances, and in view of the necessity of obtaining additional revenue from some source if we would reduce customs taxation, without disavowing the frightful financial obligations heaped up by republican legislation or further increasing the debt of the government, I cannot, as a democrat, bound in honor to let no ordinary prejudice or difference in opinion prevent the passage of a tariff measure, refuse to vote for this amendment, simply and solely, however, as an emergency tax."

The Order Loses Over $19,000.

WILMINGTON, Del., May 24.—Stansbury I. Wiley, the former master of the exchequer of the supreme lodge, Knights of Pythias, who lost nearly $70,000 of the lodge's money by the failure of R. R. Robinson, the banker, has effected a settlement with the order. The lodge has received real estate and stocks valued at $50,000 and Wiley's bond has been satisfied. The order will lose $19,476.51.

The Paris's Captain Denies Sensational Reports.

The Story That He Crossed the Majestic's Bow and That a Collision Was Only Averted By the Majestic Slowing Down Not True—An Investigation, However, May Be Made.

LONDON, May 24.—The stories told by the passengers of the Majestic of the steamer's narrow escape from collision with the Paris on account of the alleged foolhardy action of the officers of the Paris in running their vessel across the bow of the Majestic during a race between the two boats are looked upon generally by steamship men here as a mistake, but the matter has caused so much talk that an investigation may be made.

Captain William G. Randle, of the Paris, was interviewed as to the stories told by the Majestic's passengers. He said:

"The Majestic was astern until Saturday morning, when she crossed the bows of the Paris, port to starboard. She remained on the starboard side until about 3 o'clock, with a distance of half a mile between the vessels. The Paris then forged ahead, still keeping half a mile off. When the Majestic found that he was being dropped astern she slowed down and crossed the stern of the Paris."

Captain Randle denied emphatically that there was any ground for the sensational reports of dangers of a collision. There had not been the slightest risk at any time. The crossing had been made at a point in mid-ocean where the courses changed, the Majestic having to go northward for Queenstown and the Paris southward for the English channel. After losing sight of the Majestic, Captain Randle said, the Paris had an uneventful voyage.

Many of the passengers of the Majestic in interviews declared that the report that the Paris had crossed the Majestic's bow within a dangerously short distance was true. They spoke with much indignation of the incident, saying that it had nothing to do with the race, but was due to a spirit of pure bravado. Of the three cabin passengers requested to give details but one would allow that his name be used. One of them said:

"The Paris was slightly astern on her own southerly route. On Saturday she drew abreast us on the north side and crept up until midday. She twice forced us out of our course, and was so near we could read her name without glasses. At 2:45 she crossed our bow about 200 yards ahead and drew away on her southerly course again. I do not know what would have happened if the Majestic had not reduced her speed."

Another cabin passenger said:

"The Paris drove us more than 400 yards out of her course. I believe she wanted to show us that she could walk round the Majestic."

The Rev. Edgar Hill, of Montreal, said he had no objection to strengthening his statement with his name. "Until Saturday," he said, "the angle of the vessels' courses was increasing gradually. On Saturday the Paris crossed our stern. She passed to the left and then signalled that she wished to cross our bow. Our captain slowed up and allowed her to pass. What might have happened was shown by the fact that the fog afterward became suddenly so dense that both vessels had to use their fog horns. The board of trade certainly ought to take notice of this. The whole thing was wrong and the repetition of it ought to be prevented."

Efforts for a Poor Little Heroine.

MILAN, Mo., May 24.—Prosecuting Attorney H. F. Price, whom the county court appointed guardian for Nellie Meeks, the survivor of the brutal murder, will bring suit against the Taylor estate for $50,000 damages for bodily injury sustained and for killing her father and mother, and thereby depriving her of her only means of support. Sheriff Niblo proposed that if the perpetrators were captured by the Sullivan county authorities to donate the $3,000 reward to the little heroine, who is the only living witness to the crime.

The Libel Against the Nictheroy.

NEW YORK, May 24.—The libel against the steamer El Cid, now the Brazilian gunboat Nictheroy, has just been dismissed by Judge Brown, of the United States District court. The libel was filed by James King, James Noonan, Frank Lynch, James Carver, Patrick Mahoney, Michael Ryan, Thomas Ward and John O'Brien, who sought to recover wages for serving on the vessel. The Brazilian government proved a tender of a sum, which was but a few dollars less than the $93.36 claimed by the plaintiffs, which was refused.

Flood Loss in Lycoming County.

WILLIAMSPORT, Pa., May 24.—The news from up the river to-day is to the effect that it has started to rain again, and the indications in this city are favorable for more rain. No danger is anticipated however. The several railroads are working hard getting the roads in running order again. The loss to Lycoming county by the destruction of bridges over streams and creeks will amount to $300,000.

Thirteen Years for a Horse Thief.

WORCESTER, Mass., May 24.—Charles Dansreau, convicted of the larceny of horses and teams, has been sentenced to an aggregate of thirteen years in state prison, six days in solitary confinement. The thefts were all committed in January. Dansreau had his headquarters in Danielsonville and carried on systematic horse stealing. Thefts of teams in Providence, R. I., have also been traced to him.

Putting Up Temporary Bridges.

READING, Pa., May 24.—A special train of 15 freight and passenger cars fitted up bunks, etc., have been sent to Muncie by the Reading company with several hundred mechanics. The portable electric light plant was sent there also. It is the purpose of the company to work day and night until temporary bridges are completed.

PENNSYLVANIA REPUBLICANS.

The Full State Ticket Nominated at Harrisburg Yesterday.

HARRISBURG May 24.—Had the 1,500 or more spectators at the republican state convention been able to have voted, Congressman John B. Robinson would probably have been nominated for lieutenant-governor.

When District Attorney W. I. Schaeffer, of Delaware county, concluded his nominating speech in behalf of the president of the state league of republican clubs, the assemblage, with the exception of a large majority of the delegates, who were with Walter Lyon first, last and all the time, cheered Robinson to the echo. The applause was almost deafening and continued several minutes.

The full ticket nominated is:

Governor—Gen. Daniel Hasting, of Bellefonte.

Lieutenant-Governor—Walter Lyon, of Pittsburg.

Auditor-General—Amos H. Mylin, of Lancaster.

Secretary of Internal Affairs—James W. Latta, of Philadelphia.

Congressmen-at-Large—George F. Huff, of Westmoreland, and Galusha A. Grow, of Susquehanna.

VICTORIA SEALERS SEIZED.

The Hyacinthe's Commander Denies That Capt. Strong Defied Him.

VICTORIA, B. C., May 24.—H. M. S. Hyacinthe has just returned. Captain May states that he seized the schooners Annie C. Moore, Favorite and Triumph, of Victoria, found fishing for seals in the open sea, and confiscated their guns and papers and sent them home. Interesting developments are likely to follow the action of Collector Milne in refusing to place the vessels in custody.

Captain Strong of the American schooner Helen came down on the Hyacinthe. The Helen is at Yakata. Strong is the man who, it is alleged, defied Captain May of the Hyacinthe, but the story is denied by Captain May, who says nobody defied him.

HER CONDITION CRITICAL.

Mrs. Leiter Suffering With Sciatic and Inflammatory Rheumatism.

OLATHE, Kas., May 24.—While it is given out that Mrs. Mary E. Lease is improving, she is really no better and her condition is regarded as critical.

She has sciatic rheumatism of her left leg and inflammatory rheumatism of her right hand. She has cancelled all her dates.

Troops to Prevent Train Stealing.

WASHINGTON, May 24.—Attorney General Olney received a telegram from the United States marshal at Helena, Mont., stating that he feared trouble with train stealers there and needed assistance to enforce the order of the court. The attorney general requested the war department to place troops at the disposal of the United States marshal in Montana, and Gen. Schofield promptly transmitted orders to the commanding officer of the department of Dakota to send aid to the marshal of Montana to protect United States property and enforce the order of the court.

Wire Walker Injured.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., May 24.—While George Charist was attempting to walk a steel cable stretched across the public square at Shelbyville, Tenn., and carry his wife, Lizzie Charist, the cable snapped and both fell to the stone macadimized ground thirty-five feet below. Charist's hip is broken and he is terribly bruised, but will recover. His wife is seriously injured and will die. He was a professional wire walker and has given many previous performances in various parts of the country without injury.

French Cabinet Crisis.

PARIS, May 24.—M. Bourgeois, after a lengthy consultation with President Carnot, announced that he had declined to form a cabinet. It is believed he will reconsider his refusal in case M. Poincair, minister of public instruction in the deputy cabinet; ex-Premier Ribot and Henri Brisson will consent to enter a combination with him. M. Viger, M. Casier's minister of agriculture, will probably retain his portfolio. The effect of the cabinet crisis on the Bourse is depressing.

14-Year-Old Boy Commits Suicide

GREENFIELD, Mass., May 24.—The dead body of the 14-year-old son of Lucius Plumb, of Readsboro, Vt., was found recently hanging thirty feet from the ground in a tree. He had been missing eight days, and ponds had been dragged and woods searched meanwhile. The boy had climbed into the tree, rested on a limb, tied a rope to the limb above his head, arranged a noose and put his head into it and then slid off.

Favors Surrendering Balfour.

WALLWITZ GUILTY.

The Trenton Convict Will Be Sentenced to Death To-morrow.

TRENTON, N. J., May 24.—The jury in in the trial of Joseph Wallwitz, the convict charged with the murder of Keeper Lippincott at the state prison last spring, after being out an hour and a half returned a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree.

Wallwitz will be sentenced to death to morrow.

Wallwitz tesified in his own behalf at the trial. His recital of the story of the murder in the prison was dramatic and his theory that Lippincott was slain by one of the bullets fired at himself was made highly plausible. If his recital was true deputy keeper Waters, who was in immediate charge of the prisoner, was drunk and asleep in the prison corridor when Wallwitz made his desperate attempt to escape. Waters testified that he was taking a drink of water in the corridor when Wallwitz pounced upon him from behind and overpowered him. Wallwitz said that he had sawed the bars out of his cell door fully six weeks before the occurrence of March 2. He frequently left his cell at night to take exercise by walking up and down the corridor. His black Jack, he said, he made the day before his attempt to get from the prison. There was a fusilade of shots in the room adjoining the "centre" and one of the shots fired by keeper Leonard struck Lippincott. He saw Lippincott fall just after Leonard took aim and fired. The wound in the temple which the prisoner sustained was inflicted by one of Lippincott's bullets. Wallwitz said he fled to the "centre" because many keys were kept hanging there, and he fancied once he got possession of them he could pass from the centre to the main corridor and reach the big door leading to the street. The convict by the aid of a diagram showed how it was possible that other bullets than his killed Lippincott, and in his cross-examination he told exactly the same story as upon his direct examination.

Terror in Servia.

LONDON, May 24.—A despatch to the Central News from Vienna says that despatches smuggled across the Servian frontier tell of a reign of terror in Belgrade and throughout Servia. The expression of political opinion either in the press or orally in public or private is positively prohibited and wholesale arrests are of almost hourly occurrence. The persons thus far arrested include many radical deputies who are charged with conspiring to overthrow the ring, and put Prince Karageorgevitch on the throne. This is a stock charge which is made against every objectionable person against whom no other specific accusation can be brought. The telegraph wires are under exclusive control of the government whose censors will permit nothing not approved by the king or his representatives to be sent out. This accounts for the official announcement that all is quiet and everybody satisfied, a state of affairs that does not exist.

Ran Up Mileage Accounts.

OMAHA, Neb., May 24.—There was great indignation among the local sympathizers with the industrial movement when they heard of the arrest of Quartermaster Breckinridge and Colonel Colehan under instructions from Marshal Pinkham. An attorney was secured in their behalf, and an effort is being made to get the men out of jail on a writ of habeas corpus. The prisoners severely scored the federal authorities for causing their arrest, which they claim was uncalled for, and say that Pinkham let them come as far as Omaha in order that he could run up a good mileage account when taking them back.

Warship Blake at Boston.

BOSTON, May 24.—The trip from Bermuda of the British warship Blake, now at anchor in this harbor, was uneventful. Soon after coming to anchor, the Blake's big steam launch was lowered and started ashore, carrying Vice Admiral Hopkins, who came to make his official calls. He was driven directly to the state house, where he was received by Gov. Greenhalge. He next called at city hall and paid his respects to the mayor, and was then driven to the custom house, where he was welcomed to Boston by Collector Warren These calls will all be returned to-day.

Vetoed By Gov. Flower.

ALBANY, May 24.—Gov. Flower has vetoed Assemblyman Schoepfling's bill creating a commissioner of jurors for counties of the state having a population of 300,000 or more, and regulating and prescribing his duties; also providing in what manner jury lists shall be made up and jurors drawn and notified in courts of record in such counties; also prescribing the qualifications, exemptions and length of service of such jurors.

To Be Tried Again for Murder.

MINNEAPOLIS, May 24.—Much to the general surprise the indictment against Lieut. Maney, now being tried by court martial, instead of being confined to "conduct prejudicial to military discipline" specifically charges him with the murder of Hedberg. As he was acquitted by the civil court of the murder, this virtually places him in jeopardy twice for the same offense.

Mafia at Work in New York.

NEW YORK, May 24.—Caitano Cajiiano, a Grand street grocer, was poisoned last night by four unknown Italians who entered his store, got into conversation and sent for a pitcher of beer and a bottle of soda. Cajiiano drank the soda. He will die. The police attribute the deed to the Mafia.

How Chinese Settle Strikes.

VANCOUVER, B. C., May 24.—Advices from China state that the Chinese government has decided to adopt drastic measures to stop strikes, the offenders being tried for high treason and promptly executed.

West Virginia Miners.

CHARLESTON, W. V., May 24.—Indications are that miners will go to work soon. They are disappointed over the result of the Cleveland convention, where they were ignored.

KILLED AND WOUNDED

Bloody Street Fight With Bank Robbers.

One Citizen and One Robber Killed—The Marshal of the Town Probably Fatally Wounded—A By-Stander Loses a Leg—The Desperados Secure $2,500 and Escape.

LONG VIEW, Tex., May 24.—Two bold robbers made a daylight raid on the First National bank of this city yesterday, securing about $2,500. A general fight between the robbers and citizens ensued in which two persons were killed and several injured.

The killed are: George Buckingham, of Long View, who was firing upon the robbers, and George Bennet, one of the robbers.

The injured are: City Marshal Muckleroy, shot in the abdomen, may not recover. Charles Leonard, a by-stander, shot in the leg, which had to be amputated. J. W. McQueen, of the attacking party of citizens, cannot recover. T. C. Somers, of Long View, flesh wound in side, also shot in hand.

At just about the closing hour yesterday afternoon, while Cashier Thomas Clemmons was getting ready to remove the cash from the counter to the vault, two roughly dressed men, both heavily armed, entered the bank. The only persons in the bank at the time were the cashier and President Jos. Clemmons, of the bank. One of the men approached the cashier and after a moment's conversation quickly pulled two revolvers from his pockets and ordered him to throw up his hands. The other man had in the meantime walked carelessly around toward the side door of the counting room and, acting simultaneously with his accomplice, made a leap for President Clemons, and throwing him to the floor, pinioned him there. The cashier by this time had his hands up and robber No. 1, covering him with a revolver with one hand, emptied the coin and bills from the till into his pockets. The amount secured was about $2,500.

While this was going on two other members of the gang, who were in an open space in the rear of the building, had aroused the suspicions of the city marshal, who happened to be near, and that officer started for help. The two opened fire on him, one ball striking him in the abdomen, bringing him to the ground, probably mortally wounded.

The shooting quickly drew a crowd from the stores near the bank building.

George Buckingham, a merchant of this place, fired at the robbers, wounding one of them in the face, but he was instantly killed by a bullet from the revolver of one of the men who had been drawn from their work inside the bank by the shooting.

The quartette made a break for their horses, firing at the crowd as they ran. One fell dead from a bullet fired by one of the attacking party, but the others escaped apparently unhurt.

President Clemmons at once offered a reward of $500 for the capture of the bandits, dead or alive, and an additional reward of $300 was offered by business men of the town. The robbegs had hardly disappeared from view when a posse was formed, horses were secured and the chase was begun.

Signed By Gov. Flower.

ALBANY, N. Y., May 24.—Gov. Flower has signed Assemblyman Sulzer's bill providing for uniform examinations throughout the state for admission of candidates to practice as attorneys, and creating a state board of law examiners of three members of the bar of ten years's standing, to be appointed by the Court of Appeals.

Did Not Know It Was Loaded.

LAMBERTVILLE, N. J., May 24.—While Charles Fabian and William Horn, young men, were examining an old gun at the farm of Wallace Paxon, New Hope, it went off and the charge passed through Fabian's breast, killing him instantly. Fabian did not know the gun was loaded.

Madame Renan Dead.

PARIS, May 24.—Madam Renan, widow of the late Joseph Ernest Renan, the philologist, is dead. Mme. Renan was the daughter of Henry Scheffer, the painter.

TO AN AMERICAN GIRL

Yung Kwai Married at Springfield, Mass.

Mary E. S. Burnham the Bride—The Groom a Graduate of Yale and a Former Member of the Chinese Legation at Washington—Ceremony at the Bride's Mother's Home.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., May 24.—Yung Kwai, once a member of the Chinese legation at Washington, a graduate of Yale and now manager of the Chinese Guild, conducted by the Episcopal church in New York, was married last night to Mary E. S. Burnham, a graduate from the Springfield high school, at the home of the bride's mother.

Yung Kwai, won his American bride months ago. He braved opposition by wearing American clothing, joining a christian church, and cutting off his queue, and the step he has just taken will cut him off from his Chinese associations. His parents have accepted the final step more gracefully than the previous ones, but he is not likely to visit his native land again soon.

Among the guests at the wedding was Yung Wing, of Hartford, who 20 years ago married Miss Kellogg, of Avon, Conn., and the oldest son, Morrison Wing, was one of the ushers.

The bride made the acquaintance of Mr. Kwai, who was a student here from 1878 to 1880, and this developed into a warm friendship and the marriage engagement. The relatives naturally opposed the match at first, but acquiesced gracefully at last.

The house of the bride's mother was decorated with hawthorne for the wedding, the couple standing under a canopy of that flower. The officiating clergyman, Rev. Dr Buckingham, pastor Emeritus of South church, is a warm friend of both, following them both with interest since he received them into membership at South church.

The signal for the service at 8 o'clock was the Mendelssohn wedding march, played by Miss Marguerite Keyes, on the piano, and Miss Elizabeth Booth, on the violin.

The bridal party descended the stair, passed through the hall into the real parlor and then marched to the arch, where the couple stood before Dr. Buckingham.

The maid of honor was the bride's sister, Miss Irmingard Burnham, dressed in blue silk. The bridesmaids were Miss Florence K. Burnham, another sister, who wore pink, Miss Edith Burnham, a cousin, dressed in blue, and Miss Ida Burnham, another cousin, who wore pink, and Miss Grace Brown, of New Haven, attired in a blue gown.

The bridesmaids all wore carnations. The bride was dressed in a simple dress of heavy white satin, trimmed with heavy pearls, which are a family heirloom. Pearls also caught back the bridal veil and she carried 25 bride roses. The ushers were Robert Dwight, Robert Wallace, Fred P. Strout and Morrison Wing of Hartford.

Among the presents were beautiful bric-a-brac from Kwai's Chinese friends.

Test Vote on the Tariff.

WASHINGTON, May 24.—The corrected vote in detail on the motion of Senator Teller (rep., Col.) to lay the tariff bill on the table, offered as a test question, is as follows:

Gould and Party in London.

LONDON, May 24.—George Gould, owner of the yacht Vigilant, and his party, who arrived on the steamship Paris yesterday and came to London to-day, were welcomed by a large circle of friendly yachtsmen. In an interview Mr. Gould said that he looked forward to an interesting season of yachting. Men were at work on the Vigilant night and day, he said, preparing her for her voyage from New York to England. He expected that she would be ready to sail on June 1. The steam yacht Atalanta, he said, would bring over his brother and would convey his party to the races. He had not yet completed his arrangements for the season, nor had he received any challenges. He was ready to meet all comers.

The Law Constitutional.

HARTFORD, Conn., May 24.—Judge M. A. Shumway, in the superior court, has rendered two decisions in favor of the New Britain school board, in the suit to compel them to admit unvaccinated children to the public schools. The judge finds that the law giving the school board authority to order school children vaccinated, and to exclude those not vaccinated from the schools, is constitutional. The decisions are complete victories for the school board.

Fatally Assaulted a Young Woman.

BORDENTOWN, N. J., May 24.—Lizzie Halloway, aged 19, single, is lying unconscious at her home here, suffering from three wounds in the head which the doctor in charge believe will prove fatal. William Massey, night watchman at a worsted mill, and who boards at the Halloways, is accused of the crime and is locked up. The assault was committed about noon yesterday.

Fuel Famine Causes More Suspension.

BRADDOCK, Pa., May 24.—Two more furnaces at the Edgar Thompson Steel works, making five furnaces in all, have suspended on account of the fuel famine. Four furnaces continue in operation.

Fatal Storm in Texas.

MCKINNEY, Tex., May 24.—A cyclone struck McKinney yesterday. Three houses were demolished, and other damage done. Lightning struck three houses and killed one man.

Chess Match at Montreal.

MONTREAL, May 24.—The 18th game of chess between Lasker and Steinitz resulted in a draw at the end of the 61st move. The 19th game has been fixed for Saturday next.

THE DAILY PRESS.

A. L. FORCE, - - Publisher and Proprietor.
WALTER IRVING CLARKE, - Managing Editor.

CIRCULATION EXCEEDS THAT OF ALL OTHER PLAINFIELD DAILIES COMBINED.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., MAY 24, 1894.

Every time The Press says anything about politics, the spectacled paper gets mad. Poor thing!

Governor Werts by his 25 vetoes effectually exposes the gross partisanship of the "reform" Legislature.

There are two banks on the Crescent Oval, and they offer good investment for all believers in boosting their town to the fore.

The Crescent Wheelmen are like Helen's Babies—they built their track 'cause they want to see the wheels go round.

The enactment of Senate Bill 51 is the people's victory, and teaches the folly of public servants flying in the faces of their electors.

The Freeholders met at Tier's Dam because it was such a handy place for the disappointed contractors to shed the one and say the other.

China takes the view that labor agitators are a curse to the land, and when workingmen strike the Government chops off their heads.

A long pull, a strong pull, a pull all together, by the people of Plainfield on the Central Railroad of New Jersey, and away rolls the freight-house. Lend a hand!

Jersey lightning will knock anything off its pins. There's that corner trolley pole at Watchung avenue and Front street ready to topple over if it doesn't get a bracer soon.

After the Camera Club gets settled in its new quarters anxious lovers who now promenade the pave will shun the Babcock Building because it'll be such a famous place for developing negatives.

Chandler W. Riker used bodily force and a chisel to take possession of his office as City Counsel in Newark. Wish he'd display the same energy in getting the Plainfield Street Railway extended!

What use are your flags and bunting stowed away among the moths? Get 'em out and let the breeze blow through 'em. Memorial Day is close at hand, and you might as well join in making the town look patriotic. Run up the colors, half mast, and drape the glorious Stars and Stripes in honor of the heroes dead and the heroes living. Wake up and be American.

A few more liberal subscriptions, and the light of day can again be let into the Y. M. C. A. Building, and the work of construction can be pushed to completion. At present instead of a Y. M. C. A. palace it looks like a place for board, and very poor board too. Who'll plank down the first $100 and knock off a plank? If you can't spare a hundred, give less. But all give something and get the work done.

Today Plainfield is the talk of the State, New York, Brooklyn and Philadelphia. Everywhere where wheels are ridden the town is now placarded with the elegant Cycling Supplements of The Daily Press, arousing enthusiasm among the wheelmen, and attracting people to the wheelmen's Mecca. That Crescent Oval is of big importance to the town, and the quicker Plainfield business men and moneyed residents contribute to this cause for glorious results the sooner success will come. Buy stock!

The town was all eyes for The Daily Press last night. The Souvenir Supplement was pronounced a beautiful piece of work, a credit to the North avenue printing presses. Wheelmen all said the Supplement was splendid, both because it gave so accurately and artistically the faces of the Crescent Wheelmen's leaders, and the pictures and facts about the track, and because it was so sure, by such widespread circulation as The Daily Press gave it, to bring lots of people into town to the great cycling events. They all looked upon it as a town boomer of greater magnitude than any that had gone before, and in addition to the large edition sent broadcast by The Press individual riders showed their own pride by buying copies to send to friends to interest them in Plainfield.

Support the Local Newspaper.

The immense power a local newspaper possesses in attracting trade to the town in which it is published or diverting it into other channels can hardly be estimated. Further, it is a matter that is seldom considered as an important factor in a town's prosperity, for the simple reason that business men generally do not give it a thought. He who will impartially consider this assertion will be convinced of the truth of it. The local paper is very naturally biased in favor of the place of its publication, and if given a fair living patronage by home business men will guard well their interests, just as the merchant guards the interests of his individual customer. But if a niggardly support is doled out to it, and it is compelled to solicit custom from neighboring cities, it cannot in justice to those patrons exert itself in behalf of its own town as it otherwise would. Try a system of liberality in the matter of advertising expenditure and mark the result.

Getting Rid of Smoke.

Discussing the smoke nuisance in its sanitary aspect, The Medical News says: "We can indeed foresee that at no distant day such energy as is to be obtained by coal will be produced at the mines and transmitted to centers of population in the form of electricity, to be again converted into light, heat and power. The sanitary gain that will thus result will certainly not be inconsiderable. The avoidance of smoke, ashes, deleterious gases, bulky fuels and care of furnaces must certainly tend to increase the duration of life and to make it more enjoyable."

THE SCHOOL BILL A LAW.

The Governor Could Not Be Induced to Veto It.

(Special by Wire to The Press.)

TRENTON, May 24.—Governor Werts today filed Senate Bill 51, the Plainfield School Bill, and it becomes a law.

Great pressure was brought on the Governor by the School Board to induce him to veto the bill. His warm personal friend, Counselor Vredenbergh, was enlisted in the service of the Board, and he importuned the Governor night and day to veto the measure.

Governor Werts investigated carefully, however, and, finding the majority of the Plainfield people in favor of the bill, declined to interfere with its becoming a law.

FIRES IN THE WEST END.

Patrick Nugent's Attic and Cadmus's Mill Both Slightly Damaged.

Two alarms of fire were sent in from the West End half an hour apart this morning. The fires which they reported caused but little damage.

Wall-paper and clothing stored in the attic of Patrick Nugent's two-story frame house, West Third street, near Stebbins place, caught fire in some mysterious way shortly after 7 this morning. The smoke was noticed by Mr. Nugent's brother, who was in the house. Wm. Newman, Foreman of Engine Company 1, was at work nearby and hurried in. The two men succeeded in putting out the fire with buckets of water.

The alarm had been given in the meantime from Box 47 at 7:40 and the fire department reached the house in time to congratulate the men who had done the firemen's work. The attic floor and the roof were burned, the damage amounting to $25. The loss on clothing and furniture was about the same. The house was insured for $1,200 and the contents for $300, in Wm. Woodruff's agency.

The recall was sounded at 8 and the firemen started back. Then Box 45 was sounded for fire at the Cadmus Mills. Chief Doane was entering his house on West Fifth street, Alert Hose Company was on South Second street in front of the mill, and the rest of the department was near the corner of Front and New streets.

This fire was discovered by the engineer, T. J. Sisk, in the roof of the boilershed. Mill employes tried to reach the fire with a hose owned by Mr. Cadmus, but it was not quite long enough to do good service. John M. Hetfield pulled the box at 8:15 and the apparatus was at hand at once. Mr. Cadmus objected strongly to the entrance of the firemen. Lengths of hose were stretched from the hydrant corner of South Second street and Spooner avenue, from one near Muhlenberg place and from the one in the mill yard. Two lengths of Engine Company 2 hose burst. No damage was done to the mill proper and the boards burned were worth but little.

This morning's fire was in the same place as the one about the same hour last Christmas morning. The boiler which runs the grain grinding machinery of the mill is next to the four-story brick rear wall of the building and close to the trestle switch. Above it was a layer of rough boards forming the roof which was burned this morning.

The boards were close to the top of the boiler and were so thoroughly dried by the heat that spontaneous combustion might have been the cause of the fire. It could not have been started by sparks from a locomotive, as was claimed at the last fire. At that time, Chief Doane ordered the owner, Abram L. Cadmus, to put on a fire-proof roof, but Cadmus has n't done it yet. He carries no insurance, but prefers to run the risk. The property in the neighborhood is thought to be near enough to warrant the authorities in enforcing the Chief's order.

Causes Which Promote Growth of Towns.

The chief causes which promote the growth of towns and cities are primarily their location as entrepots for the products of industry and commerce. They become great and populous because they are so situated as to furnish convenient markets for the exchange of products. Becoming centers of labor and trade, they attract vast numbers who procure a livelihood by buying or selling for themselves or others, or in manufactures requiring materials of different kinds brought from different directions and long distances. People are attracted to cities in the many diversified ways by which men are brought together in single communities for all their purposes of business, of labor, of travel, in enterprises of all kinds, and in all the methods which a partnership of human interests involves.

Money Spent on Street Improvement.

No possible expenditure of public moneys will yield one-tenth of the benefit to a town that will result from the laying of a good macadam or similar pavement. Every live town is asking itself if it can afford the necessary outlay. There can be no doubt in this respect. The experience of hundreds of towns in the land prove that the increase in taxes from the enhanced value of property is greater than the expense incurred.

Business Men, Take Notice!

When you want to know about any business outside of the large cities, write to the local newspaper. If the firm is of any account, you will find the advertisement in the home paper.

$100 Reward, $100.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the one positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio. ## PARTICULAR MENTION.

A son was born to Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Ball, Tuesday evening.

J. L. Blackford moved yesterday from 147 to 326 East Fifth street.

C. Gressem will be chief waiter at Hotel Netherwood, commencing June 1.

Morgan Taylor and family returned yesterday from an extended western trip.

Mrs. George D. Patten of LaGrande avenue is entertaining her father from Germantown.

Georgie, the nine-months-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Totten of Washingtonville died this morning.

Misses Mary Killinger and Louise Windham have returned home from their visit to Miss Windham's uncle Henry.

Mr. and Mrs. C. T. Kissam of Central avenue left town today for a trip to Nova Scotia. They will fish and enjoy outdoor life.

Miss Hebert of Newark took Miss Mary Brown's place yesterday, at Hillier & Co's, while Miss Brown was away on business.

George Snediker, who has been spending two weeks at home, 110 Grove street, returned this afternoon to Pennington Seminary.

Mrs. Seader, widow of the late Jacob Seader, with her son Henry will remove from Somerset street to Warren and Harmony streets in a few days.

Janitor S. R. Hope of 223 Richmond street, who has been confined to the house for over a week by illness, was able to leave his room today.

Mrs. Anna I., wife of Harry Wilbee, died yesterday morning after an illness of six months. She was 35 years old and leaves two small children. Mr. Wilbee is a machinist employed in the Scott Press Works and lives at 508 East Second street. The funeral will be held Friday morning at 9 from the house and at 9:30 in St. Mary's Church.

Plainfield's Leading Baker.

All who have tried the genuine Vienna bread made and sold by new and expensive process at Liefke's bakery, pronounce it the finest they ever bought, and are using it regularly in their homes. The bread is really delicious, and you who have n't tried it but who will now do so will thank The Press for recommending it. Liefke leads in pastry also.

Harper's Bazar.

Among the features of Harper's Bazar for June will be the "Story of a Garden", told in letters by Elizabeth Bisland Wetmore, a new series of "Coffee and Repartee" papers, by John Kendrick Bangs, and letters from Paris, giving the fashions and gossip of that capital.

—Living pictures and two plays are to be given in the Holy Cross Parish Building under the auspices of Holy Cross Brotherhood Thursday evening, June 7.

—Mr. Small of Fanwood left his horse in front of Charles Smith's saloon at 9:30 this morning. The horse became frightened and plunged. A broken bridle was the result.

—Use the best paper first and take enough space to make the ad effective; use all you profitably can in that paper before you consider any other. One good ad beats two poor ones. Two short poles are not as good as one long one when you're after persimmons. The biggest circulation in Plainfield is that of The Press.

The Spring House Cleaning Wisely urged by the BOARD OF HEALTH is not complete without a proper use of DISINFECTANTS. But, in choosing these, do not be misled into paying fancy prices for "patent" specialties. Common lime is better than any of them for damp cellars and stables. For vaults, drains, cess-pools, the best and cheapest disinfectant is COPPERAS, supplied by us by the pound or barrel at low rates. But for use in the house, in the plumbing, in kitchen sinks, in closets, for purifying the air of sick rooms, deodorizing offensive discharges—in short, for all purposes of a household disinfectant, nothing can excel the powerful solution of chlorides made and sold by us for 15 years under the name of REYNOLDS'S ODORLESS DISINFECTANT. Quart bottles 25c. To be diluted for use according to directions on label.

EARLY INTELLIGENCE.

—The Ikie 400 took the 6:54 train to New York last night.

—The concert in Warren Chapel this evening is to be excellent.

—Dr. Zeiglo has purchased one of this year's matchless Columbias from F. L. C. Martin.

—Charles B. Weisflog of Phillipsburg is putting his system of fans in Plainfield business places.

—Surveyors are at work all along the line of the proposed electric railway across the State.

—Justice Mosher will try the case on contract of Alexander W. Teeple against Benj. W. Tucker June 1.

—An elegant, fresh lot of Huyler's candies was received by Leggett today. Sample them now—they'll go fast.

—The leakage of gas in Music Hall has been stopped, and there will be absolutely no such annoyance to the audience tonight.

—Some hungry person stole six rolls from George Kinch's front stoop, Grandview avenue and Somerset street, this morning.

—Dr. H. G. Stephenson, the venerable veterinarian, was called to Dunellen yesterday to attend a valuable horse. He is curing it.

—A little money buys many things the housewife wants, at Boehm's. The list of bargains in the ad is only a portion of the many to be found in the store.

—The moon was a little late this morning, and the spectacle he caused chasing after his train was very funny for the crowd at the station. But he caught it.

—Justice Nash gave F. Adelbert Dunham a judgment of $75.25 and costs against the Plainfield Street Railway Company, for engineering services of two years ago.

—The women of the Seventh Day Baptist Church gave a strawberry festival in the church parlors last night. The attendance was fair and a very pleasant evening was spent.

—Kalman Rotberg pleaded not guilty in the City Court this morning to peddling without a license. He said he kept a store in the borough and sold by sample. He gave $25 bail to appear Saturday morning at 9.

—Justice Nash today issued a summons returnable June 2 in the contract case of the Guion Company, Limited, against Zimmerman and others. The case on contract of Scott against Beerbower will come up May 29.

—The case on contract for $145 70 of Thomas McGann against Charles Burnett came up in Justice Nodyne's Court this morning. W. M. Stillman was counsel for McGann and W. A. Coddington for Burnett. The defendant asked for a nonsuit on a technicality and it was granted.

—Paugh Caugh Naugh Sinque Tribe of Red Men met last evening. A dispute arose over the methods to be employed in purchasing paraphernalia. Vincent W. Nash resigned as a trustee. Chas. Young was elected in his place. The fight may prove a serious blow to the prosperity of the new tribe.

Harper's Weekly.

Perhaps the shortest of short stories is a cartoon; for, at a glance, and sometimes without a single word, it must truly characterize all the people it depicts and make sure that you do not miss the moral. The political story of a week or of a month is told in the cartoons that from time to time stand upon the first page of Harper's Weekly.

Jocko Scared Him.

George Feller stood in front of his Somerset street butcher shop yesterday afternoon at 4:30 when an organ grinder with a monkey approached. Feller was looking the other way and did n't see him. The monkey jumped upon an awning and then upon the butcher's shoulders. Feller turned his head, saw the monkey, and ran half a block.

No Cause for Damages.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., May 24.—The libel suit of C. W. Bardeen, of Syracuse, against Alvin P. Chapin, of Rochester, for $10,000 damages for defamation of character in an editorial written by Chapin and printed in the Educational Gazette, of Rochester, was decided in favor of the defendant. The trial lasted six days and the defendant proved that the so-called libelous statements were true.

Archdeacon of the Diocese of Lynn.

BOSTON, May 24.—Rev. Dr. A. St. John Chambre has been chosen archdeacon of the Episcopal archdeaconry of Lowell. This archdeaconry comprises the counties of Essex and Middlesex and that part of Suffolk not included in the city of Boston. Rev. J. W. Hyde, of Calvary church, Danvers, was chosen secretary.

Supreme Lodge K. of H.

CINCINNATI, O., May 24.—The supreme lodge Knights of Honor has adjourned. The per capita tax was increased 35 cents. The committee reported an amendment, which was adopted, that no matter how long a member had disappeared, his disappearance should not be taken as a proof of death.

Want Better Order on the Field.

PHILADELPHIA, May 24.—The officers of the Philadelphia club sent a letter to President Young of the league, protesting against the noisy coaching now indulged in by some clubs and suggesting that new rules for the maintenance by the umpire of better order on the field be adopted.

New Jersey Legislature.

TRENTON, N. J., May 24.—When the legislature returned last night they found awaiting their consideration no less than twenty-five vetoes from Gov. Werts. The messages were sent to the house in which the bills originated, and all, under the rule, were laid over until to-day.

Flood at Rochester Subsiding.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., May 24.—The Genesee river has commenced to fall, after flooding Exchange street for a distance of half a mile.

Prof. Romanes Dead.

LONDON, May 24.—Prof. Romanes died suddenly at Oxford yesterday.

A REMARKABLE CURE

MIDDLEBUSH, Somerset Co., N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For the past forty years I have been afflicted with bleeding piles. I suffered constant pain in the lower part of my body, but when I had an operation of the bowels the pain was perfectly terrible, and was most always attended with the loss of a large quantity of blood. My condition was complicated with prolapse of the rectum, which at first only made its appearance when I had a movement of the bowels, but at length the parts became so weakened that the protrusion took place while walking or stooping, or after the slightest exertion, and sometimes even while I was at rest. Whenever this happened it gave rise to the most agonizing pain, and felt as though something was pulling the life right out of me. In fact only those similarly situated can imagine the suffering and distress which I had to endure from day to day, and which made my life a terrible burden. Hearing of Dr. Lighthill's wonderful success in the cure of difficult chronic diseases, I placed myself under his care, and now I am proud and happy to say that, marvelous as it may seem, he effected a complete and radical cure in my case in every respect, and he performed this cure without any painful operation or preventing me from work. Since this terrible disease has been removed by Dr. Lighthill's skill I feel new life, and for the first time in forty years I feel once more what it is to be without daily pain, discomfort and distress. I am not a wealthy man, but no amount of money would tempt me to be put back in my former condition.

I make this public statement, not only from a deep and everlasting sense of gratitude to Dr. Lighthill, but also as a simple Christian duty to let the afflicted know where they can find a physician whose skill cannot be surpassed, and in whom implicit confidence can be placed. H. VROOM.

A LOCAL ENDORSEMENT.

No. 188 Somerset st., Plainfield, N. J.

To the Residents of Plainfield, N. J.

Mr. H. Vroom, whose statement appears above, is a brother-in-law of mine. I personally know of his case and his suffering and also know the happy fact that to the surprise of himself and his friends, Dr. Lighthill effected a radical and permanent cure. His statement is true in every respect and does not say half enough in praise of Dr. Lighthill. Anyone who wishes this statement verified is at liberty to come and see me personally. JOHN C. KINNEY.

Dr. Lighthill

ESCAPED FROM THE ASYLUM.

Insanity Patients Raise Bedlam in Red Men's Hall.

The audience which enjoyed Miantonomoh's entertainment last night filled Red Men's Hall, and the presentation of an original sketch, "Bedlam Let Loose", by William Newcorn, was greeted with enthusiastic applause throughout.

The cast:

Dr. System, an asylum owner, ..... William Newcorn
John McCollough, a crazy tragedian, ..... William Newcorn
Barney Mulhalley, a head keeper, ..... William A. Westphal
August Keiser, a court officer, ..... Edward Wolfe
Timothy Simple, ..... R. B. York
Barney Gilhooley, an insane actor ..... R. B. York
George Washington Jones, a colored assistant keeper, ..... Harry Dreier
Miss Nightingale, songstress, ..... Mrs. William A. Westphal
Mlle. Lombardy, pianist ..... Mrs. Fred Canfield
Susie Wood, a somnambulist, ..... Miss Lizzie Duvier
Laura Daft, ..... Miss Ella Sebring
Sister Ruth, Salvationist, ..... Miss Florence Marsh

The asylum interior was the scene of the play. An amusing opening was Dr. System's explanation of how he cured insanity. He engaged the keepers and hired the pianist to amuse his patients. Called away suddenly the doctor left his head keeper to manage affairs.

Susie Wood was brought on by Policeman Keiser and shown her new surroundings. Keeper Mulhalley made a few remarks on how he came from Ireland. Timothy Simple afterwards appeared and told of his adventures after the manner of a fool. A visit was then paid by Miss Nightingale, who inspected the place, sang "Sweet Marie" and responded to an encore. McCollough was placed in the asylum and was attired in a straitjacket after he had raved about Shakespeare for a time. Assistant Jones played the banjo and the guitar and sang. Gilhooly was received from Justice Newcorn's Court and sang about his home in Ireland. The policeman followed with a German song and was encored three times.

All of the inmates suddenly became violent and the stage was a scene of excitement when the doctor returned. The asylum caught fire and the curtain fell upon a condition of affairs aptly described in the title of the sketch.

The audience waited while the stage was cleared away and then began a dance under the direction of Floor Manager David C. Allen. A supper was furnished by the committee: Chairman Wm. Newcorn, Secretary and Treasurer Wm. A. Westphal and David C. Allen.

Pastor Koechli's Change.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—My attention was drawn to an article in The Press of May 22, stating that I would move after June 1 to Somerville. This statement is not quite correct. The facts are as follows:

1. I shall preach my farewell sermon next Sunday morning, as it is not quite certain at what time during the month of June I may preach, having this month granted as a month of vacation.

2. I have a call given me by the German Church in Somerville, and approved by the Classis of Raritan, under consideration, but as yet it is not decided when it shall take effect. So the time of my removal cannot be stated at present.

3. According to action of Classis, my time in Plainfield ends July 1.

F. KOECHLI.

Stylish Millinery.

It is not only in Plainfield that the reputation of White's millinery department is so well and favorably known for the style of its work, but the reputation has extended to other States.

Miss Daly, who has entire charge of the department, today sent two very handsome hats to Ohio, and last week two were sent to Chicago to Plainfield women who knew they would receive the very latest in style and the best of work.

It is an every-day occurrence to have hats brought to her to be re-trimmed that have been bought in New York and elsewhere from houses that claim to have the best milliners.

The Quarterly Illustrator.

The most artistic work of all the leading periodicals, and much that is original besides, is to be found in that admirable publication, The Quarterly Illustrator, of whose merits these columns have repeatedly told. The current issue, found on any newsstand, contains 377 beautiful illustrations by 155 well-known artists, George Wharton Edwards of this city is a prominent contributor. The Quarterly Illustrator is published in sumptuous style by Harry C. Jones of 92 Fifth avenue. You can't keep posted on the latest and best work in the art world without it, and it is an ornament and an education to a home.

Cheerfully Corrected.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—Please correct an error in tonight's Press. The meeting which is to be held in the Congregational Church, May 31, is the annual meeting of the Ramabai Circle of Plainfield, and has nothing whatever to do with the Alliance. The secretary of the Ramabai Circle, Mrs. Ryder, announced the fact at the meeting of the Alliance yesterday afternoon, and that is all the connection between them.

EDITH R. LEONARD,
May 23. Secretary.

To Remove to New Quarters.

Builder William H. Brokaw has begun to erect a brick building, 48x24 feet, two stories high, in the rear of Frank Linke's store on West Front street. Mr. Linke's bottling business, which has been in operation on the recently sold property, 179 and 181 Somerset street, will occupy it as soon as it is completed.

To Muster the Camp.

Chief Mustering Officer Pollit and staff, of Paterson, will be present next Monday evening to muster the camp of Sons of Veterans organized last Monday evening.

FOR THE relief and cure of a cold in the head there is more potency in Ely's Cream Balm than in anything else it is possible to prescribe. This preparation has for years past been making a brilliant success as a remedy for cold in the head, catarrh and hay fever. Used in the initial stages of these complaints Cream Balm prevents any serious development of the symptoms, while almost numberless cases are on record of radical cures of chronic catarrh and hay fever after all other treatments have proved of no avail.

MAYOR MILLER RESIGNS.

This and Other Topics Talked of in Fanwood.

Miss Mann has taken Dr. Westcott's house for a year.

Russell Briggs took a header down the railroad cut a few days ago and injured his spine.

Little Edwin Robinson, son of Harry Robinson, is suffering from a fractured arm, caused by a fall down stairs.

William E. Gibbs has moved out of Dr. Westcott's house and is now sojourning with his father-in-law, Benjamin Urner, pending the completion of his mansion.

Fanwood's noble-hearted Mayor, George C. Miller, has resigned, and the Township Committee will meet tomorrow night to elect his successor.

The examination of cesspools by Wright Babcock has been completed, and the excavators are now busy as the result thereof. Good health is bound to be conserved in Fanwood.

BASE-BALL.

The Orientals of the East End will play the Cuban Giants Saturday afternoon at 3:30, on the Berckman street field. The Orientals are: T. Muldowney, rf; P. Fleming, lf; J. Doyle, cf; J. Moran, c; F. Winn, p; C. Hewitt, 2b; T. Sheridan, ss; A. McGinley, 3b; P. Melvin, 1b; P. Sheridan, extra. The Orientals are ready for all challenges. P. Melvin, 433 Cottage place, is manager.

The Trouble Remedied.

The fire-gong blew the first alarm this morning, 47, with perfect precision. The pressure was 110 pounds, and nothing seemed to be wrong with the mechanism. The second alarm, given half an hour later from Box 45, was not sounded so well. The first round was good, but the pauses in the second were irregular. The last round could not be understood, the valve apparently catching.

Chief Doane telephoned to Charles W. Runyon, manager of the telephone, and he examined the whistle. The difficulty proved to be with a piston which regulates the blows. It had expanded from the heat of the extraordinary number of blows, and had stopped the cut-off. The pistol was taken to the Pond Tool Works, where one-one-hundredth of an inch was cut from it.

Bible "Mythology" and a Verse-Writing "Goddess".

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—Of course, I shall see the "Tableaux Phantasma" at Music Hall this evening and hope to find out what they are all about, but it would seem for the information of such as may not be there, that The Press should follow up its enterprise in printing Tuesday the full list of the tableau poseurs by giving the public some light upon the phantasmagora of the programme. I note among the "mythological illusions" to be presented "Rebecca at the Well", "Highland Mary", and "Ruth and Naomi", not to mention "Sappho, the Goddess of Poetry". What The Press ought to tell us is where in all mythology we may find mention of these estimable personages, and how long since the erotic Sappho became a "goddess".

THE PHANTOM.

"Phantasma" Tonight.

Don't fail to contribute your mite toward the maintenance of Muhlenberg Hospital by attending the Auxiliary Board's entertainment "Phantasma" in Music Hall tonight. All the young women prominent in Plainfield society will assist in making the entertainment a success. Go yourself tonight, and tomorrow take the whole family.

Better go to "Phantasma" tonight. It's a good charity—that of Muhlenberg Hospital—and besides tomorrow night you may not be able to obtain a seat in Music Hall. Tonight's the right time for you. Tomorrow afternoon at 4 send the children.

Young Men Served.

The Young Men's Association of the Monroe Avenue Chapel were in charge of an enjoyable bachelor's tea given in the chapel last evening. The attendance was quite large.

The refreshments were passed by young men. A word-guessing contest, in which prizes were awarded, added to the evening's pleasure. Stephen Haff played on the piano, Miss Nancy Randolph sang, and J. H. Rogers recited.

Even Firemen Must Eat.

George Feiring, driver of Engine 2, and and William Robinson, driver of Albert hose wagon, were the only firemen in the houses when the alarm came in at 7:40 this morning. All the others were at breakfast, and their apparatus was slightly delayed in consequence.

TERRIBLE WEIGHT.

THAT BEARING DOWN FEELING.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

The recovery of Lucretia Osborne Putnam of Forristdale, Mass., was really wonderful. She had been sick for years.

She was utterly prostrated, and seemed beyond a hope of cure.

Her spine, heart, liver, and brain were all seriously affected.

The weight of her body upon her feet would cause dizziness, faintness, and terrible pains in her back, and it was sometimes several hours before she could dress.

This woman's trouble was in her womb, effecting her whole constitution.

She was crushed with that indescribable feeling of bearing down, and suffered agonies that would appal a man.

She found new life in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

She says: "I am like one raised from the dead. I was sick so long I thought I never could get well.

"The suffocating, gasping attacks and awful bearing down feeling left me, my appetite returned, and my friends wondered at my improved looks. I believe Mrs. Pinkham's remedies are a sure cure for the misery of our sex."

CYCLING COMMENT.

All arrangements for the 150-mile tri-State relay race from New York to Philadelphia have been completed by the committee of the Atlanta Wheelmen. The rules provide that each relay shall consist of three men, one each from New Jersey, Pennsylvania and New York. On the arrival of the first two men of any relay, the three men constituting the next relay shall immediately be started. The points to be scored are as follows: First man to arrive, fifteen points; second, ten points; third, five points. The tags which are fastened on the first men's wheels constituting the first relay shall be filled in by the scorers at each relay point and transferred to the men representing the same State in the next relay. The roads through Passaic and Morris counties are mountainous, and in the cities block pavement will be encountered. It therefore behooves the contestants for the medals to bring out their heavy wheels. The prospects are that a New Jersey team will win the race. Among those already entered are George Coffin, winner of a Newark-Philadelphia race; E. L. Blauvelt, winner of many prizes last year, and McMahan, the crack rider of Paterson.

AND THAT'S SO!

The Only Medium for Reaching the Homes of the People Is the Newspapers—Local Newspapers Especially.

(From The Elizabeth Journal.)

Congressmen, it appears, are in the habit of selling their allotments of public documents to dealers, and there is some talk of a law to prevent the practice. Now this, we respectfully submit, is a fact for the careful study of those who, like Senator Hinchliffe, believe that legislative acts, minutes of county boards, city councils, etc., should be printed in pamphlet form, and distributed to the people. Thousands of tons of public documents are printed every year on the Government presses at Washington, for free distribution. There are consular reports from all the ports in the world, agricultural reports, census reports, financial reports, biological reports, special reports, reports common and reports extraordinary. But who reads them? And undoubtedly, they contain a vast amount of valuable information, but the people do not study them. A few may look over them, but these are chiefly newspaper men who condense some of the most important statements or the statistics that bear on local affairs, and present them in the columns of the newspapers, where they are read. And the Congressmen, knowing that the vast majority of these public documents are never read, sell them to junk dealers rather than be bothered with franking them to their constituents. Not all do this, of course, but enough of them do it to make a prohibitory law advisable. And it would be just so with the State laws or county or city proceedings. If they were printed in pamphlet form the great bulk of them would go to the junk shops and would never be read.

Too Wet to Wash.

The wash which Engine Co. 2 expected to have last evening was postponed on account of the rain. Instead the members were entertained at supper in the Crescent Hotel by the new officers.

Beyond the Rockies.

The Ivy Dramatic Company of this city will give an entertainment in Bound Brook Hall next Tuesday evening. "Trias; or, Beyond the Rockies", with Miss Maggie Campbell in the leading part, and "The Deacon", will be played.

CLOSING PARK CLUB DANCE.

Delightful Event for the Juniors of Local Society.

The Junior Entertainment Committee of the Park Club, Messrs. Clifford M. McGee, Carl S. Brown, and Edmund Bushmore, gave a pleasant informal dance in the cozy club-house last night. Mrs. Reed and Mrs. Evans were patronesses, and besides the members there were present the following:

Miss Marion L. Henderson, Miss Alice Thompson, Miss Grace Barlow, Miss Alice Barlow, Miss Kate Miller, Miss Blanche Miller, Miss Maude Middledith, Miss Daisy Elsberg, Miss May Shreve, the Misses McCready, Miss Helen Hasbrouck, the Misses Busby of Brooklyn, Frank Thompson, James Middledith, Jr., Walter Place, Charles E. Faber, E. Albert Sproul, Fred K. Fish, Allen Laing and Robert Swayze.

Harper's Magazine.

Harper's Magazine for June contains 84 pictures. Few books have so many. But the charm of these pictures is not in their number; it is in their beauty and variety, as well as their appropriateness to the text.

Kirk Always a Winner.

The Freeholders joint committee met at Tier's Pavilion yesterday afternoon and considered bids for the building of a new bridge across Green brook at Netherwood avenue. There was a host of bids at all prices, and W. T. Kirk of Plainfield won at $1,787.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

The Washingtonville Christian Endeavor Society now holds the best-attendance banner which is contested for every year by the Union County societies, and extra efforts are being made by each society to capture it tomorrow evening.

The Christian Endeavor Society of the First Baptist Church held their weekly meeting last night, as their regular night, tomorrow, is to be occupied with the Union County Convention.

The Tournament Begun.

The individual bowling tournament in the C. Y. M. L. began last night. Only four of the twelve players in Class B bowled, and Forrestel stopped playing after the first game. The class has a handicap of 15 pins from Class A.

SHIPS THAT PASS IN THE NIGHT.

By BEATRICE HARRADEN.

The Disagreeable Man meanwhile had reached the concert hall. He glanced around and saw where Bernardine was sitting and then chose a place in the opposite direction, quite by himself. He looked somewhat like a dog who has been beaten Now and again he looked up to see whether she still kept her seat. The bad music was a great irritation to him. But he said on heroically. There was no reason why he should stay. Gradually, too, the audience began to thin. Still he lingered, always looking like a dog in punishment.

At last Bernardine rose, and the Disagreeable Man rose too. He followed her humbly to the door. She turned and saw him.

"I am sorry I put you in a bad temper," he said. "It was stupid of me."

"I am sorry I got into a bad temper," she answered, laughing. "It was stupid of me."

"I think I have said enough to apologize," he said. "It is a process I dislike very much."

And with that he wished her good night and went to his room.

But that was not the end of the matter, for the next day when he was taking his breakfast with her he of his own accord returned to the subject.

"It was partly your own fault that I vexed you last night," he said. "You have never before been touchy, and so I have become accustomed to saying what I choose. And it is not in my nature to be flattering."

"That is a very truthful statement of yours," she said as she poured out her coffee. "But I own I was touchy. And so I shall be again if you make such cutting remarks about my photographs."

"You have a crooked eye," he said grimly. "Look there, for instance! You have poured your coffee outside the cup. Of course you can do as you like, but the usual custom is to pour it inside the cup."

They both laughed, and the good understanding between them was cemented again.

"You are certainly getting better," he said suddenly. "I should not be surprised if you were able to write a book, after all. Not that a new book is wanted. There are too many books as it is and not enough people to dust them. Still it is not probable that you would be considerate enough to remember that. You will write your book."

Bernardine shook her head.

"I don't seem to care now," she said. "I think I could now be content with a quieter and more useful part."

"You will write your book," he continued. "Now listen to me. Whatever else you may do, don't make your characters hold long discussions with each other. In real life people do not talk four pages at a time without stopping. Also, if you bring together two clever men, don't make them talk cleverly. Clever people do not. It is only the stupid ones who think they must talk cleverly all the time. And don't detain your reader too long. If you must have a sunset, let it be a short one. I could give you many more hints which would be useful to you."

"But why not use your own hints for yourself?" she suggested.

"That would be selfish of me," he said solemnly. "I wish you to profit by them."

"You are learning to be unselfish at a very rapid rate," Bernardine said.

At that moment Mrs. Reffold came into the breakfast room, and seeing Bernardine gave her a stiff bow.

"I thought you and Mrs. Reffold were such friends?" Robert Allitsen said.

Bernardine then told him of her last interview with Mrs. Reffold.

"Well, if you feel uncomfortable, it is as it should be," he said. "I don't see what business you had to point out to Mrs. Reffold her duty. I dare say she knows it quite well, though she may not choose to do it. I am sure I should resent it if any one pointed out my duty to me. Every one knows his own duty, and it is his own affair whether or not he does it."

"I wonder if you are right," Bernardine said. "I never meant to presume, but her indifference had exasperated me."

"Why should you be exasperated about other people's affairs?" he said. "And why interfere at all?"

"Being interested is not the same as being interfering," she replied quickly.

"It is difficult to be the one without being the other," he said. "It requires a genius. There is a genius for being sympathetic as well as a genius for being good. And geniuses are few."

"But I knew one," Bernardine said. "There was a friend to whom in the first days of my trouble I turned for sympathy. When others only irritated, she could soothe. She had only to come into my room, and all was well with me."

There were tears in Bernardine's eyes as she spoke.

"Well," said the Disagreeable Man kindly, "and where is your genius now?"

"She went away, she and hers," Bernardine said. "And that was the end of that chapter."

"Poor little child," he said, half to himself. "Don't I, too, know something about the ending of such a chapter?"

But Bernardine did not hear him. She was thinking of her friend. She was thinking, as we all think, that those to whom in our suffering we turn for sympathy become hallowed beings. Saints they may not be, but for want of a better name saints they are to us, gracious and lovely presences. The great time Eternity, the great space Death, could not rob them of their saintship, for they were canonized by our bitterest tears.

She was roused from her reverie by the Disagreeable Man, who got up and pushed his chair noisily under the table.

"Will you come and help me to develop some photographs?" he asked cheerily. "You do not need to have a straight eye for that!"

Then as they went along together he said:

"When we come to think about it seriously, it is rather absurd for us to expect to have uninterrupted stretches of happiness. Happiness falls to our share in separate detached bits, and those of us who are wise content ourselves with these broken fragments."

"But who is wise?" Bernardine asked. "Why, we all expect to be happy. No one told us that we were to be happy. Still, though no one told us, it is the true instinct of human nature."

"It would be interesting to know at what particular period of evolution into our present glorious types we felt that instinct for the first time," he said. "The sunshine must have had something to do with it. You see how a dog throws itself down in the sunshine. The most wretched cur heaves a sigh of content then; the sulkiest cat begins to pur."

They were standing outside the room set apart for the photograph maniacs of the Kurhaus.

"I cannot go into that horrid little hole," Bernardine said. "And besides I have promised to play chess with the Swedish professor. And after that I am going to photograph Marie. I promised Wanli I would."

The Disagreeable Man smiled grimly.

"I hope he will be able to recognize her," he said. Then feeling that he was on dangerous ground he added quickly:

"If you want any more plates, I can oblige you."

On her way to her room she stopped to talk to pretty Fraulein Muller, who was in high spirits, having had an excellent report from the doctor. Fraulein Muller always insisted on talking English with Bernardine, and as her knowledge of it was limited a certain amount of imagination was necessary to enable her to be understood.

"Ah, Miss Holme," she said, "I have deceived an exquisite report from the doctor."

"You are looking ever so well," Bernardine said. "And the lovemaking with the Spanish gentleman goes on well too?"

"Ach!" was the merry answer. "That is your inventory! I am quite indolent to him!"

At that moment the Spanish gentleman came out of the Kurhaus flower shop with a beautiful bouquet of flowers.

"Mademoiselle," he said, handing them to Fraulein Muller and at the same time putting his hand to his heart. He had not noticed Bernardine at first, and when he saw her he became somewhat confused. She smiled at them both and escaped into the flower shop, which was situated in one of the covered passages connecting the mother building with the dependencies. Herr Schmidt, the gardener, was making a wreath. His favorite companion, a saffron cat, was playing with the wire. Schmidt was rather an ill tempered man, but he liked Bernardine.

"I have put these violets aside for you, fraulein," he said in his sulky way. "I meant to have sent them to your room, but have been interrupted in my work."

"You spoil me with your gifts," she said.

"You spoil my cat with the milk," he replied, looking up from his work.

"That is a beautiful wreath you are making, Herr Schmidt," she said. "Who has died? Any one in the Kurhaus?"

"No, fraulein. But I ought to keep my door locked when I make these wreaths. People get frightened and think they, too, are going to die. Shall you be frightened, I wonder?"

"No, I believe not," she answered as she took possession of her violets and stroked the saffron cat. "But I am glad no one has died here."

"It is for a young, beautiful lady," he said. "She was in the Kurhaus two years ago. I liked her. So I am taking extra pains. She did not care for the flowers to be wired. So I am trying my best without the wire. But it is difficult."

She left him to his work and went away thinking. All the time she had now been in Petershof had not sufficed to make her indifferent to the sadness of her surroundings. In vain the Disagreeable Man's preachings, in vain her own reasonings with herself.

These people here who suffered and faded and passed away, who were they to her?

Why should the faintest shadow steal across her soul on account of them?

There was no reason. And still she felt for them all, she who in the old days would have thought it waste of time to spare a moment's reflection on anything so unimportant as the sufferings of an individual human being.

And the bridge between her former and her present self was her own illness.

What dull minded sheep we must all be, how lacking in the very elements of imagination, since we are only able to learn by personal experience of grief and suffering something about the suffering and grief of others!

Yea, how the dogs must wonder at us—those dogs who know when we are in pain or trouble and nestle nearer to us!

So Bernardine reached her own door. She heard her name called, and turning round saw Mrs. Reffold. There was a scared look on her beautiful face.

"Miss Holme," she said, "I have been sent for—I daren't go to him alone—I want you—he is worse. I am"——

Bernardine took her hand, and the two women hurried away in silence.

Strikers in the Coke Regions Beyond Control of the Leaders.

Mobs Assembled at Several Points—The Situation To-day Most Alarming—Yesterday's Slaughter Makes the Men Bloodthirsty and Drives Them to Desperation—No Mercy Shown By the Deputies—Followed the Fleeing Men and Fired Volley After Volley Into Them as They Ran—La Salle, Ill., in Control of a Mob—Sheriff and Deputies Wounded, Probably Fatally—Prisoners Released on Demand of the Mob.

CONNELLSVILLE, Pa., May 25.—It is now positively known that a deputy fired the first shot yesterday at the Washington Run mines. In the excitement which attended the rush of the strikers, he discharged his rifle in the air and fled. In an instant the conflict was on, and before the shooting ended four strikers were lying in the public road dead and twelve or fifteen others wounded. Among the wounded are four deputies.

The dead are Thomas Kenan, of Woods Run, and three foreign strikers. Some of the wounded are dangerously hurt and will die.

The Mob Assembled.

The strikers assembled near the works about midnight. Nine hundred of them were from the coal works along the Monongahela river in the vicinity of Fayette City, and the others were from the Banning, Whitsett, Smithton and other mines along the Youghiogheny river. The two delegations met near the works and bivouacked in the road, ready to intercept the men as they went to work.

The united forces numbered 2,000 men. Many of them were armed with winchesters, shotguns, revolvers and clubs.

During the early morning hours squads of strikers marched up and down the road to the music of brass bands and fifes and drums, shouting and cursing the deputies and workmen, and firing occasional volleys in the air.

Deputies Warned.

Committees were sent to the men and the deputies, warning them that any attempt to start the mines would precipitate a deadly riot. The last notice sent to the deputies a short time before the men went to work, stated:

"We are fully prepared to resist every attempt to start these mines. We know the workmen here would join the strike if they were not intimidated by armed mercenaries. We are heavily armed and will return bullet for bullet, if the deputies fire on us. We are American citizens and demand the protection that is afforded the company."

Deputies Massed From Other Mines.

All of the demonstrations were closely watched by the officials of the company. They had been notified early in the evening of the contemplated attack and massed all the deputies from their other plants.

At midnight fifty men were on guard and at 5 o'clock, the hour of the attack, seventy-five men were on the ground. These men were placed in charge of Capt. Anderson, of Pittsburg, who arrived there from the city yesterday with twenty-five men.

Workmen Ordered Back.

The certainty of an attack caused the company to delay starting the mine until daybreak, and the workmen, realizing what was in store, would not venture out of their houses, except in squads of ten or fifteen under protection of armed guards. The first delegation had nearly reached the mines before the strikers saw them. The mob shouted to the men to return home.

Fearful of the results the men turned about and started for home. The movement was followed by a shout of joy and approval from the strikers. At this juncture the deputies, who had been massed near the mines, rushed out and escorted the men towards the mines.

A Yell and a Rush.

Instantly the strikers set up a yell, and without waiting for further developments made a rush at the deputies. One of the deputies discharged his gun. The strikers say he fired into the crowd and wounded one of the men, but the deputies say the shot was fired into the air. In a moment bullets were flying in all directions. All through the ranks of the strikers revolvers were flashing and a few winchesters and shotguns were brought into active use.

This was met by steady volleys from the deputies' winchesters.

Fled Under the Deadly Fire.

The strikers were unable to endure the deadly fire and they fled down the public road.

The deputies followed closely upon them and continued firing at them. The narrow defile of the road prevented the strikers scattering or getting away from them. A large number rushed into a narrow cut and blocked the passage.

Shot Down as They Run.

The deputies neared the surging mass of men and continued to shoot directly at them. This caused a stampede and about 600 men tore through a barbed wire fence and escaped in a wheat field.

Here again they were compelled to pass within short range of their pursuers and received another raking volley.

The deputies overtook the strikers half way across the field and made 66 of them prisoners.

Many Taken Prisoners.

These men were closely guarded and taken back to the mines where they were locked in box cars and taken to Uniontown. All the men captured were armed. When the deputies closed in on them, many threw down their arms and surrendered, none offering to shoot. Those who escaped made their way to Fayette City, reaching there two hours after the riot.

Fell Exhausted By the Wayside.

Many of the strikers worn out by the marches and excitement fell exhausted by the wayside. The last of the mob did not reach home until late in the evening. John Troy, of Fayette City, is among the mortally wounded. Further bloodshed is feared as a result of yesterday's riot. The leaders fear that they have lost control of the strikers.

The verdict of the coroner's jury was that these men came to their deaths from gunshot wounds inflicted by deputy sheriffs of Fayette county while said men had assembled with guns and other weapons for the purpose of inciting a riot and that said deputies had acted only in line of their lawful duty.

Strikers Are Bloodthirsty.

The most intense excitement prevails throughout the entire coke region. The prospect of a speedy settlement of the strike by peaceable means has been swept away by the bloody riot yesterday. The news of the wholesale slaughter of American workmen has caused the strikers to become bloodthirsty and further riot and bloodshed are imminent. The leaders realize the danger of an outbreak in any part of the region and are doing all in their power to hold the men in check. Numerous appeals were issued from headquarters today to the men to abstain from violence and to keep within the bounds of the law.

Leaders Cannot Control the Men.

The manifest unrest at half a dozen or more points to-day indicate that the appeal has been in vain. The leaders themselves now admit their inability to control the angry strikers and have sent out formal notices to that effect. Should the men break away from the control of the leaders, the wildest scenes of carnage are sure to follow. Mobs are now assembled at several points.

MOB RULES AT LA SALLE.

Sheriff and Deputies Fatally Injured. Prisoners Released.

LA SALLE, Ill., May 25.—This city is in the hands of a mob of striking miners. Since yesterday morning they have had things their own way and when Sheriff Taylor and his handful of deputies sought to put a restraining hand upon their actions, they turned upon him and gave battle.

Not one of the deputies escaped injury and Sheriff Taylor and Deputies Walters, Hoolihan and Devere were dangerously, if not fatally, injured.

Last night when another force of deputies arrested three of the ringleaders, the jail was entered by the infuriated horde and the release of the men accomplished.

Attacked the Sheriff's Deputies.

The rioters were incited into perfect fury by the presence of Sheriff Taylor and his deputies, who were on guard at the different mines all day, and at 3 o'clock marched to the La Salle shaft, where, without cause, rioting was commenced by the Poles and Italians. The foreigners were armed with all kinds of deadly weapons and carried armsful of rocks and clubs and attacked the sheriff and his posse of forty deputies.

Strikers Opened Fire.

The strikers opened fire and it was returned by the sheriff and deputies, the latter holding their own until all their ammunition was used, when they were forced to fly for safety.

It is not known how many of the rioters were injured. Some of them, it is thought, were fatally shot, but they were carried away by their friends.

Sheriff Taylor is lying in the Harrison house dangerously wounded.

The success of the strikers seemed to infuriate them until they lost their heads completely. They then began parading the streets howling and raising pandemonium. About 7:15 oclock two of the ringleaders were put under arrest by deputy sheriffs and hurried through the Harrison house and taken to jail through the back alleys.

Threatened to Blow Up a Hotel.

In five minutes a mob of 1,000 men had surrounded the hotel and threatened to blow it up unless the prisoners were produced. The wildest excitement prevailed and all the guests of the hotel left for quarters more safe.

Word was quickly passed among the strikers that the leaders were in jail and the mob started wildly toward the jail.

Prisoners Released By the Mayor.

Mayor Matthiessen, who has been on the scene all day long, sent orders to release the prisoners, and this was done. The mob then demanded the return and release of the two prisoners sent to Ottawa or they would take the town.

Against Taxing Savings Deposits.

HARTFORD, Conn., May 25.—State Bank Commissioner Edward R. Doyle, Treasurer A. E. Hart, of the Society for Savings, and Treasurer Ward W. Jacobs, of the Mechanics' Savings bank, and Treasurer Henry R. Wooster, of the Deep River Savings bank, have again gone to Washington to protest against the 2 per cent. tax on the earnings of deposits in savings banks. An effort will be made to have savings banks excluded from this tax if the income provision becomes a law.

Troops as a Last Resort Only.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., May 25.—The Pana Coal company telegraphed Gov. Altgeld yesterday asking that troops be sent to their mines at Pana to protect them from an expected attack by the striking miners. Gov. Altgeld replied that he could not furnish troops unless assured that the strikers had overpowered the sheriff and deputies.

Gold Reserved Down Now to About $75,000,000.

Assistant Secretary Curtis' Sudden Departure for New York Creates a Mild Sensation—Treasury Finances Constantly Decreased During the Absence of Secretary Carlisle.

WASHINGTON, May 25.—Assistant Secretary Curtis has gone to New York. Before departing he had a consultation with Secretary Carlisle about treasury finances, which have constantly decreased in the secretary's absence. Up to Mr. Carlisle's return no intimation was given that Mr. Curtis expected to leave for New York. His sudden departure therefore created a mild sensation.

The export of gold has reduced the so-called reserve to a little above $80,000,000 and all the information received at the treasury is to the effect that with Saturday's expected shipments it will be brought close down to $75,000,000.

The net balance, which was $125,000,000 on May 1, has fallen to $118,000,000, leaving the treasury a working balance so small as to require the constant transfer of funds from one sub-treasury to another to meet payments falling due.

There is abundance of gold in the country. When a call was made on the national banks for a statement of their condition on the 28th of February last it was found that all the national banks of the United States had in round figures $190,000,000 of gold. This was after paying $58,000,000 for the first bond issue. Since that time the banks have gained gold at the expense of the treasury.

Returns of all principal cities of the United States on the call for banks' condition on May 4 show that national banks had gold and gold certificates as follows:

|---|---|
| New York | $77,552,000 |
| Chicago | 23,358,000 |
| Boston | 8,381,000 |
| San Francisco | 1,826,000 |
| Kansas City | 1,288,000 |
| Philadelphia | 2,238,000 |
| New Orleans | 413,000 |
| Baltimore | 1,977,000 |
| Cincinnati | 1,170,000 |
| Cleveland | 1,703,000 |
| St. Louis | 1,590,000 |

NATIONAL LAWMAKERS.

Tariff and Appropriation Bills Absorbing the Attention of Congress.

WASHINGTON, May 25.—Notwithstanding the fact that there was a constant stream of talk kept up in the senate there was a very fair degree of progress made in that consideration of the tariff bill yesterday. The day's movement was from page 25 to page 32, and it covered 22 paragraphs. The one on which the principal portion of the debate took place was the tin-plate paragraph; and the result was to leave the duty on tin plate 1 1-5 cents per pound—the same as in the house bill.

A less extensive, although more personal and amusing discussion took place over an amendment offered by Senator Allen, of Nebraska, to put barbed fence wire on the free list. The amendment was accepted by Senator Jones, of Arkansas, on behalf of the finance committee and was incorporated in the bill, with the understanding that it will be framed hereafter by the committee in such language as will admit all fence wire on the same terms.

During the morning hour there was a discussion of the resolution offered by Senator Kyle (pop., S. D.) on Wednesday, announcing a policy of non-interference in the political affairs of Hawaii. The resolution went over without action.

The senate adjourned at 6 p. m.

House of Representatives.

Consideration of the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill at the present stage of legislation was finally concluded in the house. But few changes were made in the text of the last 53 pages and the discussion was devoid of more than passing interest. When reported to the house by the committee of the whole the changes made had increased the total of appropriations carried by the sum of $18,394. This was exclusive of the appropriation for the payment of the salaries of members and clerks of the civil service commission amounting to $30,940, which the committee ordered to be stricken out. That made the amount carried by the bill $21,105,247. When the bill reached the house all the amendments adopted in committee of the whole were disagreed to and the bill was passed. The vote on striking out the appropriation for the civil service commission was 78 to 158.

Mobbed By the Police.

BERLIN, May 25.—The people of Cassel have been excited for several days by reports concerning the ill-treatment of police prisoners. Yesterday afternoon about 3,000 persons gathered in the Old Market square, mobbed the small force of police there, and sang the Marseillaise. A strong force of police which was sent to disperse them was stoned and beaten back. The Hussars were called out and they rode down the crowds, scattered the rioters, and restored order throughout the city. Many persons were injured.

You hear a great deal about oatmeals as good as H-O. Do you ever hear that H-O is as good as some others?

BLOODY VENGEANCE.

Fatal Results of Family Feuds in Kentucky.

PINEVILLE, Ky., May 25.—Further details of the killing of James Middleton, Sinclair Middleton and R. S. Shackleford in Harlan county have been received. The conflict took place on Martin's fork, about 10 miles from Harlan Court House, in the most rugged spur of the mountains. Three men were engaged on each side. Three of one side were killed outright, and two of the others are said to have been wounded, but not seriously. For a long time ill feeling has existed between the Saylors and the Middletons, because of the alleged relations of one of the Middletons with the wife of Gilbert Saylor. Vengeance was sworn, and the relatives of both parties took sides. It is said that Sinclair Middleton, James Middleton, jr., and R. S. Shackleford on one side, and Gilbert Saylor, Noble Hensley and Bert Hensley on the other side, met on Martin's fork. The three former were killed before the smoke of battle cleared away. It is reported by the man who brought the news to Pineville that the Middletons and Schackleford were attacked unawares by Saylor and the Hensleys. The fire was quickly returned, however, the men shooting as they lay bleeding. The Hensleys and Saylor retreated into the mountains after the battle and it is reported that one of the Hensleys and Saylor were wounded, but were able to ride away. As soon as the news of the shooting reached Harlan Court House the sheriff and a posse of 15 men set out for Martin's fork to arrest Saylor and the Hensleys, but nothing has since been heard of them. The friends and relatives of the Middletons and Shackleford, who are said to be related to the Turner family, are aroused, and further bloodshed is probable.

LIZZIE HOLLOWAY DEAD.

Mysterious and Brutal Murder at Bordentown, N. J.

BORDENTOWN, N. J., May 25.—Lizzie Holloway, who was found at her home at the foot of Park street unconscious from three terrible wounds in her head, is dead. Coroner Hibbard has ordered doctors Gilbert and Shipps to perform an autopsy. An inquest will be held. Prosecutor Budd of Burlington county will conduct the proceedings. Massey, the night watchman at the Springfield Worsted mills, who was arrested, charged with having inflicted the wounds from which Miss Holloway died, has retained counsel. It is reported that three witnesses told Mayor Hudson that the deceased girl accused Massey before she died. There is great excitement here over the affair.

Miss Holloway's parents hastily returned from Philadelphia, and were present at the bedside of their daughter when she died.

Three Times a Bigamist.

COLUMBUS, O., May 25.—B. F. Conrad, a convict, and twice a bigamist, was married for the third time in the state prison to Emma Eberle for the purpose of legitimizing their children. Conrad married Miss Eberle ten years ago, having then a wife living. His illegal wife forgave him and he got a Minnesota divorce from wife No. 1, and returning to Ohio married Miss Eberle a second time. She subsequently learned that Conrad had married a Milwaukee girl just after securing his divorce, and that he was a second time a bigamist. Then she had him arrested for the crime and he is serving a long sentence. Wife No. 2 has now procured a divorce, and Conrad has a third time married Miss Eberle, and this time the marriage stands.

Examinations on Honor.

WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass., May 25.—The faculty of Williams college have accepted the recently adopted resolutions of the sophomore class about examinations. Hereafter examinations in that class will be conducted on honor. If the glass finds a man cheating the class will act on the man's offence. A committee of conference from the faculty will be appointed to act with the class committee in cases of discipline. Formerly several instructors were put at the examinations to guard against cheating. Under the new system only the professor of the study examined will be present to answer questions.

Jesse Seligman's Estate.

NEW YORK, May 25.—Theodore Seligman, the son and one of the executors of the will of Jesse Seligman, who died at Coronda beach on April 23 last, filed a petition in the office of the surrogate for the probate of his father's will. The petition states that the personal property is valued at one million dollars, but it does not give any idea as to the realty. A large number of charitable institutions are mentioned in the petition as being legatees under the will and codicil, but the amount which is bequeathed to each is not stated.

Five Lawyers Jailed.

BEATRICE, Neb., May 25.—J. E. Bush, the populist judge of this district, created considerable of a furore in court by ordering the commitment of five members of the bar of this city until they produced in court receipts for the costs in contempt cases, in which they were made defendants by the court. They are prosecuting attorney R. W. Sabin, W. C. Lehane, G. A. Murphy, S. B. Killen and ex-County Judge O. M. Enlow, all prominent members of the bar.

Voters to Settle an Election Dispute.

MOUNT VERNON, N. Y., May 25.—Edwin W. Fiske, democratic contestant for the office of mayor of this city, announces that he is perfectly willing to drop all legal proceedings and stand for a new election, to take place within ten days, if agreeable to Edson Lewis, the republican contestant. As Mr. Lewis is at present absent from the city his answer cannot be learned, but it is the general impression that he will agree to the proposition.

Twenty Years for Murderer Fiehl.

BRIDGETON, N. J., May 25.—Louis Fiehl, convicted of murder in the second degree in killing Christian Zais has been sentenced to 20 years in the state prison. Judge Reed unsparingly denounced the prisoner and regretted that he could not sentence him for life. Fiehl murdered Zais on November 3 last while robbing the latter's bakery at Vineland.

HONORS FOR OUR NAVY

Dinner to the Chicago's Officers in London.

A Most Brilliant Affair—Colors of the Two Nations Entwined—"Blood is Thicker Than Water" a Conspicuous Inscription in the Hall—Toasts to Queen Victoria, President Cleveland and Rear-Admiral Erben.

LONDON, May 25.—The dinner to Rear-Admiral Erben, Captain Mahan and the officers of the United States cruiser Chicago was given at St. Jame's hall last evening. Lord George Hamilton, formerly first lord of the admiralty, presided. Rear Admiral Erben sat on his left and United States Ambassador Bayard on his right. Captain Mahan was separated from Mr. Bayard by the Earl of Carlisle and Admiral Hornby.

The walls of the hall and the balustrades were draped with the colors of the United States and Great Britain. Above the orchestra was the inscription: "Blood is Thicker Than Water."

The band of the Portsmouth division of the Royal Marines played during the dinner and between the toasts. The first piece was "Hail Columbia" and the last was "The Star Spangled Banner."

At the place of every guest was a souvenir book containing the portraits of the chief guests and with these verses on the illuminated cover:

"When love unites, wide space divides in vain,
"And hands may clasp across the spreading main."

After reading letters of regret from Lord Rosebery, Lord Northbrook and others, Lord George Hamilton proposed the toasts to the queen and President Cleveland. Of the queen he said:

"During her long reign she has exhibited those rare qualities which have made her occupancy of the throne the ideal of a constitutional monarchy. Nowhere has this fact been recognized more generally than on the other side of the Atlantic." (Cheers).

Of President Cleveland he said:

"Mr. Cleveland is a man of pre-eminent ability and character. His fellow citizens have recognized this fact in twice electing him to the highest post in the United States. His sobriety of language and fixity of purpose have excited as much admiration on this side of the Atlantic as on the other side. (Cheers.) May the subjects of both drink this toast: 'Long may their influence continue to sway the national policy of their respective countries.'"

In proposing the toast to the United States the chairman said:

"We have gathered here in the presence of the eminent statesman, whose distinguished and blameless career has raised him to the first rank of public men—the statesman who so worthily represents his country as ambassador to Great Britain. (Cheers.) During the last century the progress of the United States in wealth and territory and population—in all, the highest attributes of civilization—has been marvellous and without a parallel in the history of the world. We are proud of this progress, for we are vain enough to take a certain portion of the credit for this marvellous development to ourselves. We believe that the omnipotent energy which accomplished these results was due largely to the racial qualities—to those qualities which originally this country transmitted to America. (Cheers.) But while the material prosperity of this great country is so wonderful, it is equally satisfactory to know that there has been a marked change for the better in the relations existing between the United States and Great Britain. One hundred and ten years ago we parted in anger, after bloodshed. Now we meet together as the reconciled members of one family. The more we come in contact the more we find our interests to be alike, the larger we find the number of the ideas which we have in common. That change is a marked change for the better.

"Yesterday Boston entertained the British admiral and the officers of his flagship in a magnificent manner, but 110 years ago, I am afraid, the citizens would have been engaged in the less congenial occupation of throwing the British cargo overboard. (Laughter.) It is our privilege today to entertain a distinguished United States admiral and the officers of his flagship, but 110 years ago the citizens of London were engaged in the less satisfactory occupation of taxing themselves in order, if possible, to inflict some punishment on the citizens of Boston. (Laughter.)

"We see opposite us the good old words: 'Blood is thicker than water.' Nobody who has had the privilege of being on the other side of the water and participating in the hospitality of the United States can come to any other conclusion than that this sentiment is true. (Loud cheers.) Although the great ocean divides us there exists between Englismen and the great mass of citizens of the United States a community of origin, an identity of language and a similarity of ideas and pursuits such as exist between no two other nations on the face of the globe. (Loud cheers.) I connect this toast with the sentiment of a great Englishman, now departed, who said: 'England and the United States are not two nations, but one, for they bound together by Heaven's act of parliament and the everlasting law of nature and fact.'" (Loud cheers.)

The toast was drunk standing and amid expressions of great enthusiasm. Ambassador Bayard, in responding to it, spoke substantially as follows:

"I am sincerely grateful for the manner in which this toast has been received. I feel very deeply the honor of being the envoy of my country to this kingdom, and the graciousness of the reception which I have experienced in London and elsewhere in England have made me feel the heartiness of the welcome thus given to me as a representative of my country. For this welcome I give you my sincere thanks. (Cheers.) This banquet is certainly a happy omen, coming as it does upon the birthday of the gracious lady whose devotion to public duty and clear, beautiful private life have endeared her not only to those living under the benignant sway, but also to all right-minded and right-thinking men and women, in America even as fully as in England. (Loud applause.) Well may the British subject congratulate himself as he contemplates with affection ate admiration the home life of the true mother of her country. Turning his eyes across the Atlantic, well may every American, whatever his party, congratulate himself that the virtues of graceful and refined womanhood, of innocent and guileless childhood, of lofty integrity and perfect manhood, are clustered round the hearthstone of the president of the United States. (Loud applause.)

"I do not feel that this is an ordinary occasion of festivity. Hospitality, courtesy, mutual service, aid in need, sympathy and sorrow—these, thank God, are exchanged abundantly by the two great branches of the English-speaking people. (Loud cheers) None feel this so strongly as those who face the seas. It is they who know best the sympathies that bind the hearts of the sailors of two nations to-night. There is something in the mind and heart, perhaps upon the lips at almost every man present to-night, that tells him we have met to consider the power of the sea which once divided mankind but now is its main means of intercourse. For the present, I will speak of the country which I have the honor to represent and in whose honor this beautiful festival has been organized. No men have written clearer and more valuable lessons in the use and knowledge of the sea than the officers of the American navy."

Admiral Hornby proposed the toast to the United States navy and Rear-Admiral Erben responded to it in the most successful speech of the evening. He said:

"I wish I could find words to express fully my feelings this evening in response to the enthusiasm with which this toast has been received, but I am unable to do so. Never since I entered the service of my country has such a compliment been paid to the American navy as is paid to-night on the birthday of the queen. Upon the arrival of the Chicago at Gravesend my old friend Anson (Capt. Charles V. Anson, secretary of the dinner committee) said to me: 'We propose to give you a little dinner in London.' I replied: 'Well, I'm with you; (cheers and laughter) nothing would afford me greater pleasure than to meet my old friends in England at a dinner or somewhere else.' If I had known what Englishmen do when they get up a little dinner I would have got out of Gravesend forthwith. (Laughter.) When Englishmen make up their minds to receive a stranger they take him to their hearts night and day. The 'little dinner' has blossomed into a banquet of national importance. When the telegraphic reports of the banquet spread over the world, every American serving on an American ship, from the highest to the lowest, will appreciate the kind manner in which his fellows have been received here this evening. (Loud cheers.)

After recalling several interesting experiences in Chinese waters while co-operating with the British in suppressing the pirates, Rear Admiral Erben caused tremendous applause by referring to the naval review in New York last year.

"When I saw that parade," he said, "I thoughtthat the day of jubilee had come. The lion and the eagle marched down Broadway most triumphantly together, in the only way they ever will go." (Cheers.) In closing his speech Rear Admiral Erben thanked his entertainers "from the bottom of his heart" both for himself and his fellow officers.

General Roberts proposed the toast to Captain Mahan, and the officers of the Chicago. In his response Captain Mahan said that the officers of the Chicago would remember to the end of their days the cordiality of their reception in London.

BRITISHERS' DAY AT BOSTON.

A Dinner Given Last Night on Board the Blake to Gov. Greenhalge.

BOSTON, May 25.—Collector Warren was the first official to return Admiral Hopkins' formal call, and accompanied by Private Secretary Knowlton he boarded the flagship at 12:30, being received in an informal way by Admiral Hopkins and Flag Officer Sanderman. They chatted a while in the admiral's cabin and then went on board the Tartar, where they were hospitably entertained.

Mayor Matthews was the next visitor. He left city hall at 2:15 o'clock accompanied by Private Secretary Taylor and Alder men Fottler, Presbo and Bryant, and went aboard the Blake, where he was hospitably received. Gov. Greenhalge did not go aboard until 3:30. He was escorted by Adj.-Gen. Dalton and Cols. King, Hall, Carter, Parker and Wellington and was received with the governor's salute.

In spite of the rain there were good sized crowds on all the wharves, from which a view of the vessels decked out in gala attire in honor of Queen Victoria's birthday could be obtained.

On account of the weather the electric decorations for last night were given up for the present, although it is likely that they will be made use of some time this week.

Last evening a dinner was given on board the Blake in honor of Gov. Greenhalge. A dinner was also given at the Hotel Vendome by the Harvard Canadian club, at which England was represented by Vice Consul Stewart, Commander Bayley, of the Blake, and Lieut. Cooper, of the Tartar.

Powderly Only Suspended.

PHILADELPHIA, May 25. — Ex-General Master Workman T. V. Powderly is, according to Secretary J. W. Hayes, not expelled from the Knights of Labor, but merely suspended for the refusal to deliver his office papers relating to the secret business of the order to his successor. "When Mr. Powderly," said Mr. Hayes to-day, "delivers those papers he will be reinstated." H. C. Martin, of Minneapolis, a member of the executive board, who was arrested yesterday at Scranton, charged by Powderly with criminal libel, makes light of the matter.

Stolen Goods Cannot Be Held.

BOSTON, May 25.—Judge Putnam of the United States circuit court has decided that a thief cannot give a good title to property which he has stolen, and that accordingly a person who, though innocently, buys stolen goods from him cannot hold the articles against the lawful owner. The suit was that of the Bangor Electric Light and Power company against Augustus G. Robinson and Henry S. Whitney, and the property stolen was a certificate of 100 shares of stock in the plaintiff company.

Heaviest Rainfall on Record.

PHILADELPHIA, May 25.—The rainfall since Friday last has been remarkable and is the greatest ever recorded for May by the weather bureau here. Since Friday 6.81 inches of rain has fallen in this city. The greatest previous record was 5.57 inches in 1873 and the next greatest 5.06 in 1883. The average rainfall for May in a number of years has been three inches. In the past six days it will be seen the fall has been greater than that of the whole month in any previous year.

Anarchist Editor's Severe Sentence.

PARIS, May 25.—The anarchist editor Hinault, in Dijon, has been sentenced to serve two years in prison and to pay a fine of 3,000 francs for having published an article insulting the army.

Local Weather Forecast.

Clearing; warmer; westerly winds.

THE DAILY PRESS.

A. L. FORCE, - - Publisher and Proprietor.
WALTER IRVING CLARKE, - Managing Editor.

CIRCULATION EXCEEDS THAT OF ALL OTHER PLAINFIELD DAILIES COMBINED.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., MAY 25, 1894

Prove your patriotism by your display of colors Memorial Day.

It has been raining ever since the Somerset street people hired the watering carts to lay the dust.

The people who have children in the Plainfield public schools are satisfied with the education they are acquiring therein.

Dunellen also feels that it cannot afford to increase school expenses, and has voted down by the ballot of 82 to 28 the proposed increase of appropriation.

The Republican "reform" Legislature again proved its partisanship yesterday by re-passing the bills the Governor had vetoed because of their gross partisanship.

Brooklyn milkmen are humorists. A housewife yesterday complained that she had found a lizard in the milk, and the purveyor of lacteal fluid suavely said he should not charge her for the extra.

Isn't it a nice commentary on an honored departed citizen to say that he was angered into withholding an intended public gift because the town found it could n't itself afford to pay for such an institution as he contemplated establishing! Nobody believes such rubbish.

What's the outside structure, anyway! Our forefathers worshiped in log cabins just as devoutly as do their modern sons in costly churches; and the old red shanty school-house turned out as great men as any of this later day. Palaces are nice to have, if you can afford them; but who bankers after white elephants?

George said "John, you know that dollar you loaned me?" John said "Yes". George said "John, I spent that in buying you a lovely bargain of a dog-collar". John said "George, I have no dog". "No:"—said George—"but you can buy one". "Not so:"—replied John—"for I have n't the price". "Very well,"—said George—"I was going to give you a dog, but I won't now".

This fable teaches us not to believe stories that could be proved "if old Bill Jones was alive".

The people of Plainfield owe to Senator Adrain and to Governor Werts a debt of gratitude for the enactment of the Plainfield School Bill. The bill would never have passed the Senate had not Mr. Adrain been satisfied that the people of Plainfield wanted it as a protection against exorbitant taxation, as a conservation of their best interests; and the bill was sure of defeat until his doubts were set at rest and he gave it his vote and support. The Daily Press has been congratulated and praised by the leaders of the citizens movement for its own share in this popular victory. It was the argument, the power, the unceasing effort, of The Daily Press, that secured the service of the Democratic Senators and the Democratic Governor and saved the bill from defeat. The people of Plainfield have to thank—not the Republican Legislature, but the people's paper and the Democratic leaders who joined in carrying the issue through to triumph. The people of Plainfield know this, and will not forget it. They have long proved their esteem for and confidence in The Daily Press, and they will evidence at their first opportunity their high regard and gratitude to Senior Adrain and to Governor Werts which have obtained through this marked devotion to their appeal.

Variety of Industries Desirable.

Diversity of interests is desirable for any community. If the boy carries all his eggs in one basket and the bottom drops out, the calamity is appalling, whereas if by reason of two baskets a setting were saved, though business might be restricted, it would go on nevertheless and perhaps in as joyful a spirit as if the basket and its bottom had remained intact. So it is with the towns that are favored with a variety of industries. Dull trade may overtake one, but it is seldom that it becomes so general as to paralyze all.

There are about 11,000 Mennonites in Kansas. They prosper every year, and their homes are veritable storehouses of garden and field products. To step into them is almost equal to a visit to the land of the Volga. Curious furniture, strange and peculiar garb and habits impress one that he is in another land and another age. Surrounding the low and squatty houses are heavy stone walls and old country fencing. Barns and farming implements are everywhere numerous, but the farming utensils are under shelter and bright as new, while the barns and bins are bursting with a wealth of the previous year's crops, in mockand distinction to the American neighbor, whose cribs are empty and whose farm machinery is sheltered by the broad canopy of heaven, while he is off at the county seat town discussing the "circulation per capita" and the downtrodden and oppressed condition of the toiling farmer.—Boston Transcript.

The Antiquity of Advertising.

Fourteen hundred years before Christ street criers went into public places to advertise salable articles or walked through the thoroughfares ringing a bell and promulgating public notices. In the exhumed ruins of Pompeii authentic evidence is found in the crude wall inscriptions depicting the prowess of the gladiators, together with testimonials from citizens, which might really be said to be the birth of the advertisement.

Karl's Clover Root will purify your blood, clear your complexion, regulate your bowels and make your head clear as a bell; 25c., 50c. and $1. Sold by A. D. Mallinson, 206 North ave., Plainfield, N. J., opp. railroad station.

TABLEAUX PHANTASMA.

Successful First Night of a Novel Entertainment.

The spectacle of people they knew, appearing like flesh and vanishing through one another like ghosts, mystified and delighted the audience in Music Hall last night. The stage was set with ordinary scenery, and curtained in black at the rear, as a background to show the figures in relief. When the curtain was rolled up there was no human being visible on the stage, but suddenly, like magic, Miss A. Storm was occupying as "Highland Mary" the place which an instant before was vacant. While all eyes were focused on her she melted quickly away, and dissolved into Miss Amy Dryden as "Maidenhood". She in turn vanished, and was succeeded by Miss Annie Murphy as "Rebecca at the Well". A host of other beautiful living pictures succeeded one another, like flash on flash. It was all so rapid and wonderful that for a time the audience sat spellbound, and then tremendous applause burst forth, to be repeated at each successive change.

Of the miscellaneous illusions that of "Appeal" by Miss Stewart, Miss Hawley and Miss Dryden, and that of "The Three Graces" by Mrs. Miller, Mrs. Kleinecke and Miss Fay Hawley, were particularly pleasing. An especial bewilderment was "Sappho" (Mrs. B. A. Hegeman) walking out on the stage and totally disappearing in the full glare of the lights.

As a rule the tableaux with male characters were the more natural and graceful, and had more expression and animation. The military movements of Capt. Edwards and Corps, with Miss Stewart as Columbia, were admirable.

Various Scriptural illusions were given. Very beautiful was that of a young woman clinging with one arm to the cross and with the other stretching eagerly towards Heaven. It was wonderful to see the massive crosses passing through one another and dissolving into nothing.

The "Dirty Boy" series was funny, and the Japanese girls were like a glimpse of "The Mikado".

The tennis views were fine. Mr. Simmonds being remarkably graceful; the set of players peeping through the meshes of their rackets won much applause.

The Leal football series brought down the male portion of the house, the boys being given a most enthusiastic reception.

"Elaine" was a beautiful pose, and the "Point of Unity" was remarkable for its exquisite coloring.

"The Angelus" was perfectly reproduced.

"The Spectre Bride" was a mystic illusion of a groom embracing a bride who disappeared while he still embraced her, and who, real as she seemed, was but air when he slashed at her with a sword.

The allegory "Our Country's Pride" was patriotic and beautiful. Mrs. Hegeman was a splendid figure for Bartholdi's Statue in its massive bronze, and evoked rapturous admiration.

The performance was eminently satisfactory, and a credit both to J. W. Sherman its manager, and to the society women who worked so hard for its success.

During the evening Elmer E. Bunyon sang with much effect, and Miss Ada Marsh gave great delight by her masterly piano playing.

The performance will be repeated tonight, with improvements, and deserves a crowded house both on its merits and for the sake of Muhlenberg Hospital.

Rapid Transit.

If the King's Daughters and Sons who shipped a barrel of supplies to Sault St. Marie, Mich., a month ago, will call at the freight-house, they will find their barrel still there.

A Guarantee of Good Repute.

There is another merit in advertising apart from its value in giving the public daily information of what you have for sale. It makes your name known to distant people, and although they may not afterward remember just what you then advertised, yet when they come your way they will recognize the name over your store as a familiar one. Though there be a dozen places in your line of business around and about you, they will almost instinctively enter yours first, for they will feel that they are not going into a strange place. In a measure, the constant appearance in the daily papers of a man's name and business is an assurance of reliability and is, consciously or unconsciously, in the mind of the reader a guarantee of good repute. If therefore your advertising is what it should be, and you succeed in building up a profitable business, you cannot put into figures how much a force of salesmen is worth which brings to your store such an army of purchasers.—Exchange.

TALK UP YOUR TOWN.

Modesty Should Not Prevent Its Good Points From Being Known.

If you live in a town, you should believe in it. If you don't believe your own town or city is a little better in most respects than any of its neighbors, you should move out. Like other places, it has advantages that others have not, and your modesty should not prevent you from making that fact known whenever the opportunity presents itself. At home or abroad, whether pursuing pleasure or engaged in business, do not neglect to give those with whom you come in contact to understand that you live in a live town populated by enterprising, go ahead, progressive people and one that is advancing instead of retrograding. If you can truthfully speak in commendation of the ability of your professional men, the square dealing methods of your merchants, the excellence of your mechanics, the superiority of your churches, schools and public institutions and the industry, energy and sobriety of your citizens generally, let nothing prevent you from exercising that privilege. You should learn to believe, if you do not already, that we have all these and in addition the handsomest women, the best located town, the finest country surrounding it, with the most fertile farms, tilled by the most intelligent class of farmers to be found in the United States.

If there are any drawbacks, it will not be necessary to mention them. The people and newspapers of competing towns will relieve you of that task by attending to that part of it themselves. Strangers seeking a location are always greatly influenced in favor of any place whose citizens are enthusiastic in its praise. No city or town can expect to attain prominence over its rivals unless its inhabitants appreciate the excellence and virtues of each other and will collectively spread abroad their faith in the present prosperity and future greatness of their own locality. Talk is a cheap commodity, but when rightly utilized it can be made effective in many directions, and this is one of them.

BOROUGH OF NORTH PLAINFIELD,
May 17, 1894.

The attention of all concerned is called to the following extract from an act passed by the Legislature of the State of New Jersey.

"That any person who shall own, keep or harbor any dogs, bitch or bitches shall have the same registered and numbered with the Clerk of the Borough in which the owner or person harboring the same shall reside, and shall place upon the neck of each dog or bitch kept or harbored a collar, having engraved thereon upon a metal surface, the name of the owner of said dog or bitch and the registered number thereof; and it shall be lawful for any person to kill any dog or bitch found straying off the owner's premises without such collar upon its neck.

The person applying for registration shall pay the sum of one dollar for each dog or bitch thus registered."

The registry book is kept at the office of the Borough Clerk, J. K. Arnold, 92 Somerset street, and prompt compliance with the provisions of the aforesaid statute is urged.

The Spring House Cleaning Wisely urged by the BOARD OF HEALTH is not complete without a proper use of DISINFECTANTS. But, in choosing these, do not be misled into paying fancy prices for "patent" specialties. Common lime is better than any of them for damp cellars and stables. For vaults, drains, cess-pools, the best and cheapest disinfectant is COPPERAS, supplied by us by the pound or barrel at low rates. But for use in the house, in the plumbing, in kitchen sinks, in closets, for purifying the air of sick rooms, deodorizing offensive discharges—in short, for all purposes of a household disinfectant, nothing can excel the powerful solution of chlorides made and sold by us for 15 years under the name of REYNOLDS'S ODORLESS DISINFECTANT. Funeral services will be held tomorrow afternoon at 251 East Third street over the remains of John P. Brokaw, who died Wednesday night at the age of 83. Mr. Brokaw was well known among old residents of Plainfield, having been engaged in hat making when it was a leading industry of Plainfield, half a century ago.

FOR THE relief and cure of a cold in the head there is more potency in Ely's Cream Balm than in anything else it is possible to prescribe. This preparation has for years past been making a brilliant success as a remedy for cold in the head, catarrh and hay fever. Used in the initial stages of these complaints Cream Balm prevents any serious development of the symptoms, while almost numberless cases are on record of radical cures of chronic catarrh and hay fever after all other treatments have proved of no avail.

A REMARKABLE CURE

MIDDLEBUSH, Somerset Co., N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For the past forty years I have been afflicted with bleeding piles. I suffered constant pain in the lower part of my body, but when I had an operation of the bowels the pain was perfectly terrible, and was most always attended with the loss of a large quantity of blood. My condition was complicated with prolapse of the rectum, which at first only made its appearance when I had a movement of the bowels, but at length the parts became so weakened that the protrusion took place while walking or stooping, or after the slightest exertion, and sometimes even while I was at rest. Whenever this happened it gave rise to the most agonizing pain, and felt as though something was pulling the life right out of me. In fact only those similarly situated can imagine the suffering and distress which I had to endure from day to day, and which made my life a terrible burden. Hearing of Dr. Lighthill's wonderful success in the cure of difficult chronic diseases, I placed myself under his care, and now I am proud and happy to say that, marvelous as it may seem, he effected a complete and radical cure in my case in every respect, and he performed this cure without any painful operation or preventing me from work. Since this terrible disease has been removed by Dr. Lighthill's skill I feel new life, and for the first time in forty years I feel once more what it is to be without daily pain, discomfort and distress. I am not a wealthy man, but no amount of money would tempt me to be put back in my former condition.

I make this public statement, not only from a deep and everlasting sense of gratitude to Dr. Lighthill, but also as a simple Christian duty to let the afflicted know where they can find a physician whose skill cannot be surpassed, and in whom implicit confidence can be placed. H. VROOM.

A LOCAL ENDORSEMENT.

No. 188 Somerset st., Plainfield, N. J.
To the Residents of Plainfield, N. J.

Mr. H. Vroom, whose statement appears above, is a brother-in-law of mine. I personally know of his case and his suffering and also know the happy fact that to the surprise of himself and his friends, Dr. Lighthill effected a radical and permanent cure. His statement is true in every respect and does not say half enough in praise of Dr. Lighthill. Anyone who wishes this statement verified is at liberty to come and see me personally. JOHN C. KINNEY.

PLAINFIELD RIDERS COMPLIMENTED.

700 People Enjoy the Reception of Troop A Officers.

A reception ride attracted fully 700 people to the Crescent Rink last night. It was given by the Plainfield Riding Club to the officers of Troop A, N. G. S. N. Y., of which John I. Holly, the leader of the Thursday evening rides, is first sergeant.

Thirty riders were on the tanbark for two hours. The evolutions were performed under the direction of Captain Holly. The spectators showed that they were much interested in the riding, and the visitors, who included some of the best horsemen in New York city, complimented the captain very highly on the excellence of the results accomplished in the Winter's work.

After the regular movements had been finished, Charles Stone and B. F. Cross, privates of the troop, gave an exhibition jeu de barre. The spectators showed by enthusiastic applause their appreciation of the skill of the two men when the one made a clever turn and dash for the handkerchief or the other escaped from a dangerous position. Stone was dragged from his horse by his heavier and stronger rival, but made matters even by jumping from his horse to Cross's and securing the handkerchief after a short struggle on the horse's back.

Hurdle jumping then began, all taking part and furnishing much amusement to the crowd. Several of the horses were quite headstrong in refusing to meet the increasing height of the hurdle and the efforts of their riders afforded the lookers-on many opportunities for applauding.

The rink was in excellent condition for the occasion, the low spot in the middle having been repaired. N. H. Gutmann's band was in attendance. The extra horses, besides those hired from local liverymen, were loaned by Fred Williams, Charles J. Fisk and G. E. Vail. William Naesser's seven riding academy horses were also used. Among them was an excellent horse ridden by John E. Stewart which had been in training under proprietor Naesser for but 11 hours.

The affair was arranged by T. E. VanBoskerck and W. E. Pentz, committee. The women's committee was composed of Mrs. W. E. Pentz, Miss Holly, Miss Vail and Miss Van Boskerck.

The visiting troopers were: Captain C. F. Roe, Lieutenant O. L. Bridgeman, Lieutenant H. H. Balch, Corporal Gilford Hurry, Corporal S. T. Guilford, and Privates Charles Stone, John Graham and B. F. Cross.

Local riders were: Mrs. W. L. Saunders, Mrs. George Bainbridge, Miss VanBoskerck, Miss Corlies, Mrs. W. E. Pentz, the Misses Holly, Miss Vail, Mrs. W. J. Roome, the Misses Coard, Captain John I. Holly, John E. Stewart, John P. Munn, O. T. Waring, Harry Johnson, John J. Coard, T. E. VanBoskerck, W. E. Pentz, J. Wesley Johnson, W. J. Roome, G. E. Vail and H. A. Streuli.

The Plainfield horsemen escorted the troopers to the Country Club after the ride ended at 11. Steward Werts had prepared an excellent supper, and the riders sat down to it with ex-Mayor William L. Saunders, B. A. Hegeman, Jr., George C. Evans, Fred Williams, and B. O. Bowers. With singing, speechmaking and story telling they entertained one another until an early hour this morning.

NEWS OF THE PNEUS.

The P. H. S. A. A. have just received a sanction from Chairman Raymond of the L. A. W. Racing Board, to hold five bicycle races in connection with their field day on June 9, on the Crescent Oval. These events will be full of interest, as they will be open to all schools within a radius of eight miles of Plainfield, and to Pingry's School of Elizabeth. Entry blanks may be obtained of A. B. Crane.

Last, Until Next Fall.

The last of the lessons on physical culture under the direction of Miss E. Marguerite Lindley of New York, was given at the school of the Misses Scribner and Newton yesterday afternoon.

It is understood that Miss Lindley's work in Plainfield, which has consisted of illustrated lectures on anatomy, physiology and hygiene, with special bearing on diet and improved dress, and included an individual prescription of exercises for each pupil, will be resumed in the Fall.

—Demarest & Son's open tomorrow. It will be worth your while to call and get the prices.

Read from a Plainfield Author.

Owing to the storm, the attendance was not very large at the meeting of Central Lodge, No. 48, A. O. U. W., held last evening, but the good of the order was not neglected. P. M. W. Salmon C. Baker read from Bret Harte's works, Financier William Newcorn spoke, Recorder N. C. Mague read statistics of the order's growth, M. W. Charles Randolph told stories, and Receiver William H. Brokaw, P. M. W. Thaddeus Smith, Foreman Edward Mosher, and James Stansbury, spoke.

To Crown the Blessed Virgin.

Next Sunday evening in St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Church the Society of the Children of Mary will crown the Blessed Virgin Mary, and many of the members of the society will take part in the very interesting exercises. The society now has about 75 members of borough young ladies belonging to that church.

Opposing the New Church.

Rector Murphy of Holy Cross is reported to be endeavoring to secure an injunction from the civil courts, restraining the congregation of the new Church of the Redeemer from holding service.

$220 PROFIT.

The Bazar of the Holidays held by the Ladies Aid Society of All Saints Church, Scotch Plains, was a most gratifying success, having netted them over $220. All the fair managers and workers in the matter have been heartily congratulated by the whole parish, and deserve great praise for their arduous and cheerful work. Had the hall been larger the idea of such a Bazar would have shown its beauty and utility in greater measure; but as it was, every booth was beautifully adorned with appropriate emblems, the most noteworthy being those of Easter and Arbor Day, Fourth of July, Washington's Birthday and New Year's Day. The stage was set with all the characteristic features of an old New England kitchen, and the supper dispensed by maidens dressed as Priscillas was rapidly consumed and brought large receipts to the treasury of the Bazar. Gypsy maidens in full costume told fortunes and gained shekels, as it was expected they would. A Christmas tree and a doll-house of home manufacture, delighted the youngsters; and the soberer details of Labor Day materials enhanced the interest of the occasion and gave credit to the lady who really originated the whole scheme, but desires to be nameless.

The ladies desire to render their public recognition of gifts and donations from the following firms and gentlemen outside the parish, viz: Hahne & Co., of Newark; Gloucester Manufacturing Co.; the proprietor of The Press; and Messrs. Edward White, Dr. Shaw, Randolph, J. C. Allen and Voehl, all well-known merchants of Plainfield. They were also gratified at the large attendance of members of the Baptist and Methodist Churches of Scotch Plains, which evidenced the kindly feeling that ought to exist between all Christians; and tender thanks to the Excelsior Fire Company, and many others who contributed to the success of the bazar.

PANIC OVER A FIT.

These New Brunswick Teachers Need Lessons in Common Medicine.

John VanLune, 12 years old, was attacked with a fit in the Hale Street Public School, New Brunswick, yesterday. He is a pupil in Miss Minnie Stubblebine's room. He showed what the teacher thought were symptoms of hydrophobia. She summoned the principal, Miss Cecilia Boudenot, who grasped the writhing boy by the collar and held him while the scholars marched out of the building. Miss Boudenot then locked the boy in. Janitor Dunham took the frantic boy out in the open air. A physician set him right.

MT. PLEASANT.

The work of erecting the new Mt. Pleasant chapel has been delayed on account of not being able to secure enough stone to warrant the completion. Farmers are now busy, and cannot spare the time to haul the stone from the mountain. Work will soon begin, however, and in the meantime the congregation is content to worship in the school-house.

Farmers in this vicinty report a large loss in tomato plants by the heavy rains. One man had at least two-thirds of his entire patch destroyed by the storm.

William Muckey has already planted 25 bushels of early potatoes, and yesterday he carted from the freight-house five more barrels of seed potatoes which he will plant for the late crop.

Mrs. Dayton and her aunt Mrs. Smith of New Haven, are visiting Mrs. Dayton's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Potter of Mt. Pleasant.

Dunellen Bowling Green.

Contrary to expectation, the Dunellen Bowling Green Club will open the season on C. Schepflin's Court, June 7, and during the Summer there will be bowling games on the green.

The team from the Dunellen Bowling Club which is to compete with the Boston team, at Boston, Decoration Day, will hold a practice game Saturday. Andrew Love of this city will go as one of the Dunellen team. Last year the Bostons beat the Dunellens, and the Dunellen team is going to make an effort to recover the trophy.

His First Summons.

Justice William Newcorn issued his first summons this morning. The case is that of George D. Small against Mrs. Annie Hoffman of Terrill road. The plaintiff claims that Mrs. Hoffman employed Fritz Rinder and that the latter was responsible for a collision between wagons the morning of May 1. Small, through Runyon & Moffit, demands payment for his wagon. The case will be heard next Thursday.

Taking in the Strayings.

The first capture under the order that the borough marshals should enforce the stray animal ordinance was made early this morning. A sorrel horse owned by ex-dog-catcher George Lewis of Manning avenue was found foraging on Jackson avenue. Lewis paid $1 for his property at Samuel Taynor's pound on Summit avenue.

Thrifty Freeholder.

Freeholders J. Frank Hubbard and John H. Tier drove over to Springfield this afternoon to inspect the county roads in that vicinity. Mr. Tier, as chairman of the Plainfield district, drove his own rig, thus saving $3 to the county.

Ruth Ate 'Em Up.

The Press office cat had a feast on a branch full of seventeen-year-old locusts brought to town today by Henry Clay Randolph of the Rahway road. She is ready to contract for clearing fields of the plague.

Chief's Degree Tonight.

The chief's degree will be worked in Miantonomoh Tribe tonight. The entertainment committee will make a partial report of the financial success of Wednesday evening's entertainment.

—Don't forget Demarest & Son's opening tomorrow.

SAID AT FIRST HE WAS 47.

Mr. McCafferty Finally Owned Up to Being 76 Years Old.

The contest over the will of the late Richard J. Clarke, who died in Plainfield in 1892, leaving his estate to Mrs. Alice A. Schell and her relatives, was continued yesterday before Justice Beach and a jury in the Supreme Court. Among the witnesses was William McCafferty, a man bent with years.

"How old are you, Mr. McCafferty?" asked Mr. Cockran.

"Forty-seven", answered the witness. The answer was greeted with roars of laughter from the crowded court room, the Judge joining in it.

Later Mr. McCafferty admitted being 76 years old.

George Henry Emple, who used to be Mr. Clarke's cashier, said in the course of his testimony that he "made a strong play for some of the old gent's money", but when he found he was not mentioned in the will he would not attend the funeral.

This statement caused more laughter.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

The entertainment of the Christian Endeavor Society in Warren Chapel last evening was attended by 200. The proceeds will be used to provide free tickets to the Sunday-school on the excursion this season. Henry Seader, Morgan Stites and John Herman were in charge of the tickets, and A. R. Johnson and Frank Splan were the ushers. The programme of the evening was well presented and much appreciated. Mrs. Fred Canfield played on the piano, Miss Anna D. Cooper read two selections, and there was singing by Miss I. E. Dunham, Miss K. Mullon of Brooklyn, Misses M. and E. Smith, Miss M. Shepard, Miss Lizzie Duvier, Miss Maggie Page, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. A. Westphal, Mr. Bond, William and Bertram Tallamy, and a quartette composed of Messrs. Ryder, Clark, Moore and Rand.

Becoming a Locust Expert.

Musician E. M. O'Reily is making a careful study of the crop of seventeen-year locusts. He finds that East Second street near Church street is the most convenient locality for gathering specimens.

EARLY INTELLIGENCE.

—Lovers of bock beer will find their want supplied at Weinwurm's popular Central Hotel.

—The Pond Machine Tool Company stockholders will meet in annual session Monday, June 4, at 3 p. m., to elect directors.

—At Rudolph Spiegel's Crescent Hotel, bock beer, bockwurst, and sauerkraut, will be served to his customers all day Saturday.

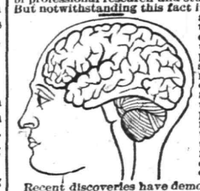
—The Four-in-Hand Circle of East Front street, who have been accustomed to take carriage drives for flowers, have been kept from going by the storm.

—Six cases in the Criminal Court are set down for trial at Elizabeth for Monday. The reason is that most of the defendants will plead guilty, and the presiding judge is anxious to get through with the May term.

MYSTERIES!

The Nervous System the Seat of Life and Mind. Recent Wonderful Discoveries.

No mystery has ever compared with that of human life. It has been the leading subject of professional research and study in all ages. But notwithstanding this fact it is not generally known that the seat of life is located in the upper part of the spinal cord, near the base of the brain, and so sensitive is this portion of the nervous system that even the prick of a needle will cause instant death.



Recent discoveries have demonstrated that all the organs of the body are under the control of the nerve centers, located in or near the base of the brain, and that when these are deranged the organs which they supply with nerve fluid are also deranged. When it is remembered that a serious injury to the spinal cord will cause paralysis of the body below the injured point, because the nerve force is prevented by the injury from reaching the paralyzed portion, it will be understood how the derangement of the nerve centers will cause the derangement of the various organs which they supply with nerve force.

Two-thirds of chronic diseases are due to the imperfect action of the nerve centers at the base of the brain, not from a derangement primarily originating in the organ itself. The great mistake of physicians in treating these diseases is that they treat the organ rather than the nerve centers which are the cause of the trouble.

DR. FRANKLIN MILES, the celebrated specialist, has profoundly studied this subject for over 20 years, and has made many important discoveries in connection with it, chief among them being the facts contained in the above statement, and that the ordinary methods of treatment are wrong. All headache, dizziness, dullness, confusion, pressure, blues, mania, melancholy, insanity, epilepsy, St. Vitus dance, etc., are nervous diseases no matter how caused. The wonderful success of DR. MILES' Restorative Nervine is due to the fact that it is based on the foregoing principles.

SHE WRITES CLEVER STORIES.

Among the new writers in New York is one who is sure to make a marked success if she continues in her daring and original way. Some time last summer a manuscript was sent to the editorial rooms of the American Press Association entitled "How to Manage a Husband." It was thought to be the work of some one of ample experience in that most difficult calling and bore the signature of Maud J. Chilton. The surprise of the editor can therefore be imagined when he learned that the writer of the breezy essay was a young lady scarcely 20 years of age and well known in society. Since then she has struck nearly every note on the keyboard of literature, her latest venture being a novel called "Society's Protegee." Miss Chilton's family is one of the oldest in America. She is a direct descendant of Edmund Fanning, lieutenant governor of Canada. Her great-great-grandfather was the first Presbyterian minister in the United States. Dr. George Chilton, the celebrated chemist, who was a professor at Yale, was her great-grandfather. Her grandfather was one of the earliest dry goods merchants in New York, while her father, Bruce E. Chilton, is an ex-member of the New York Stock Exchange. Miss Chilton evidently does not get her literary tendency from her ancestors. She has spent the greater part of her life abroad. Educated in Paris, she was brought up with the belief that society was her goal, but like the modern woman she longed for a wider sphere.

CHAPTER XVI.

WHEN THE SOUL KNOWS ITS OWN REMORSE.

Bernardine had seen Mr. Reffold the previous day. She had sat by his side and held his hand. He had smiled at her many times, but he only spoke once.

"Little Brick," he whispered, for his voice had become nothing but a whisper, "I remember all you told me. God bless you. But what a long time it does take to die."

But that was yesterday.

The lane had come to an ending at last, and Mr. Reffold lay dead.

They bore him to the little mortuary chapel, and Bernardine staid with Mrs. Reffold, who seemed afraid to be alone. She clung to Bernardine's hand.

"No, no," she said excitedly, "you must not go! I can't bear to be alone—you must stay with me."

She expressed no sorrow, no regret. She did not even speak his name. She just sat nursing her beautiful face.

Once or twice Bernardine tried to slip away. This waiting about was a strain on her, and she felt that she was doing no good.

But each time Mrs. Reffold looked up and prevented her.

"No, no," she said, "I can't bear myself without you. I must have you near me. Why should you leave me?"

So Bernardine lingered. She tried to read a book which lay on the table. She counted the lines and dots on the wall paper. She thought about the dead man and about the living woman. She had pitied him, but when she looked at the stricken face of his wife Bernardine's whole heart rose up in pity for her. Remorse would come, although it might not remain long. The soul would see itself face to face for one brief moment and then forget its own likeness.

But for the moment—what a weight of suffering, what a whole century of agony!

Bernardine grew very tender for Mrs. Reffold. She bent over the sofa and fondled the beautiful face.

"Mrs. Reffold," she whispered.

That was all she said, but it was enough.

Mrs. Reffold burst into an agony of tears.

"Oh, Miss Holme," she sobbed, "and I was not even kind to him! And now it is too late. How can I ever bear myself?"

And then it was that the soul knew its own remorse.

CHAPTER XVII.

A RETURN TO OLD PASTURES.

She had left him alone and neglected for whole hours when he was alive, and now when he was dead and it probably mattered little to him where he was laid it was some time before she could make up her mind to leave him in the lonely little Potershof cemetery.

"It will be so dreary for him there," she said to the doctor.

"Not so dreary as you made it for him here," thought the doctor.

But he did not say that. He just urged her quietly to have her husband buried in Potershof, and she yielded.

So they laid him to rest in the dreary cemetery.

Bernardine went to the funeral, much against the Disagreeable Man's wish.

"You are looking like a ghost yourself," he said to her. "Come out with me into the country instead."

But she shook her head.

"Another day," she said. "And Mrs. Reffold wants me. I can't leave her alone, for she is so miserable."

The Disagreeable Man shrugged his shoulders and went off by himself.

Mrs. Reffold clung very much to Bernardine those last days before she left Potershof. She had decided to go to Wiesbaden, where she had relations, and she invited Bernardine to go with her. It was more than that—she almost begged her. Bernardine refused.

"I have been from England nearly five months," she said, "and my money is coming to an end. I must go back and work."

"Then come away with me as my companion," Mrs. Reffold suggested. "And I will pay you a handsome salary."

Bernardine could not be persuaded.

"No," she said. "I could not earn money that way; it would not suit me. And, besides, you would not care to be a long time with me. You would soon tire of me. You think you would like to have me with you now, but I know how it would be—you would be sorry, and so should I. So let us part as we are now, you going your way, and I going mine. We live in different worlds, Mrs. Reffold. It would be as senseless for me to venture into yours as for you to come into mine. Do you think I am unkind?"

So they parted. Mrs. Reffold had spoken no word of affection to Bernardine, but at the station as she bent down to kiss her she whispered:

"I know you will not think too hardly of me. Still will you promise me? And if you are ever in trouble, and I can help you, will you write to me?"

And Bernardine promised.

When she got back to her room, she found a small packet on her table. It contained Mr. Reffold's watch chain. She had so often seen him playing with it. There was a little piece of paper inclosed with it, and Mr. Reffold had written on it some two months ago, "Give my watch chain to Little Brick, if she will sacrifice a little of her pride and accept the gift." Bernardine unfastened her watch from the black hair cord and attached it instead to Mr. Reffold's massive gold chain.

As she sat there fiddling with it the idea seized her that she would be all the better for a day's outing. At first she thought she would go alone, and then she decided to ask Robert Alltsen. She learned from Marie that he was in the dark room, and she hastened down. She knocked several times before there was any answer.

"I have to be disturbed just now," he said. "Who is it?"

"I can't shout to you," she said.

The Disagreeable Man opened the door of the dark room.

"My negatives will be spoiled," he said gruffly. Then, seeing Bernardine standing there, he added:

"Why, you look as though you wanted some brandy."

"No," she said, smiling at his sudden change of manner. "I want fresh air, a sledge drive and a day's outing. Will you come?"

He made no answer and retired once more into the dark room. Then he came out with his camera.

"We will go to that inn again," he said cheerily. "I want to take the photographs to those peasants."

In half an hour's time they were on their way. It was the same drive as before. And since then Bernardine had seen more of the country and was more accustomed to the wonderful white scenery, but still the "white presences" awed her, and still the deep silence held her. It was the same scene, and yet not the same either, for the season was now far advanced, and the melting of the snows had begun. In the far distance the whiteness seemed as before, but on the slopes near at hand the green was beginning to assert itself, and some of the great trees had cast off their heavy burdens and appeared more gloomy in their freedom than in the days of their snow bondage. The roads were no longer quite so even as before. The sledge glided along when it could and bumped along when it must. Still there was sufficient snow left to make the drive possible and even pleasant.

The two companions were quiet. Once only the Disagreeable Man made a remark, and then he said:

"I am afraid my negatives will be spoiled."

"You said that before," Bernardine remarked.

"Well, I say it again," he answered in his grim way.

Then came a long pause.

"The best part of the winter is over," he said. "We may have some more snow, but it is more probable that we shall not. It is not enjoyable being here during the melting time."

"Well, in any case I should not be here much longer," she said, "and for a simple reason too. I have nearly come to the end of my money. I shall have to go back and set to work again. I should not have been able to give myself this chance but that my uncle spared me some of his money, to which I added my savings."

"Are you badly off?" the Disagreeable Man asked rather timidly.

"I have very few wants," she answered brightly. "And wealth is only a relative word, after all."

"It is a pity that you should go back to work so soon," he said half to himself. "You are only just better, and it is easy to lose what one has gained."

"Oh, I am not likely to lose," she answered, "but I shall be careful this time. I shall do a little teaching and perhaps a little writing—not much; you need not be vexed. I shall not try to pick up the other threads yet. I shall not be political nor educational nor anything else great."

"If you call politics or education great," he said. "And heaven defend me from political or highly educated women!"

"You say that because you know nothing about them," she said sharply.

"Thank you," he replied. "I have met them quite often enough."

"That was probably some time ago," she said rather heartlessly. "If you have lived here so long, how can you judge of the changes which go on in the world outside Petershof?"

"If I have lived here so long!" he repeated in the bitterness of his heart.

Bernardine did not notice. She was on a subject which always excited her.

"I don't know so much about the political women," she said, "but I do know about the higher education people. The writers who rail against the women of this date are really describing the women of 10 years ago. Why, the Girton girl of 10 years ago seems a different creation from the Girton girl of today. Yet the latter has been the steady outgrowth of the former."

"And the difference between them," asked the Disagreeable Man, "since you pride yourself on being so well informed?"

"The Girton girl of 10 years ago," said Bernardine, "was a somber, spectacled person, carelessly and dowdily dressed, who gave herself up to wisdom and despised every one who did not know the Agamemnon by heart. She was probably not lovable, but she deserves to be honored and thankfully remembered. She fought for woman's right to be well educated, and I cannot bear to hear her slighted. The fresh hearted young girl who nowadays plays a good game of tennis and takes a high place in the classical or mathematical tripos, and is book learned, without being bookish, and"——

"And who does not scorn to take a pride in her looks because she happens to take a pride in her books," continued Bernardine, looking at the Disagreeable Man and not seeming to see him. "She is what she is by reason of that grave and loveless woman who won the battle for her."

Here she paused.

"But how ridiculous for me to talk to you in this way!" she said. "It is not likely that you would be interested in the widening out of women's lives."

"And pray why not?" he asked. "Have I been on the shelf too long?"

"I think you would not have been interested even if you had never been on the shelf," she said frankly. "You are not the type of man to be generous to woman."

"May I ask one little question of you, which shall conclude this subject?" he said. "Since here we are already at the Gasthaus, to which type of learned woman do you lay claim to belong?"

Bernardine laughed.

"That leaves to your own powers of discrimination," she said and then added, "if you have any."

And that was the end of the matter, for the word spread about that Herr Alltsen had arrived, and every one turned out to give the two guests greeting. Frau Steinhart smothered Bernardine with motherly tenderness and whispered in her ear:

"You are betrothed now, liebes fraulein? Ach; I am sure of it."

But Bernardine smiled and shook her head and went to greet the others who crowded round them, and at last poor Catharina drew near, too, holding Bernardine's hand lovingly within her own. Then Hans, Liza's lover, came upon the scene, and Liza told the Disagreeable Man that she and Hans were to be married in a month's time. And the Disagreeable Man, much to Bernardine's amazement, drew from his pocket a small parcel, which he confided to Liza's care. Every one pressed round her while she opened it and found what she had so often wished for, a silver watch and chain.

"Ach," she cried, "how heavenly! How all the girls here will envy me! How angry my dear friend Susanna will be!"

Then there were the photographs to be examined.

Liza looked with stubborn disapproval on the pictures of herself in her working dress, but she did not conceal her admiration of the portraits which showed her to the world in her best finery.

"Ach," she cried, "this is something like a photograph!"

The Disagreeable Man grunted, but behaved after the fashion of a hero, claiming, however, a little silent sympathy from Bernardine.

It was a pleasant, homely scene, and Bernardine, who felt quite at her ease among these people, chatted away with them as though she had known them all her life.

Then Frau Steinhart suddenly remembered that her guests needed some food, and Liza was dispatched to her duties as cook, though it was some time before she could be induced to leave off looking at the photographs.

"Take them with you, Liza," said the Disagreeable Man. "Then we shall get our meal all the quicker."

She ran off, laughing, and finally Bernardine found herself alone with Catharina.

"Liza is very happy," she said to Bernardine. "She loves and is loved."

"That is the greatest happiness," Bernardine said half to herself.

"Fraulein knows!" Catharina asked eagerly.

Bernardine looked wistfully at her companion.

"No, Catharina," she said. "I have only heard and read and seen."

"Then you cannot understand," Catharina said almost proudly. "But I understand."

She spoke no more after that, but took up her knitting and watched Bernardine playing with the kittens. She was playing with the kittens, and she was thinking, and all the time she felt conscious that this peasant woman, stricken in mind and body, was pitying her because that great happiness of loving and being loved had not come into her life. It had seemed something apart from her. She had never even wanted it. She had wished to stand alone, like a little rock out at sea.

And now?

A PUBLIC BENEFACTOR.

THEY ALL SAY THE SAME.

Don't Hesitate, but Call and Be Convinced That Every Statement We Make is True.

To those who do not already know that there is established in Newark, at 105 Halsey street, a physician who stands in the foremost rank of his profession, who is indorsed by the leading colleges of the country and who can prove by witnesses right here in Newark (not by one, but by hundreds) that he has succeeded in curing cases that have been utterly given up by other physicians, and good ones, too. To those who do not these facts we state that any person, rich or poor, old or young, is welcome here and receive examination and advice free of charge.

Thousands praise the day they came to us for treatment. There is no guess work, no experimenting, no painful operation. No matter how difficult the case, no matter how much of the physician's time it may consume, the diagnosis will not only be thorough, it will be absolutely free. There is no taint of quackery or deception; no claim or statement is made that is not borne out by facts and living witnesses.

Mrs. Abby A. Ray, late of 86 Grove street, East Orange, who now lives at 400 Ellmore street, Escanaba, Mich., writes, under date of January 12: "The medicine arrived this morning and I am so glad it came. I am almost out, and it has helped me so much and I am so much pleased with its wonderful effort on my broken down system that I would like to testify to your great success in my case. I am feeling as well now, in fact better, than I had ever hoped to again."

This is one of many letters that we receive daily. We have the originals at our office and if you wish you may see them. Another thing: We never publish or reveal a patient's name unless they so desire.

DR. STARKWEATHER.

There is not a penny to pay for the fullest medical advice. Dr. Starkweather is a graduate of the Berkshire Medical College, Massachusetts, and of the Medico-Chirurgical College of Philadelphia; endorsed also by the College of Physicians and Surgeons and Bellevue Medical College of New York. We invite all sufferers from whatever cause to call at our office, No. 105 Halsey street, Newark, where Dr. Starkweather is in attendance daily to give examination and advice entirely free of charge. It matters not what the disease, or how many years you have suffered, in spite of means adopted in your behalf, a visit to this office and the privileges of the same will cost you nothing, and may be the means of saving your life. We prepare all our medicines and prescribe the remedies indicated. This plan enables the patient to receive directly from us such remedies as will produce the results promised.

Our office is open daily from 10 a. m. to 9 p. m. Sundays 4 to 6 p. m.

Those living at a distance can consult the Doctor by letter.

WERE SHOT IN THE BACK

Strikers Were Slaughtered at Washington Run.

Coroner Gives Way to Public Criticism and Sets Aside the Verdict Exonerating the Deputies—Illinois Miners Marching on Ottawa to Storm the Jail—Situation Serious.

UNIONTOWN, Pa., May 26.—Coroner Batton has yielded to strong and general criticism on the inquest held by Justice Brownfeller, in which the latter exonerated the deputies who killed the strikers at Washington Run mine, and has ordered that verdict set aside.

Coroner Batton has directed Deputy Coroner Echard to hold another inquest and bring out all the facts in the case. The strikers charge that the first inquest was unfair and such evidence heard only as tended to justify the deputies in shooting.

The strikers' leaders claim that the fact that all the strikers killed were shot in the back is evidence that they were pursued by the deputies.

There is a general cry for a full investigation and nothing less will satisfy the general indignation that exists from the killing.

Charles Hatfield, of Connellsville, has been arrested and brought to jail here charged with shooting the unknown Slav at Broadford during the Davidson riot. There are now 150 prisoners in jail, the most at any one time since the strike began, or before.

BLOODY BATTLE EXPECTED.

Striking Miners Preparing to March to Ottawa to Storm the Jail.

LA SALLE, Ill., May 26.—From present indications the rioting here has only ceased for the time being and the actions of the miners now point to more trouble later. The miners, though orderly in La Salle, are, it is thought, preparing for an uprising that may result fatally to human life and render destruction to property.

The demand from the strikers for the return of the two prisoners taken to Ottawa was refused. The men declared that if they were not returned to La Salle they would organize, arm themselves, march to Ottawa and liberate the men, even though it be necessary to demolish the county jail to accomplish their object.

The sheriff replied, saying that the prisoners would be tried in Ottawa and that he would be pleased to meet the strikers.

This answer threw the Spring Valley anarchists into a frenzy and they decided to organize and arm themselves and march to Ottawa and carry out their purpose.

They are now preparing for this undertaking and mobs at other points are massing to join them. This has greatly excited both La Salle and Ottawa, and preparations for defense are going on. A bloody battle is expected.

Fear an Invasion of Strikers.

PANA, Ill., May 26.—There is considerable excitement here over the reported approach of a body of foreign strikers, variously estimated from 100 to 1,000 in numbers, said to be coming for the purpose of forcing working miners to go out. A mass meeting of citizens was held at which nearly 1,500 men volunteered to act as special deputies to guard the mines. Eight hundred stands of arms arrived from Springfield and St. Louis and the deputies are armed and guarding the mines.

Indiana Mob Going to Pana.

TERRE HAUTE, Ind., May 26.—About 1,000 coal miners rode into Terre Haute on a captured freight train over the Big Four railroad at midnight. The train was captured at Grant, a few miles south of this city, the men expecting to go to Pana to force the miners out. When the train reached here it was annulled and the miners decided to wait until they could capture a train. The leaders claim that over 3,000 Illinois miners are headed for Pana.

Returned to Prevent Starvation.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., May 26.—The four thousand miners of the Coal Creek district who went out on a strike April 21, have all returned to work. The men have been in destitute circumstances since the strike went into affect, and were compelled to return to work or starve. The terms at which they go back are exactly the same as were effective when they went out. The strike is broken so far as this district is concerned.

Gatling Guns for Mobs.

SCOTTDALE, Pa., May 26.—W. J. Rainey has received a gatling gun and placed it on his Moyer works. The strikers, 2,000 strong, marched past the works and those in charge of the gun fired two volleys as a warning. Marching has been resumed and nearly all the strikers in the region are on the move.

Tie-up Complete.

ALLIANCE, O., May 26.—The miners at Bergholz, on the Alliance & Southern road, have just gone on strike, completing the tie-up in this part of the state. About 250 striking miners from Salinesville marched to Bergholz and prevailed upon the men there to join them. There was no disturbance.

5,000 Miners Ready to March.

COAL BLUFF, Ind., May 26. — Five thousand miners held a meeting here and decided to march en masse to Pana, Ill., and force the miners there to quit work. The hour of departure is kept secret. The situation in this district is becoming serious.

Granger Seen at Mount Vernon.

MOUNT VERNON, N. Y., May 26.—Gideon Granger, son-in-law of Police Commissioner McClave, of New York, arrived in this city from Yonkers Thursday afternoon and immediately retained S. J. Stillwell a well-known lawyer here, to represent him in his legal difficulties. This done he left the Weber house, where he was staying, and immediately disappeared. Granger's whereabouts are known only to his counsel.

DULLEST IN 20 YEARS

Bradstreet's Review of the Business Situation.

Prospect for No Material Improvment During the Summer—About 235,000 Industrial Employes Now Idle. Newspaper Reports of the Coal Famine Exaggerated.

NEW YORK, May 26.—The unfavorable conditions prevailing in commercial circles throughout the country, together with the prospect for no material improvement during the summer marks the present season as probably the dullest relatively for twenty years, says Bradstreet in his weekly review of business. At no time since panic and business depression manifested themselves last year have reports as to the volume of sales of merchandise, the manufacture of staple goods, and the indisposition of merchants generally to buy except for absolutely immediate wants been so pronounced and so general throughout the country as during the past few weeks. Superficial examinations of business conditions leading to unwarranted optimistic conclusions as to the nearby future of trade have not been wanting, but, as a matter of fact, based on comprehensive and careful examination, the next few months promise a continuance if not an intensifying of existing conditions of extreme dullness and depression.

Bank Clearings.

Bank clearings for the six days ending with May 24 amount to $855,000,000, nearly 4 per cent. less than in the week before, and 18 per cent. less than in the like week a year ago. The decrease in the ratio of falling off in the week's totals of clearings compared with a year ago is because it is just one year since the depression in business began to be felt sufficiently to show itself in materially decreased bank clearings.

Rainstorms have exercised an unfavorable influence on business at almost all points east of the Mississippi river. No one of the larger eastern cities reports an improvement in any line, with the exception of the demand for shoes at Boston and Philadelphia. All business has fallen off at Pittsburg, at Buffalo the situation is the dullest for years, and Baltimore travelers report country merchants not buying anything except to meet actual sales to customers.

Report of Coal Famine Exaggerated.

Eastern woolen and cotton goods mills report conditions and outlook quite unfavorable.

Daily newspaper reports of a soft coal famine and a shut down of general manufacturing operations prove without foundation. Present supplies of coal at leading central western and lake cities will last from ten to sixty days. Coal from Kentucky and West Virginia mines and from other sources and substitution of anthracite, oil, wood and natural gas for fuel, have prevented famine anticipated. Quite unfavorable advices come from Pittsburg, where there are numerous shutdowns, involving large numbers of men.

235,000 People Idle.

The total number of industrial employes idle as a result of coal scarcity is placed at 35,000, and the total number idle owing to the strike, which now appears likely to fail, is 210,000. In other industrial lines 25,000 men are reported idle as a result of strikes, making the total number now idle 235,000.

An encouraging industrial feature is the probable settlement of next season's iron and steel wage scale without a strike. The only favorable features reported from central western and western centres include moderate gain in sales of some staple goods at Detroit, Kansas City and Milwaukee, and of shoes at Chicago.

Excessive Dullness.

While good crop prospects prevail in Missouri and Kansas, in Nebraska rains are badly needed. Cincinnati is suffering more from the carpenters' strike than coal famine, and Louisville, St. Louis, Omaha, St. Paul and Minneapolis practically agree that merchants are buying rather more reluctantly than formerly and that the outlook is less favorable than before. Duluth and Buffalo, with other ports, complain of severe effects of excessively low lake freight rates. Advices from the south present a continuous report of excessive dullness, except that there are gains in sales of plantation supplies at Memphis, advancing prices for naval stores at Savannah, and some activity in fruits at Mobile.

Business Failures.

The stress of financial panic and trade convulsion in the latter portion of 1893 pushed many of the weaker business concerns to the wall, so that by February 1 last the average number failing weekly in the United States had gotten down to normal proportions. This week the total is 237, against 186 last week, as compared with 247 in the week a year ago, when the total began to expand under special conditions, and as compared with 177 in the week in 1892.

It Was a Race for Life.

CONNELLSVILLE, Pa., May 26.—In an interview, John Troy, the wounded coker, who is at the hospital in Connellsville, said that the strikers who formed the mob at the Washington Run mines were not armed, but that the affair was a race for life between the men and the pursuing deputies. When he was shot Troy said he was many yards from the works. He said the shooting was all done by deputies and was without excuse. The cokers are said to be sullen and determined.

Possible End of Gold Shipments.

WASHINGTON, May 26.—Treasury officials are much encouraged by a despatch from New York stating that only $875,000 in gold has been engaged at the subtreasury for shipment to Europe. This only reduces the treasury gold to $79,890,000. In this light shipment on Saturday treasury officials profess to see the end in sight of gold shipments for the present.

Mrs. Mayer Acquited.

RACINE, Wis., May 26. — Mrs. Mary Mayer, who was arrested in Brooklyn last February and brought to this city for trial on the charge of having murdered her first husband, Herman Greenke, by administering arsenic, has been acquitted after a two weeks' trial.

AN UNEXPECTED BALK

Trouble Over a $1,000,000 Mission House.

The Presbyterian Joint Committee Having the Proposed Structure at New York in Hand Divided in Opinion—Country Ministers' Plans Might Injure Credit in Wall Street.

SARATOGA, N. Y., May 26.—The proposed million-dollar Presbyterian mission house for which the Stuart corner at 20th street and Fifth avenue, New York, is now being cleared has caused a serious division in the joint committees of the general assembly, to which the matter was referred. This is the building, descriptions of which have already been printed, which is to serve as the home of the Presbyterian missionary boards now housed in the Lenox mansion at the corner of 12th street and Fifth avenue.

The property was purchased by the home and foreign boards with part of the $600,000 bequest of the late Mrs. R. L. Stuart.

Banker John S. Kennedy, a member of the home mission board, has planned the building and it is he who will advance the funds to complete the building.

John E. Parsons, also a member of the board, has given the board legal advice as to their powers in the premises to invest permanent funds, etc.

The boards came to the assembly with all the details of the plans thoroughly arranged and digested. It took the regular routine, through committees appointed to examine the affairs of the two boards and was reported with full approval to the assembly. There it met with slight opposition and was referred back to a joint committee composed of home and foreign mission's committees.

Since that reference, three days ago, the committee have made strenuous efforts to agree so that the general assembly may not be called upon to discuss the matter. In the meantime all the secretaries, treasurers and agents of the boards who come to the general assemblies annually are in hot water. The situation is extremely delicate for the two boards.

The Lenox and R. L. Kennedy families have raised the issue that the boards are in honor bound to keep the Lenox property as their home for ever. There are, moreover, grave questions of financial policy and real estate valuation that complicate it. The joint committee is composed of ministers without experience to qualify them to determine such questions and elders from interior towns and cities who know little of the needs of such institutions in large cities, or of New York city values.

John S. Kennedy and John E. Parsons came here for a conference with the committee on these questions. The conference lasted an hour and at the end a vote was taken. The committee is hopelessly divided and they will carry their differences into the assembly.

The majority favor the plan and will so report.

The minority is said to consist of Lawyer McDougall of Cincinnati and two or three country preachers. Mr. McDougall's objections rest on prudential grounds. He has made a study of Fifth avenue property as compared with Cincinnati property and he does not want the assembly to approve a financial plan of such magnitude without the most careful scrutiny of every particular. The country parsons, however, are moved by other motives. One of them thought it a great waste to pay $670,000 for a lot when the money might have been used to build a hundred western churches and to convert tens of thousands of souls.

A more serious view of the question is that the home and foreign boards handle two million dollars a year. They require large advances from Wall street bankers during the summer season to carry on their work while the churches are gathering funds. Their accounts now show a debt of nearly half a million dollars. This debt is now being carried in Wall street. Without the assistance of the largest bankers in New York they could not do business. If the city banks find that the general assembly is likely to interfere with the business of the boards, there may be difficulties experienced in maintaining their credit.

WALLWITZ TO DIE JUNE 12.

Dramatic Scene When the Doomed Convict Was Sentenced.

TRENTON, N. J., May 26.—Joseph Wallwitz, the state prison convict who was found guilty of the murder of Deputy Keeper James B. Lippincott was sentenced by Judge Abbett to be hanged on June 22nd next. The sentencing of the prisoner was a very dramatic event. Over 1,000 people were present in the big court room when Wallwitz was brought in, his arms bound behind with thongs and his wrists encircled with heavy steel cuffs. He was very pale but cool and collected.

Judge Abbett asked the prisoner if he had anything to say why sentence upon him should not be pronounced and Wallwitz sprang to his feet and with flashing eyes began to talk. The prison turnkeys had unpinioned one of his arms and with his he gestured to punctuate his remarks. His use of a mixture of English and German words added to the dramatic effect of the scene. "I have sworn to the truth and stand upon it," he shouted. "Leonard is a liar, a terrible liar. He killed Lippincott and anybody going to the state prison can see how that man lost his life. I do not care for my life, but I do not want to be hanged, and I will not be. I will kill myself first. I am a man that can do it. I want a new trial. Go to the state prison and see who shot Lippincott. I saw the place again when they took me out of my cell. How could I fire a bullet that would make a circle in the air and penetrate a body from the side opposite to me. No, no, Leonard killed him; I say so. I want the German consul general here. I have no friends. I want another jury; men that know something; that can count five; not farmers. You must give me a right chance. That's all I have to say."

The prisoner here sat down and Judge Abbett after reviewing the case pronounced the sentence.

Randall's Army.

LIMA, O., May 26.—The Randall army arrived here under escort of a committee of populists. They were given a good supply of provisions and furnished comfortable quarters for the night. Randall, who was very sick Wednesday, is better and appeared as usual on horseback at the head of the column. He addressed a big meeting. The army now numbers 160 men.

Kendals Going Home.

ALBANY, May 26.—Mr. and Mrs. Kendal closed their fourth American tour here at Harmanus Bleecker hall, appearing in Pinero's drama, "The Second Mrs. Tanquery," before a large and fashionable audience. The gross receipts amounted to over $3,100. They return to this country next September with a new repertory, and during the early part of the tour will play in San Francisco and the principal cities of the Pacific coast and return to New York city in December to play a five weeks' engagement.

Massey Held By the Coroner.

BORDENTOWN, N. J., May 26.—Coroner Hibbard held an inquest in the case of Lizzie Holloway, the girl who died in consequence of wounds in the head and returned the following verdict: "We find that Lizzie Holloway's death was caused by blows of a dull instrument, from the evidence, inflicted by William Massey." Massey has been committed to jail at Mount Holly to await trial at the next term of court.

Collieries Flooded.

PITTSTON, Pa., May 26.—Owing to the recent heavy rains the Pennsylvania Coal company's reservoir at Avoca, containing 340,000 gallons of water, broke, and the water flooded the Last Chance and Dry Bread mines of the Hillside Coal & Iron company. The collieries were completely drowned out and 500 men and boys are thrown out of employment. The damage cannot be ascertained.

Paterson's Dynamite Plot.

PATERSON, N. J., May 26.—Robert Seidel, a saloonkeeper on Hamilton avenue, in this city, said in an interview, that Charles Doebbeler was one of two men selected to blow up William Strange and Jacob Weidmann. He claims that the prisoner, Doebbeler, purchased the explosive material at a drug store in Passaic, and 50 feet of fuse at a hardware store in the same town.

Well Supplied With Gold.

PHILADELPHIA, May 26.—The statement from Washington that the gold in the Philadelphia banks amounted to only $2,238,000 is incorrect. The gold balances of the national banks of the city amount to $15,943,000.

Death of an Old Skipper.

HARTFORD, Conn., May 26.—Capt. Warren Shaff, of Deep River, is dead, at the Connecticut hospital for the insane at Middletown. He was 80 years old, and was the oldest coastwise captain in the state.

Warrant for Burt's Execution.

HARRISBURG, Pa., May 26.—Gov. Pattison has issued a warrant for the execution on July 26, at Doylestown, of Wallace Burt, the half-breed Indian who murdered the aged couple, Samuel Rightly and wife.

Nominated By Gov. Werts.

TRENTON, N. J., May 26.—Gov. Werts has nominated Wells Lawrence of Morris county for state prison inspector in place of Thomas P. Curley, and his nomination was confirmed.

Mr. Gladstone Comfortable.

LONDON, May 26.—A bulletin issued at 7 o'clock said that Mr. Gladstone was comfortable and that as yet no unfavorable symptoms had appeared.

MR. HOAR FORGIVEN

Senator Harris Accepts His Offer of Apology.

Mr. Blanchard, of Alabama, Defends the Sugar Schedule—Senator Teller Says the Tariff Will Not Benefit or Injure the Country to the Extent Predicted.

WASHINGTON, May 26.—There was more time spent in the senate yesterday in voting than in talking, and consequently there was a fair amount of business transacted. Still there were some speeches made of more than average interest. Senator Blanchard (dem., La.) talked against the republican senator from Delaware, (Mr. Higgins) and accused him of Pharisaism in thanking God, the other day, that he did not get his ideas from the south. He also tried his lance upon the rules of the senate, which he characterized as a legislative eunuch. But the main point of his speech was in defense of the sugar schedule in the bill. On that point he was met by Senator Aldrich with the reminder that he had voted recently in the house to put sugar on the free list and to abolish the sugar bounty, and it was insinuated by the Rhode Island senator that the two Louisiana senators would, under party exigencies, vote again for a bill that would do these things.

The amende honorable was made by Senator Hoar to Senator Harris for having disrespectfully referred to him the day before as a "drum major," not a general.

Senator Hoar said:

"I made an observation last night," said Mr. Hoar solemnly, "Which I meant as a mere rallying jest, and which I supposed was so understood on both sides of the chamber (alluding to his description of Mr. Harris as a drum-major). But I have reason to suppose that it was taken in some quarters as seriously disrespectful to the senator from Tennessee. I do not know whether that senator will accept my assurance or not, but I wish to make it in the face of the senate and of the country. I hold that senator in the highest respect, not only for kindness of heart and absolute integrity, but for his great intellectual capacity and clearness. In my judgment he is, in this country, the undisputed master of deliberative bodies—parliamentary law. He addresses us on this side sometimes pretty roughly in tone, and sometimes pretty roughly in substance. But I never supposed that anybody would make an appeal, either to his sense of justice or his kindness of heart unsuccessfully. I hope that the senator from Tennessee will take this assurance as it is meant. If he does not, I still hope and believe that the country will recognize the truth of what I say and will accept it."

"The kindest relations," Mr. Harris replied, "have existed between the senator from Massachusetts and myself, so far as I have known. I can say that I have felt a little stung at his conduct yesterday evening because, when I refused him to yield, I understood that I was acting in obedience to his own request, and the manner in which he received my request was not quite agreeable to me. I am greatly obliged to the senator for having done me more than justice in what he has just said, and I accept gratefully the statement which he has made."

An earnest and impassioned speech was made by Teller (rep., Col.), who took the position that the tariff bill would neither benefit nor injure the country to the extent that its friends or enemies predicted; and that the only remedy for the present depression was a return to the double standard—with the mints open to gold and silver at a ratio of 16 to 1. The actual progress made in the consideration of the tariff bill was greater than on any previous day—some 35 paragraphs having been disposed of. The metal schedule (c) was concluded and the senate then at 5:15 adjourned.

House of Representatives.

Yesterday was private bill day in the house, and the entire session was devoted thereto, in committee of the whole. One bill, for the relief of Thomas B. Reed, an officer in the Pennsylvania troops during the war, was ordered to be favorably reported to the house. The rest of the day was spent upon what is known as "The Omnibus resolution," being a resolution referring 37 bills in a bunch to the court of claims. This was discussed until 5 o'clock, the hour of recess under the rules, no conclusion being reached. The house took a recess until 8 o'clock, the evening session being for the consideration of private pension and relief bills.

Organized Criminals.

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla., May 26.—Thirty well-known citizens of Tecumseh, an Indian town 50 miles east of this place, have been indicted for horse-stealing. Of this number 17 were arrested. Three escaped, and officers are in close pursuit. The entire community is wrought up over this discovery and the breaking up of one of the most remarkable criminal organizations ever known in this country. The grand jury is still in session and 25 or 50 more indictment will likely be returned. Two members of the gang have turned state's evidence, and a posse has gone to Seminole county to arrest the ringleaders of the gang. The organization extends from Arizona to Arkansas. Many murders have been committed by the gang.

Good Job for Barrett.

BUFFALO, N. Y., May 26.—General Superintendent James H. Barrett of the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg railroad, has tendered his resignation, to take effect June 1, on which date, it is said, he will take an important position with a growing system in Ohio, the name of which is not made public. In 1891 and '92 Mr. Barrett was general superintendent of the Erie railroad, which position he resigned on account of ill health. He went to the Buffalon, Rochester & Pittsburg road in the fall of 1892.

Receiver for Order of Solon.

HARRISBURG, Pa., May 26.—W. H. Galvin, of Meadville has been appointed receiver for the Order of Solon. His bond is $500,000.

A MAN OF BROAD ACRES.

What Thomas Harrison of North Dakota Owes To Paine's Celery Compound.

The world has had in all just 15 decisive battles.

But every man has in his lifetime more decisive battles than this.

The important epochs in man's life that settle for him wealth, position and often life itself, come without warning.

Weakness, indecision and lack of nerve force at these turning points are fatal. In long and doubtful sickness, when life itself trembles in the balance, a little more strength and power of resistance to disease makes the difference between life and death.

Thin people with depleted, diseased blood run big risks. Careful men and women all over the country are building up their systems and storing the nerve centres with energy now it is spring. They are taking that remarkable blood purifier and nerve food, Paine's celery compound.

It cannot be repeated too often that the blood is the fountain which supplies every part of the body. If this life-giving medium lacks vigor and richness, nerves, brain, heart, kidneys and lungs immediately suffer. The weakest spot will give way first.

If you find yourself growing thin, nervous, without appetite—look out. You are starving some important organ though inappropriate nutrition.

Thomas Harrison is the proprietor of the famous Harrison farms of North Dakota. He holds the office of notary public and is coroner of Traill county. He writes from Blanchard, No. Dakota:

"Two years ago when the grip was prevalent in this country, I suffered very much from this trouble; the disease lingered with me until it developed into catarrh of the head. For this trouble I tried many remedies advertised for catarrh without any permanent relief, and while spending the winter of 92-93 in Los Angeles I was treated by a specialist without any better results. Seeing Paine's celery compound advertised, I tried it, not expecting much relief, as I thought that I could not be cured. I used one bottle as directed and was entirely and permanently cured. This was over six months ago, and I have not experienced a return of any of the symptoms, though I have been exposed to the inclement weather in N. Dakota and have not caught the least cold this winter, when had I been trouble with the catarrh I would have had cold after cold all winter. I will cheerfully answer any inquiries as to the correctness of my statements. Many around here are using the compound on the strength of my recommendation. It makes people well."

CIRCULATION EXCEEDS THAT OF ALL OTHER PLAINFIELD DAILIES COMBINED.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., MAY 26, 1894.

New York is to have five more parks. When does Plainfield develop hers?

Who said Orange was superior to Plainfield? Why, they prohibit kissing in Orange!

Make the town red, white and blue Memorial Day. Hang out your flags and bunting. Be American.

Plainfield Republicans think Ernest R. Ackerman would make a great Congressman, and they'll try to boost his nomination in the Fall.

South Dakota, so recently the home of the red man and the buffalo, seems destined to become a great fountain of new doctrine. One of its Populist organs of thought, the Star of Aberdeen, in that State, wants a reform in public-school books. It says:

The branches that teach children the computation of interest, simple and compound, discounts, bank discounts and rents should be stricken out and in their place a chapter inserted teaching that money is not a commodity, that the collection of any interest for the use of money is a crime against humanity, and that no person except the Almighty who made it has any right to charge a person rent for the use of a portion of the earth's surface called land. We must abolish interest and we must abolish rent.

Is n't that lovely!

COUNTY CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS.

They Hold a Rousing Meeting in the Westfield Presbyterian Church —Aldene Wins the Banner.

A host of bright and cheerful young people gathered in the Westfield Presbyterian Church last evening to attend the annual meeting of the Union County Christian Endeavor Union. The church is capable of holding 700 people, but there was very little room left when the last delegation filed in, and they had to find seats wherever they might, while out in the church sheds a dozen or more stages and numberless carriages were lined up. There were delegates from every town in the county. The Aldene Society having the largest number of members present, was awarded the banner.

Enthusiasm marked the proceeding from the time the organist played the opening selection and Director Smith led the choir through a selection until Rev. J. G. Dyer dismissed the gathering with his blessing.

President W. W. Graves of Springfield conducted the meeting with characteristic vigor and ability. An address was made by Rev. H. M. Lowry of Rahway, which thrilled every Endeavorer and elicited hearty applause. Robert E. Sinclair of Newark explained the Essex County plan, and Secretary Albert B. Wilson of Rahway changed the programme statistics by adding several hundred members to the total given, names which he had just received, denoting that the society was, under the blessing of God, increasing at a remarkable rate both in numbers and in Spiritual ambition. The business was taken up and consisted of making sundry changes in the constitution, all of which were adopted. Officers for the ensuing year were then elected. Geo. G. Teller of Cranford being elected president he made a little speech in which he thanked the society for its kindness and invoked the hearty co-operation of each member present during his coming term. During the evening several selections were furnished by a brass quartette, and another anthem was sung by the choir, the members of which were Miss May Moffett, Miss Alice Greaves, Miss May Sherman and Miss Bennett; Messrs. B. A. Chamberlain, W. H. Ruth, Jr., Rollin Randolph, Moreland Townley and Mr. Johnson.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Rev. B. B. Tyler, pastor of the Church of the Disciples, New York, will address the Christian Endeavor society of the First Church of Christ next Tuesday evening. A series of lectures will be given by Rev. Tyler in about two weeks.

G. A. R Service.

G. A. R. service will be held in the Park Avenue Baptist Church tomorrow evening. It will be military in character, the Grand Army ritual being used. Major Anderson and Winfield Scott Posts and the Ladies Loyal League participate in the service. Pastor Richardson's morning theme at 10:30 will be, "Troubles the stairway to triumph"; in the evening at 7:45, the address on "Patriotism and Country" will be by the pastor.

Judgment.

Justice Crosley this morning gave two judgments against Albert Keyser, both for borrowed money. One for $150 in favor of William G. Brett was obtained by City Judge William A. Coddington, and the other, $49 for S. H. Whitney obtained by Borough Counsel Charles A. Reed. Keyser's household goods will be sold to satisfy the judgments.

Rector Jennings Sues.

$20,000 damages are the figures named in the suit brought today by Rev. J. B. Jennings against the Newark Evening News for libel. Craig A. Marsh, who has won all his suits for Mr. Jennings up to this time, is his counsel in this case also.

Father Johnson Closes Them.

Father Johnson, rector of the Church of the Redeemer, New York, who preached the first sermon in the special course in Grace P. E. Church, will preach tomorrow evening at 7:45. This is the last special evening service for this season.

An All-Night Session.

The Legislature was in session till 4 this morning, passing the bill making the county judges elective. Ex-Judge Cross was elected Speaker. Both houses took a recess till Oct. 20.

JOHN M. HETFIELD SELLS OUT.

Charles W. Dodd Succeeds Him in the Coal Business.

Charles W. Dodd today took possession of the coal yard of J. M. Hetfield, having bought out the postmaster.

Charles Washington Dodd is a native of Belfast, Ireland, where he was born April 30, 1850. He came to the United States in 1868 and to Plainfield in 1869, and followed the occupation of a mason until 1878, when he was appointed Chief of Police by Mayor Male, after serving three months as patrolman. When Judge Harper, Democrat, was elected mayor in 1880, to succeed Mr. Male, he reappointed him, as did also Mayor Randolph, Republican, when he succeeded Judge Harper in 1881. Mayor Maxson appointed Winfield S. Chase in 1883, to succeed Chief Dodd, and sixteen months later Mayor Maxson had Chief Dodd reappointed, in 1884. He was also reappointed in 1885 and 1886 by George W. Rockfellow, elected mayor on the Democratic ticket, and he was confirmed by a Democratic Council. The next year Mayor Male again appointed him. All these years he proved a most exemplary officer or he would not have received such unanimous approval of Democrats and Republicans alike. He was married in 1872 to Miss Fannie Manning of this city, and has two sons and two daughters.

Mr. Dodd resigned as Chief of Police to become Jail Warden.

George Taggart is at work putting into verse some of the best of the "Mickey Finn" stories, famous in the New York Sun not long ago, for Ernest Jarrold, the author of the yarns. Mr. Jarrold will use the versifications as a feature of his well-known humorous entertainments.

$100 Reward, $100.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the one positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio. Sold by druggists, 75c.

The Spring House Cleaning Wisely urged by the BOARD OF HEALTH is not complete without a proper use of DISINFECTANTS. But, in choosing these, do not be misled into paying fancy prices for "patent" specialties. Common lime is better than any of them for damp cellars and stables. For vaults, drains, cess-pools, the best and cheapest disinfectant is COPPERAS, supplied by us by the pound or barrel at low rates. But for use in the house, in the plumbing, in kitchen sinks, in closets, for purifying the air of sick rooms, deodorizing offensive discharges—in short, for all purposes of a household disinfectant, nothing can excel the powerful solution of chlorides made and sold by us for 15 years under the name of REYNOLDS'S ODORLESS DISINFECTANT. Quart bottles 25c. To be diluted for use according to directions on label.

A Century Old and More.

The annual meeting of The New Jersey Medical Society will be held in the latter part of June at Lake Hopatcong. Official announcements, soon to be issued, will name the precise date and the hotel selected as headquarters. In accordance with a practice established several years ago, providing for an exchange of courtesies with the New Jersey Pharmaceutical Association, H. P. Reynolds will attend and perhaps address the meeting of the Medical Society as a representative of pharmacy. This is the fourth year of Mr. Reynolds's service in this capacity within the State, and he has also served as a delegate from the American Pharmaceutical Association to the American Medical Society.

—Church services tomorrow will be as usual, except as noted by special mention.

A REMARKABLE CURE

MIDDLEBUSH, Somerset Co., N. J.
TO THE PUBLIC:
For the past forty years I have been afflicted with bleeding piles. I suffered constant pain in the lower part of my body, but when I had an operation of the bowels the pain was perfectly terrible, and was most always attended with the loss of a large quantity of blood. My condition was complicated with prolapse of the rectum, which at first only made its appearance when I had a movement of the bowels, but at length the parts became so weakened that the protrusion took place while walking or stooping, or after the slightest exertion, and sometimes even while I was at rest. Whenever this happened it gave rise to the most agonizing pain, and felt as though something was pulling the life right out of me. In fact only those similarly situated can imagine the suffering and distress which I had to endure from day to day, and which made my life a terrible burden. Hearing of Dr. Lighthill's wonderful success in the cure of difficult chronic diseases, I placed myself under his care, and now I am proud and happy to say that, marvelous as it may seem, he effected a complete and radical cure in my case in every respect, and he performed this cure without any painful operation or preventing me from work. Since this terrible disease has been removed by Dr. Lighthill's skill I feel new life, and for the first time in forty years I feel once more what it is to be without daily pain, discomfort and distress. I am not a wealthy man, but no amount of money would tempt me to be put back in my former condition.
I make this public statement, not only from a deep and everlasting sense of gratitude to Dr. Lighthill, but also as a simple Christian duty to let the afflicted know where they can find a physician whose skill cannot be surpassed, and in whom implicit confidence can be placed.

To the Residents of Plainfield, N. J.
Mr. H. Vroom, whose statement appears above, is a brother-in-law of mine. I personally know of his case and his suffering and also know the happy fact that to the surprise of himself and his friends, Dr. Lighthill effected a radical and permanent cure. His statement is true in every respect and does not say half enough in praise of Dr. Lighthill. Anyone who wishes this statement verified is at liberty to come and see me personally.

TROUTING NEAR HOME.

Where the Speckled Beauties May Be Found By Plainfield Waltons.

Those fond of angling for the lively trout need not go far from home to satisfy their eagerness for sport. Here is a considerable list, carefully compiled, of nearby streams where good trout fishing may be had. The stations are all on the Jersey Central:

Eatontown—Pine Brook, south of station; two hotels.

Farmingdale—Pine Brook.

High Bridge—Rocky Run Brook, about two miles from station; one hotel.

Naughright—south branch of the Raritan, southeast of station; trout are plentiful. No hotel here, but there is good fishing for two miles which will bring you to German Valley Hotel.

Glen Gardner—Rocky Run; one mile east from station; one hotel.

Middle Valley—one pond, short distance from station, and south branch of the Raritan; good fishing; accommodation, private residence only.

Asbury—Musconetcong River, one-half mile north of station; hotel, one-half mile from station.

German Valley—north branch of the Raritan River, one-half mile from station; trout quite plenty, also two or three small brooks running into river; one hotel.

Bartley—Stephens Brook, north of station; trout are plentiful.

Bloomsbury—Musconetcong River, fifty rods from station.

Flanders—South branch of the Raritan River and feeders, one-quarter to two miles from station; good hotel.

Lake Hopatcong—In both the Musconetcong and Negro trout are plentiful; good hotels.

Kenvil—Black River, about five hundred yards from station, which was stocked with trout four years ago; accomodation, Vortman House, William Vortman, proprietor.

Barnegat Park—Cedar Creek, two miles from station; Trout Run, one and one-quarter miles; Quail Run, one and one-half miles; Silver Run, one-half mile, and Crystal Lake, one mile from station, all contain trout in abundance; accommodation, The Pines Hotel, near station.

Hibernia—Hibernia Brook, 50 yards from station; one hotel.

Califon—Frog Hollow Brook, north of station, one hotel.

Rockaway—Beaver Brook: good hotel.

BACK SAFE FROM THE MINE.

The Coal Retailers Will Never Stop Telling of That 1,060-foot Climb.

A rousing cheer echoed through the Communipaw station of the Central Railroad of New Jersey last night, when at 11:30 the special train bearing about 125 of the members of the Retail Coal Exchange, including George T. Rogers of Rockview avenue, came to a standstill.

The members had been on a tour of inspection of the great South Wilkesbarre shaft and coal breakers, and were no doubt glad to get home, but the cheer came perhaps most vociferously from the throats of the score of men who had toiled up the 1,060 feet of perpendicular ladder after the boiler explosion in the mine Thursday morning.

As the crowd emerged from the train someone struck up "Home, Sweet Home", and all joined in with a will. The men sang all the way over in the ferryboat, and at the landing on the New York side of the river several cans of redfire were lighted in token of the safe arrival.

Then the travelers hurried home to set the minds of their families at rest, as reports of the adventure had been received only through the newspapers.

They were all full of their experiences.

Thrown from a Wagon.

Mary E. Thorn, living on Second street near Berckman, rode from her house to Second and Richmond streets yesterday, with Mr. Callahan in his grocery wagon. When she alighted from the wagon the horse started and her dress caught in the wheel, throwing her with much force to the ground. Her dress was considerably torn, and she received several bruises.

With the assistance of two or three men who happened to be near, Miss Thorn was taken to her home. Her injuries are not thought to be serious.

Making Money.

There are many ways of making money, and no surer way than saving it, nowadays when we want one dollar to go as far as possible it pays to do a little figuring. White of Plainfield tells you in his advertisement the many reasons why he can sell goods on such close margins. He says no rent to pay, small expense, buying for cash and selling for cash, puts him beyond the reach of all competition.

RIVERHEAD, L. I., ELECTRIFIED.

The Recovery from Disease of Charles Homan and Wife Looked Upon as a Modern Miracle—As Helpless as a Child from Inflammatory Rheumatism—Charles Homan Restored to Health by a Simple Remedy—Others Use It With Success—Physicians Everywhere Prescribing It.

Riverhead, Long Island, N. Y.—Public opinion is always worth heeding, and public opinion in this village has not made a mistake in the exalted position it has placed Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. The family of Chas. Homan of this place increases the list of residents who have been benefited by its use.

Favorite Remedy was first introduced in the family by Mrs. Homan, who has been afflicted for years with an awful pain in her back, occasioned by chronic kidney complaint; at times she suffered so that she was unable to lie down, sleep was impossible and she walked about with much difficulty. Physicians prescribed various medicines, but to no purpose. Learning of the great good others had received from the use of Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, she purchased a bottle and began to use it with the most satisfactory result. To use Mrs. Homan's own words "it saved my life; why, it's worth its weight in gold. I know of over twenty people who have taken Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy and in every case it has benefited them. My sister, Mrs. Loomis, suffered from creeping paralysis; began to take it and it did her a world of good. Three years ago my husband was suffering dreadfully from inflammatory rheumatism; both feet and hands were swollen to enormous size; had pains in his back and head; for one whole year he was such an awful sufferer that my neighbors expected to hear of his death any day. Four physicians prescribed all sorts of medicines, but he kept growing worse. He wasted away from 200 to 130 pounds. Finally he began to use Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, and in a short while he could sleep and eat well, and today he is as well as ever in his life. The two druggists in this place say they sell it so fast they cannot keep it in stock." Other Riverhead people who have been benefited by Favorite Remedy are George Benjamin and wife, Lyman and George L'Hommedieu, Benjamin Adams and John Fugsley.

In speaking to one of our physicians about Favorite Remedy, he said: "Its great value lies in the fact that it dissolves the excess of uric acid in the blood, thus curing the disease."

Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is a never failing specific in diseases of the skin, liver, kidneys and blood; it restores the disordered liver to a healthy condition, corrects the worst cases of constipation, it is a certain cure for the diseases and weaknesses peculiar to women; it cures scrofula, salt rheum and erysipelas; for nervousness, loss of sleep or that worn out feeling, it has no equal. In cases of rheumatism, dyspepsia, gravel, Bright's disease, diabetes and bladder troubles, it has cured where all else failed. Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is sold by all dealers at $1 a bottle, or six bottles for $5.

SHORT DRESSES AND NO KISSING.

Advice of Physicians to Orange Women While Diphtheria Exists.

The Orange Board of Health has decided that diphtheria germs are likely to be distributed by kissing. It was decided to issue a circular advising people to refrain from kissing in all cases where there exists the slightest ground for suspicion of diphtheria.

Then the Board took up the subject of trailing gowns for street wear. The Sanitary Committee advanced the argument that the dirt and dust of the highways are usually impregnated with numberless germs of disease, which are caught up by the trailing gowns and distributed about residences. It was decided to warn the women of Orange, by circular, to hold up their trains or to wear short dresses in the street.

HIGH SCHOOL CHRONICLES.

No meeting of the Lyceum was held yesterday afternoon as no quorum was present. A number of the members adjourned to the meeting of the Kappa Delta Phi.

The P. H. S. A. A. met yesterday afternoon. Reports were heard from the various committees and further arrangements were made for the field day, June 9. Tickets of admission were distributed among the members.

A hat talk was the attraction at the meeting of the Kappa Delta Phi yesterday afternoon. J. C. Whiting discussed "The Weather"; H. C. Wells, "The Saloon in Politics"; C. L. Riley, "Our Greatest Statesman"; Walter Probasco, "The Beginning of the Kappa Delta Phi"; C. B. Morse, "Features of Chemical Experiments"; Fred W. Goddard, "The Future of the Kappa Delta Phi"; C. B. Fernald, "Fraternal Love"; A. B. Crane, "Influence of Music on Refinement". The election of officers was then held with the following result:

President—H. C. Wells.
Vice-president—J. V. Beekman, Jr.
Secretary and Treasurer—C. B. Morse.
Critic—A. B. Crane.
Sergeant-at-Arms—Walter Probasco.

"Woman's Chiefest Charm."

That's what the poet calls a graceful figure, and one of the greatest helps to a figure of grace and beauty is a perfect fitting corset.

The dress also has much to do with the figure, and the effect of the dress depends entirely upon the fit of the corset. Then the first step towards a graceful figure is a Glove-Fitting corset. The leading ladies tailors say that a cloth bodice requires a Glove-Fitting corset, as no other gives that clinging smoothness and absolute accuracy of fit, upon which depends the entire effect of a tailored gown. The Glove-Fitting corset is sold everywhere, and absolutely guaranteed.

Mr. Wiechers Goes Into Sugar.

Articles of incorporation were filed in Elizabeth yesterday by the River Cauto Sugar Company of New York and Cuba. The company will engage in the business of growing, buying and selling sugar. The plantation is in the Island of Cuba, and the principal office will be in New York city. The company begins operations with a capital of $500,000. The principal stockholders are George C. Jewell of Brooklyn and George F. Wiechers of Plainfield. The other stockholders and incorporators are Charles C. Edey, Southwick; C. Briggs and Henry McCord, New York city.

Rev. Murphy Denies It.

The rumor published last night to the effect that Rev. T. Logan Murphy would endeavor to obtain an injunction from the civil courts to prevent the seceders from Holy Cross Church holding service on their own account is denied by Rev. Mr. Murphy, who said to a Daily Press reporter: "Such an idea has, of course, never occurred to me, and it would not be my wish to interfere in the matter if the opportunity were given me to do so."

St. Mary Sodalities.

The closing exercises of the month of May will be held in St. Mary's Church tomorrow evening with the procession of the sodalities of the blessed Virgin, the reception of new members into the societies, and an address on an appropriate subject.

Library, Children's Day and Excursion

The teachers of Grace M. E. Sunday-school met last evening. John Valiant was appointed to have charge of the establishment of a library. It is to be complete at the start.

For the observance of Children's Day, Sunday, June 10, Ezra Loomis, L. A. Hummer, Miss Belle Lunger, Miss Emma Smalley and Mrs. Anna Most were appointed a committee to manage the exercises. A special sermon will be preached in the morning. In the afternoon the Sunday-school services will be held and baptism administered.

July 17 was fixed as the date of the excursion which will be made this year in conjunction with the Westfield Methodists. An Iron Steamship Company's boat has been engaged to go from Elizabethport to Groton Point, on Long Island Sound. L. A. Hummer, A. A. Taft and John Valiant are in charge.

CYCLING COMMENT.

The Bloomfield Cycling Association has entered J. Hague in the 2-mile and ½-mile races of the Crescent Wheelmen June 2.

Owen Fleming of Park avenue was fined $1 in the City Court this morning for riding a wheel last evening without a light. He was arrested by Policeman Cooney.

The team which will represent New Jersey in the big race from New York to Philadelphia is as follows: George W Coffin, Atalanta Wheelmen; E L Blauvelt, Newark Wheelmen; L S Schemmerhorn, Jersey City Athletic Club; W H Darmer, Hudson County Wheelmen; M McGovern, Mercer County Wheelmen, and H W Purcell, Mercer County Wheelmen. These cyclers are all hard road riders, and in case of vacancies the substitutes will be selected from the following: H A Wadsworth, Atalanta Wheelmen; Joseph Baldwin, Century Cycle Club and Atalanta Wheelmen, and Whitfield Smith, Atalanta Wheelmen. Coffin will take the first relay from New York to Paterson, Darmer from there to Morristown, Blauvelt to Elizabeth, Schemmerhorn to Franklin Park, Purcell to Bristol, Pa, and McGovern to Philadelphia. A new rule has been adopted that in case of a dead heat both riders will score fifteen points.

The dress cap of the Crescent Wheelmen this season will be of white flannel.

W. J. Kiely yesterday began work in the establishment of the Starr Cycle Company, New York city. He is in charge of the rental department.

The fare by stage between North avenue and the bicycle track next Saturday will be five cents. If any agreement can not be made with the stage drivers the Wheelmen will hire stages and run them at the same fare as a trolley road.

Charles H. Rydell, the Crescent Wheelmen's representative in the Irvington-Millburn road race, is given 5 minutes handicap. The highest handicap is 9 minutes. The only scratch man is W. F. Murphy of the Kings County Wheelmen. Coffin has 2 minutes, and Dampman 4.

W. H. Rogers has purchased a newly-introduced improvement which he will use in his renting department. It is a bicycle coupler which joins two safeties side by side about a yard apart. Both wheels are thus held upright, forming a machine which can be used by two people who have never ridden before Mr. Rogers joined a Victor to a Credenda woman's wheel yesterday afternoon and made a trial trip with C. E. Teel.

By this sign they conquer. It is the new seal of the Plainfield Crescent Wheelmen. The Press trusts that their race-track enterprise may be the success it deserves, and that their crescent may wax in strength and vigor and never grow less. The people owe it to the Wheelmen to subscribe liberally for stock. That Oval is a thing to bank on.

Everybody is going to the opening meet of next week Saturday.

A big time is promised for the second meet, July 4.

Diocesan Sports.

At the meeting of the Diocesan Union Tournament Committee held in St. John's club-house, Newark, Thursday night, the C. Y. M. L. was represented by W. J. Kiely.

A base-ball league was formed, and a part of the schedule for the season decided upon. Eight teams were entered, but Plainfield had none to enter. The first game will be played Decoration Day in Elizabeth between the local Y. M. C. L. A. and the T. A. B. of Newark.

The field day will probably be held in August in Caledonia Park, Newark. Two bicycle races will be among the events. The athletic sports will be followed by dancing.

The Committee will meet in Rahway June 3 to decide upon the date and place of the field day and to appoint committees for the occasion.

The Pool Tourney.

Thomas Carty won a game of pool in the Lyceum tournament last night. He defeated P. Butscher by 20 pins.

TO LOOK NICE.

ALL WOMEN DESIRE IT.

Some Points About How to Accomplish the Desired End.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

It is the most natural wish in life with women — to feel well and look nice.

It is born with them.

It makes a world of difference to the wee little girl whether or no there is a bit of pretty lace or bright ribbon about her dress or on her hat.

Yes! All women like to look nice. All watch for the least signs of fading.

You have seen beautiful ladies, and been amazed to know that they have lived fifty or sixty years of life.

Have you ever stopped to ask why the few look so lovely while the many around you are so haggard?

Look into it, and you will soon find them blessed with a perfect and healthy organism.

Above all, you will find that no female complaints have seared their lives; no dreadful backache, no irregular periods, no bearing down, or any kind of uterus, ovarian, or womb trouble.

You are not like them now, but you may reach their high level if you will.

You suffer, but there is a remedy.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the grandest remedy ever discovered for women. It restores the womb and all irregularities to their natural healthy condition, and makes possible a lovely old age. It cures every form of female complaint, from leucorrhœa to tumors in the womb.

G. A. R. Memorial.

The Memorial Detail of Winfield Scott Post met with the Committee of the Woman's Relief Corps in the headquarters last evening to compare progress in arranging the exercises with which Memorial Day will be observed in Music Hall Wednesday afternoon. It was decided that the last rehearsal of the chorus would be held Tuesday afternoon in Music Hall instead of in the Post rooms. Comrade W. R. Mattox agreed to put up the necessary staging Tuesday morning.

FINED FOR FUNNING.

Don't Poke Jokes at Policemen's Feet If You Want to Escape Arrest.

Hackman Cornelius Guinee was punished in the City Court this morning for his misdeeds of May 19. He pleaded not guilty to the three charges made by Policeman Giese the first time he came to court, but this morning he pleaded non vult instead.

The charge of violating the hack ordinance was not proved and was dismissed. Two $5 fines were imposed for the other offenses. The charges were of insulting an officer at two times during the same day. Guinee acknowledged that he had poked fun at Policeman Giese's feet when they were reposed in a pool of water near the North Avenue station, but claimed that he had often done so before and did not consider it criminal.

Not to Be Denied.

With the base-ballist the come-bat deepens; while among the people the conviction deepens that the best place to get bargains in jewelry, silverware and optical goods is at Collier's, 103 Park avenue. There never was a better time than now to be convinced that this is a gospel truth.

Hillside Tennis Tournament.

The Hillside Tennis Club will hold its opening day Decoration Day. The tournament will commence at 9 a. m., and in the afternoon tea will be served from 4 to 6.

Plainfield's Railway President.

NEW YORK, May 26.—Thomas Nevins, the wealthy contractor, of Orange, N. J., has bought the old Killeen castle and 1,200 acres of ground surrounding it in county Meath, Ireland, for $300,000. The castle is 15 miles from Dublin, and was erected in 1140 by the ancestors of the present earl of Fingal, who now occupies it. Mr. Nevins was born within four miles of the castle. He came to America penniless 32 years ago and has amassed over $1,000,000. Mr. Nevins said that he intended to occupy the castle in time. He will take possession next January, and will probably spend next summer there with his family. Mr. Nevins said he had not seen the castle since he first left Ireland, but always had a desire to own it. The sale was made by Lumley & Co., of London.

FOR THE relief and cure of a cold in the head there is more potency in Ely's Cream Balm than in anything else it is possible to prescribe. This preparation has for years past been making a brilliant success as a remedy for cold in the head, catarrh and hay fever. Used in the initial stages of these complaints Cream Balm prevents any serious development of the symptoms, while almost numberless cases are on record of radical cures of chronic catarrh and hay fever after all other treatments have proved of no avail.

SHIPS THAT PASS IN THE NIGHT.

By BEATRICE HARRADEN.

In a few minutes the Disagreeable Man and she sat down to their meal. In spite of her excitement Liza managed to prepare everything nicely, though when she was making the omelette aux fines herbes she had to be kept guarded lest she might run off to have another look at the silver watch and the photographs of herself in her finest frock!

Then Bernardine and Robert Allitsen drank to the health of Hans and Liza, and then came the time of reckoning. When he was paying the bill, Frau Steinhart, having given him the change, said coaxingly:

"Last time you and fraulein each paid a share; today you pay it all. Then perhaps you are betrothed at last, dear Herr Allitsen? Ach, how the old hausfrau wishes you happiness! Who deserves to be happy if it is not our dear Herr Allitsen?"

"You have given me 20 centimes too much," he said quietly. "You have your head so full of other things that you cannot reckon properly."

But seeing that she looked troubled lest she might have offended him he added quickly:

"When I am betrothed, good little old house mother, you shall be the first to know."

And she had to be content with that. She asked no more questions of either of them, but she was terribly disappointed. There was something a little comical in her disappointment, but Robert Allitsen was not amused at it as he had been on a former occasion. As he leaned back in the sledge, with the same girl for his companion, he recalled his feelings. He had been astonished and amused, and perhaps a little shy, and a great deal relieved that she had been sensible enough to be amused too.

And now?

They had been constantly together for many months. He who had never cared before for companionship had found himself turning more and more to her.

And now he was going to lose her.

He looked up once or twice to make sure that she was still by his side, she sat there so quietly. At last he spoke in his usual gruff way.

"Have you exhausted all your eloquence in your oration about learned women?" he asked.

"No, I am reserving it for a better audience," she answered, trying to be bright. But she was not bright.

"I believe you came out to the country today to seek for cheerfulness," he said after a pause. "Have you found it?"

"I do not know," she said. "It takes me some time to recover from shocks, and Mr. Reffold's death was a sorrow to me. What do you think about death? Have you any theories about life and death and the bridge between them? Could you say anything to help one?"

"Nothing," he answered. "Who could? And by what means?"

"Has there been no value in philosophy," she asked, "and the meditations of learned men?"

"Philosophy!" he sneered. "What has it done for us? It has taught us some processes of the mind's working, taught us a few wonderful things which interest the few, but the centuries have come and gone, and the only thing which the whole human race pants to know remains unknown. Our beloved ones, shall we meet them and how?—the great secret of the universe. We ask for bread, and these philosophers give us a stone. Whatshelp could come from them, or from any one? Death is simply one of the hard facts of life."

"And the greatest evil," she said.

"We weave our romances about the next world," he continued, "and any one who has a fresh romance to relate, or an old one dressed up in new language, will be listened to and welcomed. That helps some people for a little while, and when the charm of the romance is over then they are ready for another, perhaps more fantastic than the last. But the plot is always the same—our beloved ones, shall we meet them and how? Isn't it pitiful? Why can't we be more impersonal? These puny, petty minds of ours! When will they learn to expand?"

"Why should we learn to be more impersonal?" she said. "There was a time when I felt like that, but now I have learned something better—that we need not be ashamed of being human, above all, of having the best of human instincts, love, and the passionate wish for its continuance, and the unceasing grief at its withdrawal. There is no indignity in this, nor any trace of weakmindedness in our restless craving to know about the future after and the possibilities of meeting again those whom we have lost here. It is right and natural and lovely, that it should be the most important question. I know that many will say that there are weightier questions—they say so, but do they think so? Do we want to know first and foremost whether we shall do our work better elsewhere; whether we shall be endowed with more wisdom; whether, as poor Mr. Reffold said, we shall be glad to behave less like curs and more like heroes? These questions come in, but they can be put aside. The other question can never be put on one side. If that were to become possible, it would only be so because the human heart had lost the best part of itself—its own humanity. We shall go on building our bridge between life and death, each one for himself. When we see that it is not strong enough, we shall break it down and build another. We shall watch other people building their bridges. We shall imitate or criticise or condemn. But as time goes on we shall learn not to interfere; we shall know that one bridge is probably as good as the other, and that the greatest value of them all has been in the building of them. It does not matter what we build, but build we must, you and I and every one."

"I have long ceased to build my bridge," the Disagreeable Man said.

"It is an almost unconscious process," she said. "Perhaps you are still at work, or perhaps you are resting."

He shrugged his shoulders, and the two comrades fell into silence again.

They were within two miles of Petershof when he broke the silence. There was something wonderfully gentle in his voice.

"You little thing," he said, "we are nearing home, and I have something to ask you. It is easier for me to ask here in the free open country, where the space seems to give us breathing room for our cramped lungs and minds."

"Well," she said kindly. She wondered what he could have to say.

Don't Hesitate, but Call and Be Convinced That Every Statement We Make Is True.

To those who do not already know that there is established in Newark, at 105 Halsey street, a physician who stands in the foremost rank of his profession, who is indorsed by the leading colleges of the country and who can prove by witnesses right here in Newark (not by one, but by hundreds) that he has succeeded in curing cases that have been utterly given up by other physicians, and good ones, too. To those who do not these facts we state that any person, rich or poor, old or young, is welcome here and receive examination and advice free of charge.

Thousands praise the day they came to us for treatment. There is no guess work, no experimenting, no painful operation. No matter how difficult the case, no matter how much of the physician's time it may consume, the diagnosis will not only be thorough, it will be absolutely free. There is no taint of quackery or deception; no claim or statement is made that is not borne out by facts and living witnesses.

Mrs. Abby A. Ray, late of 86 Grove street, East Orange, who now lives at 400 Ellmore street, Escanaba, Mich., writes, under date of January 12: "The medicine arrived this morning and I am so glad it came. I am almost out, and it has helped me so much and I am so much pleased with its wonderful effort on my broken down system that I would like to testify to your great success in my case. I am feeling as well now, in fact better, than I had ever hoped to again."

This is one of many letters that we receive daily. We have the originals at our office and if you wish you may see them. Another thing: We never publish or reveal a patient's name unless they so desire.

DR. STARKWEATHER.

There is not a penny to pay for the fullest medical advice. Dr. Starkweather is a graduate of the Berkshire Medical College, Massachusetts, and of the Medico-Chirurgical College of Philadelphia; endorsed also by the College of Physicians and Surgeons and Bellevue Medical College of New York. We invite all sufferers from whatever cause to call at our office, No. 105 Halsey street, Newark, where Dr. Starkweather is in attendance daily to give examination and advice entirely free of charge. It matters not what the disease, or how many years you have suffered, in spite of means adopted in your behalf, a visit to this office and the privileges of the same will cost you nothing, and may be the means of saving your life. We prepare all our medicines and prescribe the remedies indicated. This plan enables the patient to receive directly from us such remedies as will produce the results promised.

Office is open daily from 10 a. m. to 9 p. m. Sundays 4 to 6 p. m.

Those living at a distance can consult the Doctor by letter.

A REMARKABLE CURE

MIDDLEBUSH, Somerset Co., N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For the past forty years I have been afflicted with bleeding piles. I suffered constant pain in the lower part of my body, but when I had an operation of the bowels the pain was perfectly terrible, and was most always attended with the loss of a large quantity of blood. My condition was complicated with prolapse of the rectum, which at first only made its appearance when I had a movement of the bowels, but at length the parts became so weakened that the protrusion took place while walking or stooping, or after the slightest exertion, and sometimes even while I was at rest. Whenever this happened it gave rise to the most agonizing pain, and felt as though something was pulling the life right out of me. In fact only those similarly situated can imagine the suffering and distress which I had to endure from day to day, and which made my life a terrible burden. Hearing of Dr. Lighthill's wonderful success in the cure of difficult chronic diseases, I placed myself under his care, and now I am proud and happy to say that, marvelous as it may seem, he effected a complete and radical cure in my case in every respect, and he performed this cure without any painful operation or preventing me from work. Since this terrible disease has been removed by Dr. Lighthill's skill, I feel new life, and for the first time in forty years I feel once more what it is to be without daily pain, discomfort and distress. I am not a wealthy man, but no amount of money would tempt me to be put back in my former condition.

I make this public statement, not only from a deep and everlasting sense of gratitude to Dr. Lighthill, but also as a simple Christian duty to let the afflicted know where they can find a physician whose skill cannot be surpassed, and in whom implicit confidence can be placed.

H. VROOM.

A LOCAL ENDORSEMENT.

No. 188 Somerset st., Plainfield, N. J.

To the Residents of Plainfield, N. J.

Mr. H. Vroom, whose statement appears above, is a brother-in-law of mine. I personally know of his case and his suffering and also know the happy fact that to the surprise of himself and his friends, Dr. Lighthill effected a radical and permanent cure. His statement is true in every respect and does not say half enough in praise of Dr. Lighthill. Anyone who wishes this statement verified is at liberty to come and see me personally.

JOHN C. KINNEY.

Dr. Lighthill

Formerly of Trenton, the well-known expert in Chronic Diseases, can be consulted daily (except Thursdays) on all OBSTINATE AND COMPLICATED diseases of the human system of whatever name and nature, at his office and residence,

THE CRITICAL POINT

Sugar Schedule Will Be Reached This Week.

Republicans Only Chance of Defeating the Bill—With Sugar on the Free List They Would Probably Have the Support of Louisiana Senators Against the Measure.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—The ninth week of the debate on the tariff bill opened today. Before the week is well under way the discussion will have been begun on the sugar schedule which will be made the occasion for violent attacks on the republican side of the chamber. Democrats, among them Senator Brice, express the belief that at most three or four days will be consumed in the discussion of this schedule, but republican leaders assert that the end of the next week will find the senate still talking about sugar. Some republicans say it would be manifestly improper for the senate to dispose of this part of the bill before the investigating committee has made a report on the doings of the sugar trust in connection with the formation of the schedule which the senate is called upon to take up and debate. Until the report is made they say it will be impossible for the senate to formulate its judgment as to what should or should not be done in the way of rates of duty, or determining even whether there shall be any duty placed upon this article.

The work of the week will begin with a speech by Senator Walsh, of Georgia, who on Saturday gave notice that he would address the senate Monday. After that the wood schedule will be taken up and there is a tacit agreement on both sides of the chamber that this shall be disposed of in the same day although the speeches against free lumber may run over for a short time into Tuesday.

For Tuesday there is a matter that may come up somewhat out of the routine of senate proceedings, and for that very reason of much interest. The investigating committee may at that time submit a partial report to the senate on the refusal of the newspaper men to give the sources of information upon which their sugar stories were based and may ask the senate for instructions as to what steps they shall take in the further prosecution of their investigation.

The ultimate result will probably be froth and nothing more substantial.

In accordance with time-honored custom the senate will probably adjourn over Wednesday, Decoration day, although there are precedents for the senate remaining in session on this occasion.

Mr. Harris, the manager of the bill for the democrats, was not in the senate Saturday and could not be consulted on this subject, but the other democratic members of the finance committee agreed that it would be fitting for the senate to take a rest on that occasion.

The debate on sugar may therefore begin in earnest Thursday morning.

Senator Hill, in accordance with his determination to put his party on record on the subject of raw material, it is understood, will, at some stage of the proceeding, move to put all sugars on the free list.

The republicans will hold a caucus about the middle of the week for the purpose of mapping out some plan of campaign on the sugar question.

There are some republican senators who are in favor of a duty on sugar. Prominent among these are Senators John Sherman, of Ohio, and Cameron, of Pennsylvania. Both of these senators believe that sugar is a distinctly revenue article and should be kept as such.

In the discussion of this proposition, of which the democrats have been cognizant for a long time, the query that naturally arises is, can the republicans put up 38 solid votes for this proposition? If they can, it looks as if the bill might be defeated, going upon the hypothesis that the Louisiana senators cannot and would not vote for the bill with a free sugar clause in it. The republicans are not without hope that they can put sugar on the free list for they claim that if they give this proposition their solid support they can get votes enough and to spare from the other side of the chamber to act in concert with them. This is the critical vote that the managers of the bill on the democratic side of the chamber fear.

'Wealers Guarded By Police.

SALT LAKE, Utah, May 28.—Three hundred and twenty-five commonwealers are being held by a strong force of police and deputy sheriffs at the Davis county line to prevent them coming throuh the county and thence into this city. The officials are armed with an order of the district court declaring the 'wealers a menace to property and forbidding them entering Davis county. The 'wealers threaten to force their way through and the trades unions of Ogden also threaten to send reinforcements to aid them.

C. R. Breckinridge Defeated.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., May 28.—Congressman C. R. Breckinridge, of the second Arkansas district, will probably be defeated at the primaries for renomination. Saline county was carried by his opponent, J. S. Little, of Sebastian, by more than a two-thirds majority. Up to date Little has carried Sebastian, Montgomery, Scott and Saline counties and Breckinridge only has Jefferson, his home, to his credit.

Ordinance Against Divided Skirts.

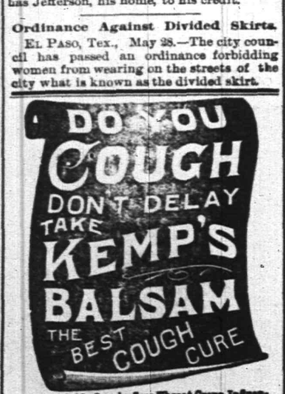
EL PASO, Tex., May 28.—The city council has passed an ordinance forbidding women from wearing on the streets of the city what is known as the divided skirt.



It cures Colds, Coughs, Sore Throat, Croup, Influenza, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis and Asthma. A certain cure for Consumption in first stages, and certain relief in advanced stages. Use at once. You will see the excellent effect after taking the first dose. Sold by dealers everywhere. Large bottles 50 cents and $1.00.

BULL FIGHTER KILLED

Gored to Death By the Maddened Brute.

After the Sacrament to the Dying Man the Fighting is Resumed—Fifteen Horses Also Killed and Two Matadors Wounded—Spaniards' Notion of Sport—Other Foreign News.

MADRID, May 28.—At the end of a bull fight here the matador Espartero was about to plunge his sword into the neck of the bull, when the brute made an unexpected movement, threw him down and gored him. Espartero died a few minutes later. He had a national reputation as a bull fighter.

Priests who were in the audience hastened to Espartero's side immediately after he fell and administered extreme unction, while the other matadors, in their gorgeous attire, knelt in the background.

After the sacrament the fights were resumed.

Fifteen horses were killed and two matadors were wounded in the subsequent fights.

Irish Prisoner Poisoned.

DUBLIN, May 28.—Upon the strength of facts given to the police by an informer, John Twiss and Eugene O'Keefe have been arrested and locked up in the Clare jail, charged with murdering the care taker, O'Donovan, on Glen Lara farm in county Cork, late in April. The prisoners' food has been taken to them daily by Keefe's friends. After eating breakfast Sunday Twiss went into convulsions. The jail physician said that he showed symptoms of strychnine poisoning. Twiss recovered somewhat under treatment, but is still in a critical condition. The motive of those who administered the poison is not known.

England's Coast Again Storm-Swept.

LONDON, May 28.—Heavy storms are reported from many points along the south of England coast. Much wreckage has gone ashore at Broadstairs and Ilfracombe. The camp of the East Kent militia regiment at Shorncliffe has been flooded. The tents were blown away and the bedding and clothing were drifting about in some eighteen inches of water. The grain crops and fruits further inland have been badly damaged. Off Fecamp, north of France, two vessels have been wrecked. A sailor was swept off the deck of a ship at Boulogne.

Hobnobing With Britishers.

LONDON, May 28.—George Gould and his family were taken by special boat from Bournemouth to Cowes where they inspected several houses with a view to renting one for the season. They also visited the Royal Yacht squadron in company with the Earl of Dunraven and subsequently looked over the Earl of Dunraven's yacht Dragon and Prince Henry, of Battenberg's Asphodel.

Banker Second in the Race.

HOSPITAL OUTRAGES.

Stories of Brutality at the State Institution at Buffalo.

BUFFALO, N. Y., May 28.—John J. Clifford, an attendant at the Buffalo State hospital, has been suspended by the board of managers pending the action of acting District Attorney Kendrick in the Felton case. Clifford is the man who n Attendant Mahoney swore to have seen in Killen's company just before Felton was assaulted. Mahoney swore before the state lunacy commission that Killen went into the next ward and got Clifford; that they came back together and shortly after he heard Felton crying: "Boys, what have I done?" Mrs. Jacob Loeb has a sad story to tell regarding the treatment of her son Fred at the hospital. He was confined in July. When taken to the hospital he was a tall, powerfully built young man, whose mind had been unhinged by misfortune. A few days after his incarceration he was confined to his bed, where he stayed in a deplorable condition for months. For a long time his friends were not allowed to see him, and when at last they gained access to his bedside they say they found him a mass of bruises and as helpless as a babe. "They hung me up with a towel and pounded me," he told his mother. Since his release he has spoken but a few words. Several times, however, he has said, when complaining of pains in his chest: "They used me hard out there."

BRUTALITY AT SEA.

A Half Witted Sailor Murdered by a First Mate.

LONDON, May 28.—Hamilton Spree, the first mate of the German bark Paul Isenberg, which has just arrived here from San Francisco, was arraigned in the Bow Street police station, charged with murdering a Norwegian sailor named Charles Peterson, on the high seas. It is alleged that Peterson was systematically tortured by Spree until he died. Witnesses testified that on March 14th, in the South Atlantic, Peterson was hoisted by the waist to the mainmast and allowed to hang there four hours. He cried for mercy, but his cries were unheeded and his requests for water were answered with derisive laughter. Several of the crew attempted to assist Peterson, but were prevented by Spree who threatened them with similar punishment. When Peterson was finally released from this torture, Spree grabbed him and threw him down a hatchway. As Peterson struck the bottom Spree cried: "Are you dead now?" Receiving no reply Spree went down the hatchway and discovered that Peterson really was dead. A few days prior to Peterson's death Spree struck him on the head with a bucket causing blood to run from his nose and ears. Peterson was half-witted.

Venezuela's Earthquake.

CARACAS, Venezuela, May 19. — The amount of property destroyed and lives lost in the recent earthquake is not yet known. Reports are still coming in to Caracas day by day, however, and many believe that when the truth is known, it will be appalling. The victims were at first said to be in the neighborhood of ten thousand, and though it may not prove as great as that, the loss of life will doubtless be very heavy. Los Andes, the state in which nearly all the damage was done, is three hundred and fifty miles distant from Caracas, and as all means of communication is cut off now, it is not surprising that the reports are unreliable. It is safe to say, however, that it was the worst earthquake that has been experienced here since the great catastrophe of Holy Thursday, 1813, when the city of Caracas was destroyed and forty thousand people perished.

O'Donovan Rossa.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—The statement that J. O'Donovan Rossa has gone to England provided with assurances from the state department that he will not be arrested is declared by officials to be misleading. It is true that Rossa recently applied for a passport but the request was refused on account of his omission to answer certain questions which are never waived. These were pointed out to Mr. Rossa but he has made no further attempt to show that he is entitled to a passport. An examination of state department records shows that about two years ago a passport made out in the form for naturalized citizens was given to him but it was simply a certificate of his citizenship and gives him no immunity from arrest or protection by this government in case he offends against or comes in conflict with the laws of any country he may visit.

Chinese Killed by the Hundred.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 28.—According to advices from China about 800 junks were wrecked by the flood in Han river, entailing great loss of life. Over six hundred bodies have been recovered at latest accounts.

A Flag Episode.

OTTAWA, May 28.—An official investigation has been ordered by the minister of militia into the destruction of the American flag at St Thomas, on the queen's birthday.

DIED IN A POOR HOUSE.

End of the Sad Career of a Once Beautiful Circus Rider.

JOLIET, Ill., May 28.—Mary Labor, aged 84 years, has just died at the county farm here.

In 1849 Joliet was visited by a circus in which was a star equestrienne. Her riding delighted every one and she was applauded to the echo. While in Joliet she was taken sick and was compelled to leave the show.

All her gaudy friends of the circus deserted her and she was thrown on the world in her sickness.

The poorhouse was her only refuge. The trouble proved to be typhoid fever and for weeks the victim struggled against death. She was finally triumphant but the disease left her deaf, dumb and blind. All efforts to get at her friends were unavailing and she remained at the county house nearly half a century not seeing, not hearing, not speaking.

The woman was so beautiful that 24 years ago a visitor to the poor house said she was the most beautiful woman he ever saw.

AFTER HER WANDERING BOY.

"Gen." Kelly's Mother Will Try to Take Her Son Home.

QUINCY, Ill., May 28.—While camping here Gen. Kelly was handed a letter by a friend of his mother in which his step-sister Maud asked him if he was Charley Kelly, their son and brother, to write them. It had been twelve years since they had heard anything of him. Kelly told the man who handed him the letter that on his return from Washington he would go by the way of Minneapolis, where his relatives live at 404 East Thirty-third street, and take them to California with him.

Mrs. Kelly, mother of Gen. Kelly, has arrived here from Minneapolis and will proceed down the river by boat looking for her wandering boy.

She is 53 years old, in robust health and appears to be able to carry out her intention—that of taking the general back with her. She said that if Charlie's wife had any "gumption" she would tie a string to him and keep him from roaming over the country.

FRENCH MINISTERIAL CRISIS.

M. Dupuy as Yet Unable to Form a Cabinet.

PARIS, May 28.—The result of M. Dupuy's efforts to form a cabinet is in doubt. Among the many conflicting rumors concerning the crisis is that the Anglo-Belgian agreement as to Central Africa has raised such grave questions between France and England that Casimir-Perier must be retained in the foreign office to protect France's interests. M. Dupuy called upon MM. Guerin, Poincare, Delcasse and Felix Faure. He offered the ministry of finance to Boulanger and Burdeau successively, but both declined the office.

Departed Heroes Remembered.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., May 28.—For years it has been the rule with Grand Army posts of Brooklyn to assemble on the Sunday preceding Memorial day, and go to the cemeteries, where the graves of their departed brethren are given the usual floral adornment. No soldier's grave, no matter how humble, is forgotten. All the cemeteries this year were handsomely decorated with flags, bunting and flowers, and in each one could be seen old Grand Army men tenderly placing a token of respect and esteem over some comrade's grave. The most important event of the day was at the naval cemetery, where fully 5,000 people gathered to hear assistant secretary of the navy, William McAdoo, deliver an oration.

Joint Union Service.

SARATOGA, N. Y., May 28.—The result of a conference between committees representing the two national religious bodies now in session here led to a joint union service in the big convention hall last night. It began at 9:30 o'clock, after the services in the regular churches were concluded. The audience numbered over 5,000 persons. Rev. Dr. S. A. Mutchmore, moderator of the general assembly of the Presbyterian church, presided. Ten minute addresses were made by distinguished divines from the general assembly and the Baptist May anniversaries.

Fifty Frick Company Evictions.

MOUNT PLEASANT, Pa., May 28.—Fifty families have been evicted from company houses at the Standard works of the Frick Coke company. It is believed here that workmen are to be imported to take the places of the strikers. Thirty ovens have been in blast since Friday. The strikers are determined not to allow any more ovens to be fired up. Sixty-three armed deputies are at the works and the indications are that that they will find plenty of work to do.

Bob Cook at New Haven.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., May 28.—Bob Cook, the Yale coach, has arrived here. He will coach the eight for several days before returning to Philadelphia. The absence of Longacre from the boat and the illness of Knapp have caused the coachers so much alarm that Mr. Cook has decided to make an effort to develop some oarsmen from the freshmen boat for the Varsity crew if possible before the Yale-Harvard race.

HIS OBNOXIOUS VIEWS

Prof. Smith Not to Be Questioned Too Closely.

The Committee's Visit To-Day Will Be Merely an Exchange of Courtesies—Feared That His Answer to a Direct Question Might Be a Further Exhibition of Contumacy.

SARATOGA, N. Y., May 28.—The committee appointed by the Presbyterian general assembly to confer with Professor Smith concerning his future conduct will make their formal visit to-day.

The committee was instructed to obtain from the condemned professor an expression that would satisfy the Cincinnati Presbytery that he would refrain from teaching and preaching his obnoxious views.

Friends of Professor Smith have been anxious about this interview.

It is thoroughly understood by everybody here that Professor Smith can make no such promises. His friends fear, then, that his response to the committee, if a direct answer is sought to a formal question, such as "Will you cease preaching and teaching the doctrine of errancy?", will appear to be a further exhibition of contumacy, and will further alienate the general assembly from him.

It was with this in view that they visited the members of the committee. They urged the committee not to put the direct question, and not to ask for a direct answer. It is understood that this was agreed to. Under these circumstances, the committee's visit to Professor Smith will be merely an exchange of courtesies, and nothing can be accomplished but the completion of the record, so as to have it appear that a committee of conference was appointed and that no satisfactory answer was obtained.

One of Prof. Smith's closest friends said: "Dr. Smith is a scholar. He is not a preacher, and at present he is not a teacher. As a scholar, he must pursue his studies in the direction they have taken since his ordination. He must go on with the examination of the Biblical researches in which he has been engaged. It is more than likely that he may print something of the results of his researches. In fact, I believe he has something of that kind in view now. Of course, if he was to make such a promise as has been expected of him, this would be impossible. It would be unfortunate if he were required to say 'no' to any such question. It has been arranged, therefore, that Prof. Smith will receive the committee in a courteous manner, and he may write a sentence or two to be read by the committee to the general assembly."

MAY ACT AS ARBITRATOR.

Gov. Pattison Hopeful of a Settlement of the Coal Strikes.

HARRISBURG, Pa., May 28.—Gov. Pattison has returned from the Clearfield coal region. The governor is hopeful that the strike troubles will be settled without bloodshed or the destruction of property.

When he went to Houtzdale the governor entertained grave apprehensions as to the outcome of the differences between the operators and miners. His visit to the Clearfield region has changed his opinion.

As the governor will probably be selected to arbitrate the differences between the two sides to the controversy, he declined to talk concerning his visit.

Duel With Swords Near Boston.

BOSTON, May 28.—Two Boston men—one a lawyer and a member of the Suffolk county bar, the other engaged in literary pursuits—faced each other just before midnight and fought a duel. Swords were the weapons and ten persons witnessed the encounter. The lawyer received two wounds on the right arm, one on the right leg, just above the knee, and a fourth in the left thigh. His injuries are not fatal, though quite serious. His opponent came out of the duel with two slight cuts on the right arm and a scratch on his forehead. The men met in a lonely and dismal spot not very far from the smallpox hospital, between the Mount Hope and Forest Hills cemeteries. They both fought to kill. The duel was the result of a quarrel about the manner in which the lawyer treated a witness, a young woman, in a case in which he appeared.

Revolution Brewing in Venezuela.

NEW YORK, May 28.—The Red D steamer Caracas arrived from Venezuela. The officers of the ship state that a revolution is imminent and has only been kept down by the firm hand and watchfulness of President Crespo. There are not offices enough to go around and this causes discontent. When the Caracas was leaving Laguayra, four men arrived at the dock just before the lines were cast off, to sail for Curacoa. Just as they were about to go on board they were captured by soldiers and hustled off to the fort, where it is probable that they have since been shot, as Crespo does not mince matters with revolutionists. They were bound to Curacoa to purchase arms for an insurrectionary movement, but Crespo had information of their intent and hence their capture and probable death.

Prefers to Remain in Congress.

WATERTOWN, N. Y., May 28.—Congressman Chickering, in a letter published here, contradicts the report that he is a candidate for the republican nomination for lieutenant governor, and announces that in response to an urgent request from his constituents in all parts of the Twenty-second district he has consented to be a candidate for renomination for congress.

GOOD SPIRITS

follow good health while low spirits, melancholia, impaired memory, morose, or irritable temper, fear of impending calamity and a thousand and one derangements of body and mind, result from pernicious, solitary practices, often indulged in by the young, through ignorance of their ruinous consequences. Nervous debility, and loss of manly power, not infrequently result from such unnatural habits.

To restore, quickly and perfectly, such unfortunates to health and happiness, is the aim of an association of medical gentlemen, who have prepared a treatise, setting forth in plain but chaste language, and treating of the nature, symptoms and curability, by home treatment, of such cases.

A copy of this useful book will, on receipt of this notice, with 10 cents in stamps, for postage, be mailed securely sealed in a plain wrapper. Address, CHILD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo, N. Y.

BLOODY CHURCH FIGHT

Priest Assaulted By Poles at Freeland, Pa.

Thrown From the Church Steps and Prevented From Entering the Edifice—Fierce Battle With the Police Follows—Clubs and Stones Play a Prominent Part—Several Injured.

HAZLETON, Pa., May 28.—The trouble over which the congregation of St. Cosimirs Polish Catholic church at Freeland has been divided for a year or more has just culminated in a bloody riot, in which four men were shot, two of whom will die. A number of others were seriously injured.

The names of the victims are:

Victor Tipnoky, shot through the head.
Peter Yosmoski, fatally shot in abdomen.
James Travinsky, shot in the right leg.
Joseph Datch, shot in hip.
Chief of Police James Gallagher, severe cut on head.
Officer Jones, nose broken with a stone.

A large number of parishoners sustained numerous cuts and bruises, being hit with clubs, and to escape arrest fled.

The trouble in the church dates back for a year and arose from prejudice. The pastor of the church, Father Maszoks, is a Lithuanian and the congregation is about equally divided into Lithunians and Poles. The Poles wanted another pastor and the Lithunians refused to accede to the demand and for months a species of undeclared warfare has raged.

Yesterday it was rumored that the Poles contemplated attacking the priest if he attempted to say mass. Father Maszoks was determined to say mass, however, and escorted by Police Officers Jones, he approached the sacristy of the church.

As he mounted the steps a number of Poles hurled themselves upon him and threw him to the ground.

The priest then tried to gain entrance to the front door, but was again repulsed by Poles, who stood guard.

An attack was made and Officer Jones was hit in the face with a stone. Chief Gallagher, who had detailed other officers to preserve order, endeavored to control the mob, but only precipitated the attack.

Chief Burgess McLaughlin escorted the priest home, and while drafting recruits and deputies, the fighting became general. For half an hour pandemonium reigned during which guns and clubs were used with terrible effect.

When order was finally restored the place resembled a battle field. When the police recovered themselves, most of the beligerents had fled. Four Poles were subsequently arrested and locked up.

HER FIRST OCEAN STEAMER.

Hearty Welcome Accorded the Visitor on Her Arrival at Milwaukee.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., May 28.—After a voyage lasting 235 days the steamer Craggs from Bergen, Norway, has arrived at this port and steamed up the river amid a hearty whistling welcome from every steam craft in the harbor. The sailing vessels dipped their colors as the foreign visitor passed by and the Craggs answered the salute with her heavy-sounding whistle.

A large number of Scandinavian residents went out in the bay and boarded the Craggs as she rounded the North point. The little steamer is the first vessel of the European merchant marine to visit Milwaukee. After unloading part of her cargo of herring here the Craggs will leave for Chicago.

Gov. McKinley's Birthplace.

WARREN, O., May 28.—The old frame building at Niles in which Gov. McKinley was born has been torn down to make room for a new bank. For a week relic hunters have besieged the contractors who purchased the structure to secure pieces of it to keep as mementoes. The timbers will be taken to Riverside park, about a mile from Niles, and the building will be re-erected there.

All for Charity.

One of the interesting events of last week was an entertainment given by five young girls of West Seventh street. The programme consisted of many beautiful tableaux and a vocal duet rendered by Charles Baldwin, of Brooklyn, and Alfred Egan, of Plainfield.

Those who took part in the tableaux were the Misses Amy Burt, Edith Wright, Florence Taylor, Ada Woodruff and Marion Egan.

The proceeds, which greatly exceeded their expectations, will be devoted to charity.

Away in a Private Car.

Mr. and Mrs. Pliny Fisk and children, Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Kaufman, Charles J. Fisk, Mrs. Chapman, Miss Dodge, H. L. Wilkinson and Seymour W. Bonsall made up a party which left Plainfield this morning to spend the Summer in the Adirondacks. The start was made at 9:54 in the Bay State, Car 220 of the Atchinson, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad, the private car of J. W. Reinhart of Belvidere avenue, who is president of the road. The party will stop at Saranac Inn.

Installed After the Sermon.

After the sermon by Dr. Barnes of the M. E. Church last evening the officers of the Epworth League were installed.

Dr. Barnes made a short address to the newly-elected officers. They were as follows:

A GIRL'S BODY FOUND.

IT HAD BEEN BURIED IN FRED KRONER'S BACK YARD.

He Unearthed It While Digging to Plant a Hammock Pole—A Former Occupant of the House Charged with the Offense, But Denies It.

Fred Kroner, of 410 East Fourth street, went into his back yard yesterday afternoon to swing a hammock. In order to do this he was obliged to dig a hole in the ground for a pole from which to suspend one end.

He had not dug far when he struck something hard, but thinking it was a root or stone, he did not pay much attention to it. After throwing out more dirt, however, he found the body of a baby girl about four months old, with just a light cloth skirt thrown over her.

Mr. Kroner was very much shocked and hastened to Justice Mosher's office on North avenue to tell of his discovery.

Chief Grant was notified, and he, together with Sergeant Kiely and City Physician Simpson, went to the place. The body was found to be somewhat disfigured, and Dr. Simpson was of the opinion that it had been buried about three months. They notified Undertaker Casey, and he took charge of the body.

The burial will be made this afternoon in the city plot, Plainfield Avenue Cemetery.

The news of the affair spread quickly yesterday, and curious people flocked to the place to see where the child was found.

Mr. Kroner is a machinist in Scott's Printing Machine Works. He and his family have lived on the place since April 1, and know nothing further than what was discovered yesterday.

The authorities are investigating.

The house where the body was found was formerly occupied by Oscar Terry. It was reported that Mr. Terry had had a sick baby which had not been seen in some months and that he was noticed digging in the yard shortly before moving away.

Mr. Terry was asked by a Daily Press reporter about the mattar and indignantly denied the imputation. He said his children all were living, and that the youngest was five years old.

ROBBED HIS EMPLOYER.

A Young Fellow with Two Names Taps a Till and Skips.

A butcher's assistant left town Saturday night with $25 which he took from his employer's cash drawer.

Harry Hall was hired to help Morris Ballentine of Park avenue durinfi the busy evening. Ballentine went home for supper early in the evening, taking three $5 bills from the till and leaving about $25 in it. Frank Shattle, the regular clerk, left the store at 7:30 and went into Margentino's store for a cigar. When he came back he found that Hall had disappeared. The till was empty and a few conis were scattered on the floor.

Hall was traced over the brook as far as D. J. Smalley's market. When last seen he was walking on Race street headed east. He had not gone to his boarding house, 327 West Front street after the robbery. He is about 24 years old and came to Plainfield from the West. His right name is Eugene Dillon. He worked for W. W. Coriell for one year and a-half and once before he had spent a Saturday night with Ballantine. The police are on his track and will probably capture him.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

The consecration meeting of the Trinity Church society will be held tonight at 8.

Rev. C. L. Goodrich, in his Christian Endeavor talk on "Things Secular and Sacred" last night, said it was just as sacred for Rev. Dr. Richards to play tennis Saturday afternoons if he felt it would benefit his physical condition as it was to prepare a sermon.

The election of officers in the County Convention Friday resulted as follows: President, George G. Teller, of Roselle; First Vice-president, William B. Hamilton, Elizabeth; Second Vice-president, John L. Paton, Westfield; Third Vice-president, Frank E. Woodruff, Plainfield; Secretary, Abbett B. Wilson, Rahway; Treasurer, John A. Quick, Elizabeth.

May Services in St Mary's.

The services which usually mark the end of May were attended by a congregation that filled St. Mary's Church last night. The members of the Children of Mary and the Immaculate Conception societies marched from the school to the church singing the litanies. The altar was decorated with flowers and lights. Father Murphy preached and and conducted the services with which 20 children were admitted to the societies.

That's Why He Left.

Thomas O'Neill, the young man who ran away from his home in Scotch Plains last Sunday, is still missing. It is now reported that the people who take the place of his deceased parents gave him a hard thrashing just before he disappeared.

FOR THE relief and cure of a cold in the head there is more potency in Ely's Cream Balm than in anything else it is possible to prescribe. This preparation has for years past been making a brilliant success as a remedy for cold in the head, catarrh and hay fever. Used in the initial stages of these complaints Cream Balm prevents any serious development or the symptoms, while almost numberless cases are on record of radical cures of chronic catarrh and hay fever after all other treatments have proved of no avail.

SOCIETY EVENTS.

The Dumont Reception.

Miss Marion Dumont of Seventh street and Watchung avenue gave a charming tea Saturday in honor of her visitors Miss Allen of Louisville and Miss Ryle of Paterson. The house was beautifully decorated with roses and snowballs. Mrs. Clifton Wharton, Jr., and Mrs. G. Harry Squires poured tea; with them in the dining room were Miss Katherine Stewart, Miss Florence Huntington, Miss Katheryn Yates, Miss Bessie Ginna, and Miss Maude VanBoskerck. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Howard Tracy, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Ginna, Mr. and Mrs. DeGraff, Mr. and Mrs. John Doull Miller, the Misses Cock, Miss Talmadge, Miss VanBoskerck, the Misses Tracy, Miss Walz, Miss Opdyke, Miss Jessamy Harte, Miss Murphy, Miss Dunn, Miss Place, Miss Bowers. Messrs. Morgan, Fred Walz, O. G. Waring, Ralph Opdyke, Walter Stewart, Mr. Woltmann, Mr. Briggs, Mr. Hedges, Dr. Hedges, Dr. Ard, and Mr. Dumont of Brooklyn.

The Depew-Kleinecke Tea.

Saturday afternoon, from 4 to 7, Mrs. Ephraim Holbrook Depew and Mrs. August Wilhelm Kleinecke received their numerous friends at their home, 346 Franklin place

Mrs. Orville T. Waring, Mrs. Frank O. Herring and Mrs. Henry Suydam, of Orange, assisted the hostesses in the front parlor, while Mrs. A. Stuart Patterson and Miss Louise Depew did the honors in the adjoining parlor.

The decorations were elaborate and elegant, consisting of pink roses and smilax in the one room, while wild flowers in profusion decorated the other. The candles shed a soft light over the scene.

The dining room was a bower of beauty, not alone owing to the handsome floral display all over the room, but principally on account of the lovely young women, who served the guests with choicest refreshments. Those assisting in the dining room were Mrs. R. Henry Depew, Mrs. E. W. Hedges, Mrs. James Hallock, Mrs. John B. Draton and the Misses Murray, Miss Drayton, and the Misses Betts. The table and its beautiful decorations in green and white were admired by all.

Mrs. William T. Pelletier graced the lemonade table in the hall, where she distributed the cooling and refreshing beverage to the thirsty. The hall and staircase were very prettily decorated with smilax and flowers, the prevailing color being yellow.

Among the 300 present were Dr. and Mrs. Wm. Murray, Mrs. D. O. Tiffany, Miss Tweedy, Mr. Drayton, Mr. and Mrs. R. Henry Depew, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Drayton, Mrs. S. C. Harriot, S. ### TERRORIZED BY TRAMPS.

West Seventh Street the Scene of a Villainous Outrage.

John J. Flannigan, coachman for George W. Van Boskerck of 542 West Seventh street, was watering a horse in the barn at 8:30 Saturday night when a tramp opened the door and asked for permission to sleep in the building. The coachman refused to let him enter.

A second tramp then came up and struck the horse on the neck with a stick. The horse plunged, knocked Flannigan down, and struck a lantern which hung on the wall of the carriage-room.

The blazing oil ran down the wall and toward Flannigan, who got on his feet just in time to escape it. He tied the horse and then extinguished the flames with several buckets of water. The tramps ran away in the meantime.

Mrs. Van Boskerck missed several quilts from his barn last week and thinks it probable that the men who visited his coachman last night were the thieves.

The Spring House Cleaning Wisely urged by the BOARD OF HEALTH is not complete without a proper use of DISINFECTANTS. But, in choosing these, do not be misled into paying fancy prices for "patent" specialties. Common lime is better than any of them for damp cellars and stables. For vaults, drains, cess-pools, the best and cheapest disinfectant is COPPERAS, supplied by us by the pound or barrel at low rates. But for use in the house, in the plumbing, in kitchen sinks, in closets, for purifying the air of sick rooms, deodorizing offensive discharges—in short, for all purposes of a household disinfectant, nothing can excel the powerful solution of chlorides made and sold by us for 15 years under the name of REYNOLDS'S ODORLESS DISINFECTANT. Quart bottles 25c. To be diluted for use according to directions on label.

HERALDING HIS FAME.

All the World Learning of Our Amiable and Estimable Mayor.

The New York Herald yesterday published the following:

Men of distinction in New York business life who live in suburban towns and cities have their impress there upon municipal life and government not dreamed by their fellows who live the year around within the city's walls. Probably no man doing business in New York is more distinguished in the town where he lives than Mayor Alexander Gilbert, of Plainfield. Though he has been twice elected Mayor of Plainfield Mr. Gilbert is in no sense a politician. His election both times was demanded by the people in recognition of his beneficial work in the town and with the very probable additional reason that a number of projected municipal improvements needed his guiding hand.

In New York city Mr. Gilbert is known in financial circles as vice-president and cashier of the famous old Market and Fulton National Bank and secretary of the New York Clearing House. He has been cashier of the bank for thirty years, being appointed such when he was but twenty-four years old. He has been offered high positions in other banks, but has always declined, and bears the distinction today of drawing the largest salary enjoyed by any bank cashier in New York.

Mayor Gilbert went to Plainfield in 1866. At that time not a foot of flagstone was laid in the town and no other improvements were visible. He was elected to the Common Council first in 1872, and was re-elected in 1873. Against the prevailing old fogy element he succeeded in securing the inauguration of pavements.

The first abolition of railroad grade crossings in New Jersey was secured almost entirely through his efforts in 1874, when the Central New Jersey Railroad elevated its tracks through Plainfield. Early in the seventies he was instrumental in organizing a Young Men's Christian Association in Plainfield, of which he became the first president. He organized a Cemetery Association in 1884, and was elected treasurer. He has for years been president of the Music Hall Association, of which he was one of the incorporators.

In 1890 the need of further improvements in the city turned the attention of the voters to him, and he was induced to run for Mayor, to which office he was elected. During his term a complete system of water-works has been introduced, and a system of sewerage will be laid during the coming Summer. In 1892 Mr. Gilbert was elected a delegate from New Jersey to the Republican convention which renominated President Harrison, and was then appointed a member of the committee which notified the President of his renomination.

Mr. Gilbert is fifty-four years of age and married, but has no children. He lives in a beautiful house on West Eighth street. His very near neighbors are John W. Murray, vice-president of the German-American Insurance Company; Charles J. Fisk, of Harvey Fisk's Sons, bankers; Rev. Robert Lowry, the song writer, and Charles Potter, the printing press manufacturer.

RAPID ROADSTERS.

All eager to go on a fine run Memorial Day are requested to call at the Y.M.C.A. rooms for information.

The Victor Wheelmen run Decoration Day will include the Irvington-Millburn road race in the morning and the racing in Rahway in the afternoon. Wheels will be scarce, and quite a number of the members who depended on borrowing or hiring bicycles will have to stay at home.

W. H. Rogers's pair of coupled wheels was used for the first time Saturday night. A resident of West Fifth street took his young son out for a ride on one of the wheels, the boy sitting in front of him. His wife propelled the coupled wheels with another son seated on the saddle opposite. The arrangement attracted much attention at the shop yesterday, and is sure to be popular as a family wheel for timid people who have n't learned to ride alone.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

Mr. and Mrs. Otto Arens will sail for Germany June 2.

Mrs. Edgerton, who has been ill several days, is still confined to her bed.

Justice Crosley spent Sunday at Trenton. His family are in Boonton, Morris County.

Miss Melick, of Lebanon, Hunterdon County, is the guest of Miss Krymer of West Second street.

The death occurred last night of Mrs. Louise Nexsen De Goiyer of Carleton and Putnam avenues.

The death of Mrs. Frank Covey occurred this morning at Dunellen. A husband, son and daughter survive her.

F. E. Kinsman has been awarded additonal patents on his appaatus for automatic control of moving railway trains.

Miss Mullin of Brooklyn is enjoying Plainfield air and the beautiful lawn at the home of Miss Krymer, West Second street.

Paul C. Beebe, 'cellolst of New York, will assist W. E. MacClymont at the organ recital in the First Presbyterian Church, June 7.

Ex-Councilman L. A. Hummer and wife of Somerset street spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Cobb in Far Hills. Mrs. Cobb is a niece of Mrs. Hummer.

Comrade J. B. Atwood, formerly of Plainfield and now of Trenton, will make an address before the Grand Army Post in Lawrenceville Wednesday. His wife will assist the C. K. Hall Women's Relief Corps in Asbury Park that day, and make and address.

Upset in a Carriage.

Felix Marx of East Front street went driving in an open carriage yesterday afternoon with Mrs. O'Connor, superintendent of his restaurant, 103 Mercer street, New York, her infant child, and a Russian nurse-girl. In front of George R. Nichols's house, Scotch Plains, the horse shied and ran into a bank by the road side. The carriage was overturned with the horse and badly smashed. The harness was also broken. The women ere cared for ot Mr. Nichols's home. None of their injuries was serious, although the nurse was painfully cut about the head.

Tennis Tourney Entries.

The tournament of the Hillside Tennis Club to be held Memorial Day will be a Nahant tournament for doubles. The following entries have been received: Harry West and Sherwood West, Albert Simmonds and Fred. K. Fish, Jr., Fred. Walz and Carl Walz, Dean Ryder and Henry Ryder, J. P. H. Wharton and partner.

Local Comedians.

A satisfactory rehearsal was held by the Deacon Comedy Company Saturday night of the play which will be presented in Bound Brook tomorrow evening.

PLAINFIELD PATRIOTS.

THEY APPLAUD THE SENTIMENTS OF A SERMON.

Pastor Richardson Gives a Splendid Pulpit Oration on the American Flag, and the Enthusiastic Congregation Powerfully Testify Their Approval.

Patriotism is not dead in Plainfield. An audience that crowded every part of the Park Avenue Baptist Church, both chapel and auditorium, last night, could not restrain its feelings, and several times broke into applause. Major Anderson and Winfield Scott Posts, and the Loyal Ladies Legion, attended in a body. Pastor J. W. Richardson preached a most powerful sermon, and when he came to the part "There is room for but one flag" and held aloft the Stars and Stripes, the pent-up feelings that had been aroused burst forth in loud and prolonged handclapping, which was repeated at other portions of the discourse.

The text was 2 Tim. 4:7 "I have fought a good fight". After an exposition of the text, the speaker said in part:

"The results of the war teach that the principles of a popular government are permanent. When the tocsin of battle sounded there was a mighty rush to arms. Students, merchants, mechanics, doctors, ministers, thousands who knew comfort and independence, pressed to the front. Thousands of men, free as the hill over which they roamed, gave up peace, and assumed the burdens of war. But no king's mandate dragged them into the fight. The noble principles of the government which they loved inspired them to go to the front. They were not Hessians. They were not ignorant beings who knew only the savage arts of war. They were not chattels to ecclesiastical usurpers. They were not under mortgage to political Shylocks. They were an educated citizenship, acting under a calm sense of love and duty. The 'boys in blue' have written upon the tablets of American history, with their own blood for ink, solemn admonitions that shall last to the end of time. They have voiced a sentiment which pulsates in every true American's heart. That sentiment is, not only that the Government is of the people, for the people, but will also be defended by the people. If need be, the uprising of 1861 would be repeated in 1894. These American soldiers have said what you and I would say today. If an enemy under whatever guise lays his leprous hand on the Constitution which declares that 'all men are born free and equal', then he touches what belongs to you and me, what belongs to the patriotic dead. Living and departed have an eternal interest in the institutions symbolized by the Stars and Stripes. And the citizen-soldier by his American example, has told all parties, all creeds, all cliques, that the people, not of one section nor faith, but the people North, South, East and West, are equal partners in the concern. There is no room here for two flags. It cannot, nor shall it ever be, the 'green flag' and the 'Stars and Stripes'. Nor the imperial flag of Germany and the 'Stars and Stripes'. Nor the flag of St. George and the 'Stars and Stripes'. The patriotic dead are speaking through their glorious example, saying, From every school-house, every city hall, every State-house, let only the Red, White and Blue' kiss the sunlight. There's room here for only one flag! The boys in blue fought that the leprosy of sectionalism might be removed from the body politic; that the current of health might leap through the arteries of our nation. They fought not against the men of the South, but against the false principles of slavery, which made the Constitution a mockery. They endeavored to lay the foundation for a future temple of mutual confidence; to remove that which created heart-burnings between the North and South. Almost thirty-five years have passed away since then. The rich red blood of those kindly freemen has washed out the guilty stain from 'Old Glory', and now in the onward march of nations, America leads the van under the inspiration of her sublime ideas. I believe that the high grade of American inventions and discoveries for the past twenty-five years, is directly attributable to the influences, liberated by the success of the Union armies. Following the victory at Appomattox, came inventions and discoveries into our civilization on the double quick. The submarine cable, the telephone, the electric light, the improved printing press, a thousand patents, a thousand discoveries in medicine, are the children of the newer civilization which followed 1865. Surely these men who sleep enwrapt within the sacred folds of the flag, have not died in vain."

The decorations were tremendously effective. They were devised and arranged by Edwin B. Day. On the large panels back of the pulpit hung heavy folds of black, alternating with purple stripes. Against this hung a large portrait of Abraham Lincoln, draped with American silk flags, the whole surmounted by a large eagle from whose talons streamed red, white and blue ribbons to the columns of the church. On each column hung purple drapery and portraits of Grant and Sheridan draped with the flag. The background of the choir gallery was of royal purple, with red, white and blue arranged in fan fashion. A large steel engraving of the far-famed war trio, Grant, Sherman and Sheridan, looked down, surmounted by a group of American flags.

Directly in front of the pulpit was a pall, on which rested the open Bible, with crossed swords and a soldier's cap. This was beautified with roses contributed by Major Anderson Post. On either side of the pall muskets were stacked, and cartridge boxes and haversacks hung down.

The services were opened in full military form. The roll of the drum was exceedingly impressive, and the ritual was perfectly given.

The decorations are to be photographed. The red, white and blue decorations were loaned by Paugh-Caugh-Naugh-Sinque Tribe.

—Eighteen new members were admitted to the Children of Mary of St. Joseph's Church with the usual service last evening.

Hoge Makes Another Record.

ROANOKE, Va., May 28.—Col. J. Hampton Hoge, who was a pointed consul to Amoy, China, but recalled before he had reached his post, created another sensation in this city by striking an editor of an afternoon paper whom he claimed had been publishing slanderous articles about him. The editor in question is Charles L. Stewart of the Evening World. Since Col. Hoge joined the republican ranks the World has editorially commented on his change of political faith and meeting Stewart Hoge declared that nine-tenths of the publications were lies, whereupon Stewart made a pass at Hoge. Being parried Hoge swung his left with force and landed upon Stewart's lip, cutting it badly. The men were then separated.

Time To End the Coal Strike.

COLUMBUS, O., May 28.—Secretary McBride said that the miners' strike had assumed a very menacing condition toward the industries of the country and in his opinion it was high time the leaders on both sides got together and settled it. There was more money lost every day by reason of the idle mines than all the profits on the great railroad contracts which are blocking the settlement put together. "It is not our fault," said he, "that the strike is continued. We have been organized and ready to negotiate as a body since the strike began. The operators cannot act as a unit for some reason."

Jerry Simpson Better.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—Representative Jerry Simpson of Kansas is improving rapidly and will probably leave here for Bailey Springs about June 1. His condition would allow his departure sooner, but the hotel at which he will stay at the Springs does not open until June 1.

Coal Famine at St. Louis.

ST. LOUIS, May 28.—All the flouring mills in this city and vicinity but five have ceased work for want of coal. These five have supplies of wood that will last from four to ten days. Nearly all the large factories in the city are nearing the end of their supplies and the river steamers are burning wood. Railroads continue to confiscate all the coal in sight.

Unknown Smith Turns Anarchist.

PITTSBURG, May 28.—Coxey's Unknown, alias Smith, Bozarro etc., addressed a meeting of populists and others on the south side here Sunday. After revolutionary advice to his hearers he said that he wanted an army of one million to go to Washington, inundate the capitol and sink into oblivion the law makers' trust, the greatest of all trusts. There's a terrible crisis at hand, he says, and if the right kind of men are not sent to congress this year, the people will have to fight, so he advised workingmen to organize for ballots and bullets. If they fail at the ballot they can resort to the bullet. Pittsburg is to be to the coming revolution what Lexington was to the war of independence. Bozarro's remarks were loudly cheered.

Mt. Vernon's Muddle.

MT. VERNON, N. Y., May 28.—The mayoralty muddle in this city is growing more complicated each day. The action of Justice Gaynor in issuing a writ of peremptory mandamus compelling the board of canvassers to meet to-day and canvass the vote as returned to them, has added new and serious complications, as Justice Dykman had already issued an order not to canvass the vote pending his decision to be rendered this week. Thus the common council are in the position of being ordered to make a canvass by one judge and prohibited from doing so by another. As to the $250 fine imposed by Justice Gaynor for failure to make the canvass as directed, the democrats will appeal to the general term for a decision.

BY THE WAY.

—Special services were held in Hope Chapel last evening in celebration of the building of the new addition. Addresses were made by F. H. Andrews, Rev. Dr. W. R. Richards and Rev. G. Kennedy Newell.

—The Junior Band of Willing Workers of the Congregational Church will give a social tomorrow evening. Music and other kinds of entertainment will be provided, the missionary jugs will be broken, and a report of the work of the society will be read. Refreshments will be served. All are cordially invited to attend.

$100 Reward, $100.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the one positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio. Sold by druggists, 75c.

Intend to "Borrow" a Train.

PUEBLO, Col., May 28.—Three hundred and seventy-five Coxeyites have just reached this city from Salt Lake over the Rio Grande road. Two hundred of the men were the Utah contingent under the command of Gen. Carter. The balance of the men are from California and have been 40 day searching here from Stockton. They report terrible hardship experienced on the Utah desert and show signs of having undergone great privations. The men are by far the best looking set of men that have yet passed through here. Gen. Carter will "borrow" a Rio Grande train and take the men to Denver.

Elks to Meet at Atlantic City.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., May 28.—Williard C. Van Derlip, of Boston, Joseph Vantee, of Richmond, and Peter J. Campell, of Baltimore, the trustees of the Order of Elks, met here and decided to hold the annual convention of the Elks in Atlantic City this year. The event will draw together about 1,000 delegates and will attract others to the number of probably 15,000. It will commence on June 9 and will last for three days.

104 Indictments Against Bissell.

TRENTON, N. J., May 28.—The Mercer county grand jury has returned 104 indictments against Isaac F. Bissell, the defaulting treasurer of the American Saw company, of New York, whose works are located here. The indictments are for an equal number of alleged check forgeries, by which Bissell is said to have profited to the extent of about $30,000. Bissell was arrested over a month ago and is still in jail.

Yellow Jack Claimed the Crew.

VIENNA, May 28.—The steamship Nagy Lajos, which sailed from Rio Janeiro on April 13 and from Pernambuco on April 20, has arrived at Trieste. During the voyage her captain, machinist, engineer, assistant steward and stoker died of yellow fever.

Arkell Orders a Naphtha Launch.

CANAJOHARIE, N. Y., May 28.—W. J. Arkell has placed an order for the construction of a naphtha yacht to run 35 miles an hour, and which is to contest for a prize with Richard K. Fox's yacht, now being constructed.

Hall and O'Donnell to Box.

CHICAGO, May 28.—Jim Hall and Steve O'Donnell have signed articles for a six round contest for scientific points, to take place at Tattersall's in this city Saturday June 16, or Monday June 18, whichever is considered the more advantageous for a purse.

American Sunday School Union.

BOSTON, May 28.—The seventieth anniversary of the American Sunday School union was held last evening at the Harvard Congregational church, Brookline, Mass. Over 1,000 people were present.

Foundling in Great Luck.

OMAHA, Neb., May 28.—Six years ago Dr. and Mrs. R. A. Ramacciatti adopted an 18-months-old boy at the foundling hospital in St. Louis, Mo. His foster parents have since died, and he has been declared their heir, inheriting nearly $500,000.

A RETIRED BUSINESS WOMAN.

A Page From Her History.

The important experiences of others are interesting. The following is no exception; "I had been troubled with heart disease 25 years, much of that time very seriously. For five years I was treated by one physician continuously. I was in business, but obliged to retire on account of my health. A physician told my friends that I could not live a month. My feet and limbs were badly swollen, and I was indeed in a serious condition when a gentleman directed my attention to Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, and said that his sister, who had been afflicted with heart disease, had been cured by the remedy, and was again a strong, healthy woman. I purchased a bottle of the Heart Cure, and in less than an hour after taking the first dose I could feel a decided improvement in the circulation of my blood. When I had taken three doses I could move my ankles, something I had not done for months, and my limbs had been swollen so long that they seemed almost putrified. Before I had taken one bottle of the New Heart Cure the swelling had all gone down, and I was so much better that I did my own work. On my recommendation six others are taking this valuable remedy."—Mrs. Morgan, 569 W. Harrison St., Chicago, Ill.

Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, a discovery of an eminent specialist in heart disease, is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is positively free from all opiates or dangerous drugs.

Items of Interest.

last Saturday night in the Dry and Fancy Goods and Carpet Departments was double that in the old store. A large trade was done also in the new departments, viz., Crockery, Housefurnishing and Millinery Departments.

The crowds were larger last Saturday night than a week ago. The interest in the great enterprise is widening. Scores of people who have already patronized the new store say that inasmuch as Edsall has given Plainfield an establishment to be proud of, they will sustain it by their patronage.

The opening of this magnificent store has already began a great revolution of trade in Plainfield. The large variety of goods, fine quality, excellent style and taste, marvelously low prices, good service, are among the drawing qualities.

A large business was also done in the Shoe and Trunk Departments.

There is no doubt but what the new concern will pay from the beginning, and that it has come to stay. The principle of doing business is a large volume of trade at a small profit.

For instance, $100,000 sales per year at a profit of 20 per cent. would amount to $20,000. And a yearly sale of $200,000 at 10 per cent. would be just the same.

So the purchaser would save just 10 at 10 per cent. by buying at the store selling the largest amount. This is the system of all the large stores in New York and other cities.

We are the same, and will guarantee to give the trading public more for their money than any other place. Come and see. Our store will be closed all day Decoration Day.

SHIPS THAT PASS IN THE NIGHT.

By BEATRICE HARRADEN.

"I am a little nervous of offending you," he continued, "and yet I trust you. It is only this: You said you had come to the end of your money, and that you must go home. It seems a pity when you are getting better. I have so much more than I need. I don't offer it to you as a gift, but I thought if you wished to stay longer a loan from me would not be quite impossible to you. You could repay as quickly or as slowly as was convenient to you, and I should only be grateful and"——

He stopped suddenly.

The tears had gathered in Bernardine's eyes. Her hand rested for one moment on his arm.

"Mr. Allitsen," she said, "you did well to trust me. But I could not borrow money of any one unless I was obliged. If I could of any one, it would have been of you. It is not a month ago since I was a little anxious about money. My remittances did not come. I thought then that if obliged to ask for temporary help I should come to you. So you see if you have trusted me, I, too, have trusted you."

"Supposing you change your mind," he said quietly, "you will not find that I have changed mine."

Then a few minutes brought them back to Petershof.

CHAPTER XVIII.

A BETROTHAL.

He had loved her so patiently, and now he felt that he must have his answer. It was only fair to her and to himself, too, that he should know exactly where he stood in her affections. She had certainly given him little signs here and there, which had made him believe that she was not indifferent to his admiration. Little signs were all very well for a short time, but meanwhile the season was coming to an end. She had told him that she was going back to her work at home, and then perhaps he would lose her altogether. It would not be safe now for him to delay a single day longer. So the little postman armed himself with courage.

Warli's brain was muddled that day. He who prided himself upon knowing the names of all the guests in Petershof made the most absurd mistakes about people and letters, too, and received in acknowledgment of his stupidity a series of scoldings which would have unnerved a stronger person than the little hunchback postman.

In fact, he ceased to care how he gave out the letters. All the envelopes seemed to have the same name on them—Marie Truog. Every word which he tried to decipher turned to that. So finally he tried no more, leaving the destination of the letter to be decided by the impulse of the moment. At last he arrived at that quarter of the Kurhaus where Marie held sway. He heard her singing in her pantry. Suddenly she was summoned down stairs by an impatient bell ringer and on her return found Warli waiting in the passage.

"What a goose you are!" she cried, throwing a letter at him. "You have left the wrong letter at No. 89."

Then some one rang, and Marie hurried off again. She came back with another letter in her hand and found Warli sitting in her pantry.

"The wrong letter left at No. 54," she said, "and madame in a horrid temper in consequence. What a nuisance you are today, Warli! Can't you read? Here, give the remaining letters to me. I'll sort them."

Warli took off his little round hat and wiped his forehead.

"I can't read today, Marie," he said. "Something has gone wrong with me. Every name I look at turns to Marie Truog. I ought to have brought every one of the letters to you. But I knew they could not be all for you, though you have so many admirers, for they would not be likely to write at the same time to catch the same post."

"It would be very dull if they did," said Marie, who was polishing some water bottles with more diligence than was usual or even necessary.

"But I am the one who loves you, Mariechen," the little postman said. "I have always loved you ever since I can remember. I am not much to look at, Mariechen—the binding of the book is not beautiful, but the book itself is not a bad book."

Marie went on polishing the water bottles. Then she held them up to the light to admire their unwonted cleanness.

"I don't plead for myself," continued Warli. "If you don't love me, that is the end of the matter. But if you do love me, Mariechen, and will marry me, you won't be unhappy. Now I have said all."

Marie put down the water bottles and turned to Warli.

"You have been a long time in telling me," she said poutingly. "Why didn't you tell me three months ago? It's too late now."

A PUBLIC BENEFACTOR.

THEY ALL SAY THE SAME.

Don't Hesitate, but Call and Be Convinced That Every Statement We Make Is True.

To those who do not already know that there is established in Newark, at 105 Halsey street, a physician who stands in the foremost rank of his profession, who is indorsed by the leading colleges of the country and who can prove by witnesses right here in Newark (not by one, but by hundreds) that he has succeeded in curing cases that have been utterly given up by other physicians, and good ones, too. To those who do not these facts we state that any person, rich or poor, old or young, is welcome here and receive examination and advice free of charge.

Thousands praise the day they came to us for treatment. There is no guess work, no experimenting, no painful operation. No matter how difficult the case, no matter how much of the physician's time it may consume, the diagnosis will not only be thorough, it will be absolutely free. There is no taint of quackery or deception; no claim or statement is made that is not borne out by facts and living witnesses.

Mrs. Abby A. Ray, late of 86 Grove street, East Orange, who now lives at 400 Ellmore street, Escanaba, Mich., writes, under date of January 12: "The medicine arrived this morning and I am so glad it came. I am almost out, and it has helped me so much and I am so much pleased with its wonderful effort on my broken down system that I would like to testify to your great success in my case. I am feeling as well now, in fact better, than I had ever hoped to again."

This is one of many letters that we receive daily. We have the originals at our office and if you wish you may see them. Another thing: We never publish or reveal a patient's name unless they so desire.

DR. STARKWEATHER.

There is not a penny to pay for the fullest medical advice. Dr. Starkweather is a graduate of the Berkshire Medical College, Massachusetts, and of the Medico-Chirurgical College of Philadelphia; endorsed also by the College of Physicians and Surgeons and Bellevue Medical College of New York. We invite all sufferers from whatever cause to call at our office, No. 105 Halsey street, Newark, where Dr. Starkweather is in attendance daily to give examination and advice entirely free of charge. It matters not what the disease, or how many years you have suffered, in spite of means adopted in your behalf, a visit to this office and the privileges of the same will cost you nothing, and may be the means of saving your life. We prepare all our medicines and prescribe the remedies indicated. This plan enables the patient to receive directly from us such remedies as will produce the results promised.

Our office is open daily from 10 a. m. to 9 p. m. Sundays 4 to 6 p. m.

Those living at a distance can consult the Doctor by letter.

Reductions on Parlor Furniture For Three Days Only.

We have too much parlor furniture; season has been backward; and we would sacrifice our profit to reduce the stock. About three days of brisk trade will bring it down, and on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday these discounts will therefore prevail:

Purchases of over $30.00, 10 per cent. discount.

Purchases of over $50.00, 15 per cent. discount.

Purchases of over $100.00, 20 per cent. discount.

For Example:

|---|---|
| Handsome Parlor set of three pieces, cherry wood, with mahogany finish, tapestry upholstering, gold bead-work | $24.98 |
| Corner Chair, similar in design | 5.00 |
| Gold-leaf Reception Chair, the $5.00 kind, | 3.98 |
| | $33.96 |
| Less 10 per cent. special "Stock reduction" discount, | 3.39 |
| Net Cash Price, | $30.57 |

You don't have to buy a whole parlor suit, for there's a price on each piece, and you may buy any piece that you fancy.

Money back? Yes! Goods delivered free! For 20 miles! Reach us easily? But one block from Broad and Market streets.

A REMARKABLE CURE

MIDDLEBUSH, Somerset Co., N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For the past forty years I have been afflicted with bleeding piles. I suffered constant pain in the lower part of my body, but when I had an operation of the bowels the pain was perfectly terrible, and was most always attended with the loss of a large quantity of blood. My condition was complicated with prolapse of the rectum, which at first only made its appearance when I had a movement of the bowels, but at length the parts became so weakened that the protrusion took place while walking or stooping, or after the slightest exertion, and sometimes even while I was at rest. Whenever this happened it gave rise to the most agonizing pain, and felt as though something was pulling the life right out of me. In fact only those similarly situated can imagine the suffering and distress which I had to endure from day to day, and which made my life a terrible burden. Hearing of Dr. Lighthill's wonderful success in the cure of difficult chronic diseases, I placed myself under his care, and now I am proud and happy to say that, marvelous as it may seem, he effected a complete and radical cure in my case in every respect, and he performed this cure without any painful operation or preventing me from work. Since this terrible disease has been removed by Dr. Lighthill's skill I feel new life, and for the first time in forty years I feel once more what it is to be without daily pain, discomfort and distress. I am not a wealthy man, but no amount of money would tempt me to be put back in my former condition.

I make this public statement, not only from a deep and everlasting sense of gratitude to Dr. Lighthill, but also as a simple Christian duty to let the afflicted know where they can find a physician whose skill cannot be surpassed, and in whom implicit confidence can be placed. H. VROOM.

A LOCAL ENDORSEMENT.

No. 188 Somerset st., Plainfield, N. J.

To the Residents of Plainfield, N. J.

Mr. H. Vroom, whose statement appears above, is a brother-in-law of mine. I personally know of his case and his suffering and also know the happy fact that to the surprise of himself and his friends, Dr. Lighthill effected a radical and permanent cure. His statement is true in every respect and does not say half enough in praise of Dr. Lighthill. Anyone who wishes this statement verified is at liberty to come and see me personally. JOHN C. KINNEY.

DEPUTY FOR EVERY MAN

No Concessions, No Arbitration, Say Coal Barons.

The Bituminous Operators Meeting at Philadelphia Decides to Attempt to Resume Work at All Hazards—Expect to Get Men From the Army of Unemployed.

PHILADELPHIA, May 29.—No concessions, no arbitration, a deputy for every miner and a determination to resume mining was the result of the meeting here of the coal operators of the bituminous region of Clearfield, Broad Top and Beech Creek. The meeting was held in the office of the Berwind-White Coal company and about three-fourths of the operators of the regions were present in person or by representatives.

E. J. Berwind, of New York, president of the Berwind-White Coal company, presided.

When the meeting convened the first subject that came under discussion was the ignoring by the miners of the notice that this would be the last day they would be received back to work.

Sentiment Favoring Concessions.

The unbroken front presented by the miners was considered by many of the operators to increase the gravity of the situation and the necessity for active measures. There was a sentiment in the meeting in favor of granting some concessions in the matter of wages, but as this would involve the recognizing of the miners' union, against which the operators were as a unit in their opposition, the subject was not discussed to any great length.

Pattison's Efforts Given No Weight.

Gov. Pattison, s visit to the Hontzdale region and his proposal to the miners to suggest arbitration, was passed lightly over by the meeting and the governor's action was generally attributed as being for political effect.

The meeting finally put aside the consideration of every question except that of resumption, and that was thoroughly discussed from every point of view. The discussion resulted in the determination to resume work and if necessary to protect every miner desiring to work with a deputy.

Where to Get the Men.

The question of where the labor to resume work with was to come from presented a serious problem. The idea of bringing negroes into the region was dismissed as impracticable, as they would not only be brought into contact with the strikers, as men taking their places in the mines, but as laborers of a different race, which, it was believed, would add to the bitterness of a race conflict, in the struggle.

The importation of labor also came up but was speedily dismissed as the immigration laws stand as a barrier against such a method.

Decide to Advertise for Men.

It was finally decided to advertise for men among the thousands of unemployed of the large cities. A committee of three, whose names could not be learned, was appointed to devise ways and means for the proposed resumption. This committee is to report within the next few days. It is not intended to attempt a general resumption at once, but to pick out localities that seem most favorable and where the opposition will not be so aggressive as it would be in some other places in the district.

Quiet in Phillipsburg Region.

PHILLIPSBURG, Pa., May 29.—Everything throughout the entire coal region is remarkably quiet. So far as could be learned not a man has applied for work. Both miners and business men are anxiously awaiting the outcome of the attempt made by Gov. Pattison to bring about a conference of the miners and operators. It is now the belief of many and admitted by some of the smaller operators, that it is not so much the advance asked for by the miners as it is the recognizing of their national association. The steam heating company of this place have exhausted their coal supply and are unable to obtain any in this region. The Tyrone and Clearfield branches of the Penna railroad are loading several thousand tons of what is just now called coal that had before the strike been condemned and thrown over the tipple, and which will supply all the engines used on this side of the mountain.

The Conference at Springfield.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., May 29.—The Illinois miners and operators spent the entire day here in conference, adjourning in the evening to meet again Thursday. The object of the conference is to bring about, if possible, an agreement whereby the strike may be settled so far as it relates to the central and southern Illinois coal fields. The adjournment was taken as a means of allowing operators not here to be present at the conference. President John McBride says that if a satisfactory agreement is reached and a scale signed at this meeting the board will say go to work, because that will bring the operators of other fields to terms.

Strike Situation Growing Worse.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., May 29.—The strike situation seems to grow worse day by day. Miners show no signs of weakening and are now making a mighty effort to get railroad men to boycott non-union and convict coal. It is said that threatening letters have been received by many engineers warning them if they continued to bring non-union coal, dynamite would be placed in it to blow up the locomotive. The presence of fifteen companies of state troops at Ensley, near the Pratt mines, has not had the effect of intimidating the strikers.

Troops After Illinois Strikers.

MINONK, Ill., May 29.—With aid of three companies of the fifth regiment of infantry under command of Col. Culver, of Springfield, 200 strong, and reinforced by 175 deputies, the state of siege which has been maintained since last Saturday by a mob of 200 striking miners, Poles, Huns and Belgians, has been raised at the junction of the Illinois Central and Santa Fe tracks The sullen strikers had prevented any cars loaded with coal from proceeding to Chicago.

Coal for an Insane Asylum.

COLUMBUS, O., May 29.—In a letter to the National mine officers Superintendent A. B. Richardson of the Central Ohio insane asylum, stated that this asylum, the largest institution of the kind in the world, was out of coal, and that unless a supply was secured at once the patients would suffer. "Not a few of these innocent victims," said Dr. Richardson, "were formerly members of your union." Secretary McBryde at once ordered ten cars loaded with coal in the Hocking Valley for the asylums use.

Strikers Adopt a Novel Move.

POMEROY, Ohio, May 29.—Five hundred miners chartered a steamboat here and started down the river with a brass band on their mission of drawing miners out of the works in operation. They will visit the coal works of Gallia county, Ohio, and Senator Camden's mines at Spillman, W. Va.

Order for Arms and Ammunition.

PARKERSBURG, W. Va., May 29.—Orders have been received here by hardware merchants to send all the available arms and ammunition to Spillman, where the Camden company is operating their mines. The company anticipates an attack from rioting Ohio miners.

CLOUDBURST AT PHILADELPHIA

Damage in the Suburbs Amounting to Over $100,000.

PHILADELPHIA, May 29.—A cloudburst swept the extreme northern section of this city and the southern portion of Montgomery county last evening and within an hour did damage to the amount of over $100,000. The Reading railroad was a heavy sufferer by the storm, bad washouts blocking three of its divisions.

James Hall's carpet and yarn mill on the Aramink creek road in Montgomery county was badly damaged by the flood of water. The pattern shop, the drug house and the boiler and engine house were dashed to pieces and strewn across the railroad tracks and into the creek. The main building of the mill was flooded to the second floor, and the many valuable patterns and a nearly completed order of carpets for Marshal, Field & Co., of Chicago, were ruined.

The shoddy mills of Chas. E. Markland & Co., adjoining Hall's place, were also badly damaged. A frame engine and boiler house were swept away into the creek.

A stone dam 18 feet in height on Manor creek, which supplied Wm. C. Hamilton's Paper mill, of Fayayette, a quarter of a mile away, was burst by the swelling stream and the mass of water swept down through the mill, completely ruining the stock.

A row of ten tenements back of Hamilton's mill were flooded to the second floor and their occupants fled for their lives.

The storm along Mill creek, in Montgomery county, was especially severe and the road was almost obliterated, a number of bridges were swept away, seven or eight shoddy mills along the banks were flooded to their second floors. The damage here could not be ascertained, as the road along the creek is impassable.

BRECKINRIDGE TOO LATE.

Judge Bradley Refuses to Approve His Bill of Exceptions for Appeal.

WASHINGTON, May 29.—Late yesterday afternoon Col. Breckinridge, by his attorneys, presented to Judge Bradley, the bill of exceptions which had proved fatal to the recent decision against him in the Pollard-Breckinridge breach of promise suit. Col. Breckinridge had deposited the bond of $100 required to carry an appeal of his case, and Judge Bradley's approval of the bill of exceptions would have been all that was necessary to enter the matter on the appellate court's books.

Judge Bradley, when asked to sign the bill, refused to approve it, as under the rules of the court the other side should have been furnished a copy of it by last Thursday, while, as a matter of fact, they did not receive one until Friday, which Mr. Carlisle had refused to acknowledge service of.

Major Shelby stated that he had thought his side would have until to-day to notify Miss Pollard's counsel, but the court said the rules governing the matter were mandatory, and could not be overlooked. Major Shelby argued points of law at some length, and asked the court to be lenient, but he was overruled in every instance.

Major Butterworth says he does not know what step will be taken next in the matter.

Breckinridge Coldly Received.

OWENTON, Ky., May 29.—Congressman Breckinridge and E. E. Settle, one of his opponents, appeared here in joint debate and addressed a crowd of 2,000 people. The courthouse was made inadequate and the speaking was held in the yard. This is Settle's own county and he was received with great enthusiasm. Breckinridge was rather coldly received. He told of his services in congress and boldly said it was not a good idea to swap both horses while crossing a stream. After speaking an hour Breckinridge closed by uttering defiance to his enemies, but expressing undying love for his friends. There was great enthusiasm when Settle rose to reply. A banner was raised above him and it was several minutes before he could proceed. When he began speaking a large crowd of women joined the audience and were profuse in their demonstrations of applause.

Dime Museum Moral Freak.

LEXINGTON, Ky., May 29.—Col. Breckinridge was referred to by his opponent, W. C. Owens, in a speech at Versailles, as no gentleman, the accusation causing the wildest kind of applause. "Breckinridge draws large crowds because he is a dime museum moral freak, and morbid curiosity seekers are anxious to see and hear him," said Mr. Owens. Nearly 200 women were present and many boquets were sent up to the platform to him.

Martinsburg, W. Va., Republican.

MARTINSBURG, W. Va., May 29.—At the municipal elections held here the republicans carried every ward in the town for mayor and four out of five for the council. At the last municipal election the democrats elected their mayor by 73 majority and four out of five councilmen.

Newcomb Divorce Case.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., May 29.—Carrie Newcomb, of this city, formally of Buffalo, who sued her husband, Wellington E. Newcomb, of that city, for absolute divorce, has lost her suit. Justice Pratt of the supreme court rendered an adverse decision.

Boom at Altoona.

PHILADELPHIA, May 29.—The Pennsylvania railroad has ordered its shops at Altoona to go on full time. The working days in other shops have been increased in proportion to the work on hand.

PROGRESS OF TARIFF

What the Senate Has Done After Eight Weeks.

Thirty-seven of the Two Hundred and Thirty-one Pages of the Bill Disposed Of—Considering Lumber Schedule Now—Mr. Walsh's First Formal Speech in the Senate.

WASHINGTON, May 29.—The first day of the ninth week of the consideration of the tariff bill in the senate was devoted entirely to lumber. No vote was reached, and this schedule will probably consume two more days.

From the 2d to the 25th of April general debate was in order, and many carefully prepared speeches were delivered, two of them, those of Senators Quay and Dolph, occupying each portions of six days. But since the 25th of April the bill has been under consideration by paragraphs, for amendment, and in that time 37 pages of the bill have been disposed of, leaving 194 pages still unacted upon.

When the senate adjourned on Saturday evening three schedules—the chemical, the glass and china, and the metal—had been completed.

When schedule D, with four paragraphs, relating to lumber and manufactures of wood, was taken up, and an amendment was offered by Senator Hale to insert, as a preliminary paragraph, the provision of the existing law by which a duty of a dollar per thousand feet is levied on sawed boards; two dollars on sawed lumber and (in addition) 50 cents for each side that is planed or finished; one dollar when planed on one side, and tongued and grooved, and $1.50 when planed on two sides, and tongued and grooved. To this amendment an amendment was offered by Senator Peffer placing undressed lumber on the free list, and reducing by one half the figures in the existing law. These amendments formed the text of the discussion which lasted throughout the day.

In addition to the numerous speeches on the lumber schedule a speech on the general subject of the tariff was made by Senator Walsh (dem., Ga.), his first formal speech in the senate, and one which made an excellent impression.

It was universally declared to be one of the best delivered in the senate this session. His manner of delivery was impressive, his voice clear and resonant, his enunciation distinct and throughout the chamber every word he uttered could be plainly heard, although he spoke from the back row of seats. When he had finished Senator Walsh was warmly congratulated by his colleagues. Some of the expressions that fell from the lips of senators were exceedingly flattering.

House.

Yesterday was District of Columbia day in the house and almost the entire session was devoted to the consideration of three bills to amend the charters of street railroad corporations.

A CLAIRVOYANT'S DREAM.

Resulted in an Arrest for a Double Murder Committed Last February.

MONTICELLO, N. Y., May 29.—Herman Osterhout, an apple tree agent, residing in the vicinity of Hurleyville, Sullivan county, has been arrested, charged with being implicated in the murder of old Jabob Moore and his aged housekeeper, Mrs. Raymond, who were killed at Bushville, in February last.

The arrest, it is said, was the outcome of a clairvoyant's trance. A seeress of high reputation, hailing from Newburgh, was at the scene of the murder recently and described the murder minutely, and Osterhout answers to the description, it is claimed, she gave.

Postmasters Confirmed.

WASHINGTON, May 29.—The senate has confirmed the following postmaster nominations:

Massachusetts—William R. Hall, at Maynard; Eben Lothrop, at Provincetown.

New Jersey—Cornelius P. Convery, at Perth Amboy.

Pennsylvania—Matthew A. Black, at Sheffield; Robert McCann, at Elkland; Abraham B. Stillwagon, at Ambler; John Toole, at Minersville; George Weber, at Port Allegheny.

Killed By Lightning on a Canal Boat.

PHILADELPHIA, May 29.—While a tug boat was towing a number of canal boats down the Delaware during a thunder storm a bolt of lightning fell on the deck of the canal boat Mars, passed through the planking into the cabin and instantly killed John Ogden, 75 years old, and fatally injured Edward Lickerbocker. The lightning set the boat on fire and it was cut adrift from the others and towed to a wharf where the flames were extinguished after much difficulty.

PENCIL PUSHERS DETERMINED.

Will Persist in Their Refusal to Answer Sugar Questions.

WASHINGTON, May 29.—The report of the sugar investigating committee that will be made to the senate will disclose a procedure on the part of the committee that is entirely unlooked for and some testimony that appears to have an important bearing upon the subject of conferences between senators and members of the sugar trust. The committee will report, it is said, that they have directed the United States district-attorney to proceed against the witnesses, Shriver, Edwards and Walker, before the grand jury and have them indicted for the commission of a crime, the committee holding that under an almost forgotten act of 1857 their refusal to testify before the senate committee is an offense so punishable.

The correspondents will persist in their determination not to answer the committee's questions.

The committee will also submit the testimony of Senator Caffery, which is said to admit that a number of conferences were held between senators and the representatives of the sugar trust. It is said that in his evidence Mr. Caffery admitted that he had been present at two conferences, and in reply to questions said that one of them was held at the residence of Senator Brice. It is understood that at this conference Mr. Caffery said there were present beside himself Senators Brice, Gorman and Hill, and Mr. Havermeyer, the president of the sugar trust, and other gentlemen interested in sugar whose names the reporter could not ascertain.

Senator Caffery also told the committee that at this conference the sugar people made an argument in favor of the change from the specific rate of duty, which had at that time been agreed upon, to an ad valorem rate, which was subsequently agreed to, but that he (Mr. Caffery) opposed this change, believing that the specific rate was better for the producers of sugar in this country.

WORTHLESS COAL.

Expensive Delay to a Big Ocean Steamship.

NEW YORK, May 2.—The big Wilson line steamship Francisco, which hauled out from Prentice's stores, Brooklyn, on Saturday, bound for Hull, is here still, lying off Liberty Island. She has a large quantity of cattle on board besides a heavy cargo. Her detention is one of the results of the great coal strike, for when the engineers tried to get up steam it was found that the coal supplied was of so poor a quality that it would hardly burn. Notice was sent to the agents and empty coal barges were moored alongside the steamer to unload the bunkers into. The ship's time is probably worth $500 a day, and the incidental expenses and losses will have to be made good by the firm supplying the coal. The merchandise may have been shipped for delivery at a certain date and this would entail still further loss. It is quite evident that if the strike in the coal regions continues much longer, steamship agents will be sorely tried to find the right kind of coal for their vessels.

Countess Russell's Troubles.

LONDON, May 28.—The case of the Countess Russell, who is suing her husband for the restoration of her conjugal rights, came up in the divorce division of the high court of justice. Since the unsuccessful suit for divorce brought by the countess in 1891 the couple have been living apart, but for some reason, although it was shown in the course of the trial that the earl had outrageously maltreated her, she desires to return to him. Her application is strenuously opposed by the earl, whose counsel contended that, as the countess, in petitioning for a divorce from her husband, had falsely charged him with physical cruelty and offenses against decency, it would be impossible now for them to live together. Therefore he believed that the application ought to be dismissed without a hearing. The judge decided that the action must proceed, as he could not give judgment without knowing the facts.

Triple Hanging in Prospect.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., May 29.—The decision of the supreme court at Washington sustaining the decision of the United States circuit court in the case of Thomas St. Clair, probably means a triple hanging in California. St. Clair's appeal was a test case for three convicts, who had been sentenced to death. They are the sailors who murdered Mate Fitzgerald of the bark Hesper, on the high seas. They had plotted to kill all the officers of the Hesper and to cruise the southern seas as pirates. The decision also means liberty to nine of the Hesper's sailors, who for fifteen months have been imprisoned on Alcatras island, a United States penal station in San Francisco bay. They were held as witnesses pending a decision in St. Clair's case.

"Jack the Paint Thrower."

FORT WAYNE, Ind., May 29.—For the last two years the women of Fort Wayne have suffered from the depredations of a fellow called "Jack the Paint Thrower," and many costly gowns have been ruined by red paint and oil while walking along the streets. Miss Bird Bulger left home in company with Mont Orff. Near Harrison street Orff noticed a man lurking in the dark, and Miss Bulger felt the paint pouring over her dress. Orff caught the man, and found that he still had a quantity of paint in his possession. He is Charles Reasoner, has a large family, and for years has been employed as car inspector in the Pennsylvania company's yards.

Verdict for a Chinaman.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., May 29.—Yet Sing, a Chinese laundryman, of Yonkers, has obtained a verdict for $1,854 against the Rochester Fire Insurance company in the supreme court. Yet Sing's premises were burned in 1892. The insurance company claimed that Yet Sing did not own the property. This is the first case ever tried in the supreme court in this county where one of the principals was a Chinaman

OFF GOES BECK'S HEAD

Governor Flower Removes Buffalo's Sheriff.

Result of the Election Charges Preferred Last Fall—His Sins of Omission, if Not of Commission, Clearly Proven—The First Democratic Sheriff of Erie County in Twenty Years.

ALBANY, May 29.—Gov. Flower has issued a proclamation, or order, removing August Beck from the office of sheriff of Erie county.

This action is a result of the charges preferred against the sheriff last fall.

The governor accompanies his order with the following opinion embodying his findings in the case:

"The commissioner appointed to take the testimony in this case reports in his findings of the material facts and established by the evidence, that while the conduct of the sheriff was subject to criticism it fell short of criminal neglect and willful disregard of duty imputed to him in certain of the charges. This finding seems to be warranted by the testimony and while a decision of the case based solely on the proof adduced to show willful misconduct would probably justify a dismissal of the charges, the action of the executive is governed by no narrow legal rules, and it is for him to determine whether even in the absence of proof that the misconduct was deliberate and willful if the sheriff does not deserve removal for his failure to do his full duty in preserving order at the polls and in securing a complete enforcement of the law. His failure to do this is clearly proven by the testimony, and for his sins of omission, if not for his sins of commission, it seems to me that public interests demand his removal.

"I am less inclined to be lenient in this case, for the reason that the charges involve the matter of good order at the polls and the enforcement of the election laws. On the day before the general election in November last I issued a proclamation calling upon all election officers, all district attorneys and all peace officers to see that the laws are rigidly obeyed, to the end that good order may prevail at the polls and the right of honest franchise be sacredly guarded; and I gave warning that all failures on the part of such public officers to discharge their full duty in the complete enforcement of the laws should be considered sufficient cause for their removal.'

"The charges now under consideration are the response of complaining citizens of Erie county to the warning of that proclamation. They present the only case of charges filed with me against public officers for failure of duty at the election. The evidence shows plainly that Beck did not discharge his full duty in the complete enforcement of the laws and having chosen to ignore the official warning of the executive he must suffer the penalty of removal from office.

"To condone his conduct by a dismissal of these charges would be to encourage similar reprehensible practices in the future and break down that respect for authority which is essential to complete enforcement of law.

"While I am glad to admit that the testimony does not substantiate any charge of evil intent against the accused and affords some justification for such mistakes as were made, I do not think he showed a sufficiently sensitive regard for the obligations of his office or vigor and watchfulness in the discharge of his duties."

Beck was the first democrat to be elected sheriff of Erie county in 20 years.

Consider it a Blow at Sheehan.

BUFFALO, May 29.—The news of the removal of Sheriff Beck caused the greatest excitement in Buffalo. The anti-organization element here maintain that the removal was a direct blow at Lieut.-Gov. Sheehan, whose firm acted as counsel for the sheriff in his trial, and who was instrumental in having Mr. Beck nominated for sheriff.

Presbyterian Assembly Closes.

SARATOGA, N. Y., May 29.—The 105th Presbyterian general assembly has wound up its business here and adjourned to meet at Pittsburg on the third Thursday in May, 1895. The last hour was made the occasion of an exchange of courtesies between the moderator and the various committees of arrangements. This has been the shortest assembly since that held in New York city in 1888. Although its adjournment was reached four days before the assembly at Washington it transacted business far more important and far-reaching in its effects in the church.

Maher Defeats Godfrey.

BOSTON, May 29.—The contest between George Godfrey, the colored boxer of this city, and Peter Maher, the Irish boxer, demonstrated that the colored man has passed his prime as a boxer, and that he is no match for the younger men. He made a game fight, however, and there were many present who really believed he stood a chance of winning, despite his age. The contest lasted six rounds, at the end of which time Maher was declared the winner.

Insolvent Bank Dividends.

WASHINGTON, May 29.—The comptroller of the currency has declared dividends in favor of creditors of insolvent national banks as follows: A first dividend of 25 per cent. on the First National bank, of Watkins, N. Y. A final dividend of 2.57 per cent. on the National Bank of Deposit, of New York city, making in all 100 per cent. and interest in full on claims proved, amounting to $569,523.

Maney Must Stand Trial Again.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., May 29.—Judge Nelson, of the United States circuit court, has denied the application of a writ of prohibito to stop the trial by court martial of Lieutenant Maney for the killing of Captain Hedberg, on the ground that he had been previously tried and acquitted of the charge in the federal courts.

Death of an Early Log Driver.

PLATTSBURGH, N. Y., May 29.—Almon Thomas, who enjoyed the distinction of being the first man to successfully drive a raft of logs from Saranac lake to Lake Champlain, is dead. He was worth several hundred thousand dollars.

Treasury Gold Still Declining.

WASHINGTON, May 29.—The engagement of a further $1,000,000 in gold for shipment to Europe reduces the treasury gold to slightly less than $79,000,000.

ARMOR PLATE FRAUDS

Testimony Before the House Naval Committee.

Captain Sampson Says the Second Investigation Made By the Navy Department Revealed Little That Was New—No Evidence That Frauds Were Being Continued.

WASHINGTON, May 29.—Captain Sampson, chief of the bureau of ordnance, navy department, continued his testimony before the house committee investigating the armor plate frauds.

Chairman Cummings stated that inquiry into the first investigation by the navy department was about complete (as far as Sampson was concerned) and requested him to give all particulars concerning the second inquiry as far as it had gone.

Captain Sampson said that the second inquiry was at the instigation of Mr. Wallace, a Pittsburg lawyer representing employes of the Carnegie company, and the charges were in effect the same as those made by the first parties—plugging and retreatment of plates for test.

The secretary directed Prof. Alger, Lieut. Acherman and himself to proceed to Pittsburg and investigate the matter. They found in a general way that the information they had to submit had already been obtained.

Captain Sampson gave a detailed account of how specimens were tested and how it was alleged that these specimens were stretched to increase their strength, contrary to the agreement of the company with the government. False information was given the inspectors concerning specimens. This practice was continued, it was said, up to Jan. 1. Other workmen testified they had been instructed by Frick to discontinue all fraudulent work. There was little or no evidence of fraud obtained since the first investigation. The report in the second inquiry had not yet been submitted, but he could state now that it would contain little new matter.

Replying to a question by Chairman Cummings he said that witnesses examined did not hesitate to answer questions. The witnesses were in no way intimidated and there was no difficulty in getting witnesses who were employed at the works.

Mr. Wallace, the attorney for the informers, said several times that if he could get certain men he could furnish certain information. He was rather vague in the matter and did not mention the names of those he wanted.

Chairman Cummings called his attention to a statement made by Mr. Dunphy to the effect that the superintendent had changed the time of work on cards kept by workmen. These cards were a sort of record of the plate and were kept for the information of the government inspectors. The workman would send in a slip with three hours on it. Some one in the office would change it to 30 hours and in case he had worked four hours the four would be erased and eight substituted.

Mr. Cummings asked if the matter had been looked into.

Mr. Sampson replied that it had been and was found to have been the practice. It was done to deceive the inspector as to the time occupied in heating a plate. A plate to be properly tempered had to be heated by degrees. Such a change could not affect the quality of the plate or influence its test. It might keep the inspector from complaining that the plate was not being properly heated and result in his watching closely such a plate. It was, in all probability, done through ignorance as to the final result.

Mr. Schwabb was probably responsible for this. He was still general superintendent of the works, but had nothing whatever to do with the manufacture of armor plate. He would soon lose his place.

CIRCULATION EXCEEDS THAT OF ALL OTHER PLAINFIELD DAILIES COMBINED.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., MAY 29, 1894.

The Daily Press will not be published Memorial Day.

Be sure you get the full six pages of The Press today. The Memorial pages are unsurpassed in the history of Plainfield journalism.

The final instalment of "Ships That Pass in the Night" is printed in The Press today. It contains the strongest and best work of the book. Who can read unaffected that masterpiece of a love-letter that never was sent, or pass by without emotion the anguish of the end? When one has finished, he still finds himself going back, and reading the final chapters over and over again—and thinking, thinking.

The popularity of the fiction department of The Daily Press will be strengthened by the new story to be begun next week, a copyrighted, illustrated serial, entitled "The Overton Claim", by Martha M. Culloch Williams, which The Daily Press alone will publish, and which cannot be had in book form. "The Overton Claim" is a Southern story by a Southern woman of reputation whose works have been published in the leading magazines, and its illustrations are remarkable as the handsomest ever published in a newspaper serial.

Mrs. J. W. Robinson and sons, E. Roy and George H., of 913 West Third street, have gone to Philadelphia on a visit for a month.

Mrs. Mary Diebrough of East Front street, who has been ill with a severe cold the past three weeks, is able to be out again.

Caspar Kirkner, who has charge of a Wagner dining car on the New York Central Railroad, spent Saturday and Sunday in Plainfield.

Miss Emily Thompson of Rockview Terrace was an appreciated addition to the choir of the Somerville Baptist Church Sunday.

Mrs. Harry Marshall of East Fifth street is entertaining her eight-year-old sister of Rockville, and her three-year-old cousin of New York.

Miss Addie Carney, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John H. Carney of Craig place, has recovered from an illness of three weeks and is again attending school.

Funeral services over the remains of Mrs. Louise Nexsen DeGolyer will be held Thursday afternoon at 2:30 at the home of her father, 1,100 Putnam avenue.

Miss Josie Fritz of Somerset street accompanied to New York Saturday her friend Miss Adrienne Allison, to the steamer, to see her start safely for Rome.

The death occurred yesterday of Mrs Nancy H. Dey of 1308 Watchung avenue. The funeral will be at the house Thursday morning at 11. The remains will be interred in Newton, Sussex County.

The funeral of Mrs. Hannah M. Covey of Dunellen will be held there Thursday afternoon at 1:30 from the residence of her mother, Mrs. Lydia Johnson, and half an hour later in the Dunellen M. E. Church.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Hopkins and daughter Elsie, of Brooklyn, spent Saturday and Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Schroder, of Watchung avenue. They expressed themselves as much pleased with this beautiful city.

George Overland, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Overland, of 200 Grove street, died this morning of cholera infantum. Funeral services will be held tomorrow afternoon at 2:30. The interment will be in the Plainfield Avenue Cemetery.

Mrs. J. A. Demarest, wife of the United States Consul in Brockville, Ontario, accompanied by her lovely boy Fred, has been the guest for several days of friends in the borough and Plainfield. She is now spending a few days with her sister in Brooklyn, and will soon proceed to her home in Brockville.

The annual commencement of the Cooper Union of New York took place Saturday evening. Among the graduates receiving first-grade certificates in the Art Department was Miss M. Grace Barnes, daughter of Rev. Dr. C. B. Barnes of this city. Miss Barnes took a five-years course in art.

The pupils performing in the piano recital Saturday afternoon, as reported exclusively in yesterday's issue of The Press, were scholars of both the Misses Marsh of Madison avenue. Our informant omitted to mention the fact that part of the excellent programme was rendered by pupils of Miss Anna O. Marsh as well as by those of her sister, Miss Minnie S. Marsh.

Mrs. Augustus Hoagland died at her home on Steiner place at 9:30 this morning, aged 44 years. She had been unconscious since Friday afternoon at 4 when she suffered a hemorrhage of the brain and a paralytic stroke. Her husband is employed by Charles Clifton. She leaves a son and a daughter, both young. The funeral services will be held from her father's house, 221 Plainfield avenue, Thursday afternoon at 2:30 and the burial will be made in Evergreen Cemetery on the same avenue.

ROYAL FELLOWS, EVERY ONE.

Arcanumites Have a Glorious Time After Business Hours.

Business was soon laid aside at the meeting of the Royal Arcanum last evening and with a number of friends who had come in spite of the rain the members enjoyed the remainder of the evening with a programme provided by the committee, Henry B. Ely, Fred S. Green and A. M. Rea. Adrian Plate of Brooklyn, a skilful sleight-of-hand performer, mystified the Arcanumites especially with his tricks with cards. Brother Phillips of Evona sang alone and all sang together. A baritone solo was given by Frederick J. Pope and H. B. Ely recited. Insrumental music was rendered by an orchestra, consisting of N. H. Guttmann, Joseph Moore, Martin A. Korff, Joseph Sattels and G. T. Dunham.

A supper, furnished by W. J. Stephenson, was partaken of, cigars were passed, and the "good of the order" was fully attended to.

ABOUT TOWN.

—A shoot and clambake will take place at Benner's road-house tomorrow.

—George DeMezza drives a fast bay mare, bought of Metropolitan Stables.

—After all the torrents of rain, North avenue was dusty again early this morning.

—C. H. Hand and J. F. McIntyre have sold a lot on South avenue near Berckman street to John Mair.

—Howard Gibbs, brakeman, of Junction, was struck and badly hurt by Philadelphia train No. 525 at Bound Brook last night.

—Forty maskers will attend the Colored Y. M. C. A. entertainment tomorrow evening. Ring plays will be among the amusements.

—Judge Ulrich had a small fire in his office this morning, the result of throwing a match in a waste-basket. His basket and desk were damaged.

—R. N. Shelley, who so excellently conducted the merry-go-round last year, is now established at Somerset street and Greenbrook road for the season.

—Among other selections on the programme for Thursday evening, Miss Jackson will read "Silence", one of Mary Wilkins's most popular stories.

—Kenneth F. Sutherland of Gravesend was sentenced to two years and eight months' imprisonment for election frauds. He confessed to stuffing 2,200 bogus votes into the ballot boxes.

—Elsie Smith of Westervelt avenue was bitten on the hand by an organ grinder's monkey yesterday afternoon, as she was in the act of handing him money. The wound was cauterized.

TO OWNERS OF DOGS.
BOROUGH OF NORTH PLAINFIELD,
May 17, 1894.
The attention of all concerned is called to the following extract from an act passed by the Legislature of the State of New Jersey.
"That any person who shall own, keep or harbor any dogs, bitch or bitches shall have the same registered and numbered with the Clerk of the Borough in which the owner or person harboring the same shall reside, and shall place upon the neck of each dog or bitch kept or harbored a collar, having engraved thereon upon a metal surface, the name of the owner of said dog or bitch and the registered number thereof; and it shall be lawful for any person to kill any dog or bitch found straying off the owner's premises without such collar upon its neck
The person applying for registration shall pay the sum of one dollar for each dog or bitch thus registered."
The registry book is kept at the office of the Borough Clerk, J. K. Arnold, 92 Somerset street, and prompt compliance with the provisions of the aforesaid statute is urged.
H. R. NEEDHAM, Mayor.

The Spring House Cleaning Wisely urged by the BOARD OF HEALTH is not complete without a proper use of DISINFECTANTS. But, in choosing these, do not be misled into paying fancy prices for "patent" specialties. Common lime is better than any of them for damp cellars and stables. For vaults, drains, cess pools, the best and cheapest disinfectant is COPPERAS, supplied by us by the pound or barrel at low rates. But for use in the house, in the plumbing, in kitchen sinks, in closets, for purifying the air of sick rooms, deodorizing offensive discharges—in short, for all purposes of a household disinfectant, nothing can excel the powerful solution of chlorides made and sold by us for 15 years under the name of REYNOLDS'S ODORLESS DISINFECTANT. Quart bottles 25c. To be diluted for use according to directions on label.

Smuggled Jewelry Seized.

NEW YORK, May 29.—Special Detailed Custom House Inspector Tim Donohue, seized a valuable lot of smuggled jewelry at the Bremen line dock, Hoboken. After the baggage of the passengers of the steamship Werra, from Genoa, had been examined, he saw a man named Gaetano Crentanore, a sculptor, leave the dock. He took the passenger to the customs office and found the jewelry in his pockets. Letters were found on Crentanore, which showed that the jewelry was intended for a man named Elleridge of Milwaukee, a Mrs. Wilder of the same city and Fitzgerald Beploe of New York.

Locusts in Illinois.

DECATUR, Ill., May 29.—Millions of locusts, said to be of the 14 or 17-year family, have appeared in Decatur, coming out of the ground steadily, until some yards in shady portions of the city are perforated like a sieve. They crawl upon posts and fences and climb into trees. There seems to be no end to the pest. Farmers report the locusts thick in the country. They will certainly do great damage to fruit and shade trees, grass and shrubbery. In some quarters the locusts appear in the cellars.

Valuable Cows Killed By Lightning

UTICA, N. Y., May 29.—Ten valuable Guernsey cows belonging to S. Hoxsie, of Leonardsville, were killed by lightning. Two of them were exhibited at the World's fair last year.

Peary Auxiliary Expedition.

PRINCETON, N. J., May 29.—Professor William Libbey, of the College of New Jersey, will be one of the six gentlemen of scientific attainments who will constitute what is to be known as the Peary Auxiliary expedition, which sails from Philadelphia on a specially equipped whaling steamer on June 20. They will first look for Lieut. Peary and his followers towards the North Pole. After finding them a few weeks will be spent in Arctic exploration, and the entire party is expected home in September.

MEMORIAL DAY

THE DAY'S ORATION.

The day's oration is in flowers.
Then sing, ye gardens; sing, ye bowers;
Let Flora's loveliest banners wave
And drop above the soldier's grave,

So, June in red and May in white,
Their hands will clasp, their souls unite,
Above the mounds spread far and wide,
In vale and knoll and mountain side.

Round marbles white that speak and breathe
The floral offerings we will wreathe,
While glory's voice, with sweetest chimes,
Shall chant their names in better climes.

Then ring, ye bowers; ye gardens, vie;
Let silent eloquence reply,
And winds that wave from sea to sea
Shall breathe the anthem, All Are Free!
—New York Sun.

ROMANCE OF A RING.

It was the 30th of May. A company of tired soldiers tramped slowly through a dirty street and set tongues going among the men lolling in the doorways. Lazy housewives answered from windows open to the warm, fetid air. Children stirred up the gutters' filth with unchildlike cries; rattled the springs of idle carts or played on the curbstone and doorsteps with dice, fighting over pools like grown gamblers. It seemed as though the din of sound was thick enough to be seen. Yet a young mother lay near at hand and heard nothing but her newborn babe's low cry.

"Mio bambino?" she cooed softly, with her hand on the little bundle at her side. "Mio, mio, mio bambino!"

Her husband drew in his head from the open window and told of the passing soldiers and what he knew of Memorial day.

"Ah!" exclaimed the mother in her native tongue. "God has been good to Pietro and Bianca Nonni. Naples is beautiful, but America is kind. It remembers even its dead. We will name the child for America."

So it was. The great eyed, gentle faced boy was called Amerigo. The name changed to Merigo, Meri, Mary and—lastly and definitely—Merry.

Merry indeed! What a sarcasm! He never knew his mother's smile, her tender heart. She died before his birthday was done, happy that Pietro Nonni loved her, happy that Amerigo was her very own bambino and not knowing that the end was coming or that just a little of the right care would save her.

Poor bambino! How his father hated him! Pietro could love Bianca for her beauty and gentle grace, but for duty and pity's sake to love the squalling brat that took her from him—bah! It was not in his nature or understanding. Merry grew from the haphazard care of neighbors to the care of himself. He became used to his father's home comings, to the kicks and curses that followed. He took them patiently and rubbed his bruises in silence as he lay on his ragged bed, but he had a great many thoughts.

Eight years passed away. It was again May 30. The regiments were out, and Bianca's boy watched them on Broadway, a basket of plaster casts upon his head. A buzz of talk caused him to look up at the second floor of the store behind him. Groups of saleswomen and fitters were at the windows. His eyes rested on one whose graceful figure had won her position as a model for the display of draperies. Her face was young, but her hair was white, with a lingering of gold among its fine silver tresses. Merry looked a moment, then trudged on.

Evening found him in the upper part of the city. He had offered his wares throughout a great studio building with no success. Hungry and tired, he turned his steps toward the river to rest by its edge. He passed through a half built street and came upon a relic of former days, a house left from colonial times.

The fanlight above its door that had once reflected light and hospitality was shattered. The steps that had known the tread of gallants and the swish of silken skirts were propped and crooked. The white paint of the walls was signified by gray streaks among great gashes, the glistening knocker of the door by nail holes and the shadow of a lion's head and bit. The horse stood on a high lot, with rubbish heaped around its dusty trees and real estate signs.

Merry put his basket down and leaned against the broken wall. Above him stood the battered gatepost, surmounted by a sorry copy from an old Venetian palace of a statue of St. Christopher, holding in his arms the Christ whose infant hands closed around a globe—the world.

Merry's eyes were fixed long on the figures. He sighed as he wished vaguely for such a strong supporting arm as the saint's. His pale, patient face did not change except to flush as the evening air made him cough. His eyes followed a feeble vine from the statue to the ground and spied a patch of tended earth and flowers. He mounted a step or two of the terrace and eagerly stretched his arm to pluck a yellow tulip. An umbrella struck his shoulder.

"Ugh!" cried a voice behind him. "You Gotte. You vandal! You will steal my flowers, will you? Look out for your images."

The handle of the umbrella caught the handle of the basket. The boy, rescuing his property, with a cry, stood face to face with the white haired store model. She looked at him attentively and motioned him before her to the house. "Let me see your goods," she said.

How the steps and floors creaked! Merry's eyes were busy as he unpacked his casts.

"There are nice rooms in Bleecker street," he observed, "and"—he paused a moment as he looked slowly at the ragged walls—"clean ones."

His patroness smiled.

"Can you be alone there?" she asked. "No one will trouble me here day or night. People are afraid the house will fall."

She stamped upon the floor to let him feel it shake and hear the echoes through the silent room. He looked at her in awe.

"I am no coward, am I?" she said, smiling and showing dimples in her cheeks.

The boy's face changed; it reddened; his sleepy eyes flashed; he fairly gnashed his teeth.

"Amerigo Nonni's not a coward either," he cried. Then his face paled, and he clutched a chair as if he would have fallen.

"I am hungry," he said.

"And I," said she, taking from a handbag a small bottle and pushing it toward him. "That was my lunch, but you may make your supper on it."

Merry drew out the cork, smelled the contents and put the bottle on the table, untasted.

"My father drinks," he said quietly.

The woman's face flushed.

"Don't say I do!" she cried. "That is medicine. That is all I have to pull me through the day—all that many a store girl has, with a bite of bread."

"Can't you fight without it?" the boy asked. "My father can't fight without whisky. He's nice then. But he can get it always. I've left him for Martinelli."

The woman shuddered as if some coarseness of her own were pressed home upon her. She threw the bottle out of the window.

"You are a brave boy," she said and offered Merry bread from the closet. "I must have the money for other things," she continued, "but I can fight right well on no food at all."

Her pleasant smile showed itself again as she fingered the casts. Merry Nonni ate her supper very ungratefully, she thought. However, at the last bite he said, "I will make you casts for nothing if you send me to buy a little plaster." She looked up.

"Of your hands," he added.

It was not long till the plaster had been bought and Merry had well soaped her beautiful left hand, folding its fingers round a piece of cloth as if it held something and covered it with liquid plaster. Then, as she awaited the hardening process, she told him she would draw and draw that hand till one day he would see it in a great picture. He must never tell he saw it first in a store.

"I will be my own captain then," she said.

Merry was gently removing her hand from the plaster as she spoke, and he noticed in the mold the well defined copy of the seal ring upon her wedding finger. She followed his look from the mold to her hand and opened the seal.

"Ah!" said the boy. "There's a brave soldier!"

"There's a blue coated coward, you should say."

"But why, signora?"

"He hid his colors and stole from the enemy."

"What did he steal, signora?"

"Me. My regiment was gray coated."

Merry pondered awhile in his slow way, then showed his white teeth, smiling.

"Did you strike him as you did me, signora?"

"I tried to, boy. I deserted—but he didn't look me up."

Merry was busy with his cast. "I will take this to Martinelli," he said, "and fill it with plaster—so—and when it is hard I will knock this all away, and there will be the cast. Will you trust me, signora?"

Yes, she trusted him and gave him all the flowers in her poor little garden. He gracefully touched her hand to his forehead and lips. She assured him that act indeed proved him to be no coward, even if he could not fight and kick like his father. She was glad his coat was not blue, but gray, like her dress.

He went away, smiling, with his basket of images on his head and her image in his mind as she stood in the light of the rising moon, her gray dress and white hair standing out like a carving against the old gray house.

"Take care of yourself, Merry Nonsense," she had said. "Take a long nap in the morning for your weak back and plenty of sweets for your cough."

He was thinking he would like to cut down that blue coated coward before her eyes, when he turned a corner and came against a soldier on his tired way home from the day's long duties.

"Look out, blockhead!" the latter cried irritably.

All his father's blood boiled up in Merry's veins. Like a flash, he slipped his basket to the ground and lifted his boot to the stranger. The soldier put out his hand to push the boy aside. On one finger Merry saw the counterpart of the ring he had just cast.

"You are a spy," he cried. "I know you by your ring. She says you are a blue coated coward."

Ere the astonished man could speak Merry's trembling fingers had drawn from his basket the plaster impress of the woman's hand with the ring upon it.

"Whose hand is that?" the soldier asked in a strange, dry voice.

"A brave gray coated soldier's," the boy cried.

"And why is the hand ready to clasp something? Does it want the mate of the ring?"

Merry looked up perplexed.

"Take this and ask," the soldier said, drawing off his ring.

Merry was afraid. He did not want to lose his new friend's esteem. Suppose she should greet him in anger? It seemed as though her anger could be great, she was so brave.

"You had better go yourself," he answered.

The man turned up the child's face gently.

"You forget I am a coward," he said. "What good would it do?"

"It might make two soldiers happy forever and ever."

"Well, I will come close behind."

Merry left his basket in St. Christopher's care.

"Say," said the soldier, "be sure you say I will come all the way—all the way—if she wants me."

He saw the boy go in the old house and a light spring up in the room where Merry had been before. Happy bambino! His new friend's first kiss was for the ring, but her second was for the messenger. Tenderly as Bianca could have given it, she pressed it on the boy's pale forehead and forced him, with all a mother's care, to rest upon her bed.

"Till I come," she said, pushing back his hair and leaving him wrapped in warm covering, smiling as Bianca had done in her last sleep, with flowers in his hand as Bianca would have placed them if he had died before her.

Which of the two, so long divided, came "all the way?" Neither could have told. The statue of St. Christopher could not, even with miraculous hearing, for they wandered far away from him, the gray and the blue close together. Only under his shadow broken whispers went out.

"It was my fault."

"No; it was all mine."

"I was afraid"——

"And I"——

"To think of all these years—so dear"—

"It is not too late. This is the true beginning of our lives."

It was the true beginning of another. The daily journals of that year's 31st of May had among their headings, "An Old Landmark Gone," "A Decoration Day Burial," etc., for the tattered house fell within the hour that the regular occupant left it. It was a matter of congratulation, the papers said, that no lives were lost but one that could be spared—a homeless vagrant who had taken shelter there.

That slander was redeemed when the same journals told on the next year's Decoration day of the visit of a soldier and his wife and their decking of a little grave which bore this inscription:

"To Amerigo Nonni, who died in uniting the blue and the gray—one of the bravest of the brave."

Bianca's faith in America had not been astray. Her dead was not forgotten.—Buffalo News.

WHERE HEROES SLUMBER.

Beautiful Arlington, on the Virginia Bank of the Potomac.

The most beautiful of all the national cemeteries and the greatest as regards the number of identified dead is that on Arlington heights, near Washington. It contains 16,565 interments—12,216 known and 4,349 unknown. Its location, overlooking the Potomac and directly facing the capital, is perhaps the finest in the world. Interments of soldiers were first made in it on May 13, 1864, and the first soldier placed beneath its sod was a Confederate. Before that time most of the interments in and about Washington were made in the Soldiers' Home cemetery, northeast of the city. Eight thousand soldiers who had died in the innumerable hospitals around the capital had been buried there. Further room was becoming scarce, and Quartermaster General Meigs, glancing over the magnificent Arlington estate one evening in company with President Lincoln, suddenly conceived the idea of devoting it to the needs of the hour, and the order was soon thereafter given by Secretary Stanton.

Mr. Edward Clarke, the present architect of the capitol, personally surveyed the lines and laid out the plots in which the first interments were made.

The property was owned by General Robert E. Lee and his wife, the latter having inherited it from her father, George Washington Parke Custis, the protege of George Washington. The popular impression is that the government violently took and confiscated it as an act of retributive justice, but that notion is misleading. It had, in fact, been seized by Federal troops soon after the departure of General and Mrs. Lee for the Confederate capital, and its gently sloping acres were utilized as a field hospital, but in January, 1864, the government bought in the property at a tax sale for $26,000 and subsequently, after prolonged litigation—extending from 1877, when George Washington Custis Lee, the son to whom Mrs. Lee willed it at her death, began suit for its recovery, down to 1882, when the government appealed to the supreme court from the verdict of the Federal court in Virginia—secured a valid title to it upon the payment of $150,000 to the younger Lee.

From the first interment down to the close of the war Arlington became the central resting place of the dead from all the Washington hospitals, and as soon as the war was ended the recovered bodies from all the battlefields in the vicinity and north of the Rappahannock, notably Bull Run and Chantilly, were also gathered into it.—Washington Star.

True Heroism.

I will relate a simple incident of an act of heroism after a battle was over. Jenkins' Ferry, Ark., April 30, 1864, was a bloody field, and Reuben Coomes of Company C, Thirty-third Iowa, fought as gallantly as any of his comrades.

His captain, A. J. Comstock, was dangerously wounded, and if left without proper care was sure to die. Nothing but tender nursing by a careful friend could save him. General Steele's army was about to continue its retreat to Little Rock, and Captain Comstock must be left to fall into the hands of the enemy.

He asked if any of his company would volunteer to stay with him. Had a forlorn hope been called for he could a charge many would have disputed for the place of honor. But to fall into the enemy's hand meant that when the service of the nurse was no longer needed the soldier would be sent to the prison of Tyler, Tex. In 1864 the horror of prison life was a nightmare to the Union soldier.

Mr. Coomes came forward. Said he: "I cannot volunteer to remain here, my family at home are very dear to me, and if I should never return from the enemy's lines they would feel that I had sacrificed my life, which belongs to them as much as to me. But let me be detailed, and then my service will become a matter of duty."

And so the gallant fellow "volunteered to be detailed" for this dangerous and trying service.

He stood by his captain's cot as his regiment marched away, leaving them in the woods to fall into the hands of the enemy.

The captain's wound, though well nigh mortal, was healed, and Mr. Coomes was then sent to prison, where he languished for many months amid the disease and squalor of the prison camp. Thirty years have passed since then, but Mr. Coomes and Captain Comstock, whose life he saved, are friends and neighbors, going down the hill of life together.—Congressman Lacey in New York Commercial Advertiser.

Farragut's Sailors Were Paid.

I ordered weekly reports of the banks, and I was so certain of their solvency that I made the Citizens' bank the place of deposit for all the funds that passed through my office and used its bills in payment of all transactions.

Meanwhile my troops had been left unpaid. More than that, Farragut's fleet had not been paid at all, although if any men on earth deserved their pay it was his crew.

The admiral called upon me, explaining the destitution of the fleet, and asked me in his simplicity of character to write to Washington stating the case.

"My letter upon such a subject would be simply referred to the secretary of the navy, so your matter wouldn't go along any faster on that account. How much money do you want, admiral?"

He said he needed $50,000 in gold.

"Well, I have $6,000,000 or $7,000,000 of gold subject to my order. It is hard if this necessity of yours cannot be relieved. Tell your purser to draw on me for $50,000, and you indorse the draft for the payment of your crew, and I will answer the requisition."

"But," said the admiral, "I can never pay this money, general."

"Never do you mind that, admiral. I never expect you will, but it will be a voucher to me when I am called upon to settle my accounts with the treasury department that the money has gone for public service."—General Butler's Book.

Their Glory Not Forgotten.

Wreaths and flowers wither upon the graves of those heroes who died in defense of the Union or who lived to see a healing of sectional differences, the result of their patriotism and valor. Quick to respond to their country's call, these men marched to the front, many of them never to return to their homes, and how beautiful are those memories which intwine about each recurring Memorial day, when their sorrowing comrades throw aside the cares of daily life to strew the mounds with flowers and offer up their psans of joy that peace reigns o'er the land! But while the flowers may wither the memory of the noble men who sacrificed life that the nation might live will ever remain fresh and bright, and so long as the glorious flag for which they died waves over our reunited country will each recurring springtime see fresh laurels on their graves.

CHASED BY CAVALRY.

An Exciting Contest of Speed In Which Legs Rivaled Bullets.

"Well, it is mighty hard to tell what is the most interesting incident a soldier sees in four or five years' service," remarked W. A. Bartlett. "One of the funniest things I was in was our skedaddle at Haymarket. Custer's brigade of cavalry had been following up Stuart all day, and our division (Wadsworth's) was in the advance of the infantry, behind Custer.

"Just before sundown our command halted for the night, and about 50 of us, sharpshooters, were thrown out on picket in the edge of a wood, by a blunder, about 1½ miles from any support.

"The rebs got tired of Custer's attentions, turned back on him in force, and most of his brigade 'slid out sideways' toward Warrenton. Custer, with a couple of guns and a hundred men or so, came back our way to let our folks know that Stuart's cavalry was coming. As he passed our scattered line, Custer sang out, 'You fellows had better get out of here.' The words were hardly out of his mouth when a shell came tumbling along the ground, end over end. It was rather dark in the bushes, and Pete Riley took the shell for a rabbit. He gave it a kick, but the shell went on, and the heel of his shoe went with it. In feeling for Custer through the woods the Johnnies got our range beautifully.

"The second shell burst, and we took that as a hint to follow Custer's advice—and his example. We got out into the open ground in a sort of skirmish line just as the rebs rode out of the woods—a brigade or so of them.

"Dan Gallatin, my bunkmate, was up a tree after persimmons. He came down lively. Luckily for us all, the ground was cut up by washouts and gullies. We struck across country pellmell, 'devil take the hindmost.' The rebs rode after us, popping away with pistols and carbines. We were playing flatfoot too lively to shoot back to any extent. As we would cross a ditch we would gain a little. Then on smooth ground the horses would gain. Sometimes they were within 50 yards. A cavalryman's aim is no good, especially when he is riding as fast as he can peg it. Moreover, we were running about as fast as some bullets travel. None of us were hurt, but we didn't want to go to Richmond, and we did leg it.

"As we got within range of the old brigade we were scared. We knew when they opened fire it wasn't safe to be in front of them. However, we mostly dropped into a ditch, and some of the rebs jumped their horses right over us. The Wisconsin boys gave one volley, and the rebs rode back as fast as they came.

"After that we always felt that we could outrun any cavalry, and on one occasion we did run down a locomotive on the Alexandria road. I believe, however, her 'biler' was weak.

"But the funniest thing I ever saw was the way Dan Gallatin got out of that tree and dropped the persimmons."

The War Didn't Interest Him.

I was riding up through Arkansas with Price's army. We were on our way back to Missouri. The Yankees had let us alone so long we thought maybe they had quit fighting or had forgotten us. We were getting anxious about it. Along toward night I met a man who had lived up there in the mountains. He had been fishing and had his string of fish with him. He was going home. I was pretty full of patriotism and notions about duty. You see, I had studied the relations of the states to the nation, and the relations of the states to the states, and the relations of the states to the territories, and the relations of the citizen to the states and to the nation. I thought I knew all about it. I said to this man away up in the mountains of Arkansas:

"Why aren't you in the army?"

"What army?" he asked.

"The Confederate army, of course," said I.

"Oh, yes," he said. "I did hear something about such an army."

"Yes," said I, growing a little hot, "I thought so. And why aren't you out with it fighting the battles of the country?"

"What country?" he asked.

"This country," I said.

He looked all around him at the mountains, and then he said:

"Stranger, suppose you lived in this country, and owned all you wanted of it, and had all of the use of it you wanted, and some other fellow was paying the taxes and the expense of keeping up the government, wouldn't you think you was a dern'd fool to go to fighting about it with that other fellow?"—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Death Better Than Dishonor.

The true safeguard of the American republic lies in its ability to call from its 60,000,000 of people engaged in peaceful avocations 5,000,000 of ablebodied men ready at a moment's notice to abandon their offices, their stores, their workshops, their plows and their homes to fight in defense of the country which belongs to them and over which they rule. The noble purpose accomplished by the war, the destruction of human slavery on this continent, obscures, to some extent, one other great result of that mighty conflict. It brought to the front the American volunteer and gave notice to the whole world that the strength of a great nation lies not in its standing army nor in its extensive navy, but in the patriotism of its people; in the calm, cool and calculating courage of its citizens, who prefer death to dishonor and hold love of country coequal with love of God. The volunteer of 1776 suffered privations the half of which cannot be fully appreciated. The volunteer of 1861 bore equal horrors with the same heroic, unfaltering endurance. The tramp, tramp, tramp of 2,000,000 men echoed around the civilized world. It shook the thrones of kings and emperors; it startled from apathetic repose the oppressed and downtrodden of the earth, and above the thunder of this majestic tread rang out the glarion cry of liberty! Liberty to all nations! And it is coming so sure as day follows night and that the God of justice reigns.—General Horatio C. King.

Wouldn't Fight That Way.

Judge Sam Rice of Montgomery was, even before Sumter had been fired upon, one of the hottest of secessionists, and, by the way, was, after the war, a leader of the Republicans in the state and was nominated for congress by them and defeated by Colonel Herbert. While inciting the war spirit, Judge Rice used to say on the stump, "Why, we can whip these Yankees with popguns." He was making one of his Republican speeches in a country town after the war, when he was interrupted by a listener, who proved to be an ex-Confederate. "Look here," the latter questioned, "ain't you the fellow who told us in 1861 that we could whip them Yankees with popguns?" The question raised a shout of derision, which gave the speaker time to recover. "Yes, I am the man who told you that," he retorted; "but, d—n 'em, they wouldn't fight us that way."—Selected.

Pie Saved the North.

The southern idea of pie is extremely crude when applied to that succulent northern dish and subtly refined when directed to the political variety. The farthest development in the pie line that the native southerner has attained is to a manufacture of sweet potatoes, which is a state's prison counterfeit and forgery of the New England pumpkin pie, and even that base imitation has obtained foothold no farther south than South Carolina. Congressman Crain of Texas says that the people of Texas regard the pie family as Cæsar regarded Gaul—divided into three kinds, "the livered, the unlivered and the crossbarred."

"I overheard some years ago," said he to a writer for the Washington Post, "a great debate between a northern printer and a southern compositor on the subject of the late war. The southerner was hot, impetuous and sentimental; the northern champion calm, cool and even phlegmatic.

"'Why, didn't we lick you out of your boots at Manassas?'

"'Granted,' said the northern type sticker.

"'Didn't we smash you at Cold Harbor and wipe the ground up with you in the Wilderness?'

"'Granted,' said the other.

"'Didn't we tie you all up in knots and make rags of you all through the peninsular campaign?'

"'Granted,' said the northerner, 'but how was it at Appomattox?'

"'Yes, how was it at Appomattox?' shouted the southerner, growing sentimental as the mingled beers and whiskies they were consuming rose to his head. 'We had 13,000 poor, ragged, footsore, tired, starved veterans, without a single round of ammunition, while you had 300,000 fat, sassy soldiers, provided with every luxury and ev-every m-m-mother's s-son of 'em,' he sobbed, 'plumb f-full of pie!'"

A Hero In Gray.

It was after dark on the second day at Gettysburg, when General G. H. Stuart's brigade wrested a line of works from the enemy at Culp's Hill. Many of the enemy fell as they retreated from these works to their second line, and a large number of wounded lay between the skirmish or picket lines that were established for the night and could not be succored. Some of them suffered severely from thirst, and their cries for water were piteous. The moon was bright and the position in a large oak woods. Among those put on the skirmish line from Company A, Second Maryland regiment (William Murray's company), was William Taylor, from Georgetown, D. C., who occupied a position immediately on my right. I was somewhat perplexed to understand why the enemy's pickets just in front of us fired so much until Taylor called to me, "I've been trying to go to that fellow out there, but every time I get from behind my tree they fire on me." At length, just after they had fired at him, he called out, "You fools, I am just trying to give one of your own men some water." Notwithstanding he had been driven back at least a dozen times, he made another essay, and this time, to the credit of the enemy, he was not molested. He went to the man, who lay considerably nearer to his own friends than to us, and returned safely.

Such an act of humane heroism would have immortalized an officer of high rank, and this private's gallantry should not go unmentioned. I have never seen or heard of Taylor since the close of the war and know not whether he is alive. I have often spoken of the incident, but thought it should have wider circulation and permanent record; hence this to your widely read paper. All his comrades were fond of old Bill Taylor. He was a good fellow.—Baltimore Sun.

The Spy's Terrible Ordeal.

"Speaking of Lookout Mountain recalls a scene I can never forget," said the Rev. Dr. Pitzer of the Central Presbyterian church, an ex-Confederate chaplain. "Our scouts had captured a man whom they thought to be a Yankee spy. I never believed he was a spy, but he was court martialed and ordered shot. I rode out with the poor fellow in a little one horse wagon, both of us sitting on his coffin. I offered what consolation I could when we had reached the spot where he was to be shot. I stepped to one side to be out of range of the bullets and left him standing by his coffin to be shot. He stood there looking into the muzzle of a dozen muskets.

"'Fire!' came the order from the officer. I turned my head. There was only the snap of a dozen caps in quick succession. Some one had blundered. The guns had not been loaded. I thought they should have let him go after this, but of course it was out of the question. That poor young fellow had to stand there and watch the men load their guns with death for him. It was a terrible moment to me, and I could almost appreciate his wait for death. Moments seemed hours. At last the guns were ready. Again they were leveled upon the prisoner. A second order, 'Fire!' rang out through the stillness, and the young man lay dead by the side of his coffin."—Washington Post.

He Was Worthy of the Blue.

"I never saw more glorious conduct than that displayed by a youth in his teens, wearing the blue," said Secretary Herbert to a Washington Star reporter. "It was in the second day's fight. My regiment had charged right up among the guns of a Union battery, whose men and horses had nearly all been killed. There was one gun to which our horses had been attached. The two rear horses had been shot down in harness. The two leaders were apparently unhurt, and on one of them sat a lad, head erect, vigorously plying his whip on the other horse and striving to save his gun. He was devoting his whole soul to that purpose, utterly unmindful of our men, who were surging about him. He was literally like the Casablanca of the flaming deck. I could have touched him with my sword and was just about to beg him to surrender, when shots rang out from behind me, and he dropped from his horse, dead as he fell. He might have saved himself, but he seemed determined to save that gun or die. It was sublime, but I can never think of it without a shudder at the horrors of the sacrifices of that war."

All Honor the Nation's Defenders.

Whatever we may be on other days, today we are one. The flowers on the graves are not all roses or lilies or violets. They are not all of one color, nor do all give forth the same fragrance, but the white and the crimson, the purple and the green, all blend to form one halo of beauty, while the fragrance of the rose mingles with the perfume of the lily to load the air with odors sweeter than the incense of Hebrew altars or the spice laden breezes of Araby. So the hands that have brought the flowers have not been all one, in race or creed or party or color, but all have joined in one tribute that bears the impress of one heart, and one love, born of one loyalty to the one old flag.—Selected.

HIS FOE UNHORSED.

INCIDENT OF A CAVALRY CHARGE ON THE HIAWASSEE.

How a Brave Confederate's Life Was Saved by the Breaking of His Saddle Girths. What Might Have Happened Had There Been "Cheese Knives" For Two.

"A cavalry charge," said John Sexton, a well known member of Typographical union No. 1, "is more in the nature of a personal duel than anything else. I belonged to the Fifth Ohio cavalry and have a vivid remembrance of a charge made at Charleston, east Tennessee, in the winter of 1863. The Ohio cavalry brigade, composed of the First, Third, Fourth and Fifth regiments, under command of Colonel Long, were scattered from Chattanooga to Knoxville, guarding bridges and carrying dispatches. Four or five companies of the brigade were stationed at Charleston, on the Hiawassee river, guarding the bridge at that point. Early one morning the pickets were driven in by General Wheeler's cavalry, who had come up during the night from Dalton, Ga. The object was to capture a wagon train on its way to Knoxville. The train was guarded by a thousand or so of convalescent soldiers on their way to join their regiments in Sherman's army.

"The fighting between the Confederates and our infantry began early and was kept up until well in the afternoon without decisive results. Meanwhile the wagon train was hurried across to the east side of the river as fast as possible. When the last wagon was across, the cavalry bugle sounded to form in column of fours. I then knew our trouble was to commence. The six companies formed and proceeded in a walk through the town toward the enemy. Wheeler's command, at this time, was stretched across the small valley, fighting on foot. In cavalry, when fighting on foot, every fourth man holds four horses, and they are kept well in the rear. As we reached our infantry line, it opened and fell back, thus giving us a clear field.

"The command then came to 'Draw sabers!' and immediately after the bugle sounded, 'Right front into line.' We came into line in first class shape. The bugle sounded again the command 'rot' and shortly afterward 'gallop,' and we went for the 'rebs' with a cheer. As we thundered down upon them their line never wavered, and I could hear their officers crying, 'Steady, men; steady!' When within 75 or 100 yards, the rebel officers gave the command, 'Fire!'

"When I heard that word, I shut my eyes, and when I opened them again I found I was unhurt. After firing they pushed back and mounted their horses. But we were among them, and it was every man for himself. I was riding a spirited little mare, and she became so excited that I could hardly control her. Right in front of me was a tall, lank Confederate cavalryman, who was doing his level best to get to the rear. I rode at him with the exclamation, 'Surrender, you —— rebel!' For answer he turned in his saddle and fired a small pistol, the bullet from which I did not even hear. During this time we were racing side by side. When within striking distance, I raised myself in the stirrups and struck a blow at him with my saber. He saw it coming, threw himself on the side of his horse and thus saved his head from being split open. Being excited, I nearly unhorsed myself by the force of the blow.

"I rode again up on his left side and called on him to surrender. He politely told me to 'go to h—l.' I feinted at him, down he went again, and as he rose I struck with all my force at his head. He saw the blow coming, threw up his left arm and caught the saber stroke there. Still he would not surrender. I then made up my mind to kill him. Placing my saber en carte—that is, placing the hilt firmly at my side—I rode at him, with the intention of passing it through his body. He saw his danger, and as the point of the sword nearly touched him he again dodged by going down the side of his horse. But this time he went once too often. The belly band gave way and himself and saddle tumbled into the mud. As we were going at racing speed it was some little time before I could stop my mare. When I turned, I found him very coolly sitting on his saddle, with apparently no trouble on his mind. I said: 'You infernal fool, why didn't you surrender? You came near being killed.'

"'Well, Yank, I didn't care about going to a Yankee prison. But I tell you, if I had had a cheese knife like yours I would have made it mighty warm for you.'

"The bugle sounded the recall. We had whipped Wheeler badly, taken a number of prisoners and four small cannon, besides inflicting a heavy loss in killed and wounded. I took my prisoner back to camp, had his wound dressed, divided my meat and coffee with him and then parted forever from one of the bravest men I have ever seen."—Indianapolis Journal.

Courage In Battle.

The truth is that all battlefield courage is conventional. If two men fall to fighting, he who runs away is thought a coward. But it is a part of the science of war to know when troops have got enough and when they should run away. To sneak behind a tree and shoot at an adversary in a private fight is the meanest of all cowardice. But it is a part of the careful training of skirmishers in war to do this very thing. And for bodies of troops in battle to find positions where they are in the least danger and can shoot at badly exposed adversaries is a method that gives fame to generals. In fact, the art of war is the art of taking advantage and avoiding a fair, square, stand up, face to face fight.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Memorial Day.

Once again has come the day when the loyal survivors who helped save a nation will march with solemn steps among the graves of those who sleep. Each succeeding year sees fewer veterans and more graves, and ere long the loving task of comrades will be performed by the sons of those fathers, who believed with the ancient Romans that it was sweet and beautiful to die for one's country.

Fredericksburg.

The increasing moonlight drifts across my bed,
And on the churchyard by the road, I know,
It falls as white and noiselessly as snow.
'Twas such a night two weary summers fled—
The stars, as now, were waning overhead.
Listen! Again the shrill lipped bugles blow
Where the swift currents of the river flow
Past Fredericksburg. Far off the heavens are red
With sudden conflagration. On yon height,
Linstock in hand, the gunners hold their breath.
A signal rocket pierces the dense night,
Flings its spent stars upon the town beneath.
Hark!—the artillery massing on the right,
Hark!—the black squadrons wheeling down to death!
—Thomas Bailey Aldrich.

ASLEEP AT HIS POST.

BY GILBERT PATTEN.

[Copyright, 1894, by American Press Association.]

With muffled drums and measured tread the little band of battle marked and time scarred veterans—honored heroes of the noble army that fought to preserve the Union—marched through the cemetery that lay sleeping on the southward sloping hillside. The balmy breath of springtime was in the air, and when they passed onward, after pausing at the last resting place of some dead comrade, the sweet perfume of flowers rose from the green grass that grew above the departed soldier's breast, while a tiny flag—the dearly loved red, white and blue—fluttered beside the marble tombstone.

At length they halted by a white shaft that bore the name of "John Loring," followed by this strange inscription:

Pardon is granted because of his faithful service and splendid record as a brave and loyal soldier. A. LINCOLN.

With a single exception every head was uncovered and bowed as the flowers and flag were placed on the grave. One there was among them, however, who stood up stiffly, with his cord encircled hat unremoved from his white head, his age lined face grave and emotionless, as if carved from adamant.

Never in all the years since they began decorating that grave had Uncle Dan'l Brinton been known to remove his hat there or in any manner show he mourned for and honored the sleeping comrade with whom he had fought almost shoulder to shoulder in the same company. Publicly he made no explanation of his singular conduct, and when questioned he simply shook his head and looked grimmer than usual. Any other man of that company would have received the severest censure from his comrades, but Uncle Dan'l was acknowledged to be "a little queer" and "strait laced," so his act was passed over in silence.

There were those, however, who hinted that there had once been a feud between the two men, and that even death had not softened the heart of stubborn old Uncle Dan'l; but, if this was true, the facts were not public property.

At all the other graves where the veterans paused and uncovered he removed his hat and bowed his head with the rest, his grim features softening and something like a tender look creeping into his eyes, once so clear and bright, but now growing dim with advancing age.

Among those gathered at the cemetery to watch the solemn memorial ceremonies was a plainly dressed but pretty girl of 18. She was attired in common print, and the shoes on her feet were made for wear instead of beauty, but nothing could conceal the grace of her budding figure, the ladylike shapeliness of her almost delicate hands, the pearly whiteness of her small and even teeth and the limpid sparkle of her clear blue eyes.

There was something like a look of mingled pride and pain on her face as she saw Uncle Dan'l stand up so rigidly by John Loring's grave, and she glanced slyly at a manly young fellow a few years older than herself who stood with his hand on the bit of a spirited horse, restlessly tapping the tops of his high boots with the riding whip he carried. She saw the young fellow was watching Uncle Dan'l all the while, biting his lip and occasionally pulling at his light mustache.

When all the graves had been visited and the ceremonies had been completed, Uncle Dan'l saluted the commander and fell out of the company, immediately coming straight toward the girl, whose face brightened as he approached.

"I'm relieved from marchin back to town, little one," he said. Then his eyes fell on the young man in the riding suit, and he started a bit, a shadow settling on his face while he went on, lifting his voice a trifle. "I'm gettin purty old fur marchin, but I've alwus done my duty in ev'ry campaign, and I never slept at my post."

The young man wheeled suddenly and looked straight at the old soldier, but Uncle Dan'l turned his back, still speaking to the girl:

"Come, Jennie, we'll go home now. Them as don't deserve it has been honored like them as do, and the decoratin is all over."

She took his arm, and they went slowly down the road together, followed by a longing gaze from the dark eyes of the young fellow in the riding suit. Jennie glanced back and saw him looking. The color of ripe berries came to her cheeks.

* * * * * * *

Jennie Brinton was the daughter of Uncle Dan'l's brother, who died in debt and left the girl to be cared for by the old soldier, who had not even a meager pension to aid him. He proved faithful to his trust, although it was anything but an easy task, while time and constant association led him to love her as tenderly as if she were his own child.

They lived alone in the little old cottage that stood in a quiet hollow by the "back road," the isolation of the place, together with Uncle Dan'l's hermitlike ways, preventing many of the neighbors from visiting them. Their lives passed peacefully and rather monotonously, but they seemed content with their humble lot, apparently caring little for things beyond the bounds of their tiny world.

On the night of this Memorial day Uncle Dan'l sat by the open cottage door and smoked his pipe, the light of the setting sun showing a troubled look on his face, while Jennie moved briskly about the room, attending to her light household duties and humming a bit of a song.

All at once the old man removed his pipe, struck it against the edge of the chair to knock out the ashes, straighted up and cleared his throat, speaking with an effort:

"Come here, little one."

She approached, a wondering look on her face, for she saw by his manner he had something serious to say. He took her hand and pulled her down beside him. She sat on the floor, resting her arm on his knee and her head on her arm, while his once sinewy fingers sought her curls, which the last slanting bars of sunlight made bright with a golden tinge.

The man hesitated about beginning, but suddenly plunged into his subject in an abrupt and awkward manner.

"You're gettin to be purty nigh a woman now, Jennie, and I know it ain't long before you'll be thinkin of gettin married. It's natteral—it's natteral. I hope to see ye tied to some good man ere I go to join my comrades who have been mustered out before me, which time can't be fur away."

"Oh, Uncle Dan'l!" she cried in genuine distress. "Please don't talk of that."

"I've got to talk of it," was his stubborn retort. "Something I saw today makes me feel it's needful and right. My old eyes ain't so sharp as they used to be, but they saw that young Nat Loring looking at ye, little one, in a way that meant a pile—and them same eyes saw ye blush. That's why I feel it's needful to talk now, for I want to warn ye ag'in any one with the Loring blood in his or her body. Keep clear of that young man, Jennie."

"What have you against Nat Loring, uncle?"

"He's the son of a man who slept at his post and was condemned to be shot."

"But was pardoned by the president 'because of his faithful service and splendid record as a brave and loyal soldier.'"

The old man's face darkened and became still harsher. His voice was not steady as he cried:

"That sounds very well, but let me tell ye there was a wonderful influence brought to bear on the president to obtain that pardon, or John Loring would have died the death he deserved. His son is a chip of the old block! Don't let him fool ye, little girl! He has money, but there is treacherous blood in his veins, and why should he—as he can have the pick of the young ladies

"SAY YOU WILL MARRY ME, JENNIE."

in the village—care for a poor girl like ye? Oh, Jennie, you must see his love is not honest!"

"I think you are prejudiced against him, uncle, as you must be against his father. Nancy Jones told me you and John Loring had trouble over a woman, and—"

Uncle Dan'l arose quickly to his feet, his face working with the anger he could not suppress. Clinching his hands, he literally grated:

"Nance Jones is a busybody—a gossip—a meddlin woman! She had better mind her business and keep her nose out of other folks' 'fairs! Mind what I tell ye, Jennie, and steer clear of Nat Loring. If you don't, ye'll regret it as long as ye live." And then he walked out of the cottage, leaving a dismayed and downcast girl behind.

* * * * * * *

Spring slipped into summer, and the long warm days of July and August passed away. September came to turn the forest leaves from green to brown and crimson. The smaller song birds had already departed, and in stubble fields the robins were gathering in flocks preparatory to the flight they would soon take to a milder clime. In the long dead grass crickets chirped mournfully, and there was a brooding sadness in the smoke blue air.

Uncle Dan'l came to the cottage door shaded his eyes with his hand and gazed across the hollow toward the spot where the winding stream disappeared into a grove that had been touched here and there by the lurid brush of Jack Frost. There was a troubled look on the old man's face as he muttered:

"Wonder why Jennie goes over there so often? She don't seem like herself no more; acts like she had a secret from me. I don't like it—I don't like it. She oughter know I'm the best friend she's got in all the world. I'm jest goin over and see if I kin find her."

With something like a look of shame on his wrinkled face he took a stout cane from behind the door. Until that present month he had never carried a cane, but a severe attack of rheumatism came with the first warning of cold weather and forced him to it at last.

Away across the hollow he slowly trudged, finally reaching the grove. The sound of voices came to his ears, causing him to halt and lift a shaking hand to his heart, while his face grew gray. Then he stumbled forward with almost frantic haste, suddenly coming upon a young man and a girl, who were standing beside a great tree that grew close by the soft flowing stream.

The young man was holding the girl's hands, speaking earnestly, while her head was bowed and her eyes were fastened on the ground. These were the words heard by Uncle Dan'l:

"Say you will marry me, Jennie. You have known me long enough to love me. Say you will marry me, and I will go to your uncle and ask for you."

She shook her head, crying out in a frightened voice: "No, no; you must not do that! You don't know Uncle Dan'l! He has forbidden me ever speaking to you, and he would be very angry if he knew I came here to meet you. I feel guilty and wretched every time I have done so, but I can't help it, Nat—I can't help it!"

"What have I ever done to make him feel thus toward me—what has he against me?" cried the young man.

"I'll answer that question!" broke in a hoarse voice as Uncle Dan'l suddenly appeared before them. "Ye're the son of a man as forgot his duty and slept at his post!

Pale and trembling, the girl left Nat Loring and advanced to her uncle's side. He took her hand and drew her close, his eyes fastened on the young man all the while, as he continued:

"I hev tried to protec' this little lamb from ye. I warned her, but ye found a way to sneak around and lead her inter de deceivin the best friend she had in the world. That's like a Loring—they're de ceptious."

"There was no deception intended, Mr. Brinton," protested Nat stanchly. "I was urging her to let me go to you and ask for her hand when you appeared. I was in ear nest, for I love her."

"Love her! Bah, bah, bah! I know the kind of blood there is in yer veins. It's treacherous. If ye think ye love her today, tomorrow ye may think ye love some other girl."

"My love is true. It will never change. I will marry her today."

"Marry her!" almost shouted Uncle Dan'l his face now dark as a stormcloud. "You marry my little lamb! I'd rather see her dead and buried." Then he almost dragged the girl from the spot, urging her away with passionate words and earnest entreaties.

"You may change your mind some day, Mr. Brinton," called Nat.

The old man turned to fling back, "Never, sir—never, never!" and the unfortunate lover was left alone by the trysting tree and the murmuring brook.

* * * * * * *

Winter came, and the little cottage in the hollow was nearly buried beneath the drifts of snow that blew down from the hills. At times the back road was quite abandoned, leaving the old man and the girl shut off from the rest of the world.

To make matters worse, Uncle Dan'l was not very well, for the time was past when he could welcome cold weather and enjoy it. Still he was brave, and he tried to be cheerful for the sake of Jennie, whom he often saw sitting by the window where she could look out across the hollow to ward the spot where the winding brook—now icebound and buried by snow—disappeared into the grove, a plaintive sadness in her eyes.

At last the great storm of the winter came on. For four days snow fell steadily, and the wind howled down from the hills. Three days after the storm had ceased Nat Loring came down the back road on snowshoes. He paused where he could see the roof of the cottage in the hollow peeping from a great bank of white. There was no sign of life about the place, not even a trace of smoke rising from the chimney.

With a heavy feeling of dread in his heart, Nat hurried down to the cottage and made his way round to the door, against which the snow had drifted high. He rapped again and again, the knock being answered after a time.

The door opened and a white faced ghost of a girl stood there, clinging to the latch for support. She saw him, and her lips moved, but made no sound. He leaped into the room and caught her in his arms barely in time to keep her from falling.

"Merciful heaven, Jennie!" he gasped. "What is it? What has happened?"

"Uncle Dan'l—he is so ill—I dared not leave him a moment. There are no matches in the house to build a fire."

"And you are nearly perished of cold! This is terrible! Why didn't I come before?"

He disengaged his feet from the snowshoes and assisted her to a chair near the bed on which the sick man was lying. In a few moments he had a fire built in the stove.

"You look hungry, Jennie. I believe you are nearly starved," declared Nat.

"I have not eaten anything for two days," was her confession. "The only food in the house I kept for uncle. We are out of provisions, and there was no way of getting more."

Nat was horrified. On the bed the sick man was muttering deliriously of his army days. He saw the visitor, but did not recognize him.

It was late that afternoon when Uncle Dan'l became himself once more, to find the village doctor by his bed, with Jennie and Nat close at hand. The old soldier looked long and steadily at the young man, and then he faintly said:

"I thought it was a dream, but I see ye have really come in time to save my poor lamb. I've been an old fool, but"——

"There, there," broke in the doctor soothingly; "you must not talk now. It will weaken you."

"I've got to talk now, doctor, or never. I've made my last campaign, and I'm goin to be mustered out right away. The commander in chief will soon give me an honorable discharge." Then he turned to Nat and Jennie, motioning them to approach. When they were close by the bed, he went on, his voice growing weaker with each moment:

"I alwus thought the one thing I held against John Loring was that he slept at his post. I thought I had forgot he won the woman who once promised to marry me. But as I lay here I had a vision that told me what a selfish, revengeful old wretch I have been."

The girl's fingers touched his lips, and she whispered entreatingly, "Hush, uncle."

"I can't hush—I won't hush," he gasped, a shadow settling on his weary old face. "My strength is goin. Nat, will ye marry my little one? Will ye love and protec' her as if she was yer own life?"

"Heaven knows I will," was the reply.

"Then take her. She'll soon need another to guard her. I've—I've been faithful to—the end—faithful to my duty. I've stood by my post to the last, but now—I'm tired—and I—must—sleep."

With the weeping girl's loving kiss on his lips, Uncle Dan'l closed his eyes in that dreamless slumber that comes when the campaign of life is ended.

* * * * * * *

When another Memorial day came around, the fading band of veterans found a new grave on which to place a tiny flag and fragrant flowers. Uncle Dan'l slept not far from where John Loring was buried, and little Jennie, with her husband at her side, dropped a tear for both. But through the shadows of her sorrow shone the sunshine of perfect love.

Generals of the Civil War.

The generals' commissions held and received during the war or issued at the close were as follows: Generals, 1; lieutenant generals, 2; by brevet, 1. Major generals U. S. A., 11; by brevet, 152. Major generals U. S. V., 128; by brevet, 288. Brigadier generals U. S. A., 36; by brevet, 187. Brigadier generals U. S. V., 561; by brevet, 1,170. There were also 8 generals of state troops in service of the United States in 1861. There were 38 generals killed and 29 mortally wounded in action, and 53 died of disease.

Some of the prominent names had more than one representative leading to confusion in reading history at this date. Of the name of Anderson there were 5, of Baker 4, of Bartlett 4, Blair 4, Bulls 2, Buford 2, Butler 2, Cox 2, Crittenden 2, Curtiss 2, Davis 7, Dodge 2, Doubleday 2, Ewing 3, Fairchild 3, Farnsworth 3, Foster 4, Fry 3, Garrard 4, Graham 4, Granger 3, Grant 2, Green 3, Gregg 3, Griffin 3, Grover 2, Hamilton 4, Harrison 3, Hatch 2, Hornley 2, Hays 3, Hooker 2, Howard 2, Howe 2, Humphrey 2, Humphreys 1, Hunt 3, Johnson 7, Jones 9, Lyon 2, Mansfield 2, McCall 2, McCook 5, Mitchell 4, Palfrey 2, Palmer 4, Patterson 5, Porter 4, Potter 5, Reno 2, Reynolds 3, Richardson 4, Robinson 4, Russell 3, Schofield 3, Sherman 3, Sickles 2, Slocum 2, Smith 30, Sumner 2, Thomas 8, Tyler 3, Warren 3, Wilcox 2, Willcox 1, Wilson 7, Wood 5, Woods 2, Wright 7 and many others.

The Perfect Union of the Present.

It should be remembered that there never was such a complete union as since the civil war—a union in feeling and in desires, in purpose as well as in form. In other years, before the sixties, the skeleton of an "irrepressible conflict" was always marring every feast; the specter of war was always waving its hand over our most patriotic anniversary. Now the past is buried in the grave with its dead, and the nation goes forth to new life, new hopes, to a destiny higher and nobler than would have been possible under the old regime.

MAY 30.

Hang out the flag, the dear old flag, upon the outer wall,
I hear again the fife's shrill notes, the bugle's mellow call.
Once more the veterans fill the ranks, in files not serried, though,
As when they marched into the south some thirty years ago.
I hear the sound of marching men, the tramp of myriad feet,
The steady footfalls echo all along the paved street.
They follow where "Old Glory" leads, with solemn step and slow,
Not light and springy as they marched some thirty years ago.
Year after year they fewer grow, their ranks are thinning fast,
And more graves dot the hillside slopes as every May goes past,
And gray heads nod along the line where dark hair used to grow
When marching down in Dixie's land some thirty years ago.
I seem to view again the scenes when men went marching forth;
I seem to see again the grand uprising of the north;
I hear again the echoing cheer, the plaudits of the crowd,
And see the boys march to the front with valiant mien and proud.
I see the father's brief farewell, the mother's fond embrace;
I note the lover's sad goodby, the lorn wife's tear stained face;
The children's half bewildered look so suited to their years,
When tinsel and display so ill seem cause for mother's tears.
I hear the ringing cheers for those who're marching forth to meet
Honor and fame and victory, perchance death or defeat.
Some went to meet a shattered life, with valiant hearts and brave,
And some, like those who march today, were marching toward the grave.
I seem to see again arise the clouds of sulphurous smoke;
I hear again the clanging hoofs, the saber's vigorous stroke;
I hear the p-i-n-g of minie balls, the cannon's loud mouthed roar,
The clash of steel, the human yells, the fiery hate of war.
I see the bloody pictures made upon a landscape green;
I see the comrades' parched lips wet from the same canteen;
I see men die for other men; I see the true and brave
Form comradeship and brotherhood that lasts beyond the grave.
I hear again the battlecry that rang at Malvern Hill,
The cheer that rose at Round Top, the shout at Chancellorsville;
I see again the sailor men sweep up through Mobile bay;
I see the sights on Lookout Heights and Allatoona's fray.
I see the famous seaward march; I see the bummers' foray;
I see the mine at Petersburg burst up with columns gory.
The panorama passes on, with shriek and yell and rattle,
The pandemonium and din and carnage of the battle.
Now all goes calmer once again, and Johnnies homeward march,
And flags are waved, and cheers are given, and towns their highways arch.
Sweet peace smiles on the land once more, but many sad tears flow
For those who staid in Dixie's land some thirty years ago.
The panorama's passed away; the years have sped along;
I hear again the tramping feet, the murmur of the throng.
'Tis not a gala day parade, nor yet a martial show,
As when they marched to Dixie's land some thirty years ago.
Hang out the flag, the dear old flag, upon the outer wall
When sounds again the shrill toned fife, the bugle's mellow call.
Once more the veterans fill the ranks and tramp with footsteps slow
To honor those who tramped with them some thirty years ago.
They hide no hatred in their hearts for those who wore the gray,
But comradeship of bygone years will bind brave hearts for aye.
With those who struggled side by side fraternal love must grow
As ranks grow thin of those who marched some thirty years ago.

HARRY J. SHELLMAN.

The Origin of Memorial Day.

As a contribution to the discussion as to where and when Memorial day originated I will quote from my "war log," when I was involved with the fortunes of the Army of the Potomac:

Warrenton, Va., Nov. 11, 1862.—We arrived here Nov. 8 and are camped back of the town, which is quite a pretentious city, with a fine hotel and lofty courthouse and many pleasant residences. There is an air of desolation around, and the yellow flag is flying from what were rebel hospitals, and some are yet. A graveyard between us and the town is nearly filled with the graves of rebel soldiers, which are frequently decorated with wreaths of "immortelles," the spirit of the town being intensely "secesh." G——and myself had a pass on Monday and were reminded of this by a couple of ladies and some gentlemen on a porch commenting on and laughing heartily at our officers as they passed by, and another couple, one with black curls—very pretty—went by us with a score of wreaths on their arms to decorate the grave of some soldier taking his rest. I think the graves are more particularly cared for when we are around, but we think the more of them for it anyway. Our soldiers take very little notice of such demonstrations. A number of shopkeepers take both Confederate and Federal money.—G. T. in Washington Star.

MEMORIAL DAY GEMS.

As the eastern worshiper, before he enters the precincts of a holy place, divests himself of his workday garments lest they profane it with their grossness, so should we leave behind us the passions and prejudices of our daily lives as we approach the tombs of the mighty dead of our republic. These are the shrines of American patriotism.—John S. Wise.

Bury hate, banish strife, keep alive love and hope, and under the flag of our Union and that banner on which is inscribed "Fraternity, Charity and Loyalty" let us march on to that greater and grander destiny which should be the fruitage of the tears and blood of our generation, and of the million heroes whose memory we honor by the beautiful ceremonies of Memorial day.—J. H. Davidson.

The fields where lie buried the heroes of the struggle for the preservation of the Union are more than cemeteries. They are gardens of glory where shall blossom eternally the most splendid flowers of patriotism.

OUR NATIONAL CEMETERIES.

Fame's Eternal Camping Grounds, Where Sleep Our Soldier Dead.

Eighty-three national cemeteries, wherein 330,700 soldiers are sleeping their last long sleep, have been established within the boundaries of the United States. The laying out of these great gardens of graves and maintaining them in such a way as to deserve this latter appellation have cost the nation a sum of money large enough to disprove, at least in a measure, the old time saying that "republics are ungrateful." But the money that has been expended to properly mark and adorn the resting places of the brave men who died that the nation might live is not and has not been expended grudgingly. It has been paid out freely as the last and only possible tribute to the memory of men as brave as ever lived, and who fought for home and liberty. In thus commemorating the deeds of her common soldiers the United States is quite unrivaled by any other nation, ancient or modern.

This noble work could not have been accomplished but for wise and patriotic foresight exercised almost at the beginning of the war. In September, 1861, the secretary of war issued an order to the effect that accurate and permanent records be kept as to all deceased Union soldiers, and this order was at once followed by the issuing of blank forms through the quartermaster's department to hospital surgeons and all others who could use them. On the battlefields when the Federal troops were victorious great care was taken to bury the dead in such a way that each grave could be marked, and headboards provided by the general quartermaster were set up. Only on fields where the Confederates won were the dead buried without marking the graves. Soldiers who survived the southern prisons in many instances marked the graves of their comrades who died, and records were kept everywhere it was possible to do so, so that the mortuary records of the great civil contest exceed anything else of the same nature in the world.

It was in the second year of the war that congress authorized the president to purchase grounds and have them prepared for soldiers' cemeteries. The next year such graveyards were dedicated at Chattanooga, Stone River and Gettysburg. It was at the dedication of the last named of these three that President Lincoln delivered that address which, spoken modestly as it was, did not then attract the attention of its hearers as anything greatly out of the ordinary, but which, when it was telegraphed over the land and read in the newspapers, speedily took high rank among notable spoken passages and has since been accorded a place among classic orations. The national cemetery at Arlington was laid out in 1864, that at Antietam in 1865.

In pursuance of the general plan of 1865, 17 cemeteries were established in Virginia, 7 in Tennessee, 6 in Kentucky, 4 in North Carolina, 4 in Louisiana, 3 in Mississippi, 3 in Maryland, 2 in South Carolina, 2 in Georgia and 2 in the District of Columbia. In the north and west 4 were established in Illinois, 3 in Missouri, 2 in Indiana, 1 in Iowa, 2 in Pennsylvania, 2 in New York and 2 in New Jersey. In many places besides these the government has purchased small plots of ground where a few soldiers lie, and several cemeteries contain government plots wherein the bodies of Confederates who died in Federal prisons are buried. Less than one-fifth of the entire number whose graves are now marked and tenderly cared for lie where they were first interred.

Five of the national cemeteries contain the bodies of United States soldiers who fell in other wars than the struggle for the Union. One of the most notable is near the City of Mexico. Another is in Montana. In the latter lie the bodies of 918 regulars, including the 300 brave men who were massacred with Custer by the redskins.

It is a thing that every American may be proud of that all these cemeteries are kept in superb condition. The cemetery at Arlington heights, near Washington, is the most beautiful and contains the largest number of graves of unidentified dead. The total number of interments there is 16,535, of which but 4,349 are of unidentified soldiers. The first soldier buried there was a Confederate, on May 13, 1864.

The grave of Sheridan is a striking feature of the Arlington cemetery, where have also been gathered the bodies of most of those who fell at Bull Run, Chantilly and other battlefields in the vicinity. A massive monument of sarcophagus form, marking the bodies of 2,111 unknown soldiers, attracts much attention, as does also the Temple of Fame, a circular structure composed of eight columns surmounted by a dome. The columns are marked by the names of Washington, Lincoln, Grant, Farragut, Humphreys, Reynolds, Garfield, Thomas and Meade.

The cemetery at Gettysburg, with its numerous monuments and its 3,592 tablets; those at Shiloh, with 3,597; Vicksburg, with 16,633 (3,913 identified and 12,720 unidentified); Fredericksburg, with 15,274, of which 12,786 are unknown; Nashville, with 16,546; Salisbury, N. C., with 12,137, of which only 102 are known; Memphis, with 13,984; Andersonville, with 13,702, all identified but 923; Chattanooga, with 13,036—all the national cemeteries are, in fact, interesting, especially at this time, and all receive alike the attention of the government. The number of Confederate soldiers' graves so cared for is of course much smaller than the number of Union soldiers' graves, but they are as carefully tended and watched as the others.

A PUBLIC BENEFACTOR.
THEY ALL SAY THE SAME.
Don't Hesitate, but Call and Be Convinced That Every Statement We Make Is True.

To those who do not already know that there is established in Newark, at 105 Halsey street, a physician who stands in the foremost rank of his profession, who is indorsed by the leading colleges of the country and who can prove by witnesses right here in Newark (not by one, but by hundreds) that he has succeeded in curing cases that have been utterly given up by other physicians, and good ones, too. To those who do not these facts we state that any person, rich or poor, old or young, is welcome here and receive examination and advice free of charge.

Thousands praise the day they came to us for treatment. There is no guess work, no experimenting, no painful operation. No matter how difficult the case, no matter how much of the physician's time it may consume, the diagnosis will not only be thorough, it will be absolutely free. There is no taint of quackery or deception; no claim or statement is made that is not borne out by facts and living witnesses.

Mrs. Abby A. Ray, late of 86 Grove street, East Orange, who now lives at 400 Ellmore street, Escanaba, Mich., writes, under date of January 12: "The medicine arrived this morning and I am so glad it came. I am almost out, and it has helped me so much and I am so much pleased with its wonderful effort on my broken down system that I would like to testify to your great success in my case. I am feeling as well now, in fact better, than I had ever hoped to again."

This is one of many letters that we receive daily. We have the originals at our office and if you wish you may see them. Another thing: We never publish or reveal a patient's name unless they so desire.

THE CHORAL'S ANNUAL.

An Excellent Musical Programme, and Officers Elected.

The annual meeting of the Plainfield Choral Society held in Vincent chapel last evening was attended by nearly 100 members. A well arranged programme by members of the society was presented as follows:

Piano, four hands—"Awaking the Lion", Kontski
Miss Utter and E. J. Fitzhugh.
Baritone Solo—"The Tear".....Stigelli
William Holmes.
Piano Solo—"Aufschung".....Schumann
Miss Lavinia French.
Soprano Solo—"The Message".....Blumenthal
Mrs. Asa Collier.
Bass Solo—"Romeo and Juliet", William Runyon
Piano Solo—"Berceuse".....Chopin
Miss French.
Soprano Solo—"Marguerite".....Perring
Mrs. Collier.
Baritone Solo—"Sailor Song".....Mr. Holmes

The selections were listened to with much pleasure. Mr. Runyon responded to an encore and Mrs. French gave a polonaise andante in E flat by Chopin in answer to continued applause.

Secretary Nelson then read his report of the season's work. He commented at length upon the work at the concerts, and said that the training received at the Monday evening rehearsals in Vincent Chapel, which prepared the society for the rendering of the difficult "Elijah", had been so thorough that he looked forward to next season for a most successful series. There had been held 31 regular and three extra full rehearsals, three extra afternoon rehearsals for sopranos and altos and two in New York with the soloists and the orchestra. In concluding he said: "The secretary takes pleasure in noting the fact that our entire city press has shown a most kind and appreciative disposition towards our society during the past season, and has been very generous with its discriminating but generally very hearty and laudatory comments in regard to our public performances."

After the report of the treasurer had been presented the following officers were elected:

President—C. W. McCutchen.
Vice-president—D. E. Titsworth.
Secretary—Nelson Runyon.
Treasurer—George T. Rogers.
Directors—Daniel E. Davis, R. J. Shaw, Rev. W. R. Richards.

Refreshments were served at the close of the business session.

Weakfish Are Running.

The return of the weakfish every Spring brings joy to the hearts of anglers, and, strange to say, the smaller the fish the higher the hopes of the fishermen. If in the first run of these beautiful sea trout the catch exhibits large fish the old anglers shake their heads and look sad, because that is a sign that the game will be scarce during the season. But if the fish are small the fishermen are delighted, because that furnishes the evidence of plenty and of future happiness.

Well, let the anglers be joyful; the first fish captured in Princess Bay were small. At the Great Kills, Staten Island, on Sunday afternoon, two gentlemen, members of one of the numerous clubs there, captured six "weaks" and brought them ashore in triumph. The enthusiasm that the little beauties created was great indeed, and the event was celebrated in due and ancient form. The proprietors and guests of the two hotels there joined in giving an ovation to the two lucky fishermen. The man who catches the first fish is always held in the highest esteem at the Great Kills throughout the season.

NEWS OF NEAR NEIGHBORS.

Scotch Plains.

George E. Collins has disposed of his ice business. The purchaser is Millard F. Wheeler of Cranford. Wheeler will continue to get ice from the Plainfield Ice and Cold Storage Company.

Mrs. Jack Collins went to Brooklyn Sunday to visit her father.

Vincent J. Sisser and family of Bergen Point have moved into the old Scotch Plains Hotel. He brought a herd of horses with him.

Cornelius Messler is now driving a new bay mare which he bought of Charles Monfort of Rahway.

WEST END NOTES.

James Penny of Grant avenue has been taken to Muhlenberg Hospital.

David Gray of Grant avenue is suffering with a sprained back.

The Ladies' Aid Society will give a strawberry and ice-cream festival in Hope Chapel June 1 and 2.

David Pond has received the contract to erect the two additions on Hope Chapel. The work began yesterday.

The West Ends defeated the T. A. B's in a game of ball by the score of 21 to 11.

Pond Machine workmen will have Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday off.

Twelve wagon loads of ice were taken out of the ice house at Grant avenue yesterday, to supply consumers.

WEST ENDER.

Vindicated.

Complete investigation has been made of the idle gossip concerning the finding of a child's body in the yard at 410 East Fourth street, and the authorities and The Press are fully satisfied that Mr. and Mrs. Terry, the former occupants of the house, have absolutely no knowledge whatever of the affair.

$100 Reward, $100.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the one positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio. Sold by druggists, 75c.

JOHN HAND CAMP.

Sons of Veterans Honor the Memory of Plainfield's First Martyr to the Cause.

Commander George W. Pollitt of Paterson, Mustering Officer Jacob Sherry of Jersey City, and Past Commander Drake of Elizabeth, assisted by Past Commanders M. C. Dobbins, W. C. Smith, William Hand, Chaplain John Goodman, and H. C. Drake, of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., mustered in the newly organized camp of Sons of Veterans last evening.

Members of both Grand Army Posts and of the Woman's Relief Corps were present, and the attendance was very large.

Forty-one men were mustered in as charter members, and the new camp starts off under most favorable circumstances. After the muster a name was chosen for the camp, and it will be known as the John Hand Camp, No. 28, Sons of Veterans, Division of New Jersey.

The name was taken because Mr. Hand was the first soldier of the late war from New Jersey and Plainfield that was shot and brought home. He is buried at Scotch Plains, and was well known in his day in this vicinity. He was a brother of William Hand of Post 73.

Chaplain—E. Bowman.
First Sergeant—C. F. Stephens.
Quartermaster—H. C. McVoy.
Sergeant Guard—H. Thatcher.
Color Sergeant—F. L. Walker.
Musician—S. C. Terry, Jr.
Corporal Guard—G. H. Bedford.
Camp Guard—T. J. F. R. Doane.
Picket Guard—W. H. Chamberlain.

The officers, excepting captain, first and second lieutenants, which were elected last week, did not stand and had to be appointed.

A Camp Council will be elected next Monday evening, and considerable other business will come before the Camp.

The installation of the first three officers took place, and was public.

They were:

Captain—John Lewis.
First Lieutenant—H. J. Martin.
Second Lieutenant—W. C. Dobbins.

Commander Pollitt was obliged to leave rather early, and Post Commander Drake took his place in the installation. The Staff was then installed by Captain Lewis.

Those present listened with much pleasure to remarks by Post Commander Drake, Mustering Officer Sherry and members of the Grand Army.

The Women's Relief Corps prepared refreshments, of which all partook.

The badges for the members will be here by next meeting night. It is the intention to have the camp well drilled in military tactics. Arms will be received from the Government, and everything points towards success for John Hand Camp, No 28.

All those who can will go to headquarters tomorrow morning and assist the veterans in their plans for the day.

Richard J. Clarke's Will Sustained.

Justice Beach of the New York Supreme Court decided yesterday that the will of the late Richard J. Clarke, who died in this city a year or two ago, is valid, and that the relatives and next of kin are not entitled to a share of the $250,000 left by him to Mrs. Alice A. Schell, her son, and her relatives. "All that I can see in this case", said Justice Beach, "is that the testator made peculiar dispositions of his belongings in making bequests of $5,000 to each of his lawyers and $500 apiece to each of their office boys. I do not take these facts as evidences of undue influence. On the contrary, there is irrefutable testimony to show that the testator was of strong mentality and in good physical health when he executed his will and the codicil."

Excitement of Commuting.

A young man from Fanwood who is employed in one of the leading hardware stores of Plainfield caused quite a sensation Saturday evening. A customer came in and asked him for a paper of double-pointed tacks, and he asked if they were double-headed, and began to search the large store for them before he found out his mistake. The same chap, not used to commuting, ran to catch the train for Fanwood, and unfortunately got a through train for New York, "first stop Elizabeth", and being a little short of change got on the next train homeward, and was put off at every station, thus proceeding until he reached Westfield, and then he walked home. The next night he ran to catch the train, missed it, and had to wait a long time.

Lyceum Bowling.

Bowling in the individual tournament of the C. Y. M. L. was continued last evening. The scores made were as follows:

Manning—Handicap per game, 25 pins, 121, 131, 136—Total 388.
Claassen—Handicap 35 pins, 148, 146, 124—Total 418.
Strapp—Handicap 35 pins, 150, 150, 135—Total 444.
Kiely, W. J.—Handicap 5 pins, 175, 145, 156—Total 476.
Donnelly—Handicap 25 pins—136.
McDonough—Handicap 15 pins, 121, 132, 148—Total 401.
Owens, T.—Handicap 35 pins—174, 176.
Comerford—Handicap 35 pins—147.

W. J. Kiely made the best average, 158⅔, that has been bowled in the tournament.

This Calf a Freak.

A freak of nature is a calf owned by O. T. Vogeler, a brother of A. G. Vogeler of West Front street. The animal was born with two separate heads, two distinct tails, with a healthy body, and four legs. It lived to be eight months old. The calf has been in the hands of a Newark taxidermist, and is now ready for exhibition. It can be seen in this city within a few days.

Attached a Street Car.

Constable W. R. Mattox at 8:45 this morning attached Car 3 of the street railway for a judgment of $75.35 obtained by F. A. Dunham. The papers were served on the crew as the car stood at the Watchung Avenue terminus of the line. Charles Hand was the constable's witness. The car was allowed to continue on its trips as usual.

RECEIVER FOR THE NEWHALL CO.

Ex-Councilman Newhall Appointed.

The Chancellor last night granted the application of Henry B. Newhall for the appointment of a receiver of the Henry B. Newhall Company, and appointed Mr. Newhall himself as temporary receiver. The appointment of a complainant as receiver of his own company is unusual, but in this instance Counselor Craig A. Marsh, who acted for Mr. Newhall, satisfied the Chancellor as to the well-known high character of Mr. Newhall, and that the interests both of the stockholders and the creditors would be best subserved by such appointment. The creditors will be given opportunity to be heard later if they desire. The stock of the company is full paid $100,000, assets, $82 200, and liabilities, $92,000. It is believed that the creditors will consent to some plan by which the company may continue business.

A Great Team.

(From The Elizabeth Journal.)

Senator Voorhees was by far the hardest worker in the Senate. What he did will never be fully known or appreciated, for the quiet, pleasant manner with which he heard everybody and took up the work which they asked him to accomplish for them, was not of a kind that noises itself abroad and calls the world's attention to itself. But no man had so much influence as he in matters where calm and rational judgment and statesmanship were required. It will be remembered that from the very first, in the most dangerous hours of the conspiracy against the people, Senator Voorhees's advice prevented bloodshed, and every act taken upon his advice was sustained by the Supreme Court. It was he, more than any other man, who straightened out entanglements, who quieted petty disturbances, who explained away difficulties, and who was the helmsman and the pilot through many treacherous and threatening situations. He has, under all the circumstances, made a grand record in behalf of the people, and has capped it with a sacrifice that can not be forgotten—his declination of an office of honor and trust at a salary of $7,500 a year.

Assemblyman Codding has proved to be one of the most aggressive workers Union County has ever had at Trenton. From the very first he took to the necessary activity with the vigor of one born to the business. Since then he has abated nothing of his hearty endeavors in behalf of Union County and the Republican party. He has gained friends and influence daily, and his efforts and his votes have been directed by a clear head, good judgment, a strong determination to do what was for the best, and ever with a view to carry out the wishes of his constituents.

Their Golden Wedding Day Has Passed.

Bill Titus, a New Jersey fisherman, gathered in his shad fykes from the bay Saturday. While he and his men were cleaning the nets, he saw something shining in the meshes of one and took it out. It was an old-fashioned chased ring. The stone setting had been broken out and carried with it a part of the band and one letter of the inscription, which now reads: "M. W.——, to S. P. B.——1842." The fisherman would like to know who owned the ring and how it became entangled in the net.

Alumni Reception.

The North Plainfield Public School Alumni have appointed the following committees for the annual reception:

Decorations — Laura Emmons, Chairman, and Class of '93.
Nominations—John Stiner, Sue D. Woodland, Maggie Corey.
Refreshments — Elston French, Minnie French, Nora Williams.
Reception and Entertainment—George Taggart, Harry Williams, Stacy Reynolds, Lambert Bodine.

Married Against Single.

The married men's bowling team of the Scott Press Works play the single men tonight on Jacob Hipp's new alleys on Somerset street. Much interest is manifested, as it will be the last game of a series of three, and a large crowd is expected.

Bonner in Disgrace.

The Baltimore News says: "Bonner was allowed to go to his home in Wilkesbarre on Thursday and failed to show up in time for yesterday's game. Hanlon will put him on the bench for this conduct and allow Reitz to resume his old place at second."

Y's Anniversary.

All are cordially invited to the Y's anniversary this evening. Miss Clara Parrish will give an address on "Our Possibilities and Responsibilities". The meeting will be in the new Seventh Day Baptist Church.

Mighty Good for J. P.

John P. Emmons has kept a record of all the games he has bowled on the Board of Trade alleys during the past season. With his one hundredth game just finished he has an average of 169½

Indications of War.

Indications of war is the conversation of the day. Have you seen the W on the locust's wings? If not, the inquirer puts his hand into his pocket and produces one, and you are convinced.

Why They Rejoice.

Rev. Mr. Smith, pastor of the Somerville Baptist Church, told his congregation Sunday morning that he would not accept the call to New Brunswick, but would remain in Somerville.

Base Ball in the Suburbs.

The Berkeley Heights Base-Ball Club will play a game in Scotch Plains Decoration Day morning, and a game in the afternoon on their own grounds with the Bernardsville team.

Much Obliged.

The Entertainment Committee of Miantonomoh Tribe have sent letters of thanks to the women who took part in the last play.

CYCLING COMMENT.

82 entries in one event—guess which!

The fast flyers of the world have their eye on the Crescent Oval.

The chainless wheels will be thoroughly tested in Saturday's races.

The rain and the roller have put the Oval in record-breaking condition.

Cuming continues a favorite, and the Wheelmen have great hopes for Rydell.

Now is the time to buy Crescent Wheelmen stock, to participate in the profits that are sure to follow.

The C. Y. M. L. run to the Irvington-Millburn road races tomorrow morning will start at the Lyceum at 9.

The Crescent Wheelmen will take a club run to the Millburn races tomorrow. They will leave the club-house at 9 a. m.

The Atalanta Wheelmen have decided on a time-limit of eleven hours for their 100-mile race of July 14 from Newark to Princeton and return.

Clarence Teel of the Crescent Wheelmen visited New York yesterday and secured permission of the L. A. W. to run off the unfinished races Monday, June 4, if they can't be finished Saturday, June 2.

The extraordinary list of entries for the events on Crescent Oval June 2 may necessitate postponement of some of the events till Monday, as it is hardly possible to conclude so large a programme in one afternoon.

Three more entries have been made for the bicycle meet June 2, as follows: F. G. Hedge, Kings County Wheelmen, Brooklyn. J. T. Williams, Jr., New York Athletic Club. F. G. McDonald, King's County Wheelmen, Brooklyn.

Did you notice how widespread is the interest in the Plainfield enterprise? Just glance over the list in yesterday's Press—everywhere in Jersey, and way down East to Chicopee Falls, North to Rochester and Syracuse, and West to Cleveland, with all intervening way stations, Philadelphia, Brooklyn and New York not excepted.

Olaf Sangstad, Superintendent of the Boys Club, is in persistent practice for Saturday's racing. His shapely legs are well displayed in dark tights, and the play of the powerful muscles as he works the pedals is a fascination for grandstand watchers. He was a champion skater in Sweden, and though a new rider bids fair to win laurels.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

The society of the Seventh-Day Baptist Church will hold a lawn party on J. M. Titsworth's lawn Wednesday evening, June 6.

The Christian Endeavor Society of the First Baptist Church will hold a sociable this evening in the basement of the church.

Memorial in the Cemetery.

The women of Garfield League will observe Memorial Day by a service in the Presbyterian Cemetery, North Plainfield. The exercises will begin at 10:15 a. m., and will consist of singing and decorating the soldiers graves by the children of Houghton Division, No. 1, of the Children's Loyal Legion. An address will be delivered by John Ulrich.

After His Share.

E. B. Bolles of Elgin, Ill., is the guest of his brother, F.T. Bolles of West Second street. Mr. Bolles is one of the heirs of the John Burnet estate, and came here to establish his claim. The suit has been in litigation more than three years, and at the beginning Jackson & Codington were successful in the Court of Chancery proceedings.

Opening Monday Night.

Jacob Hipp, the new proprietor of the Manhattan wine rooms and bowling alleys, 179-181 Somerset street, will have an opening next Monday night. The alleys will be open to the public, the place will be decorated and a band will play.

The Disagreeable Man.

Have you followed his career? Today he goes back to the mountains to live out his life. He takes with him the picture of Bernardine—a thin, eager little face. Read his pathetic history in the conclusion of "Ships That Pass in the Night".

Coming Later.

The Frank Harth Quartette Club of Brooklyn, which was to come to this city, Sunday, as the guest of the Plainfield Liederkranz, could not come. The quartette club will favor the Liederkranz with music early in June.

Independent Annual Shoot.

The Independent Gun Club have their annual shoot for prizes tomorrow on their grounds in Hyde's woods. J. A. Blatz is captain, Gustave Ruppert, secretary, and Henry Ruppert, treasurer.

Trial by Jury.

Justice Nash yesterday adjourned to June 7 at 2 p. m. the case of W. R. Clarkson against the Plainfield Camera Club, for rent. It is to be tried before a jury.

Next!

A New York barber from the Central Building will take possession of the Hotel Grenada barber shop June 1, and will refit it in elegant style.

—Ground was broken yesterday for another house in West End Park, opposite the Grant Avenue station.

—John Blackford has begun work on the contract to lay 1,200 feet of flagging and curbing at West End Park on Front street.

—18 pieces of baggage came off the 10 a. m. train from New York today from the late John Taylor Johnston's Fifth avenue residence, billed to the Summer house in Plainfield.

FOR THE relief and cure of a cold in the head there is more potency in Ely's Cream Balm than in anything else it is possible to prescribe. This preparation has for years past been making a brilliant success as a remedy for cold in the head, catarrh and hay fever. Used in the initial stages of these complaints Cream Balm prevents any serious development of the symptoms, while almost numberless cases are on record of radical cures of chronic catarrh and hay fever after all other treatments have proved of no avail.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

J. C. Pope is out again.

Mrs. F. H. Gardner and family go to Ocean Grove Friday for the Summer.

George Rockfellow and son George will fish in Cheesequakes Creek tomorrow.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Vanderbeek will spend Decoration Day on the farm of Mr. Vanderbeek's brother in North Branch, Somerset County.

Mrs. James A. Spencer of New York returned home yesterday after a visit of one week with her sister, Miss Henrietta Bonnell of Manning avenue.

H. H. Ragan was in town today photographing the Harberger house and Washington Rock for views in his new lecture, "Footprints of Washington".

Miss Daisy Dunn of Sandford avenue won the applause of the Franklin School this afternoon by a recitation entitled "They put no flowers on Papa's Grave".

Ex-Freeholder Debbie is in town today to extend an invitation to James E. Martine to make an address tomorrow morning at the flag raising at Diamond Hill school-house, between Springfield and New Providence.

D. L. Hulick of Grandview avenue received word this morning of the death of his niece, Miss Lydia Krewson, aged 17 years, of Newark. Her death was due to a heavy cold which she contracted from being baptized thirteen weeks ago.

Assignment of G. H. VanNess.

The many friends of G. H. VanNess of 39 Somerset street will regret to learn that he has been compelled to close his place and will make an assignment to J. H. VanWinkle for the benefit of his creditors. His misfortune is due to inability to collect his claims to meet his bills. Mr. VanNess is highly esteemed in the community, and in his trouble has the sympathy of all.

Memorial Day.

The public will be freely welcome to Major Anderson Post's exercises in the old Seventh-Day Baptist Church tomorrow evening at 8. There will be beautiful decorations of flags. Dr. Lewis will be the orator. A quartette composed of Mrs. Asa Collier, Miss Julia Ketcham, E. E. Runyon and Robert Gorton will sing. Miss Utter will be accompanist.

—Charles H. Hand has commenced building a house for Samuel Harper of Richmond street, on South avenue.

Items of Interest.

last Saturday night in the Dry and Fancy Goods and Carpet Departments was double that in the old store. A large trade was done also in the new departments, viz., Crockery, Housefurnishing and Millinery Departments.

The crowds were larger last Saturday night than a week ago. The interest in the great enterprise is widening. Scores of people who have already patronized the new store say that inasmuch as Edsall has given Plainfield an establishment to be proud of, they will sustain it by their patronage.

The opening of this magnificent store has already began a great revolution of trade in Plainfield. The large variety of goods, fine quality, excellent style and taste, marvelously low prices, good service, are among the drawing qualities.

A large business was also done in the Shoe and Trunk Departments.

There is no doubt but what the new concern will pay from the beginning, and that it has come to stay. The principle of doing business is a large volume of trade at a small profit. For instance, $100,000 sales per year at a profit of 20 per cent. would amount to $20,000. And a yearly sale of $200,000 at 10 per cent. would be just the same.

So the purchaser would save just 10 per cent. by buying at the store selling the largest amount. This is the system of all the large stores in New York and other cities.

We are the same, and will guarantee to give the trading public more for their money than any other place. Come and see. Our store will be closed all day Decoration Day.

HAT PASS IN THE NIGHT.

TRICE HARRADEN.

Oh, Mariechen," said the little postman, seizing her hand and covering it with kisses, "you love some one else—you are already betrothed? And now it's too late, and you love some one else!"

"I never said I loved some one else," Marie replied. "I only said it was too late. Why, it must be nearly 5 o'clock, and my lamps are not yet ready. I haven't a moment to spare. Dear me, and there is no oil in the can. No, not one little drop!"

"The devil take the oil!" exclaimed Warli, snatching the can out of her hands. "What do I want to know about the oil in the can? I want to know about the love in your heart. Oh, Mariechen, don't keep me waiting like this! Just tell me if you love me and make me the merriest soul in all Switzerland."

"Must I tell the truth," she said in a most melancholy tone of voice. "The truth and nothing else? Well, Warli, if you must know * * * how I grieve to hurt you"—Warli's heart sank, the tears came into his eyes—"but since it must be the truth and nothing else," continued the torturer, "well, Fritz, * * * I love you!"

A few minutes afterward the Disagreeable Man, having failed to attract any notice by ringing, descended to Marie's pantry to fetch his lamp. He discovered Warli embracing his betrothed.

"I am sorry to intrude," he said grimly, and he retreated at once. But directly afterward he came back.

"The matron has just come up stairs," he said. And he hurried away.

CHAPTER XIX.

SHIPS THAT SPEAK EACH OTHER IN PASSING.

Many of the guests in the foreign quarter had made a start downward into the plains, and the Kurhaus itself, though still well filled with visitors, was every week losing some of its invalids. A few of the tables looked desolate, and some were not occupied at all, the lingerers having chosen, now that their party was broken up, to seek the refuge of another table, so that many stragglers found their way to the English dining board, each bringing with him his own national bad manners and causing much annoyance to the Disagreeable Man, who was a true John Bull in his contempt of all foreigners. The English table was, so he said, like England herself—the haven of other nations' offscourings.

There were several other signs, too, that the season was far advanced. The food had fallen off in quality and quantity. The invalids, some of them better and some of them worse, had become impatient, and plans were being discussed where formerly temperatures and coughs and general symptoms were the usual subjects of conversation. The caretakers, too, were in a state of agitation, some few keenly anxious to be off to new pastures, and others, who had perhaps formed attachments, an occurrence not unusual in Petershof, were wishing to hold back time with both hands and were therefore delighted that the weather, which had not yet broken up, gave no legitimate excuse for immediate departure.

Pretty Fraulein Muller had gone, leaving her Spanish gentleman quite disconsolate for the time being. The French marchioness had returned to the Parisian circles where she was celebrated for all the domestic virtues from which she had been taking such a prolonged holiday in Petershof. The little French danseuse and her poodle had left for Monte Carlo. M. Lischinsky and his mother passed on to the Tyrol, where madame would no doubt have plenty of opportunities for quarrelling, or not finding them would certainly make them without any delay, by this means keeping herself in good spirits and her son in bad health. There were some, too, who had hurried off without paying their doctors, being, of course, those who had received the greatest attention and who had expressed the greatest gratitude in their time of trouble, but who were of opinion that thankfulness could very well take the place of francs—an opinion not entirely shared by the doctors themselves. The Swedish professor had betaken himself off, with his chessmen and his chessboard. The little Polish governess who clutched so eagerly at her paltry 10 florins, caressing those centimes with the same fondness and fever that a greater gambler grasps his thousands of francs—she had left too. And indeed most of Bernardine's acquaintances had gone their several ways after six months' constant intercourse and companionship, saying goodby with the same indifference as though they were saying good morning or good afternoon.

This cold heartedness struck Bernardine more than once, and she spoke of it to Robert Allitsen. It was the day before her own departure, and she had gone down with him to the restaurant and was sipping her coffee and making her complaint.

"Such indifference is astonishing, and it is sad too. I cannot understand it," she said.

"That is because you are a goose," he replied, pouring out some more coffee for himself, and, as an afterthought, for her too. "You pretend to know something about the human heart, and yet you do not seem to grasp the fact that most of us are very little interested in other people. They for us and we for them can spare only a small fraction of time and attention. We may perhaps think to the contrary, believing that we occupy an important position in their lives, until one day, when we are feeling most confident of our value, we see an unmistakable sign, given quite unconsciously by our friends, that we are after all nothing to them. We can be done without, put on one side and forgotten when not present. Then if we are foolish we are wounded by this discovery, and we draw back into ourselves. But if we are wise we draw back into ourselves without being wounded, recognizing as fair and reasonable that people can only have time and attention for their immediate belongings. Isolated persons have to learn this lesson sooner or later, and the sooner they do learn it the better."

"And you," she asked, "you have learned this lesson?"

"Long ago," he said decidedly.

"You take a hard view of life," she said.

"Life has not been very bright for me," he answered. "But I own that I have not cultivated my garden, and now it is too late—the weeds have sprung up everywhere. Once or twice I have thought lately that I would begin to clear away the weeds, but I have not the courage now. And perhaps it does not matter much."

"I think it does matter," she said gently. "But I am no better than you, for I have not cultivated my garden."

"It would not be such a difficult business for you as for me," she said, smiling sadly.

They left the restaurant and sauntered out together.

"And tomorrow you will be gone," he said.

"I shall miss you," Bernardine said.

"That is simply a question of time," he remarked. "I shall probably miss you at first. But we adjust ourselves easily to altered circumstances—mercifully. A few days, a few weeks at most, and then that state of becoming accustomed called by pious folk resignation."

"Then you think that the everyday companionship, the everyday exchange of thought and ideas, counts for little or nothing?" she asked.

"That is about the color of it," he answered in his old, gruff way.

She thought of his words when she was packing—the many pleasant hours were to count for nothing. For nothing the little bits of fun, the little displays of temper and vexation, the snatches of serious talk, the contradictions and all the petty details of six months' close companionship.

He was not different from the others who had parted from her so lightly. No wonder, then, that he could sympathize with them.

That last night at Petershof Bernardine hardened her heart against the Disagreeable Man.

"I am glad I am able to do so," she said to herself. "It makes it easier for me to go."

Then the vision of a forlorn figure rose before her. And the little hard heart softened at once.

In the morning they breakfasted together as usual. There was scarcely any conversation between them. He asked for her address, and she told him that she was going back to her uncle who kept the second-hand bookshop in Stone street.

"I will send you a guidebook from the Tyrol," he explained. "I shall be going there in a week or two to see my mother."

"I hope you will find her in good health," she said.

Then it suddenly flashed across her mind that he had told her about his one great sacrifice for his mother's sake. She looked up at him, and he met her glance without flinching.

He said goodby to her at the foot of the staircase.

It was the first time she had ever shaken hands with him.

"Goodby," he said gently. "Good luck to you."

"Goodby," she answered.

He went up the stairs and turned round as though he wished to say something more, but he changed his mind and kept his own counsel.

An hour later Bernardine left Petershof. Only the concierge of the Kurhaus saw her off at the station.

CHAPTER XX.

A LOVE LETTER.

Two days after Bernardine had left Petershof the snows began to melt. Nothing could be drearier than that process, nothing more desolate than the outlook.

The Disagreeable Man sat in his bedroom trying to read Carpenter's "Anatomy." It failed to hold him. Then he looked out of the window and listened to the dripping of the icicles. At last he took a pen and wrote as follows:

"LITTLE COMRADE, LITTLE PLAYMATE—I could not believe that you were really going. When you first said that you would soon be leaving, I listened with unconcern because it did not seem possible that the time could come when we should not be together; that the days would come and go, and that I should not know how you were; whether you were better, and more hopeful about your life and your work, or whether the old misery of indifference and ill health was still clinging to you; whether your voice was strong as of one who had slept well and felt refreshed, or whether it was weak like that of one who had watched through the long night.

"It did not seem possible that such a time could come. Many cruel things have happened to me as to scores of others, but this is the most cruel of all. Against my wish and against my knowledge you have crept into my life as a necessity, and now I have to give you up. You are better, God bless you, and you go back to a fuller life, and to carry on your work, and to put to account those talents which no one realizes more than I do, and, as for myself, God help me, I am left to wither away.

"You little one, you dear little one, I never wished to love you. I had never loved any one, never drawn near to any one. I have lived lonely all my young life, for I am only a young man yet. I said to myself time after time: 'I will not love her. It will not do me any good, nor her any good.' And then in my state of health what right had I to think of marriage and making a home for myself? Of course that was out of the question. And then I thought that because I was a doomed man, cut off from the pleasures which make a lovely thing of life, it did not follow that I might not love you in my own quiet way, hugging my secret to myself until the love became all the greater because it was my secret. I reasoned about it too. It could not harm you had I loved you. No one could be the worse for being loved. So little by little I yielded myself this luxury, and my heart, once so dried up, began to flower again. Yes, little one, you will smile when I tell you that my heart broke out into flower.

"When I think of it all now, I am not sorry that I let myself go. At least I have learned what I knew nothing of before. Now I understand what people mean when they say that love adds a dignity to life which nothing else can give. That dignity is mine now; nothing can take it from me. It is my own. You are my very own. I love everything about you. From the beginning I recognized that you were clever and capable. The [illegible] made fun of what you said was simply a way I had, and when I resented did not mind I continued in that way, hoping always to vex you. Your good temper provoked me, because I knew that you made allowances for me being a Petershof invalid. You would never have suffered a strong man to criticise you as I did; you would have flown at him, for you are a feverish, nervous child, not a quiet, woolly lamb.

"At first I was wild that you should make allowances for me. And then I gave in, as weak men are obliged. When you came, I saw that your troubles and sufferings would make you bitter. Do you know who helped to cure you? It was I. I have seen that often before. That is the one little bit of good I have done in the world—I have helped to cure cynicism. You were shocked at the things I said, and you were saved. I did not save you intentionally, so I am not posing as a philanthropist. I merely mention that you came here hard, and you went back tender. That was partly because you have lived in the City of Suffering. Some people live there and learn nothing, but you would learn to feel only too much. I wish that your capacity for feeling were less, but then you would not be yourself, your present self, I mean, for you have changed even since I have known you. Every week you seemed to become more gentle. You thought me rough and gruff at parting, little comrade. I meant to be so. If you had only known, there was a whole world of tenderness for you in my heart. I could not trust myself to be tender to you—you would have guessed my secret. And I wanted you to go away undisturbed. You do not feel things lightly, and it was best for you that you should harden your heart against me.

"If you could harden your heart against me! But I am not sure about that. I believe that—ah, well, I'm a foolish fellow, but some day, dear, I'll tell you what I think. I have treasured many of your sayings in my memory. I can never be as though I had never known you. Many of your words I have repeated to myself afterward until they seemed to represent my own thoughts. I specially remember what you said about God having made us lonely so that we might be obliged to turn to him, for we are all lonely, though some of us not quite so much as others. You yourself spoke often of being lonely. Oh, my own little one! Your loneliness is nothing compared to mine. How often I could have told you that!

"I have never seen any of your work, but I think you have now something to say to others, and that you will say it well. And if you have the courage to be simple when it comes to the point you will succeed. And I believe you will have the courage; I believe everything of you.

"But whatever you do or do not you will always be the same to me—my own little one, my very own. I have been waiting all my life for you, and I have given you my heart entire. If you only knew that, you could not still yourself lonely any more. If any one was ever loved, it is you, dear heart.

"Do you remember how those peasants at the Gasthaus thought we were betrothed? I thought that might annoy you, and though I was relieved at the time, still, later on, I wished you had been annoyed. That would have shown that you were not indifferent. From that time my love for you grew apace. You must not mind me telling you so often. I must go on telling you. Just think, dear, this is the first love letter I have ever written, and every word of love is a whole world of love. I shall never call my life a failure now. I may have failed in everything else, but not in loving. Oh, little one, it can't be that I am not to be with you and not to have you for my own! And yet how can that be? It is not I who may hold you in my arms. Some strong man must love and wrap you round with tenderness and softness. You little independent child, in spite of all your wonderful views and theories, you will soon be glad to lean on some one for comfort and sympathy. And then perhaps that troubled little spirit of yours may find its rest. Would to God I were that strong man!

"But because I love you, my own little darling, I will not spoil your life. I won't ask you to give me even one thought. But if I believed that it were of any good to say a prayer I should pray that you may soon find that strong man, for it is not well for any of us to stand alone. There comes a time when the loneliness is more than we can bear.

"There is one thing I want you to know. Indeed I am not the gruff fellow I have so often seemed. Do believe that. Do you remember how I told you that I dreamed of losing you? And now the dream has come true. I am always looking for you and cannot find you.

"You have been very good to me, so patient and genial and frank. No one before has ever been so good. Even if I did not love you I should say that.

"But I do love you; no one can take that from me. It is my own dignity, the crown of my life. Such a poor life—no, no, I won't say that now. I cannot pity myself now—no, I cannot"——

The Disagreeable Man stopped writing, and the pen dropped on the table.

He buried his tear stained face in his hands. He cried his heart out, this Disagreeable Man.

Then he took the letter which he had just been writing, and he tore it into fragments.

CHAPTER XXI.

THE DUSTING OF THE BOOKS.

It was now more than three weeks since Bernardine's return to London. She had gone back to her old home at her uncle's secondhand bookshop. She spent her time in dusting the books and arranging them in some kind of order, for old Zerviah Holme had ceased to interest himself much in his belongings and sat in the little inner room reading, as usual, Gibbon's "History of Rome." Customers might please themselves about coming. Zerviah Holme had never cared about amassing money, and now he cared even less than before. A frugal breakfast, a frugal dinner, a box full of snuff and a shelf full of Gibbon were the old man's only requirements, an undemanding life and therefore a loveless one, since the less we ask for the less we get.

When Malvina, his wife, died, people said, "He will miss her."

But he did not seem to miss her. He took his breakfast, his pinch of snuff, his Gibbon, in precisely the same way as before and in the same quantities.

When Bernardine first fell ill, people said: "He will be sorry. He is fond of her in his own queer way."

But he did not seem to be sorry. He did not understand anything about illness. The thought of it worried him, so he put it from him. He remembered vaguely that Bernardine's father had suddenly become ill, that his powers had all failed him, and that he lingered on, just a wreck of humanity, and then died. That was 20 years ago. Then he thought of Bernardine and said to himself, "History repeats itself." That was all.

Unkind? No, for when it was told him that she must go away he looked at her wonderingly and then went out. It was very rarely that he went out. He came back with £50.

"When that is done," he told her, "I can find more."

When she went away, people said, "He will be lonely."

But he did not seem to be lonely. They asked him once, and he said, "I always have Gibbon."

And when she came back they said, "He will be glad."

But her return seemed to make no difference to him.

He looked at her in his usual slightless manner and asked her what she intended to do.

"I shall dust the books," she said.

"Ah, I dare say they want it," he remarked.

"I shall get a little teaching to do," she continued. "And I shall take care of you."

"Ah," he said vaguely. He did not understand what she meant. She had never been very near to him, and he had never been very near to her. He had taken but little notice of her comings and goings. She had either never tried to win his interest or had failed, probably the latter. Now she was going to take care of him.

This was the home to which Bernardine had returned. She came back with many resolutions to help to make his old age bright. She looked back now and saw how little she had given of herself to her aunt and her uncle. Aunt Malvina was dead, and Bernardine did not regret her. Uncle Zerviah was here still. She would be tender with him and win his affection. She thought she could not begin better than by looking after his books. Each one was dusted carefully. The dingy old shop was restored to cleanliness. Bernardine became interested in her task. "I will work up the business," she thought. She did not care in the least about the books; she never looked into them except to clean them, but she was thankful to have the occupation at hand, something to help her over a difficult time, for the most trying part of an illness is when we are ill no longer, when there is no excuse for being idle and listless; when, in fact, we could work if we would. Then is the moment for us to begin on anything which presents itself until we have the courage and the inclination to go back to our own particular work, that which we have longed to do and about which we now care nothing.

So Bernardine dusted books and sometimes sold them. All the time she thought of the Disagreeable Man. She missed him in her life. She had never loved before, and she loved him. The forlorn figure rose before her, and her eyes filled with tears. Sometimes the tears fell on the books and spotted them.

Still, on the whole, she was bright, but she found things difficult. She had lost her old enthusiasms, and nothing yet had taken their place. She went back to the circle of her acquaintances and found that she had slipped away from touch with them. While she had been ill they had been busily at work on matters social and educational and political. She thought them hard, the women especially; they thought her weak. They were disappointed in her. She was now looking for the more human qualities in them, and she, too, was disappointed.

"You have changed," they said to her, "but then, of course, you have been ill, haven't you?"

With these strong, active people to be ill and useless is a reproach, and Bernardine felt it as such. But she had changed, and she herself perceived it in many ways. It was not that she was necessarily better, but that she was different, probably more human and probably less self confident. She had lived in a world of books, and she had burst through that bondage and come out into a wider and a freer land.

New sorts of interest came into her life. What she had lost in strength she had gained in tenderness. Her very manner was gentler; her mode of speech was less assertive. At least this was the criticism of those who had liked her but little before her illness.

"She has learned," they said among themselves. And they were not scholars. They knew.

These, two or three of them, drew her nearer to them. She was alone there with the old man, and, though better, needed care. They mothered her as well as they could, at first timidly, and then with that sweet despotism which is for us all an easy yoke to bear. They were drawn to her as they had never been drawn before. They felt that she was no longer analyzing them, weighing them in her intellectual balance and finding them wanting. So they were free with her now and revealed to her qualities at which she had never guessed before.

As the days went on Zerviah began to notice that things were somehow different. He found some flowers near his table. He was reading about Nero at the time, but he put aside his Gibbon and fondled the flowers instead. Bernardine did not know that.

One morning when she was out he went into the shop and saw a great change there. Some one had been busy at work. The old man was pleased. He loved his books, though of late he had neglected them.

"She never used to take any interest in them," he said to himself. "I wonder why she does now?"

He began to count upon seeing her. When she came back from her outings, he was glad. But she did not know. If he had given any sign of welcome to her during those first difficult days, it would have been a great encouragement to her.

He watched her feeding the sparrows. One day when she was not there he went and did the same. Another day when she had forgotten he surprised her by reminding her.

"You have forgotten to feed the sparrows," he said. "They must be quite hungry."

That seemed to break the ice a little. The next morning when she was arranging some books in the old shop he came in and watched her.

"It is a comfort to have you," he said. That was all he said, but Bernardine flushed with pleasure.

"I wish I had been more to you all these years," she said gently.

He did not quite take that in, and returned hastily to Gibbon.

Then they began to stroll out together. They had nothing to talk about. He was not interested in the outside world, and she was not interested in Roman history. But they were trying to get nearer to each other. They had lived years together, but they had never advanced a step. Now they were trying, she consciously, he unconsciously. But it was a slow process, and pathetic, as everything human is.

"If we could only find some subject which we both liked," Bernardine thought to herself. "That might knit us together."

Well, they found a subject, though perhaps it was an unlikely one. The cart horses, those great, strong, patient toilers of the road, attracted their attention, and after that no walk was without its pleasure or interest. The brewers' horses were the favorites, though there were others, too, which met with their approval. He began to know and recognize them. He was almost like a child in his new found interest. On Whit Monday they both went to the cart horse parade in Regent's park. They talked about the enjoyment for days afterward.

"Next year," he told her, "we must subscribe to the fund even if we have to sell a book."

He did not like to sell his books. He parted with them painfully, as some people part with their illusions.

Bernardine bought a paper for herself every day, but one evening she came in without one. She had been seeing after some packing and had without any difficulty succeeded in getting some temporary light work at one of the high schools. She forgot to buy her newspaper.

The old man noticed this. He put on his shabby felt hat and went down the street and brought in a copy of The Daily News.

"I don't remember what you like, but will this do?" he asked.

He was quite proud of himself for showing her this attention, almost as proud as the Disagreeable Man when he did something kind and thoughtful.

Bernardine thought of him, and the tears came into her eyes at once. When did she not think of him? Then she glanced at the front sheet, and in the death column her eye rested on his name, and she read that Robert Allitsen's mother had passed away. So the Disagreeable Man had won his freedom at last. His words echoed back to her:

"But I know how to wait. If I have not learned anything else, I have learned how to wait, and some day I shall be free, and then"——

CHAPTER XXII.

BERNARDINE BEGINS HER BOOK.

After the announcement of Mrs. Allitsen's death Bernardine lived in a misery of suspense. Every day she scanned the obituary, fearing to find the record of another death—fearing and yet wishing to know.

The Disagreeable Man had yearned for his freedom these many years, and now he was at liberty to do what he chose with his poor life. It was of no value to him. Many a time she sat and shuddered. Many a time she began to write to him. Then she remembered that, after all, he had cared nothing for her companionship. He would not wish to hear from her. And besides what had she to say to him?

A feeling of desolation came over her. It was not enough for her to take care of the old man who was drawing nearer to her every day, nor was it enough for her to dust the books and serve any chance customers who might look in. In the midst of her trouble she remembered some of her old ambitions, and she turned to them for comfort as we turn to old friends.

"I will try to begin my book," she said to herself. "If I can only get interested in it, I shall forget my anxiety."

But the love of her work had left her. Bernardine fretted. She sat in the old bookshop, her pen unused, her paper uncovered. She was very miserable.

Then one evening when she was feeling that it was of no use trying to force herself to begin her book she took her pen suddenly and wrote the following prologue:

CHAPTER XXIII.

FAILURE AND SUCCESS—A PROLOGUE.

Failure and Success passed away from earth and found themselves in a foreign land. Success still wore her laurel wreath which she had won on earth. There was a look of ease about her whole appearance, and there was a smile of pleasure and satisfaction on her face, as though she knew she had done well and had deserved her honors.

Failure's head was bowed; no laurel wreath encircled it. Her face was wan and pain engraved. She had once been beautiful and hopeful, but she had long since lost both hope and beauty. They stood together, these two, waiting for an audience with the sovereign of the foreign land. An old gray haired man came to them and asked their names.

"I am Success," said Success, advancing a step forward and smiling at him and pointing to her laurel wreath.

He shook his head.

"Ah," he said, "do not be too confident. Very often things go by opposites in this land. What you call success, we often call failure; what you call failure, we call success. Do you see those two men waiting there? The one nearer to us was thought to be a good man in your world; the other was generally accounted bad. But here we call the bad man good, and the good man bad. That seems strange to you. Well, then, look yonder. You considered that statesman to be sincere, but we say he was insincere. We chose as our poet laureate a man at whom your world scoffed. Aye, and those flowers yonder, for us they have a fragrant charm. We love to see them near us. But you do not even take the trouble to pluck them from the hedges where they grow in rich profusion. So, you see, what we value as a treasure, you do not value at all."

Then he turned to Failure.

"And your name?" he asked kindly, though indeed he must have known it.

"I am Failure," she said sadly.

He took her by the hand.

"Come, now, Success," he said to her, "let me lead you into the presence chamber."

Then she who had been called Failure and was now called Success lifted up her bowed head and raised her weary frame and smiled at the music of her new name.

And with that smile she regained her beauty and her hope. And hope having come back to her all her strength returned.

"But what of her?" she asked regretfully of the old gray haired man. "Must she be left?"

"She will learn," the old man whispered. "She is learning already. Come, now, we must not linger."

So she of the new name passed into the presence chamber.

But the Sovereign said:

"The world needs you, dear and honored worker. You know your real name. Do not heed what the world may call you. Go back and work, but take with you this time unconquerable hope."

So she went back and worked, taking with her unconquerable hope and the sweet remembrance of the Sovereign's words and the gracious music of her real name.

CHAPTER XXIV.

THE DISAGREEABLE MAN GIVES UP HIS FREEDOM.

The morning after Bernardine began her book she and old Zerviah were sitting together in the shop. He had come from the little inner room where he had been reading Gibbon for the last two hours. He still held the volume in his hand, but he did not continue reading; he watched her arranging the pages of a dilapidated book.

Suddenly she looked up from her work.

"Uncle Zerviah," she said brusquely, "you have lived through a long life and must have passed through many different experiences. Was there ever a time when you cared for people rather than books?"

"Yes," he answered a little uneasily. He was not accustomed to have questions asked of him.

"Tell me about it," she said.

"It was long ago," he said half dreamily, "long before I married Malvina. And she died. That was all."

"That was all," repeated Bernardine, looking at him wonderingly. Then she drew nearer to him.

"And you have loved, Uncle Zerviah? And you were loved?"

"Yes, indeed," he answered softly.

"Then you would not laugh at me if I were to unburden my heart to you?"

For answer she felt the touch of his old hand on her head. And thus encouraged she told him the story of the Disagreeable Man. She told him how she had never before loved any one until she loved the Disagreeable Man.

It was all very quietly told in a simple and dignified manner. Nevertheless, for all that, it was an unburdening of her heart, her listener being an old scholar who had almost forgotten the very name of love.

She was still talking and he was still listening when the shop door creaked. Zerviah crept quietly away, and Bernardine looked up.

The Disagreeable Man stood at the counter.

"You little thing," he said, "I have come to see you. It is eight years since I was in England."

Bernardine leaned over the counter.

"And you ought not be here now," she said, looking at his thin face. He seemed to have shrunk away since she had last seen him.

"I am free to do what I choose," he said. "My mother is dead."

"I know," Bernardine said gently. "But you are not free."

He made no answer to that, but slipped into the chair.

"You look tired," he said. "What have you been doing?"

"I have been dusting the books," she answered, smiling at him. "You remember you told me I should be content to do that. The very oldest and shabbiest have had my tenderest care. I found the shop in disorder. You see it now."

"I should not call it particularly tidy now," he said grimly. "Still, I suppose you have done your best. Well, and what else?"

"I have been trying to take care of my old uncle," she said. "We are just beginning to understand each other a little, and he is beginning to feel glad to have me. When I first discovered that, the days became easier to me. It makes us into dignified persons when we find out that there is a place for us to fill."

"Some people never find it out," he said.

"Probably, like myself, they went on for a long time without caring," she answered. "I think I have had more luck than I deserve."

"Well," said the Disagreeable Man, "and you are glad to take up your life again?"

"No," she said quietly. "I have not got as far as that yet. But I believe that after some little time I may be glad—I hope so—I am working for that. Sometimes I begin to have a keen interest in everything. I wake up with an enthusiasm. After about two hours I have lost it again."

"Poor little child," he said tenderly. "I, too, know what that is. But you will get back to gladness—not the same kind of satisfaction as before, but some other satisfaction, that compensation which is said to be included in the scheme."

"And I have begun my book," she said, pointing to a few sheets lying on the counter—"that is to say, I have written the prologue."

"Then the dusting of the books has not sufficed?" he said, scanning her curiously.

"I wanted not to think of myself," Bernardine said. "Now that I have begun it I shall enjoy going on with it. I hope it will be a companion to me."

"I wonder whether you will make a failure or a success of it?" he remarked. "I wish I could have seen."

"So you will," she said. "I shall finish it, and you will read it in Petershof."

"I shall not be going back to Petershof," he said. "Why should I go there now?"

"For the same reason that you went there eight years ago," she said.

"I went there for my mother's sake," he said.

"Then you will go there now for my sake," she said deliberately.

He looked up quickly.

"Little Bernardine," he cried, "my little Bernardine—is it possible that you care what becomes of me?"

She had been leaning against the counter, and now she raised herself and stood erect, a proud, dignified little figure.

"Yes, I do care," she said simply and with true earnestness. "I care with all my heart. And even if I did not care you know you would not be free. No one is free. You know that better than I do. We do not belong to ourselves. There are countless people depending on us, people whom we have never seen and whom we never shall see. What we do decides what they will be."

He still did not speak.

"But it is not for those others that I plead," she continued. "I plead for myself. I can't spare you; indeed, indeed I can't spare you"——

Her voice trembled, but she went on bravely.

"So you will go back to the mountains," she said. "You will live out your life like a man. Others may prove themselves cowards, but the Disagreeable Man has a better part to play."

He still did not speak. Was it that he could not trust himself to words? But in that brief time the thoughts which passed through his mind were such as to overwhelm him. A picture rose up before him, a picture of a man and woman leading their lives together, each happy in the other's love—not a love born of fancy, but a love based on comradeship and true understanding of the soul. The picture faded, and the Disagreeable Man raised his eyes and looked at the little figure standing near him.

"Little child, little child," he said wearily, "since it is your wish, I will go back to the mountains."

Then he bent over the counter and put his hand on hers.

"I will come and see you tomorrow," he said. "I think there are one or two things I want to say to you."

The next moment he was gone.

In the afternoon of that same day Bernardine went to the city. She was not unhappy. She had been making plans for herself. She would work hard and fill her life as full as possible. There should be no room for unhealthy thought. She would go and spend her holidays in Petershof. There would be pleasure in that for him and for her. She would tell him so tomorrow. She knew he would be glad.

"Above all," she said to herself, "there shall be no room for unhealthy thought. I must cultivate my garden."

That was what she was thinking of at 4 in the afternoon, how she could best cultivate her garden.

At 5 she was lying unconscious in the accident ward of the New hospital. She had been knocked down by a wagon and terribly injured.

"She will not recover," the doctor said to the nurse. "You see she is sinking rapidly. Poor little thing!"

At 6 she regained consciousness and opened her eyes. The nurse bent over her. Then she whispered:

"Tell the Disagreeable Man how I wish I could have seen him tomorrow. We had so much to say to each other. And now"——

The brown eyes looked at the nurse so entreatingly. It was a long time before she could forget the pathos of those brown eyes.

A few minutes later she made another sign as though she wished to speak. Nurse Katharine bent nearer. Then she whispered:

"Tell the Disagreeable Man to go back to the mountains and begin to build his bridge. It must be strong and"——

Bernardine died.

CHAPTER XXV.

THE BUILDING OF THE BRIDGE.

Robert Allitsen came to the old bookshop to see Zerviah Holme before returning to the mountains. He found him reading Gibbon. These two men had stood by Bernardine's grave.

"I was beginning to know her," the old man said.

"I have always known her," the young man said. "I cannot remember a time when she has not been part of my life."

"She loved you," Zerviah said. "She was telling me so the very morning when you came."

Then, with a tenderness which was almost foreign to him, Zerviah told Robert Allitsen how Bernardine had opened her heart to him. She had never loved any one before; but she had loved the Disagreeable Man.

"I did not love him because I was sorry for him," she had said. "I loved him for himself."

Those were her very words.

"Thank you," said the Disagreeable Man. "And God bless you for telling me."

Then he added:

"There were some few loose sheets of paper on the counter. She had begun her book. May I have them?"

Zerviah placed them in his hand.

"And this photograph," the old man said kindly, "I will spare it for you."

The picture of the little, thin, eager face was folded up with the papers.

The two men parted.

Zerviah Holme went back to his Roman history. The Disagreeable Man went back to the mountains to live his life out there and to build his bridge, as we all do, whether consciously or unconsciously. If it breaks down, we build it again.

"We will build it stronger this time," we say to ourselves.

So we begin once more.

We are very patient.

And meanwhile the years pass.

THE END.

A PALE FACE comes from poor blood. Your blood needs to be enriched and vitalized. For this there's nothing in the world so thoroughly effective as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Children who are weak, thin, pale, and puny are made strong, plump, rosy, and robust by the "Discovery." It's especially adapted to them, too, from its pleasant taste. It's an appetizing, restorative tonic which builds up needed flesh and strength.

In every blood-taint or disorder, if it doesn't benefit or cure, you have your money back.

Dr. R. V. PIERCE: Dear Sir—I will say that I used the "Medical Discovery" for my little girl, and she is entirely well. I cannot praise your medicines too highly. You may rest assured that you will always have my support.

A REMARKABLE CURE

MIDDLEBUSH, Somerset Co., N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For the past forty years I have been afflicted with bleeding piles. I suffered constant pain in the lower part of my body, but when I had an operation of the bowels the pain was perfectly terrible, and was most always attended with the loss of a large quantity of blood. My condition was complicated with prolapse of the rectum, which at first only made its appearance when I had a movement of the bowels, but at length the parts became so weakened that the protrusion took place while walking or stooping, or after the slightest exertion, and sometimes even while I was at rest. Whenever this happened it gave rise to the most agonizing pain, and felt as though something was pulling the life right out of me. In fact only those similarly situated can imagine the suffering and distress which I had to endure from day to day, and which made my life a terrible burden. Hearing of Dr. Lighthill's wonderful success in the cure of difficult chronic diseases, I placed myself under his care, and now I am proud and happy to say that, marvelous as it may seem, he effected a complete and radical cure in my case in every respect, and he performed this cure without any painful operation or preventing me from work. Since this terrible disease has been removed by Dr. Lighthill's skill I feel new life, and for the first time in forty years I feel once more what it is to be without daily pain, discomfort and distress. I am not a wealthy man, but no amount of money would tempt me to be put back in my former condition.

I make this public statement, not only from a deep and everlasting sense of gratitude to Dr. Lighthill, but also as a simple Christian duty to let the afflicted know where they can find a physician whose skill cannot be surpassed, and in whom implicit confidence can be placed.

H. VROOM.

To the Residents of Plainfield, N. J.

Mr. H. Vroom, whose statement appears above, is a brother-in-law of mine. I personally know of his case and his suffering and also know the happy fact that to the surprise of himself and his friends, Dr. Lighthill effected a radical and permanent cure. His statement is true in every respect and does not say half enough in praise of Dr. Lighthill. Anyone who wishes this statement verified is at liberty to come and see me personally.

PUEBLO, COL., FLOODED

A Number of Houses Swept Away and Loss of Life Probable.

Fire Department Summoned to Assist in the Work of Rescue—Business and Resident Streets Raging Torrents—Water Over the Stage of the Opera House—A Patrol Wagon Stuck in the Mud With the Flood Up to the Horses' Heads—Part of the Morning Journal Office Carried Away—Railroad Bridges Gone. Situation Growing Worse.

PUEBLO, Col., May 31.—A storm which has been raging in this vicinity for the past two days broke in all its fury last evening, causing the Arkansas and Fountain rivers, whose junction is in this city, to burst over their levees and flood the whole lower portion of the town.

The rise was so rapid that the fire whistle was blown to call out the police and fire departments to assist in rescuing some 300 families who were hemmed in the "Grove," or bottoms.

The work proceeded as rapidly as was possible.

An alarm was again sounded calling the rescuers from the bottoms. The levees had broken above the city and there was great danger of the people being drowned.

High wagons and boats were used in getting the unfortunates to the high ground.

When the second alarm was sounded the work of saving property was abandoned.

The bridges are all under strong guard of special policemen. No one is allowed to pass from the north to the south side of the town.

No train will be able to reach this city either from the north or west for at least three days.

Another cloudburst occurred at midnight in the resident portion of town causing an awful situation.

The city is in darkness, the waterworks flooded and fires out.

The water is six feet deep coming down Court street. This is the resident portion of the city. The greatest alarm is felt for the safety of the people.

In some places the water is above the second story windows, as the houses are mostly of wood and can only stand against the present mad rush of waters for a short time.

The water is washing down the principal streets at the rate of 18 or 20 miles an hour.

The Grand Opera house stage is six inches under water.

The First National bank, all the large dry goods, clothing and other stores on Main street are five feet under water.

The central block, an elegant building five stories high, is flooded to within two feet of the ceiling of the first floor.

The Journal building is under water and the printers fled for their lives. It is almost certain that a number of people have been drowned.

The flood is increasing at the rate of six feet an hour. Over one hundred dwellings have been swept away. The business portion of the city is entirely cut off from communication with the south and east sides.

A few printers, the telegraph operator and press correspondent are locked in the Journal building by the flood, which is five feet deep, the building rocking badly.

At 1 a. m. a tremendous crash was heard, the Santa Fe steel bridge across the Arkansas going down. Soon after three more bridges on the Arkansas were swept away.

The situation is terrible.

At 1:30 a police patrol wagon with ten men standing on the seat, stuck in the mud, only the horses heads being visible above the water, could be seen from the office of the United Press. The position of the wagon was on a corner with the water running at tremendous rate. The position of the men was perilous.

The second electric light plant, supplying arc lights for the streets, was flooded at 1 a. m., and all the street lights went out and the darkness was intense. Distinct cries for help could then be heard. Aid, however, was utterly impossible at that hour. Though nothing could be seen, heavy timbers were frequently heard falling on all sides.

A few minutes before 1 o'clock the corner of the Journal building was washed away. Also the front of the building next door.

MAY SOON BE RELEASED.

Beneficiaries of Irish Fund in Paris Settle Their Differences.

PARIS, May 31.—The representative of the United Press is informed upon the highest authority that the Irish national party will in all likelihood very soon come into possession of the fund deposited in Paris by the late Charles Stewart Parnell and his fellow trustees of the Irish parliamentary fund. The recent efforts of Monroe & Co., the Paris bankers with whom the fund is deposited, to settle the question as to the disposition of the fund failed because the beneficiaries quarrelled over the division of the money. Now it is asserted all of them, including Mrs. Parnell, have agreed to sink their differences and judgment in the case will be given by the Seine tribunal, a document given mutual consent to the release of the funds having been finally drafted and approved by all concerned.

Believe She Was Kidnapped.

NORTHPORT, L. I., May 31.—The woods for a distance of five miles around Commack, L. I., have been scoured for the past two days in an unsuccessful attempt to find the two-and-a-half-year-old child of D. M. Nichols, who suddenly disappeared Monday. The child was opposite the house with an older sister, who left her for ten minutes to get a drink. It is thought she was kidnapped.

Flying Visit of Winter Weather.

WINSTED, Conn., May 31.—Heavy frosts prevailed here and in surrounding towns yesterday morning. Ice formed and farmers report that the potato, corn and tomato crops are ruined. The losses will be heavy.

Local Weather Forecast.

Showers; northeast winds.

TO BREAK THE STRIKE

Believed That the Coal Operators Have Combined.

Efforts Probably to Be Made to Start Work at Several Mines—Governor Pattison's Proclamation of Warning Will Have Good Effect—Ohio Troops Recalled.

PHILLIPSBURG, Pa., May 31.—Indications are now that the operators have united to break the strike, and that a beginning will possibly be made in Peal and O'Shanter by the Bloomington Coal Mining company and the Clearfield Consolidated Coal Mining company and at Horatio, Walston and Adrain, in the Punxsutawney district, by the Berwind-White Coal Mining company. It is not likely that there will be an attempt to start in either Houtzdale or Phillipsburg until the outcome of the attempt is seen in the above-named places.

HARRISBURG, Pa., May 31.—Gov. Pattison has received this telegram from Sheriff Wilhelm, of Fayette county:

"Your proclamation received and will have good effect. Five hundred strikers were marching at Kyle works, but committed no violence."

The following is the proclamation referred to by Sheriff Wilhelm:

"Whereas, It has been represented to me by the proper authorities of Fayette county that riotous demonstrations exist in various sections of said county, whereby the lives and property and peace and safety of the people are threatened, which the civil authorities are unable to suppress.

"And, whereas, the constitution and laws of this commonwealth authorize the governor, whenever, in his judgment, the same may be necessary to employ the militia to suppress domestic violence and preserve the peace.

"Now, therefore, I, Robert E. Pattison, governor of the said commonwealth, do hereby admonish all good citizens and all persons within the territory and under the jurisdiction of the commonwealth against aiding or abetting such unlawful proceedings, and I do hereby command all persons engaged in the said riotous demonstrations to forthwith disperse and retire peacefully to their respective places of abode, warning them that a persistence in violence will compel resort to such military force as may be necessary to enforce obedience to laws."

The governor has not yet heard from the Houtzdale miners in response to his telegram submitting the proposition submitted to the operators.

Gov. Waite at Cripple Creek.

DENVER, May 31.—Gov. Waite is now at Victor in conference with the strikers. The governor said he was going to Cripple Creek as a Knight of Labor to talk with his fellow knights. No more war, therefore, has been made. The strikers have warned the people that they dislike to leave the town of Cripple Creek. Deputy sheriffs are still encamped at Divide and are being reinforced. It is not thought that Waite's presence will stay a battle, which seems inevitable, and the general belief is that trouble will occur as soon as the governor leaves.

Brazil Miners Ugly.

BRAZIL, Ind., May 31.—To evade interference from the striking miners a Vandalia railway a crew went down to the Hellie mine at midnight to move out ten flat cars loaded with coal. As the train stopped to switch on to the main track it was captured by a gang of strikers who cut the cars loose, piled ties between them and dumped the coal onto the tracks. The miners' organization has declined the invitation of the committee of business men to meet and discuss the subject. The feeling is ugly.

Hungarians Leaving the Country.

BRADDOCK, Pa., May 31.—The shipment of coke to the Edgar Thompson Steel works plant has entirely stopped. Furnace "A" of the Carnegie plant, making menganese, which has been operating since the iron furnaces suspended some days ago, will close down. The minor departments of the works will have to stop now that the coke supply has ceased. Sixty Hungarians who have been working in the mills here have left for New York to return to Hungary.

Troops Only When Sheriff Fails.

INDIANAPOLIS, May 31.—Governor Matthews syas that he will not call out the militia unless it is clearly proved to him that the sheriff's forces cannot control the striking miners in Vermillion and Clark counties. It is easy, he says, for the operators to find fault, but as the responsibility rests with him he will, he says, use his own judgment.

Ohio Troops Recalled.

COLUMBUS, O., May 31.—Further trouble has been averted, at least temporarily, at Gloucester, by the railway company agreeing not to attempt to handle any more coal at present. Just as the troops had embarked here, a telegram announcing this fact was received, and Adjutant General Howe at once recalled all the troops.

Not His First Offense.

HARTFORD, Conn., May 31.—Ernest Griggs, who on Saturday night murderously assaulted Linus N. Burt at West Hartford, appears to have been in similar trouble before. On April 18 he quarreled with William Patch, an East Hartford boy, and threw carbolic acid in his face. He was arrested, fined and then left East Hartford to enter the employ of Burt, whom he afterward attempted to kill.

Because of Attacks Upon Jews.

VIENNA, May 31.—The agricultural chamber has decided to abolish the seed market which has been held annually in August since 1872. This action is taken in consequence of the attacks which have been made upon Jews in the markets in recent years.

Forty Passengers Injured.

MACON, Ga., May 31.—The rear coach of a train on the Albany & Columbia branch of the Southwestern railroad, a division of the Central railroad of Georgia was overturned by a broken rail at Holts and 40 people were injured, two or three of whom will in all probability die.

Kinsington's Trial Trip.

LONDON, May 31.—The new American line steamer Kinsington made her trial trip down the Clyde and developed a speed of fully sixteen knots an hour. The Kinsington passed and saluted the yacht Valkyrie off Ailsa Craig.

Mrs. Maybrick's Case.

LONDON, May 31.—In the letter accompanying the pamphlet containing new evidence in the case of Mrs. Maybrick issued by Baroness Roques in behalf of her daughter she says that if the home office has refused to reopen the case because of secret adverse evidence in their possession such evidence ought to be disclosed in order that it may be refuted. Even assuming that the secret evidence is irrefutable the government ought to take into consideration Mrs. Maybrick's five years' imprisonment, her broken health and her uniformly good conduct during her term of servitude. As American women without male relations, Mrs. Maybrick and her mother, in her behalf, appeal to Englishmen for justice.

Death of Walter P. Tillman.

TROY, N. Y., May 31.—Walter P. Tillman is dead, after a long illness. The deceased was born in Troy in 1823, and was graduated from Harvard university at the age of 20. At the outbreak of the war he was among the first to respond to the call for arms, and was chosen captain of Company H of the 30th N. Y. S. V. Captain Tillman participated in several of the most important engagements of the war. In 1869 Mr. Tillman accepted an offer from the Pacific Mail company to act as the company's agent in Japan, and spent five years there, with headquarters at Yokohama and Nagasaki.

Turpin's Invention.

PARIS, May 31.—All of the papers discuss the matter of Turpin's invention, which it is alleged the war office rejected, after which it was sold to the German government, and the majority of them agree that it ought to be explained. It is necessary that the public should know whether the invention was seriously considered and of practical value, whether it has been sold to a foreign government or whether the whole affair was merely an attempt to extort money from the French government.

Saved from Tarantula Poison.

DUBUQUE, Ia., May 31.—Jacob Werb was bitten by a tarantula while handling a bunch of bananas. His thumb immediately swelled to an enormous size, but a string quickly tied about the base stopped the circulation of the blood and spreading of the poison. He was hurried to a surgeon, who slit the thumb down the middle and then cauterized the wound. This prompt action saved Werb's life.

Rainmaking in Nebraska.

BEATRICE, Neb., May 31.—Those interested in the rainmaking experiments here are enthusiastic over the fact that a good rain fell Monday night over a great portion of the county, extending south to Manhattan, Kan. They firmly believe that the fall was the result of the work done by Prof. Hutchinson, the rainmaker employed by the Rock Island railroad, who has been operating here since Saturday with his rainmaking car.

Murdered and Petrified.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., May 31.—The petrified body of a woman was found by hunters near Wakerville, Ill., a few days ago. The body was imbedded in limestone, and a small stream of water ran over it. Upon the forehead is a gash which indicates that the woman was murdered. An old lady living at Wakerville claims to recognize the body as that of a Mrs. Loves, who disappeared many years ago.

Her Son's Arrest Killed Her.

CHICAGO, May 31.—When Mrs. Michael Wedlet saw her young son under arrest for stealing scrap iron she was overcome with grief and fell dead from heart disease.

Rich Strike in Idaho.

BOISE, Idaho, May 31.—The discovery of wonderfully rich placer diggings south of Salmon river in the vicinity of Loon lake, in Idaho county, is reported.

Iowa Democrats.

MAY BE HELD FOR MURDER.

An American Fatally Injures a Street Musician in London.

LONDON, May 31.—John Hewston, an American, who is registered at the Fifth Avenue hotel as a general, was jostled by three itinerent musicians as he was walking in Gray's Inn road. When he protested against this rudeness one of the musicians called him foul names and threatened to strike him with a camp stool. Hewston, in defending himself with his umbrella, drove the ferrule into the musician's eye.

The man fell to the pavement and soon lost consciousness. He was taken to the Royal Free hospital, where he died within a few hours.

Hewston was arrested and lodged in the Hunter street police station, whence he sent a note to the United States embassy. An official from the embassy called at the station and offered bail for Hewston, but it was refused.

The name of the dead man was Bruton.

Has He Skipped With the Money?

HARTFORD, Conn., May 31.—The heirs of the late Thomas Toomey, of South Windsor, are worried about the absence of Lawyer Thomas K. Kennedy, of this city, who was executor of Mr. Toomey's will. The estate consisted principally of $3,300 on deposit in the Society for Savings. A hearing, at which executor Kennedy was announced to submit his accounts, was assigned for Tuesday before Probate Judge Bancroft at South Windsor, but Kennedy did not appear. It has been ascertained that Kennedy had drawn the money from the Hartford bank and he stated that it was deposited in a Springfield bank.

The Marshalfield Railroad Horror.

MARSHALFIELD, Wis., May 31.—Six lives were lost, instead of eight as first reported, in the wreck yesterday on the Wisconsin Central railroad near this city. They were all trainmen, except one, a woman whose name is unknown. As the wreckage took fire the victims bodies were almost burned to a crisp. The cause of the wreck is supposed to have been an open switch, and there are strong suspicions of the switch having been fixed by robbers or by other persons with murderous motives.

Accused of Killing His Father.

LEWISBURG, Pa., May 31.—Samuel Mook has been lodged in jail here, charged with the murder of his father, Elias Mook, aged about 70 years, who was buried Feb. 24. There had been a quarrel in the Mook family, who reside six miles from town along the Buffalo mountains, and suspicion of foul play being aroused the body was exhumed. It showed the marks of a knife incision in the breast and bruises about the head. It is regarded here as a murder resulting from a family fight.

Mrs. Cahill Granted a Divorce.

SIOUX FALLS, S. D., May 31.—A decree of divorce has been filed in favor of Mary Cahill, of Brooklyn, N. Y., from Michael Cahill, of Chicago. The ground was non-support. The couple were married at Lincoln, Neb., about three years ago. Mrs. Cahill is known in literary circles as Marie Walsh, author of "Hazel Kirke" and other novels.

Striking Weavers Decide to Return.

PHILADELPHIA, May 31.—After eight weeks of idleness, the striking weavers of the Berkshire mills, Frankford, have decided to return to their looms.

Severe Punishment.

PALERMO, May 31.—The court sentenced Deputy Joseph De Felice Ciuffrida to 18 years' imprisonment for complicity in the Sicilian riots.

VEST AND CLEVELAND.

What the Missouri Senator Says About the Administration.

NEW YORK, May 31.—A Kansas City, Mo., special to the Herald says: In a letter to Joseph Speyer of this city, candidate for consul general to Germany, Senator Vest of this state says:

"MY DEAR SIR:—In accordance with request made in your letter to me of May 18, I hereby enclose the papers which I filed with the secretary of state. Referring to that portion of your letter in which you state that the present administration and the representatives from Missouri seem to have no use for the German-Americans, except to get their votes, I have only to reply that so far as I am concerned the statement is unfounded and unjust. After the president gave me distinctly to understand that he did not desire my advice in regard to appointments in Missouri it was simply impossible for me without forfeiting my self-respect to approach him on that subject. I have no apologies to make to anyone for declining to ask favors from this administration, and if you or anyone else proposes to ascribe motives to me which do not exist I have no recourse except to leave the matter where it is.

"When Mr. Cleveland deliberately made appointments at Kansas City which no one in our delegation had recommended, and did so in the most offensive manner, I made up my mind to leave public life rather than sacrifice my self-respect by approaching him on the subject of patronage. Very truly,

"GEORGE G. VEST."

A Collapsed Town.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., May 31.—A case involving $2,000,000 is being heard in the United States circuit court, the style of the suit being P. Mason et al vs. W. H. Russell and A. A. Hopkins, receivers for the East Tennessee Land company. The property is located in Harriman, Tenn. The company failed some months ago, and the above were appointed receivers. The bill states that the indebtedness of the company outside the bonded debt is nearly $800,000. The complaint against the receivers is that they are not proper persons to act as such; that they have been largely instrumental in wrecking the company, and that their personal interests conflict with those of the creditors and bondholders. The case will consume at least two days in hearing.

INCIDENTS OF THE DAY

Events and Happenings at Many Points Yesterday.

The President Attends the Ceremonies at Arlington—Flag Raised Over Betsy Ross' Grave at Philadelphia—Blue and Gray Treated Alike at Chicago—Bicycle Records.

WASHINGTON, May 31.—The president and the members of his cabinet at present in Washington, Secretaries Gresham, Carlisle, Smith and Morton attended the ceremonies at Arlington, where more than 16,000 graves were decorated. The presidential party, whose appearance on the speakers' platform created considerable enthusiasm, took no part in the programme, but attentively listened to the eloquent addresses, and at the conclusion of the exercises returned to the city.

Brig. Gen. Mansfield Remembered.

MIDDLETOWN, Conn., May 31.—The grave in this place of Brig. Gen. J. K. F. Mansfield, who was killed at the battle of Antietam just after being assigned to the command of the Twelfth corps, was decorated by Mansfield post, Grand Army of the republic, of Brooklyn. General Isaac S. Catlin, of that city, delivered an address extolling the abilities of General Mansfield, which, he said, with time and opportunity, would have placed him beside the great leaders of the war.

Winners in Chicago Cycling Race.

CHICAGO, May 31.—In the Chicago road race on wheels, Frederick Rau, 16 years old, who had not won any kind of a cycling prize before and has been riding a wheel only two years, was the first rider to cross the tape at the finish. He was on the 7 1-2 minutes handicap mark and covered the distance, 18 1-3 miles, in 57 minutes and 10 seconds. The route was over the smooth Sheridan drive and other avenues. The time prize was won by W. Bainbridge, in 54 minutes, 36 seconds.

Not the Coney Island of Yore.

CONEY ISLAND, N. Y., May 31.—"Opening Day" at Coney Island this year was not the opening day of former years. Less than 15,000 people were at this resort which was about one-third less than the number on former Memorial days. The opinion of the majority of Coney Island business men is that this resort under the new regulations would henceforth prove a failure as far as making money is concerned, and that the present will certainly be a losing season.

Two Jockeys Fatally Injured.

PHŒNIXVILLE, Pa., May 31.—A serious and probably fatal accident occurred to two jockeys in some running races here. In the hurdle race the horse ridden by Arthur Davis, colored, of Norristown, struck a hurdle and fell, throwing Davis, and the horse ridden by Guy Gilbert, of Phœnixville, also stumbled over the prostrate animal and threw his rider. Both boys were crushed under the horses and will probably die from the effects of their injuries.

Flag Over Betsy Ross' Grave.

PHILADELPHIA, May 31.—A handsome flag was raised over the grave of Betsy Ross, the colonial lady who made the first stars and stripes. Her grave in Mount Moriah cemetery was the scene of a touching ceremony which was conducted by the United States Grant camp of the Sons of Veterans. The raising of a flag was a suggestion of Superintendent Bell, of the cemetery, and the Grant camp intends to continue the ceremony every year.

Blue and Gray Treated Alike.

CHICAGO, May 31.—Flowers received from many southern states, sent by women to decorate the graves of six thousand Confederate soldiers resting in Oakwood cemetery, were distributed by the ex-Confederate Soldiers' association, of Chicago, on the graves of northern and southern soldiers alike.

Floral Designs for McClellan's Grave.

TRENTON, N. J., May 31.—Several handsome floral designs for General McClellan's grave in Riverview cemetery were sent by the Hancock Veterans' association, McClellan post and the Page Library association, of Philadelphia. The grave of Gen. Gersham B. Mott also received special attention.

Rain Looses Ball Managers $6,000.

PITTSBURG, May 31.—As Pittsburg always turns out big crowds on Decoration Day, the baseball managers figure their loss by the postponement on account of rain of the two games scheduled here at more than $6,000.

New 15 Mile Cycle Record.

ERIE, Pa., May 31.—In the Koster road race, over a fifteen-mile course, Otto Maya broke the best previous fifteen mile cycle record, that over the Belle Isle course at Detroit in 43:44, and established a new record of 42:26.

Gov. Werts Lays a Corner-Stone.

PATERSON, N. J., May 31.—Gov. Werts laid the corner-stone of the new Second regiment armory in the presence of several thousand people, including nearly 2,000 members of the New Jersey national guard.

Bishop McMahon's Grave Decorated.

HARTFORD, Conn., May 31.—In all, 653 graves were decorated, including that of Bishop McMahon in St. Joseph's cathedral, who was chaplain of the 28th Massachusetts volunteers.

Broke the World's Record.

BUFFALO, May 31.—In the Martin road race here Callahan broke the world's record for the distace (25 miles). His time was 1 hour and 10 minute, 37 seconds.

McAllister Monument Unveiled.

BELVIDERE, N. J., May 31.—The granite monument in the Belvidere cemetery erected in memory of Gen. Robert McAllister was unveiled and dedicated.

Services in the Grant Cottage.

SARATOGA, N. Y., May 31.—Post McKean of this village held memorial service in the Gen. Grant cottage on Mt. McGregor.

"Temperance" Saloon Raided.

HARTFORD, Conn., May 31.—The New Britain police raided James Gavin's "temperance" saloon on Main street, New Britain. A keg of beer was found and confiscated and Gavin was arrested.

EARLY INTELLIGENCE

—The letter carriers got their new Summer suits today.

—The post-office is to be turned over to John M. Hetfield after closing tonight.

—James O'Rourke for disorderly conduct was sent to Elizabeth for 20 days by City Judge Coddington this morning.

—Justice Mosher Tuesday night dismissed Thomas Price's complaint of assault and battery against James Donahue.

—Ex-Chief N. H. Astfalk of Elizabeth, this morning pleaded non vult to keeping a disorderly house. He will be sentenced Saturday.

—The Ladies Aid Society of Hope Chapel will give a strawberry festival in the chapel tomorrow evening, and Saturday afternoon and evening. Admission will be free.

—Two hundred attended at the Pythian ball in the Turn Verein Hall Tuesday night. General and Mrs. Creamer of Elizabeth, assisted by Sir Knight and Mrs. L. Coombs led the dancing.

—The false rumor that Berthune or "Cooney" Dunham had been drowned with John Linbarger in Bound Brook or New Market spread rapidly yesterday and was generally believed.

—J. Howard Leggett, the druggist, has just added a handsome new oak, nickled-trimmed refrigerator to his soda water department, in which to keep ice-cream. If you enjoy ice-cream soda he can now supply you second to none in the city. His strawberry cream is the talk of the town.

MR. STREULI'S ACCIDENT.

Thrown from His Horse, and Severely Hurt.

H. A. Streuli, Jr., of Hillside avenue, rode down Watchung avenue yesterday morning at 10 upon a spirited horse he just had hired for a short ride. As he tried to turn the corner at Front street the horse did not respond well to the rein and Mr. Streuli almost lost his balance. His spur cut the horse, which plunged and threw him.

The young man struck on his head and received two cuts about three inches long reaching the skull. He was removed to his home and attended by Dr. George W. Endicott. He was improving well this morning.

Coal Cars Collapsed.

Five cars of an east-bound coal train jumped the track opposite the Potter Press Works at 5:30 Tuesday afternoon. The coal and cars blocked tracks 3 and 4. An east-bound Blue Line train was flagged and stopped. The conductor obtained orders by telephone from H. L. Freeman's pharmacy and backed up and came down on a west-bound track. The two tracks were blocke until 10 at night.

Fine Laces.

The largest single purchase of lace ever made by any Plainfield store was made by Mr. White last week. He bought over 5 000 yards of white and cream laces from an importer who wanted ready cash and was willing to sacrifice his stock for the money. The laces are on exhibition in the show windows and are well worth going to see.

Crescents Lose.

Fresh from their morning victory over the Rutgers College nine, the Cranford Country Club came to Plainfield yesterday afternoon and defeated the Crescents as follows:

DEATH AT THE DAM.

JOHN LINBARGER DROWNED IN THE RARITAN RIVER.

While Fishing Below the Falls He Was Drawn Under Them by the Suction and in Spite of a Brave Battle for Life Killed Before His Companions' Eyes.

Overwhelmed with rushing water, weakened by wounds, weary from exertion, John Linbarger met a terrible death in the Raritan River yesterday morning.

He left his wife and young son at their home in the Crescent Rink Building in time to join Audley J. Marsh of New street and Jesse Ayres of Spooner avenue and to take the morning newspaper train at 5:43. On the train the party met Elvin VanName of Elmwood place and John Butler of West Front street, who were likewise bound on a fishing trip on the Raritan.

The Plainfielders left the train in Bound Brook and walked down to the dam which which crosses the river a mile below, a favorite fishing place. Marsh and Ayres secured a rowboat and went across to the east side, a safe distance above the dam. Linbarger hired a small square-ended boat from Mr. Zimmerman at the lock and started out below the dam with his fishing tackle.

The men at the lock warned him against going out below, for the recent rains had made the river high. Linbarger went on. He was a good swimmer and had fished there for 20 years and over. The water was high, rushing over the dam with its peculiar wrinkles, and the current setting back below was apparently stong, but Linbarger had no fear of danger. He pushed out with the long pole furnished with the boat, wishing to reach a clear spot near the eastern bank. He ventured too close to the dam.

The boat was caught in an eddy and drawn up stream with irresistible force. Linbarger then saw his danger, and shouted for help. VanName and Butler shouted to Lock-tender Fisher for a rope, and thought he would bring it across. They then came up towards the dam. Meanwhile Linbarger's boat swung around and struck the dam. It was overturned, and Linbarger sank. When he came up he grabbed the side of the boat. The falling water struck it and wrenched it away, but he obtained another hold.

Butler and VanName renewed their shouts, and Marsh and Ayres rowed to the lock for the rope. Butler and VanName were now on the east side and reached at once the stone abutment above where Linbarger was struggling. They could do nothing but watch him as he fought for life but ten feet below.

Several logs had drifted into the current and were being tossed about. One of them, a heavy willow, struck Linbarger's head as he rose each time after the current pulled him down. Blood from the gashes it inflicted reddened the water and made the sight more terrible to the onlookers.

Perhaps ten minutes, perhaps fifteen, elapsed before Marsh returned alone with a rope and reached the top of the stone work. Just as the men were ready to throw the rope Linbarger let go his hold on the boat. Another current caught him then and carried him down the river into smooth water. When 60 feet from the dam and about 30 feet from shore he sank and disappeared, struggling to the last.

News of the accident was brought to Plainfield by Butler and VanName, who returned by train. The search for the body began at once. It was a question whether it had been carried back to the eddy, or whether it had caught on the rocks in the bed of the river, or floated down the stream. The river was dragged by men in boats as near to the dam as possible, and Charles Rice, a fellow-workman, with one end of a rope tied about his waist, waded along the shore and searched the willows where lodged the body of the robber who was shot and drowned some time ago.

The anxious workers continued their search all day, fishermen enjoyed their sport on both sides of the river; on the embankment above the scene of the drowning a merry picnic party of young people from New Brunswick laughed and chatted and joked and sang popular songs and occasionally a hymn.

The river fell a foot during the day. The willow log floated out from the dam. The boat remained where it upset and was broken to pieces. Search was given up for the day at 4 in the afternoon.

Linbarger was 54 years old and had lived and worked at painting in Plainfield all his life. He was married twice; his second wife survives him. His grown son Harry lives in Brooklyn and he leaves a second son, a boy of six. The drowned man's father, William Linbarger, was a contracting painter of Plainfield. An uncle, also named John, died in San Jose, Illinois, a week ago yesterday at about the same hour that the accident happened. Another uncle is Ross J. Linbarger, V. S., of Manning avenue. Two others, J. P. Linbarger of Brooklyn and A. J. Linbarger of Bound Brook, were in Bound Brook yesterday and went to the dam. The decedent's sisters are Mrs. Henry Southard, Mrs. Billyeu and Mrs. Sofield of the borough. He had been accustomed for years to fish for black bass Decoration Day, the opening of the season.

The search was renewed by workmen of Marsh & Ayres this morning. At 11:55 the body was recovered. It had lodged in the willows about 500 feet below the dam. A hook with which the river was being dragged pulled the body up from the bottom. The line broke. Charles Rice, who was in the water, then found the body. It was drawn to the shore and left partly in the water, and the authorities were notified.

Coroner McDede of New Brunswick this afternoon issued a permit for the removal of the body.

Pool Prizes.

The pool tournament has ended in the C. Y. M. L. with Thomas Carty the winner. His prizes are a cue and a pair of shoes. Michael Whelan, second, gets a cue and a box of cigars; and P. Butscher and John Moran are tied for third place and get a cue apiece.

WORK OF THE Y'S.

THIS ANNUAL REPORT SHOWS WHAT THEY HAVE DONE.

They Hear an Address by a Woman Who Scores Breckinridge, and Who Tells Why Women Want to Vote.

The Y.W. C. T. U. celebrated its eighth anniversary Tuesday evening. The members and their friends filled the new Seventh-Day Baptist Church. In opening the exercises Rev. C. L. Goodrich read an appropriate passage from the Bible and Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis prayed. The secretary, Miss S. L. Bass, then presented the following report of the year's work:

Tonight our Y completes the eighth year of its existence. May 6, 1886, a meeting was held in the Congregational Church for the purpose of organizing the young women of Plainfield into a band of loyal workers who by their influence should induce the young men of their acquaintance to recognize the great value and blessing of temperance.

Although this is the primary object of the association, the work which it undertakes does not stop there. For three years past the Y's have had charge of the Loyal Temperance Legion, a band of children who once a week are instructed in temperance principles. The superintendent, Miss Winter, reports that during the past year the enrollment has been almost 100 members, with a high average attendance. The lessons have been given from the Temperance Lesson Manual, and also from the blackboard. The meetings are presided over by the president, a girl of eleven years, and the children have done well in conducting their own meetings. A Band of Mercy was formed in November in connection with the work, and the children show much interest in it. In February the Legion gave an entertainment at which they made $14. With this money they met the expenses of the entertainment, made a donation to the soup kitchen of the W.C.T.U., sent flowers to one of their members who had been through trouble, and bought badges, reward cards, etc. A Penny Provident Association has been opened with the boys and girls, and thus some inducement is given them to save their pennies.

The Hospital Committee report that with but few exceptions the hospital has been visited once a week for the past year and donations of old linen, fruit, jelly and literature have been made. The members of the committee have also by singing brought brightness and cheer to many a bed of pain.

Under the auspices of the Devotional Committee meetings have been held once a month. At three of these meetings most delightful and helpful talks have been given by Dr. Lewis, Mr. Herring and Mr. Richardson.

The treasurer reports that the total receipts of the year have been $82.53. With this sum has been paid the rent of the rooms of the Union, donations have been to the soup kitchen, to the Citizens Organized Aid Association, to the Y's hospital bed, to the Isabella Gibson Fund, and expenses of the Loyal Temperance Legion have been met.

We have this year made the beginning in a work which we think will be of great importance, that is: scientific temperance instruction. We propose that our superintendent, Miss Beekman, shall furnish to the presidents of the Junior Leagues of the churches such books on the subject of scientific temperance instruction as she shall deem best, and also that she shall see that at least once a month such instruction be given to the children.

We have met with the hearty co-operation of the members and presidents of the church societies, and trust that the results will be most satisfactory.

Miss Amey Green introduced the speaker of the evening, Miss Clara Parrish, of Illinois. Miss Parrish spoke on "Our Possibilities and Responsibilities". In short her address was as follows:

"If it is better to set ten men to work than to do the work of ten", then it must be a worthy work to open to young women the door of opportunity and responsibility. There are doubtless many good men in the country, but sometimes it seems that they are hopelessly in the minority. The young women of today are the same as those of other years except that they now have greater power. Woman's influence can not be measured.

Woman's voice is needed in the great battle of the world, that of the home against the saloon. We call ourselves a Christian nation and yet we license a traffic which the queen of Madagascar would not tolerate. We annually spend $900,000,000 for rum and $5,500,000 for foreign missions. Thousands of our young women are waiting for money with which to reach missionary fields. The foreign work is important, but all who wish to can not go. A work at home awaits them.

The one great battle concerns woman's rights as queen of the home against King Acohol. Her power has increased a thousand fold since the last century. It is but 50 years ago that she could only work in three ways, as a domestic, a seamstress or a school teacher, and their was a great prejudice against the last. A hundred avenues of opportunity have since been opened to her, a reform brought on, greatly, by those noble women, Susan B. Anthony and Frances E. Willard.

This is an age of young people. The most important step of the centuries has been the raising of the young folks to an active part in church work. This is especially true of the young women and it is well that such is the case, for the advancement of any country can be estimated by the regard it has for woman. Society is beginning to see that the wild oats theory is a failure in the raising of young men. The time has come when the young woman of America should demand in the young the purity which is demanded of her.

Women in general are not very anxious to vote, but they want the saloon abolished and accordingly wish to do something toward this necessary action. Women do not want to go to Congress very bad, but they wish to make it impossible for a Breckinridge to go there.

The great need of the hour among our young women is a sharpened perception of their own possibilities. The aid of all is needed for all are concerned. The apathy of good people does more to hinder the temperance movement than anything else. But the work is progressing. Read the journals of the 600,000 men behind the bar to see how much they fear the W. C. T. U.

Miss Parrish used many instructive illustrations very effectively. She closed with a reference to scientific temperance instruction and reasons for favoring the pledging of children. A collection was taken up by Miss Bessie Titsworth, Miss Mabel Maxson, Miss Lu Lewis and Miss Clawson, the choir singing meanwhile. Miss Parrish explained the details of the Y's schemes and the meeting ended with the singing of America.

The special choir of the evening was composed of Mrs. S. R. Struthers, Miss Augusta Holmes, Miss Ethel Holmes, Miss Julia Ketcham, the Misses Demarest, Mrs. J. K. Myers, Miss Carrie Dewey, Miss Jessie Smillie and Miss Nancy Randolph. Miss Jessie Utter was the accompanist.

The Spring House Cleaning Wisely urged by the BOARD OF HEALTH is not complete without a proper use of DISINFECTANTS. But, in choosing these, do not be misled into paying fancy prices for "patent" specialties. Common lime is better than any of them for damp cellars and stables. For vaults, drains, cess pools, the best and cheapest disinfectant is COPPERAS, supplied by us by the pound or barrel at low rates. But for use in the house, in the plumbing, in kitchen sinks, in closets, for purifying the air of sick rooms, deodorizing offensive discharges—in short, for all purposes of a household disinfectant, nothing can excel the powerful solution of chlorides made and sold by us for 15 years under the name of REYNOLDS'S ODORLESS DISINFECTANT. # G. A. R. MEMORIALS.

FITTING CELEBRATION BY PLAINFIELD'S TWO POSTS.

Graves of Dead Comrades are Strewn with Flowers, and Music, Speeches and Tableaux Constitute Indoors Tributes.

Memorial Day was cool, clear and beautiful, and the Plainfield posts of the Grand Army of the Republic held most appropriate observances.

In the morning details from Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, marched to the various cemeteries and decorated the graves of comrades. The Independent Fife and Drum Corps assisted. They were divided as follows: Scotch Plains—H. C. Drake and fourteen comrades; Friends and Catholic cemeteries—Charles Westphal and twelve comrades; Evergreen and Methodist cemeteries—I. McVoy and ten comrades.

The Memorial Detail was Chas. Stephens, Chairman; William Smith, George Moore, William Hand, H. C. Drake and I. McVoy, and the members from the Woman's Relief Corps assisting were Mrs. M. G. Dobbins, Chairman; Mrs. Angleman, Mrs. I. Brokaw, Mrs. McVoy. The women arranged the flowers for decorating.

The comrades then returned to their rooms and marched to Music Hall to assist in preparing for the afternoon exercises.

At the grave of the late Isaac Brokaw the detail under the direction of Adjutant M. C. Dobbins held appropriate exercises consisting of readings by the comrades, prayer by Chaplain J. Goodwin, and music by the Fife and Drum Corps.

In the afternoon at 2:30 memorial exercises were held in Music Hall, which were witnessed by a very large audience. The scenery and decorations of the stage were exceedingly well arranged, and made a very pretty picture.

Commander S. W. Reese had charge of the exercises, and called for the Memorial Orders, issued by Commander-in-Chief John G. B. Adams of Lynn, Mass.

The commander then responded with appropriate words. A chorus of one hundred girls rendered "America", in a manner that stirred the hearts of all present. This was followed with a piano solo by Chauncey Hyde Demaray of Somerville, which was very much appreciated. The selection brought forth heartiest applause.

The singing of Miss Kate Opdyke of Somerville was a most enjoyable event. This accomplished soloist was given a hearty reception and her rendering of the "Sword of Bunker Hill" was a pleasing one and fully appreciated. An attractive part of the programme was the decorating, with flowers, of the soldier's grave by nine little girls.

A solo by Arthur Smith, entitled "The Lone Grave", was rendered in a highly commendable manner, and the young singer was applauded for his excellent singing.

Commander Reese, Senior Vice-Commander Charles Westphal, Officer of the Day I. McVoy, and Chaplain John Goodwin, participated in a very pretty exercise arranged from the Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic. The chorus then sang "The Star-Spangled Banner."

John Gibson, private secretary to the Mayor of Newark, was the orator, and was introduced by Commander S. W. Reese. He said in part:

"Veterans of the G. A. R., ladies and gentlemen, nothing appeals to the public more than Memorial Day. It associates us with the honored dead. When we lay flowers on the graves of the heroes it fits us for nobler sacrifices. We should renew our gratitude to Almighty God that the war is obliterated. What better token can we offer to the men who fought for Liberty than this Memorial Day? Their moral forces have survived their lives. We realize that all the sacrifices were theirs, and the benefits ours. Put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is hallowed ground.

"Let us make plain why we decorate their graves. More than a century ago our fathers fought for freedom; but we could not say we were entirely free; we had 4,000,000 slaves in slavery.

"In April, 1861, when Sumpter was fired upon, the mighty struggle began.

"With the nation now united, and the terrible curse of slavery obliterated, we can forgive our brethren. The sovereignty of every man is established in this land, and our liberty is sweeter if we realize the sacrifice.

"In war, men sprang with lightning rapidity to preserve the nation for their children. I shall never forget the scene in a country district in Sussex County; the people had not the advantages which we enjoy in cities. In that quiet county came the news of war. A meeting was held in the village church; an old man brought fifteen boys, and everyone placed his name on the roll.

"I remember one boy who was accused of being tied to his mother's apron-string. He enlisted; three years afterwards his body was found pierced with bullets, offered as a sacrifice to his country. It was no spasmodic fire, but a steady one, that burned from the commencement of the war to Appomottox. We never lost faith in our ultimate success.

"Veterans, you who were assembled to participate in these exercises, remember these incidents. Some were permitted to come back; some now sleep beneath the sod; and we are permitted in loving remembrance to strew their graves with flowers.

"The record of the New Jersey soldiers is a grand one. Every battlefield has some of the brave boys sleeping their last sleep. We shall never know why they were taken, but always feel that they are gone. You can recall the names of some of the sons of New Jersey who fell in the war. You can remember with pride that the loss of your regiments exceeded the loss of the Light Brigade at Balaklava; the loss in that charge was 35 per cent.; in the Eleventh and Fifteenth Regiments, 57 per cent.

"Comrades, every year you have new mounds to decorate. Most all of the great commanders have passed away. 33 years ago began the war. On this one day in the year we live over the great sacrifice.

"I can't refrain from speaking of the noble self-sacrificing women. We should recall the self-denial, the anxiety, of the mother for her boys. Her offering was as pure as the world ever saw. The wife who gave up her husband can never be compensated for what she gave for her country.

"In a memorial service I sometimes think we fail to give the praise to our women who gave their fathers, sons and brothers. The women were enthusiastic and encouraged enlistments. Le us in the hour of our deliverance never forget what our liberties cost. In closing, let me say that every citizen should remember on Memorial Day that all our boasted generosity to the pensioners amounts to but a little more than $2 per capita."

The exercises closed with an elaborate tableau "United", arranged by W. R Mattox, in which the characters were:

Goddess—Sadie Summers.
Peace—Ada Nash.
Justice—Lucy Westphal.
North—Ella Cline.
West—Stella Stine.
South—Retta Nash.
East—Lilian Haberle.
Veterans—James Huntington and Samuel Terry.

The memorial services of Major Anderson Post were held in the evening in the old Seventh-Day Baptist Church. The church was filled with patriotic Americans. Small flags were along the side walls and large ones were placed on each side of the organ, back of the flowers which decorated the platform. Lincoln's picture hung in the centre of the organ front. A body of children in front seats wore turbans made of flags.

Adjutant Norman C. Magee in opening read an order from the National Headquarters regarding Memorial Day, and Commander J. Frank Hubbard spoke in response after the ritualistic form of the G. A. R.

The Memorial Day Ode was then rendered by a choir composed of soprano Mrs. Asa Collier, alto Miss Julia Ketcham, tenor Elmer Runyon, and basso Robert Gorton. The accompanist was Miss Jessie Utter.

Commander Hubbard then welcomed the audience to the services and hoped that those present would join in reverent spirit in the exercises held in memory of the grand army of the immortal.

The quartette sang "Let the Dead and the Beautiful Rest", and afterward the Commander introduced the orator of the day, Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis. Briefly, his remarks were:

"That terrible order of war, 'close up the ranks', is being given and obeyed now. The G. A. R. men are steadily decreasing in numbers. During the year 25,000 or 30,000 have died. The ranks are being closed, and the line is being shortened. No recruits are ready to fill up the empty spaces."

Dr. Lewis gave a full chronology of slavery, and continued:

"There is not the same unrest now as there was during the war, but the possibilities are as great. There has probably never been a time since the triumph in Gettysburg when the situation was so like that of 1860 as now. I have never spoken to the people on a national issue when the need for action was stronger.

"The men of the war who tried to destroy the nation are now in Washington. In the House of Representatives are 56 Confederate soldiers and 64 Union; in the Senate are 20 Confederate and 10 Union. The total of both bodies is 76 Confederate and 74 Union. Among chairmen of committees the Confederate soldiers number 22 in each House to four Union in the House and 10 Union in the Senate. And Speaker Crisp is among the the Confederates.

"These are not partisan views, but cold facts. In March, while in Richmond, I heard it said 'What has not been gained by bayonets has been gained by ballots'. I do not wish to arouse bitter memories, but the fact remains that the struggle did not end in Appomattox. We are tonight, in spite of all, with riots in 16 States because of an army of 8 000 men who are pleading as regards many national issues in the same way as the enemies of the nation did before the war.

"The foreign element is different from that in the country before the war. Party and national lines were swept away then and the foreigners joined the ranks and did their duty. Now our country is overrun with foreigners who have come from lands where government is considered the enemy of the people. They are waiting only for an opportunity to bring havoc to the land which has received them. Our government stands on the character of its people not upon force of arms for an existence. A republic can not be made of such a class to which so many of our immigrants belong. Immigration must be restricted to character and quality.

"The ballot likewise must be restricted, especially in the cities, on the basis of educational and moral fitness. If the women are given suffrage it must be with the same line drawn between the ignorant and the intelligent. It is the only way in which safety can be found for the government.

"Loyalty to the nation must be revived. The voters are now in the majority who were born after the war. They must be taught to hold the nation in higher regard. If we had had the so-called tramp element with us in 1860 it is doubtful if the nation could have been saved. Men lose all their manliness when they stop their independent efforts and go to the government and demand that they be provided with work. I hope the veterans here may live to see Congress redeemed or so changed that no such troubles can occur again. But if not the soldiers can rest assured that they have done their duty. The younger generation must keep the nation the Grand Army men helped to save."

At the close of the address Dr. J. T. Berg and Miss Berg played a cornet duet. The quartette sang a good-night song and David Bodine gave the taps. Dr. Lewis pronounced the benediction.

The Memorial Detail of Major Anderson Post, Asa Collier, C. H. Randolph, J. T. Dunham, Edward T. Dunn and N. C. Magee, yesterday morning decorated soldiers graves in Hillside and First Presbyterian, Piscataway, New Brooklyn and New Market cemeteries.

Garfield League of Loyal Ladies and Houghton Division of Loyal Children held services in the First Presbyterian Cemetery yesterday morning. The following was the programme rendered in charge of the Senior Vice-President—Mrs. E. J. Olsen: Singing "Red, White and Blue". Responsive services. Prayer by Mayor Needham. Salute to the flag. Singing, "We Love Our Starry Banner". Addres, ex-Judge John Ulrich. Memorial decoration of graves. Service for the unknown dead. Singing, "Cover them over with beautiful flowers". Singing, "America"

LARGE AND GROWING WORK.

Muhlenberg Hospital Concludes a Busy Year, and Asks for Help.

The Board of Governors of Muhlenberg Hospital held their annual meeting Monday evening, May 28. The reports of the officers and committees of the Board show a greater work done during the year than ever before, better and still growing facilities and equipment, and, of course, considerably increased expenses. This enlargement involves greater demands upon the time and attention of all engaged in the management and work of the hospital.

The number of patients treated during the year in the wards and in the dispensary was 284, and the number of surgical operations was 54.

The income of the hospital has been from: Donations $2,773; Hospital Sunday collections $400; Woman's Auxiliary Board $921; King's Daughters $200; patients $1,537, and the expenses for fuel $280; medicines and surgical appliances $671; provisions $1,773; wages $1,838, incidental expenses $784; a balance of about $500 remains in the bank.

A new operating room is in process of construction at the hospital which with its furniture and equipment will cost about $2,500. This amount the Medical Staff have undertaken to raise by subscription, and they still need several hundred dollars to complete the sum. When finished this operating room will fully meet all modern scientific requirements of such a room, and be admirably adapted to the needs of the hospital.

The heating apparatus at the hospital is insufficient and worn out, and a new boiler must be put in, which will involve considerable outlay.

The reports indicate the growing efficiency, usefulness and appreciation of the institution, and its need of continued and larger gifts from our citizens.

At the election of officers Rufus K. Case who has been President for several years insisted on being relieved from further duty in that office, and Edward B. Clark was chosen President. The other officers were:

First Vice-President—Charles Schipper.
Second Vice-President — Samuel Huntington.
Secretary—William R. Cock.
Treasurer—George H. Goddard.

Hurt by Falling Plaster.

A portion of the ceiling about ten feet square near the south end of Winfield Scott Post's banquet rooms fell at 5 yesterday afternoon while refreshments were being served. Several persons were struck by small pieces of plaster, Mrs. Charles B. Stephens of West Second street alone receiving painful injuries.

Her head and neck were bruised and she suffered a severe shock. She was attended by Dr. George W. Endicott and taken to her home, where she will be confined to her bed for a few days

CYCLING COMMENT.

C. K Kline and John J. Kenney were efficient umpires at the Rahway races yesterday afternoon.

The C. Y. M. L. Cyclers will have a club run to Rahway next Sunday afternoon, leaving the Lyceum at 2.

A. H. Barnett of Westfield, the winner of the great road race yesterday, entered from the Elizabeth Wheelmen. Hereafter he will ride as a Crescent Wheelmen.

The Irvington-Millburn road race was won yesterday on a Spalding 21 pound special furnished by W. H. Rogers. This proves that to be a winner you want to follow Rogers.

The grounds of the Crescent Wheelmen have been closed, and all, members included, must show tickets to enter.

Plainfielders were not prominent in the Rahway races yesterday. Isaac Townley entered and started in the one mile novice, one mile three-minute class, one-half mile handicap and one mile handicap. He rode a good race with the novices although unsuccessful in his heat. I. N. Line entered everything but did n't start in any. Edgar Serrell rode slow in the three-minute class. E. T. Broderick was an entered novice, but did n't race. T. A. Cuming was third in his trial heat in the one mile handicap. He was handicapped 90 yards and rode well, giving the man ahead a good race. He did not try for the division half mile championship

TENNIS TRIUMPH.

FISH AND SIMMONDS WIN THE NAHANT TOURNEY.

Superb Day for the Sport, and the Enthusiasts Enjoy Some Brilliant Play—How the Players Ranked, and Who Enjoyed the Tea that Followed.

The Memorial Day tournament of the flourishing Hillside Tennis Club was a delightful event. By the Nahant system, which prevailed, each entry plays each other entry, and the winner of most matches is the victor.

The sunless day made lovely tennis weather, and the absence of dust was another blessing. The grounds and courts were in splendid order. Flags flying in the breeze testified to the club's patriotism.

The gathering was large and fashionable. Smart turnouts, elegant gowns, and beautiful women, made it a brilliant assemblage.

Play was begun at 9, with seven entries. Eleven matches were played in the morning, with three courts in use. In the afternoon, play commenced at 3, H. Ryder and D. Ryder, L. Simmonds and H. Simmonds, and J. H. P. Wharton and Lovell withdrew, and defaulted their unplayed games.

Following is the final score:

| | won. | lost. |
|---|---|---|
| F. K. Fish, Jr. and A. P. Simmonds | 6 | 0 |
| F. W. Walz and Carl Walz | 5 | 1 |
| L. H. Fish and Stanley Hunter | 4 | 2 |
| H. D. West and Sherwood West | 3 | 3 |
| Henry Ryder and Dean Ryder | 2 | 4 |
| Lee Simmonds and H. Simmonds | 1 | 5 |
| J. H. P. Wharton and Mr. Lovell | 0 | 6 |

The most interesting match of the day was that between the Walz brothers and Messrs. Fish and Simmonds, each of whom had a score of 5 matches won and none lost; this match concluded the tournament, and was won by Fish and Simmonds, 6—2, 3—6, 6—2; the last set was played amid intense excitement, and the detailed score is here given, showing how the points were made. Summary of set:

| Fish and Simmonds | vs. | Walz Brothers |
|---|---|---|
| 8 | Aces by Nets | 1 |
| 10 | " " Outs | 4 |
| 8 | " " Passes | 8 |
| 0 | " " Double Faults | 1 |
| 26 | | 14 |

At the conclusion of the tournament a reception was held in the club-house, which was tastefully decorated with wild flowers and vines, for which credit is due to George P. Mellick, Chairman of the House Committee, and assistants. The decorations were more noticeable from the fact that at the regular teas of the club it has not been the custom to decorate the room.

Mrs. J Doull Miller received the guests, assisted by Mrs. Howard Tracy, Miss Walz, Miss Stewart and Miss Talmadge. Tea, lemonade, cafe frappe, sandwiches, and wafers, were served.

Among those present were the following:

Mr. and Mrs. James DeGreff, Mr. and Mrs. Foster Milliken, Miss Mollie Lawrence, Miss Simmonds, Mr. and Mrs. George P. Mellick, Burrit Shepard, F. H. Andrews, Miss Andrews, Fred Yates, Miss Margaret Yates, John M. Whiton, Miss Mary Whiton, Miss Lawson, Rev. W. B Richards, D. D., Rev. and Mrs. C. L Goodrich, the Misses Carter of Montclair, Mrs. J. W. Reinhart, the Misses Reinhart, Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Shepard, Mr. and Miss Dryden, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Morrison, Brooklyn, Misses Davis, Mr. and Mrs. G H. ## ATE AT THE SUMMIT.

Entre Nous Members Enjoy a Drive to and Dinner at Mizzen Peak Cottage.

The Entre Nous concluded the season yesterday by a ride to Mizzen Peak, and there enjoyed one of M. Fauchereau's good dinners. Among the pleasant features of the evening's enjoyment was Mr. Roome's witty speech. Those at table were Mr. and Mrs. William L. Saunders, Mr. and Mrs. George C. Evans, Mr. and Mrs. James T. Scott, Mr. and Mrs. S. StJ. McCutchen, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Roome, Mrs. James T. Scott, Mr and Mrs. Charles Hogan, and Mr. and Mrs. B A Hegeman, Jr

Tough Use of a Livery Rig.

Liveryman A. S. Huff of Chatham street rented a horse and buggy to a resident of the city yesterday afternoon. The rig was returned this morning. The horse had apparently been driven hard, and the wagon was badly smashed. The top was missing and the driver did not know how nor where he had spent the night.

Another of Mr. Huff's horses was left in the street yesterday afternoon and ran away. The animal was found on Summit avenue near Samuel Taynor's place this morning.

FOR THE relief and cure of a cold in the head peace is more potency in Ely's Cream Balm than in anything else it is possible to prescribe. This preparation has for years past been making a brilliant success as a remedy for cold in the head, catarrh and hay fever. Used in the initial stages of these complaints Cream Balm prevents any serious development of the symptoms, while almost numberless cases are on record of radical cures of chronic catarrh and hay fever after all other treatments have proved of no avail.

"THE MESSIAH" NEXT SEASON.

Choral Society Plans a Series of Three Brilliant Concerts.

President C. W. McCutchen of the Choral Society make the following announcement:

The Oratorio of "Elijah", May 15, concluded the series of concerts for the season of 1893-4. The performance was received with marked approval, and was declared by critics to be fully up to the standard of the leading oratorio societies. This is gratifying to the members of the chorus (which now numbers over 130) and is ample reward for the close attendance on rehearsals, and the patient study which have been required of them. It is the purpose of the conductor, and those associated with him in the management of the society, to maintain this record of excellence, and to pursue the same lines of musical study, standard oratorios and choral works, with a judicious selection of music of a lighter class.

During the next season, three concerts will be given, as usual, the first of which, in Christmas week, will be "The Messiah," with eminent soloists and a full chorus and orchestra.

There is in the community a marked growth of appreciation of music of the higher class which the Choral Society considers it to be its mission to foster; there is also evidence of decidedly deeper interest in the work and aim of the society. These facts afford all the stimulus which is necessary to incite the members of the chorus to their best work for the ensuing year.

There remains necessary only the strong financial support from the friends and patrons of music in Plainfield, to assure the establishment of the Choral Society as a permanent institution in the community. It is believed that this support will be given.

SMASHED THINGS.

Newark Horses Get Frisky on Plainfield's Green Streets.

The wagon and team of J. R. Miller & Son, wholesale tobacco dealers of Newark, were left in front of Charles Suhr's barber shop on Watchung avenue near North at 11:30 this morning. The horses started to walk away and finding that no one stopped them they went across the street and ran on the sidewalk towards Second street. A number of pickets in the fence enclosing Mrs. Mary L. Force's property were broken by the right hubs.

At the corner of Second street the wagon struck a fire hydrant. The hydrant was pulled nearly over and the wagon swung around and fell on its side. The horses broke loose and ran east on Second street a block before they were caught. The front springs and woodwork of the wagon were broken and the top was torn. One of the horses was cut. The hydrant is being dug up.

NO BOROUGH YET.

A Damper on the Agitation.

The residents of Fanwood met pursuant to adjournment Monday evening at the club house and listened to the report of the special committee submitted by Benjamin Urner.

It was proposed that a committee of fifteen be appointed to confer with all residents within the limits of the borough as to their feelings either pro or con.

This proposition was voted down and after a remarkable speech by Wright Babcock the meeting then voted to adjourn sine die.

This action puts a damper on borough agitation for the present; and the improvements, particularly a drainage system, so much needed, are now completely shelved for some time to come.

MAYOR DOWNER.

Fanwood Has a New Head.

At the meeting of the Fanwood Township Committee Friday evening last, the resignation of George C. Miller was filed and Abner P. Downer appointed to fill the vacancy.

This action also places Mr. Downer in the Board of Health and he being already the postmaster is looked upon as Fanwood's most popular citizen.

An impromptu gathering of his neighbors, women predominating, called upon Mr. Downer Saturday evening and with Harry Robinson as spokesman heartily congratulated the Mayor-elect.

Good Girls' Good Time.

The Girls Mission Band of Willing Workers connected with the Congregational Church closed their season's work with a sociable in the church Tuesday evening. The affair was well attended and much enjoyed.

Miss Eva Wilkins played a piano solo and Miss Phenie Demarest recited. Jugs were broken and the contents added to the treasury. A report of the work of the Band was presented. Besides helping the poor of Plainfield the Workers have loaned $20 to the Lemoyn School in Memphis, Tenn. After a year the loan of the money will be transferred to some other deserving institution. At Christmas a box of gifts was sent to an Italian church in New York. The officers of the Band the past year were:

President—Miss Edna Howell.
Secretary—Miss Lulu Jenkins.
Treasurer—Miss Nellie Rockfellow.

Strawberries and cream and cake were served after the meeting to those attending.

—A. Uzinger has opened a bottling establishment at 110 Jackson avenue, and solicits the patronage of families for a trial order of the celebrated Ballentine's export beer and porter, ale and wine

PINCHED FACES.

PECULIAR TO AMERICAN WOMEN.

Some of the Causes which Appear upon Investigation.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

Ask them "What can be the matter?" and the invariable answer is, "I don't know." The eyes droop, and an air of deep gloom seems to overwhelm them. Press your questions a little closer, and you find avoidance of all society, reluctance to make the slightest effort, all accompanied with a crushing sense of bearing down.

"WHY DON'T WOMEN HAVE MORE FAITH?"

Further investigation discloses irregularity of periods, dizziness and faintness at times, and perhaps leucorrhœa.

Then surely the evidence is all-sufficient.

An American woman has discovered that the cause of all this lies in a deranged and diseased uterus or womb.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the most marvellous cure for this trouble ever discovered.

A purely vegetable remedy, it is at once an absolutely safe and natural cure for this crushing trouble.

It has cured thousands, and will cure you as sure as truth is truth.

Here is a letter from one of them which she wants us to publish:—

MRS. HARRIET WAMPLER

"For years I have been almost a constant sufferer from female trouble in all its dreadful forms: shooting pains all over my body, sick headache, spinal weakness, faintness, dizziness, depression, and everything that was horrid. I tried many doctors in different parts of the United States, but Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable compound has done more for me than all the doctors.

"I feel it my duty to tell you these facts that you also may be cured. My heart is full of gratitude to Mrs. Pinkham." — Mrs. Harriet Wampler, Box 944, Baraboo, Wis.

Items of Interest.

last Saturday night in the Dry and Fancy Goods and Carpet Departments was double that in the old store. A large trade was done also in the new departments, viz., Crockery, Housefurnishing and Millinery Departments.

The crowds were larger last Saturday night than a week ago. The interest in the great enterprise is widening. Scores of people who have already patronized the new store say that inasmuch as Edsall has given Plainfield an establishment to be proud of, they will sustain it by their patronage.

The opening of this magnificent store has already began a great revolution of trade in Plainfield. The large variety of goods, fine quality, excellent style and taste, marvelously low prices, good service, are among the drawing qualities.

A large business was also done in the Shoe and Trunk Departments.

There is no doubt but what the new concern will pay from the beginning, and that it has come to stay. The principle of doing business is a large volume of trade at a small profit. For instance, $100,000 sales per year at a profit of 20 per cent. would amount to $20,000. And a yearly sale of $200,000 at 10 per cent. would be just the same.

So the purchaser would save just 10 per cent. by buying at the store selling the largest amount. This is the system of all the large stores in New York and other cities.

We are the same, and will guarantee to give the trading public more for their money than any other place. Come and see. Our store will be closed all day Decoration Day.

THE ELMIRA INQUIRY

Flower's Commission Bring Out New Facts.

Reformatory Managers Admit That When They Signed the Memorial to the Governor They Had Not Read All the Evidence—Brockway Still in Charge, Though Suspended.

ELMIRA, N. Y., May 31.—The commission appointed by Gov. Flower to reinvestigate the charges against Superintendent Brockway, of Elmira reformatory, began their work by the examination of members of the board of managers and some new and interesting facts were brought out.

This method of proving a case was at first objected to by counsel for the defense, but as they intended calling the managers to testify in their own behalf, they waived the point and drew out testimony favorable to their side.

Each of the managers admitted signing the memorial to the governor without reading all the testimony taken at the hearings of the first investigating committee at Auburn, Albany, Dannemora and New York city. This memorial declared the first investigation to be illegal, untrue and unjust."

The managers also admitted having reinstated Superintendent Brockway while the investigation was still pending. This action they explained was taken when the sittings at Elmira were concluded, and they declared that the only purpose contemplated in relieving him from duty at Gov. Flower's request was to afford witnesses full opportunity to testify at the reformatory.

The resolution suspending Mr. Brockway on Sept. 26, 1893, and the one restoring him in February, 1894, "with unabated confidence in his disciplinary methods" were placed in evidence.

It was brought out that during his suspension Mr. Brockway continued to reside at the reformatory, he received all of the new inmates and examined them and directed as to their assignments to the industrial departments of the reformatory.

James B. Rathbone, who was acting superintendent at that time, testified that Mr. Brockway's advice was sought on many matters, but that he had nothing to do with the discipline of inmates, or of the operation of the departments of the institution. Mr. Rathbone explained the situation by saying that in his opinion Mr. Brockway was still the general superintendent, though relieved from duty temporarily.

The testimony of W. H. Peters, another manager, was similar. He caused a breeze by bluntly stating in regard to the first investigation:

"I saw and heard enough to convince me that the report was procured."

Mr. Coudert moved to strike out the remark.

Mr. Stanchfield, of the defense, objected and said: "We stand on that." Mr. Ivins remarked: "And we will prove it before we get through."

Judge Learned struck out the offensive words, on the ground that it was not a responsive answer to the question asked.

Matthias H. Arnot and Benjamin Swartwood admitted signing the memorial to Gov. Flower and to reinstating Superintendent Brockway. They gave detailed descriptions of the methods of the board when it sat as a court to parole or release inmates.

Dr. Wey, the president of the board, was recalled. He said that in 98 cases out of 100 the recommendation of the superintendent resulted in a parole and that in order to obtain a final release the prisoner was obliged to obtain the confidence of the superintendent. He admitted that this power in the hands of an improper man would be a dangerous thing, but said it was all right in Mr. Brockway's hands.

Judge Learned drew out the fact that the only regular Sunday services are held by Father Ryan, a Roman Catholic. Hebrew services are also held at regular intervals, and once a month the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, Episcopalian, has a praise meeting.

The witnesss explained the absence of regular Protestant services by saying that it is thought better to have a diversified system of lectures and addresses and musical entertainments, than to employ a "decayed" or "broken-down" minister out of a job.

Judge Learned asked:

"Do you, then, consider the industrial training of inmates more important than religious instruction?"

The witness replied that the law prevented compulsory religious instruction and as the inmates had never asked for Protestant instruction, it had not been furnished except occasionally, when the Elmira clergymen held afternoon or evening services in the institution.

Anarchist Sustained By the Judge.

BERLIN, May 31.—The anarchist Pawlowicz was tried in the criminal court here for having made incendiary speeches concerning the conduct of the police at the meeting of unemployed at the Friedrichsain last January. He told the people at public meetings that they would be justified in shooting at non-uniformed policemen or vigilantes who attacked them with clubs. The presiding judge remarked at the close of the trial that Pawlowicz had been properly indignant at the behavior of the men who presumed to appear in civilians' attire when doing police duty. The public could not be expected to accept discipline from persons wearing citizens' clothing or to distinguish between non-uniformed policemen and civilians. Pawlowicz was sentenced on technical grounds to fourteen days' imprisonment.

Jumped From a Sound Steamer.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., May 31.—Louis J. Lowe, of Brooklyn, committed suicide some time during the night by jumping from the steamer C. H. Northam into the sound, while the boat was on her way from New York to this city. When the boat arrived here he was missed from his stateroom, but his coat and hat were found. In one of the pockets of the coat were two letters, one addressed to his son in Brooklyn, and the other to a relative in Newark, N. J. The letters stated that Lowe intended to commit suicide because he had become despondent from being out of employment.

A PUBLIC BENEFACTOR.

THEY ALL SAY THE SAME.

Don't Hesitate, but Call and Be Convinced That Every Statement We Make Is True.

To those who do not already know that there is established in Newark, at 105 Halsey street, a physician who stands in the foremost rank of his profession, who is indorsed by the leading colleges of the country and who can prove by witnesses right here in Newark (not by one, but by hundreds) that he has succeeded in curing cases that have been utterly given up by other physicians, and good ones, too. To those who do not these facts we state that any person, rich or poor, old or young, is welcome here and receive examination and advice free of charge.

Thousands praise the day they came to us for treatment. There is no guess work, no experimenting, no painful operation. No matter how difficult the case, no matter how much of the physician's time it may consume, the diagnosis will not only be thorough, it will be absolutely free. There is no taint of quackery or deception; no claim or statement is made that is not borne out by facts and living witnesses.

Mrs. Abby A. Ray, late of 86 Grove street, East Orange, who now lives at 400 Ellmore street, Escanaba, Mich., writes, under date of January 12: "The medicine arrived this morning and I am so glad it came. I am almost out, and it has helped me so much and I am so much pleased with its wonderful effort on my broken down system that I would like to testify to your great success in my case. I am feeling as well now, in fact better, than I had ever hoped to again."

This is one of many letters that we receive daily. We have the originals at our office and if you wish you may see them. Another thing: We never publish or reveal a patient's name unless they so desire.

DR. STARKWEATHER.

There is not a penny to pay for the fullest medical advice. Dr. Starkweather is a graduate of the Berkshire Medical College, Massachusetts, and of the Medico-Chirurgical College of Philadelphia; endorsed also by the College of Physicians and Surgeons and Bellevue Medical College of New York. We invite all sufferers from whatever cause to call at our office, No. 105 Halsey street, Newark, where Dr. Starkweather is in attendance daily to give examination and advice entirely free of charge. It matters not what the disease, or how many years you have suffered, in spite of means adopted in your behalf, a visit to this office and the privileges of the same will cost you nothing, and may be the means of saving your life. We prepare all our medicines and prescribe the remedies indicated. This plan enables the patient to receive directly from us such remedies as will produce the results promised.

Our office is open daily from 10 a. m. to 9 p. m. Sundays 4 to 6 p. m.

Those living at a distance can consult the Doctor by letter.

Send or call for our Book of Testimonials.

Do you remember that REED ROCKER we sold a couple of months ago at $5.63. 'Twas a bargain, wasn't it? Well, we struck a hundred of a similar rocker.

Honestly, it isn't quite as good; but near it, and the price is $3.98. If we showed the picture that we used of the other you could not tell the difference. We never substitute — believe it's dishonest—and we haven't had the time to get a picture of the new rocker made—but is on the floor—and "selling like hot cakes."
